This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at `http://books.google.com/`

[Weekly Reporter, Oct. 26, 1902.]

THE

WEEKLY REPORTER,

1901-1902

(FIFTIETH YEAR),

CONTAINING

CASES DECIDED IN THE SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE

WITH

APPEALS TO THE HOUSE OF LORDS AND THE PRIVY COUNCIL,

FROM THE 24TH OF OCTOBER, 1901, TO THE 12TH OF AUGUST, 1902.

TOGETHER ALSO WITH SOME CASES DECIDED PREVIOUSLY TO THAT PERIOD.

TO WHICH ARE ADDED

A DIGESTED INDEX

AND

A TABLE OF THE NAMES OF ALL CASES

REPORTED DURING THAT PERIOD,

WITH

REFERENCES TO CONTEMPORANEOUS REPORTS AND PUBLICATIONS.

VOL. L.

EDITED BY

MARTIN JOSEPH BLAKE,

OF LINCOLN'S INN, BARRISTER-AT-LAW.

LONDON: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

1902.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, LTD.,
Printers,
NORWICH STREET, FETTER LANE, LONDON, E.C.

94312

PREFACE.

In the fiftieth volume of the WEEKLY REPORTER the characteristics of the publication will be found unaltered. Every endeavour has been made to render the reports succinct and accurate, and they have been published as soon as possible after the decisions have been pronounced. It is believed that the cases in this volume may be cited with the confidence which the Profession has always placed in the WEEKLY REPORTER.

The Annual Digest contains a summary of the cases published from the 2nd of November, 1901, to the 30th of August, 1902 (both inclusive), in the WEEKLY REPORTER and from the beginning of September, 1901, to the end of August, 1902, in the Law Reports, the Law Journal Reports, and the Law Times Reports.

JUDGES AND LAW OFFICERS

FROM THE 24TH OF OCTOBER, 1901, TO THE 12TH OF AUGUST, 1902.

LORD HALSBURY, LORD CHANCELLOR.

LORD MACNAGHTEN,
LORD DAVEY,
LORD ROBERTSON,
LORD LINDLEY,
} LORDS OF APPEAL IN ORDINARY.

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR.
THE LORDS OF APPEAL IN ORDINARY.
LORD HOBHOUSE,
LORD ASHBOURNE,
LORD SHAND,
LORD JAMES OF HEREFORD,
LORD BRAMPTON,
SIR FORD NORTH,
SIR HENRY DE VILLIERS,
} ADDITIONAL JUDGES ORDINARILY ATTENDING.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE—COURT OF APPEAL.

SIR RICHARD HENN COLLINS, MASTER OF THE ROLLS.
SIR ROLAND VAUGHAN WILLIAMS,
SIR ROBERT ROMER,
SIR JAMES STIRLING,
SIR JAMES CHARLES MATHEW,
SIR HERBERT HARDY COZENS-HARDY, } LORDS JUSTICES OF APPEAL.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE—CHANCERY DIVISION.

SIR ARTHUR KEKEWICH.
SIR EDMUND WIDDRINGTON BYRNE.
SIR GEORGE FARWELL.
SIR HENRY BURTON BUCKLEY.
SIR MATTHEW INGLE JOYCE.
SIR CHARLES SWINFEN EADY.

KING'S BENCH DIVISION.

LORD ALVERSTONE, CHIEF JUSTICE.
SIR ALFRED WILLS.
SIR WILLIAM GRANTHAM.
SIR JOHN COMPTON LAWRANCE.
SIR ROBERT SAMUEL WRIGHT.
SIR GAINSFORD BRUCE.
SIR WILLIAM RANN KENNEDY.
SIR EDWARD RIDLEY.
SIR JOHN CHARLES BIGHAM.
SIR CHARLES JOHN DARLING.
SIR ARTHUR MOSELEY CHANNELL.
SIR WALTER GEORGE FRANK PHILLIMORE.
SIR THOMAS TOWNSEND BUCKNILL.
SIR JOSEPH WALTON.
SIR ARTHUR RICHARD JELF.

PROBATE, DIVORCE, AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION.

SIR FRANCIS HENRY JEUNE, PRESIDENT.
SIR JOHN GORELL BARNES.

SIR ROBERT BANNATYNE FINLAY, ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

SIR EDWARD CARSON, SOLICITOR-GENERAL.

EDITOR AND REPORTERS.

1901—1902.

EDITOR.

MARTIN JOSEPH BLAKE,

BARRISTER-AT-LAW.

REPORTERS.

HOUSE OF LORDS	CHARLES HARDMAN GRAFTON, Barrister-at-Law.
PRIVY COUNCIL	CHARLES HARDMAN GRAFTON, Barrister-at-Law.
COURT OF APPEAL (No. I.)	WILLIAM FREDERICK BARRY, FREDERICK GEORGE RUCKER, WILLIAM ERSKINE REID, and EDWARD G. STILLWELL, Barristers-at-Law.
COURT OF APPEAL (No. II.)	JAMES IRVINE STIRLING, H. W. LAW, ALAN C. NESBITT, and CUTHBERT CAMM, Barristers-at-Law.
CHANCERY DIVISION. Mr. Justice Kekewich and Mr. Justice Joyce	CHARLES WALTER MEAD, ALAN C. NESBITT, and CUTHBERT CAMM, Barristers-at-Law.
CHANCERY DIVISION. Mr. Justice Byrne and Mr. Justice Buckley	J. ARTHUR PRICE, NEVILLE TEBBUTT, and H. L. ORMISTON, Barristers-at-Law.
CHANCERY DIVISION. Mr. Justice Cozens-Hardy and Mr. Justice Farwell	JOHN HUMPHREYS DAVIES, PAUL STRICKLAND, and GODFREY R. BENSON, Barristers-at-Law.
CHANCERY DIVISION. Company Cases	L. W. BYRNE, Barrister-at-Law.
KING'S BENCH DIVISION	WILLIAM ERSKINE REID, CECIL G. WILBRAHAM, and EDWARD G. STILLWELL, Barristers-at-Law.
(COMMERCIAL COURT)	FRANCIS OCTAVIUS ROBINSON, Barrister-at-Law.
(BANKRUPTCY CASES)	PAUL M. FRANCKE, Barrister-at-Law.
PROB., DIV., and ADM. DIVISION	GWYNNE HALL, Barrister-at-Law.

A TABLE

OF

THE NAMES OF CASES

REPORTED AND DIGESTED IN THIS VOLUME,

WITH REFERENCES TO THE CONTEMPORANEOUS REPORTS.

VOL. L.

NOTE.—In the following Table the cases are arranged in the Alphabetical order of the PLAINTIFFS' names; but for convenience of reference, with respect to cases having double titles—e.g., In re Smith, Brown v. Jones—this Table gives the names of such cases under both titles.

Name of Case.	Court.	Page in W. R. 1901-02.	Column in Digest.	References to Contemporaneous Reports.
A. v A.	P.D. & A.D.	—	50	[1901] P. 214; 70 L. J. P. 90; 85 L. T. 171
Abrahams v Bullock	C.A.	626	115	86 L. T. 796
Abrahams & Sons, In re	CH.D.BUCK.J.	284	27	[1902] 1 Ch. 695; 71 L. J. Ch. 307; 86 L. T. 290
"Acanthus," The	P.D. & A.D.	—	161	[1902] P. 17; 71 L. J. P. 14; 85 L. T. 696
Acetylene Illuminating Co. v United Alkali Co.	CH.D.BUCK.J.	361	128	[1902] 1 Ch. 494; 71 L. J. Ch. 301
Adams v Cairns	C.A.	—	89	85 L. T. 10
Aerators (Limited) v Tollit	CH.D. FAR. J.	584	33	[1902] 2 Ch. 319; 86 L. T. 651
Aflalo v Lawrence	CHD.JOYCE,J.	24	41	[1902] 1 Ch. 264; 70 L. J. Ch. 797; 85 L. T. 342
Aldam's Settled Estates, In re	CHD.BYRNE,J	199	154	86 L. T. 76
———	C.A.	500	154	[1902] 2 Ch. 46; 71 L. J. Ch. 552; 86 L. T. 510
Aldred, Ex parte	P.C.	—	132	[1902] A. C. 81; 71 L. J. P. C. 27; 86 L. T. 163
Alexander's Timber Co., In re	CH.D. WRI. J.	—	40	70 L. J. Ch. 767
Alman v Oppert	C.A.	—	138	[1901] 2 K. B. 576; 70 L. J. K. B. 745; 84 L. T. 828
Alms Corn Charity, In re. Charity Commissioners v Bode	CH.D. STI. J.	—	23	[1901] 2 Ch. 750; 71 L. J. Ch. 76; 85 L. T. 533
Alston, In re. Alston v Houston	CH.D. KEK.J.	—	157	[1901] 2 Ch. 584; 70 L. J. Ch. 869
American Steel and Wire Co. v Glover	CH.D. FAR. J.	284	141
Anderson v Berkley	CHD.JOYCE,J.	684	187
——— v Midland Railway Co.	CH.D.BUCK.J.	40	150	[1902] 1 Ch. 369; 71 L. J. Ch. 89; 85 L. T. 408
——— v Reid	K.B.D.	—	47	86 L. T. 713
Andrew v Grove	K.B.D.	524	43	[1902] 1 K. B. 625; 71 L. J. K. B. 439; 86 L. T. 720
Andrews, In re. Andrews v Andrews	CH.D. KEK. J.	569	54
Andrew's Estate, In re. Creasy v Graves	CH.D. BUCK.J	471	191
Archer's case. In re London and Northern Bank	CH.D. WRI. J.	167	36
———	C.A.	262	36	85 L. T. 698
Armitage v Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Co.	C.A.	—	112	[1902] 2 K. B. 178; 86 L. T. 883
"Asunta," The	P.D. & A.D.	544	159	[1902] P. 150; 71 L. J. P. 75; 86 L. T. 660
Attorney-General v Copeland	C.A.	490	65	[1902] 1 K. B. 690; 71 L. J. K. B. 472; 86 L. T. 486
——— v Eastbourne (Mayor)	K.B.D.	59	76
———	C.A.	161	76	[1902] 1 K. B. 403; 71 L. J. K. B. 181; 85 L. T. 745
——— v Esher Linoleum Co.	CH.D.BUCK.J	22	66	[1901] 2 Ch. 647; 70 L. J. Ch. 808; 85 L. T. 414
——— v Johnson	K.B.D.	366	74	[1902] 1 K. B. 416; 71 L. J. K. B. 187; 86 L. T. 296
——— v Liverpool Corporation	K.B.D.	328	77	[1902] 1 K. B. 411; 71 L. J. K. B. 195; 86 L. T. 300
——— v Lunesdale District Council	CH.D. FAR. J.	—	69	86 L. T. 822
——— v Montagu (Lord)	K.B.D.	270	73	[1902] 1 K. B. 429; 71 L. J. K. B. 333; 86 L. T. 57

Name of Case.	Court.	Page in W. R. 1901-02.	Column in Digest.	References to Contemporaneous Reports.
Attorney-General v Oxford Canal Navigation	CH.D. KEK. J.	—	64	71 L. J. Ch. 660
——— v Rickmansworth District Council	CH.D. KEK. J.	—	98	86 L. T. 521
——— v Selborne (Earl) . .	C.A.	210	79	[1902] 1 K. B. 388; 71 L. J. K. B. 289; 85 L. T. 714
——— v Simpson . . .	C.A.	—	183	[1901] 2 Ch. 671; 70 L. J. Ch. 828; 85 L. T. 325
——— v Tamworth District Council .	CHD. BYRNE, J	—	184	85 L. T. 190
——— v Winans . . .	C.A.	—	53	85 L. T. 508
——— for Manitoba v Manitoba Licence Holders' Association	P.C.	431	20	[1902] A. C. 73; 71 L. J. P. C. 78; 85 L. T. 591
"Auguste Legembre," The .	P.D. & A.D.	622	163	[1902] P. 123; 71 L. J. P. 53; 86 L. T. 358
Aylwin v Aylwin . . .	P.D. & A.D.	—	148	[1902] P. 203
Ayres v Ayres . . .	P.D. & A.D.	—	10	71 L. J. P. 18; 85 L. T. 648
——— v Buckeridge. Wheale and Jones v Rhymney Iron Co.	C.A.	115	113	[1902] 1 K. B. 57; 71 L. J. K. B. 28; 85 L. T. 472
Badham v Williams . . .	CH. D. KEK. J.	—	127	86 L. T. 191
Bagot Pneumatic Tyre Co. v Clipper Pneumatic Tyre Co.	C.A.	177	25	[1902] 1 Ch. 146; 71 L. J. Ch. 158; 85 L. T. 652
Bailey & Co. v Clark, Son, & Morland (Limited)	C.A.	511	184	[1902] 1 Ch. 649; 71 L. J. Ch. 396; 86 L. T. 309
Baines, In re. Ex parte Board of Trade .	BKCY.	—	17	86 L. T. 691
"Baku Standard" Steamship v "Angèle" Steamship	P.C.	—	163	[1901] A. C. 549; 70 L. J. P. C. 98; 84 L. T. 788
Balfour v Crace. In re Crace .	CHD. JOYCE, J.	—	145	[1902] 1 Ch. 733; 71 L. J. Ch. 358; 86 L. T. 144
Balmoral Steamship Co. v Marten .	C.A.	35	83	[1901] 2 K. B. 896; 70 L. J. K. B. 1018; 85 L. T. 389
Bankes, In re. Reynolds v Ellis .	CH. D. BUCK J	663	106	[1902] 2 Ch. 333
Barnard v Great Western Railway Co. .	CH. D. KEK. J.	—	148	86 L. T. 798
Barnard Castle Urban District Council v Wilson	CH D. BUCK. J.	92	184	[1901] 2 Ch. 813; 70 L. J. Ch. 859; 85 L. T. 481
Barnes v Richards . .	K.B.D.	363	40	71 L. J. K. B. 341; 86 L. T. 231
Barnett's Trusts, In re . .	CH. D. KEK. J	681	47	[1902] 1 Ch. 847; 71 L. J. Ch. 408; 86 L. T. 346
Barrow Hæmatite Steel Co., In re .	C.A.	71	25	[1901] 2 Ch. 746; 71 L. J. Ch. 15; 85 L. T. 493
Bartell v Gray . . .	C.A.	310	109	[1902] 1 K. B. 225; 71 L. J. K. B. 115; 85 L. T. 658
Bartholomew v Menzies. In re Weston	CHD. BYRNE, J	294	54	[1902] 1 Ch. 680; 71 L. J. Ch. 343; 86 L. T. 551
Bartlett v Sutton . .	C.A.	149	113	[1902] 1 K. B. 72; 71 L. J. K. B. 52; 85 L. T. 531
Bass & Co. v Davenport . .	CH. D. KEK. J.	—	170	86 L. T. 186
Bath v Bath . . .	C.A.	535	142	71 L. J. Ch. 500; 86 L. T. 435
Baty v Keswick . . .	CH. D. FAR. J.	14	32	85 L. T. 18
Baxendale v North Lambeth Liberal Club	CH. D. EADY, J	650	57
Beaumont, In re. Beaumont v Ewbank	CH. D. BUCK. J.	389	54	[1902] 1 Ch. 889; 71 L. J. Ch. 478; 86 L. T. 410
Beddington v Beddington. In re Moses .	C.A.	—	131	[1902] 1 Ch. 100; 71 L. J. Ch. 101; 85 L. T. 596
Beeley v Waterhouse. In re Sidebottom	C.A.	641	21	72 L. J. Ch. 662
Belcher v Roedean School Site and Buildings (Limited)	C.A.	—	8	85 L. T. 468
Bellerby v Rowland and Marwood Steamship Co.	C.A.	566	34	[1902] 2 Ch. 14; 71 L. J. Ch. 541; 86 L. T. 671
Benjamin, In re. Neville v Benjamin .	CHD. JOYCE, J.	—	196	[1902] 1 Ch. 723; 71 L. J. Ch. 319; 86 L. T. 387
Bennett v Stone . . .	CH. D. BUCK, J.	118	177	[1902] 1 Ch. 226; 71 L. J. Ch. 60; 85 L. T. 753
"Bernard Hall," The . .	P.D. & A.D.	—	160	71 L. J. P. 72; 86 L. T. 658
Best and Others, In the Goods of .	P.D. & A.D.	—	146	[1901] P. 333; 71 L. J. P. 9; 85 L. T. 640
Bevan v Crawshay . . .	C.A.	98	108	[1902] 1 K. B. 25; 71 L. J. K. B. 49; 85 L. T. 496
Biggar v Rock Life Assurance Co. .	K.B.D.	—	80	[1902] 1 K. B. 516; 71 L. J. K. B. 79; 85 L. T. 636
Bilby v Bilby . . .	P.D. & A.D.	—	51	[1902] P. 8; 71 L. J. P. 31; 86 L. T. 123
Billing, In re. Ex parte Official Receiver	BKCY.	—	14	86 L. T. 689
Birch v Birch . . .	P.D. & A.D.	192	—	[1902] P. 62
———	C.A.	437	142	[1902] P. 130; 71 L. J. P. 58; 86 L. T. 364
Bishop v Bishop . . .	P.D. & A.D.	—	51	[1901] P. 325; 70 L. J. P. 93; 85 L. T. 173
Blackburn v Liverpool, Brazil, &c. Steam Navigation Co.	K.B.D.	272	159	[1902] 1 K. B. 290; 71 L. J. K. B. 177; 85 L. T. 783
Blackburn Corporation v Sanderson .	C.A.	—	169	[1902] 1 K. B. 794; 71 L. J. K. B. 590; 86 L. T. 304
Blackett v Blackett and Frail .	C.A.	516	139	[1902] P. 170; 71 L. J. P. 69; 86 L. T. 669
Blackpool Corporation v Johnson .	K.B.D.	—	97	[1902] 1 K. B. 646; 71 L. J. K. B. 485
Blair v Duncan . . .	H.L.	369	186	[1902] A. C. 37; 71 L. J. P. C. 22; 86 L. T. 157
Blood v Blood . . .	P.D. & A.D.	138	53	[1902] P. 78; 71 L. J. P. 40; 86 L. T. 121
———	C.A.	547	53	[1902] P. 190; 86 L. T. 641
Boardman v Scott . . .	C.A.	184	114	[1902] 1 K. B. 43; 71 L. J. K. B. 3; 85 L. T. 502
Boles and British Land Co.'s Contract, In re	CHD. BUCK. J.	185	176	[1902] 1 Ch. 244; 71 L. J. Ch. 130; 85 L. T. 607

Name of Case.	Court.	Page in W. R. 1901-02.	Column in Digest.	References to Contemporaneous Reports.
Bond v Barrow Hæmatite Steel Co.	CH.D. FAR. J.	295	24	[1902] 1 Ch. 353; 71 L. J. Ch. 246; 86 L. T. 10
Bootle Overseers v Liverpool Warehousing Co.	K.B.D.	—	99	85 L. T. 45
Bosworthick v Bosworthick	P.D. & A.D.	217	51	86 L. T. 121
Boustead v Cooper. In re Van Straubenzee	CH.D. HDY. J.	—	158	[1901] 2 Ch. 779; 70 L. J. Ch. 825; 85 L. T. 541
Bowater & Sons v Mirror of Life Co.	K.B.D.	381	40
Bowden v Toll	K.B.D.	208	176	85 L. T. 486
Bozzelli's Settlement, In re. Husey Hunt v Bozzelli	CH.D. READY. J.	447	37	[1902] 1 Ch. 751; 71 L. J. Ch. 505; 86 L. T. 445
Bradford Corporation v Ferrand	CH.D. FAR. J.	—	139	86 L. T. 497
Bradshaw, In re. Bradshaw v Bradshaw	CH.D. KEK. J.	—	138	[1902] 1 Ch. 436; 71 L. J. Ch. 230; 86 L. T. 253
——— v Widdrington	C.A.	561	96	71 L. J. Ch. 627; 86 L. T. 726
Bramley, In the Goods of	P.D. & A.D.	—	191	[1902] P. 106; 71 L. J. P. 32; 85 L. T. 645
Brand v Sandground	CH.D. FAR. J.	—	126	85 L. T. 517
Brassington, In the Goods of	P.D. & A.D.	—	148	[1902] P. 1; 71 L. J. P. 9; 85 L. T. 644
Brennan (otherwise Roberts) v Brennan	P.D. & A.D.	414	50	[1902] P. 143; 71 L. J. P. 74; 86 L. T. 599
Brice v Carroll. In re Carroll	CH.D. FAR. J.	650	166	[1902] 2 Ch. 175; 71 L. J. Ch. 596; 86 L. T. 862
"Bristol City," The	P.D. & A.D.	383	160	[1902] P. 10; 71 L. J. P. 5; 85 L. T. 694
Britain v Hanks	K.B.D.	—	41	86 L. T. 765
British Electric Traction Co. v Inland Revenue Commissioners	C.A	280	77	[1902] 1 K. B. 441; 71 L. J. K. B. 92; 85 L. T. 663
British Homes Assurance Corporation v Patterson	CH.D. FAR. J.	612	127	86 L. T. 826
Brooks v Brooks	CH.D. FAR J.	—	127	85 L. T. 453
Brooks & Co. v Torquay Corporation	K.B.D.	—	101	[1902] 1 K. B. 601; 71 L. J. K. B. 109; 85 L. T. 785
Broome v Speak	CH.D. BUCK J.	614	31
Brown v Brook	C.A.	—	142	86 L. T. 373
——— v Houston	C.A.	—	94	[1901] 2 K. B. 855; 70 L. J. K. B. 902; 85 L. T. 160
——— v Skirrow	P.D. & A.D.	—	193	[1902] P. 3; 71 L. J. P. 91; 85 L. T. 645
Browne v Brandt	K.B.D.	654	79	[1902] 1 K. B. 696; 71 L. J. K. B. 367; 86 L. T. 625
Bruce v Burton	K.B.D.	—	76	85 L. T. 227
Buckwell and Berkeley, In re	CH.D. KEK. J.	629	137
Bullivant v Attorney-General for Victoria	H.L.	1	138	[1901] A. C. 196
Burbidge, In re	C.A.	—	104	[1902] 1 Ch. 426; 71 L. J. Ch. 271
Burland v Earle	P.C.	241	28	[1902] A. C. 83; 71 L. J. P. C. 1; 85 L. T. 553
Burnand v Waite. In re Seton Smith	CH.D. BUCK. J.	456	187	[1902] 1 Ch. 717; 71 L. J. Ch. 386; 86 L. T. 322
Burton v Mattinson	K.B.D.	—	6	86 L. T. 770
Bush v Hawes	C.A.	311	111	[1902] 1 K. B. 216; 71 L. J. K. B. 68; 85 L. T. 507
Bwllfa, &c., Steam Collieries Co. and Pontypridd Waterworks Co., In re	K.B.D.	135	93	[1901] 2 K. B. 798; 70 L. J. K. B. 1041; 85 L. T. 233
———	C.A.	627	93	[1902] 2 K. B. 135; 71 L. J. K. B. 613
Bynoe v Bank of England	C.A.	359	123	[1902] 1 K. B. 467; 71 L. J. K. B. 208; 86 L. T. 140
Cackett v Keswick	CH.D. FAR. J.	10	32	85 L. T. 14
———	C.A.	—	32	71 L. J. Ch. 641
Caledonian Canal Co. v Seaham Colliery Co.	P.C.	—	125	[1901] A. C. 554; 70 L. J. P. C. 105; 84 L. T. 785
Campbell, In re	C.A.	—	72	[1902] 1 K. B. 113; 71 L. J. K. B. 160; 85 L. T. 708
Canadian Pacific Railway Co. v Roy	P.C.	415	149	[1902] A. C. 220; 71 L. J. P. C. 51; 86 L T. 127
Capes v Dalton	C.A.	—	190	86 L. T. 129
Capital and Counties Bank v Rhodes	CH.D. KEK. J.	—	115	71 L. J. Ch. 573
Caratal (New) Mines (Limited), In re	CH.D. BUCK. J.	572	34
Caridad Copper Mining Co. v Swallow	C.A.	565	28	[1902] 2 K. B. 44; 71 L. J. K. B. 601; 86 L. T. 699
Carisbrook Steamship Co. v London and Provincial Marine Insurance Co.	K.B.D.	42	82	[1901] 2 K. B. 861; 70 L. J. K. B. 930
———	C.A.	691	82
Carr, In re. Ex parte Jacobs	BKCY.	336	12	85 L. T. 552
——— v Fracis	H.L.	257	37	[1902] A. C. 176; 71 L. J. K. B. 361; 85 L. T 144
Carroll, In re. Brice v Carroll	CH.D. FAR. J.	650	166	[1902] 2 Ch. 175; 71 L. J. Ch. 596; 86 L. T. 862
Carter v Seaton	P.D. & A.D.	—	193	85 L. T. 76
Cash v Cash	C.A.	289	172	86 L. T. 211
Cattermole v Atlantic Transport Co.	C.A.	129	109	[1902] 1 K. B. 204; 71 L. J. K. B. 173; 85 L. T. 513
"Cayo Bonito," The	P.D & A.D.	—	161	71 L. J. P. 88; 86 L. T. 867
Chan Kit San v Ho Fung Hang	P.C.	—	68	[1902] A. C. 257; 71 L. J. P. C. 49; 86 L. T 245
Chapman v Browne	C.A.	—	174	[1902] 1 Ch. 785; 71 L. J. Ch. 465; 86 L. T. 744
Charity Commissioners v Bode. In re Alms Corn Charity	CH.D. STI. J.	—	23	[1901] 2 Ch. 750; 71 L. J. Ch. 76; 85 L. T. 539

Name of Case.	Court.	Page in W. R. 1901-02.	Column in Digest.	References to Contemporaneous Reports.
Charrington & Co. v Camp	CHD. JOYCE, J	—	150	[1902] 1 Ch. 386; 71 L. J. Ch. 196; 86 L. T. 15
Chenoweth, In re. Ward v Dwelley	CH.D FAR. J.	663	64	86 L. T. 890
Chesebrough's Trade-Mark "Vaseline," In re	C.A.	—	170	[1902] 2 Ch. 1; 71 L. J. Ch. 427; 86 L. T. 665
Chester (Dean) v Smelting Corporation	CH.D. FAR. J.	—	71	85 L. T. 67
Chetwynd's Settlement, In re. Scarisbrick v Nevinson	CH.D. FAR. J.	361	175	[1902] 1 Ch. 692; 71 L. J. Ch. 352; 86 L. T. 216
Chisholm, In re. Goddard v Brodie	CH.D. KEK. J.	—	4	[1902] 1 Ch. 457; 71 L. J. Ch. 289; 86 L. T. 183
Chittagong Steamship v Kostroma Steamship	P.C.	—	160	[1901] A. C. 597; 70 L. J. P. C. 121; 85 L. T. 430
Clarke's Settled Estates, In re	CH.D. BUCK, J.	585	152	[1902] 2 Ch. 327; 71 L. J. Ch. 593; 86 L. T. 653
Clatworthy v R. & H. Green	C.A.	610	110	86 L. T. 702
Clerkenwell Vestry v Edmondson	C.A.	345	117	[1902] 1 K. B. 336; 71 L. J. K. B. 198; 86 L. T. 137
Cleveland's (Duke) Settled Estates, In re	CH.D. JOYCE, J	508	152	[1902] 2 Ch. 350; 86 L. T. 678
Clifford, In re. Scott v Clifford	CH.D. BUCK. J.	58	154	[1902] 1 Ch. 87; 71 L. J. Ch. 10; 85 L. T. 410
Cohen's Executors and London County Council's Contract, In re	CHD. BYRNE, J	117	178	[1902] 1 Ch. 187; 71 L. J. Ch. 164; 86 L. T. 73
Collyer-Bristow, In re	C.A.	4	165	[1901] 2 K. B. 839; 70 L. J. K. B. 941; 85 L. T. 208
Colonial Sugar Refining Co. v Attorney-General for Victoria	P.C.	—	181	[1901] A. C. 544; 70 L. J. P. C. 75; 84 L. T. 787
Commissioners of Taxation v Antill	P.C.	—	124	[1902] A. C. 422; 86 L. T. 783
——— v St. Mark's Glebe	P.C.	—	124	[1902] A. C. 416; 86 L. T. 629
Cook, In the Goods of	P.D. & A.D.	—	193	[1902] P. 114; 71 L. J. P. 49; 86 L. T. 537
Cook v Ricketson	P.C.	—	125	[1901] A. C. 588; 70 L. J. P. C. 113; 85 L. T. 1
Cooper & Crane v Wright	H.L.	—	111	[1902] A. C. 302; 71 L. J. K. B. 642; 86 L. T. 776
County Theatres and Hotels v Knowles	C.A.	—	8	[1902] 1 K. B. 480; 71 L. J. K. B. 351; 86 L. T. 132
Cowardin, In the Goods of	P.D & A.D.	—	146	86 L. T. 261
Cowley v Cowley	H.L.	81	129	[1901] A. C. 450; 70 L. J. P. 83; 85 L. T. 254
Cox v Blaines	K.B.D.	392	19	[1902] 1 K. B. 670; 71 L. J. K. B. 437; 86 L. T. 563
Crabtree v Fern Spinning Co.	K.B.D.	167	60	85 L. T. 549
Crace, In re. Balfour v Crace	CHD. JOYCE, J.	—	145	[1902] 1 Ch. 733; 71 L. J. Ch. 358; 86 L. T. 144
Creasey v Graves. In re Andrew's Estate	CH.D. BUCK. J.	471	—
Credit Assurance and Guarantee Corporation, In re	CH.D. FAR. J.	629	32	[1902] 2 Ch. 178
Crichton's Oil Co., In re	C.A.	—	35	[1902] 2 Ch. 86; 71 L. J. Ch. 531; 86 L. T. 787
Crickitt v Crickitt	C.A.	—	147	[1902] P. 177; 71 L. J. P. 65; 86 L. T. 635
Crompton's Trade-Mark, In re	CH.D. BADY. J	426	—	[1902] 1 Ch. 758; 71 L. J. Ch. 497; 86 L. T. 657
Darlow v Shuttleworth	K.B.D.	668	132	[1902] 1 K. B. 721; 71 L. J. K. B. 460; 86 L. T. 524
Davenport v Marshall	CH.D. BUCK. J.	39	105	[1902] 1 Ch. 82; 71 L. J. Ch. 29; 85 L. T. 340
Davies v Burnett	K.B.D.	391	94	[1902] 1 K. B. 666; 71 L. J. K. B. 355; 86 L. T. 565
——— v Evans	K.B.D.	—	61	86 L. T. 419
Davis, In re. Davis v Davis	CH.D. FAR. J.	—	173	[1902] 2 Ch. 314; 71 L. J. Ch. 539; 86 L. T. 523
——— In re. Griffith v Davis	CH.D. FAR. J.	—	54	86 L. T. 889
——— In re. Hannen v Hillyer	CH.D. BUCK. J.	378	185	[1902] 1 Ch. 876; 71 L. J. Ch. 459; 86 L. T. 292
Davis v Stoddart	K.B.D.	397	63
———	C.A.	—	63	[1902] 2 K. B. 21
Day, In re. Ex parte Hammond	BKCY.	448	12	86 L. T. 238
Debtor, A, In re. Ex parte Haes	C.A.	182	14	[1902] 1 K. B. 98; 71 L. J. K. B. 102; 85 L. T. 564
———, In re. Ex parte Judgment Creditor	C.A.	609	13	[1902] 2 K. B. 260
———, In re. Ex parte Petitioning Creditors	BKCY.	—	14	86 L. T. 688
Development Co. of Central and West Africa, In re	CH.D. BADY, J	456	25	[1902] 1 Ch. 547; 71 L. J. Ch. 310; 86 L. T. 323
Deverges v Sandeman, Clark, & Co.	C.A.	404	122	[1902] 1 Ch. 579; 71 L. J. Ch. 328; 86 L. T. 269
Devonport Corporation v Tozer	CHD. JOYCE, J.	—	97	[1902] 2 Ch. 182; 86 L. T. 612
Dixon, In re. Penfold v Dixon	CH.D. BUCK. J.	203	73	[1902] 1 Ch. 248; 71 L. J. Ch. 96; 85 L. T. 622
——— v Steel	CH.D. HDY. J.	132	145	[1901] 2 Ch. 602; 70 L. J. Ch. 794; 85 L. T. 404
Dodson v Downey	CH.D. FAR. J.	57	127	[1901] 2 Ch. 620; 70 L. J. Ch. 854; 85 L. T. 273
Dougan v Macpherson	H.L.	689	175	[1902] A. C. 197; 71 L. J. P. C. 62; 86 L. T. 361
Douglas v Sander	P.C.	676	123	[1902] A. C. 437; 86 L. T. 633
Douglas and Powell, In re.	CHD. BYRNE, J	—	181	[1902] 2 Ch. 296
Dovey v Cory	H.L.	65	28	[1901] A. C. 477; 70 L. J. Ch. 753; 85 L. T. 257

Name of Case.	Court.	Page in W. R. 1901-02.	Column in Digest.	References to Contemporaneous Reports.
Drucker, In re (No. 1)	BKCY.	543	15	[1902] 2 K. B. 55
———	C.A.	—	—	[1902] 2 K. B. 237; 71 L. J. K. B. 686; 86 L. T. 785
——— (No. 2)	BKCY.	592	14	[1902] 2 K. B. 210; 71 L. J. K. B. 688; 86 L. T. 692
Duder v Amsterdamsch Trustees Kantoor	CHD.BYRNE,J.	551	143	[1902] 2 Ch. 132; 71 L. J. Ch. 618
Dulieu v White	K.B.D.	76	124	[1901] 2 K. B. 669; 70 L. J. K. B. 837; 85 L. T. 126
Dunham v Clare	C.A.	596	107	71 L. J. K. B. 683; 86 L. T. 751
Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co. v Actien Gesellschaft fur Motor Fahrzengbau, &c.	C.A.	226	143	[1902] 1 K. B. 342; 71 L. J. K. B. 284; 86 L. T. 472
Dunn, In re. Ex parte Official Receiver	C.A.	183	17	[1902] 1 K. B. 107; 71 L. J. K. B. 83; 85 L. T. 567
E. A. B., In re	C.A.	229	17	[1902] 1 K. B. 457; 71 L. J. K. B. 356; 85 L. T. 773
E. v E. (otherwise T.)	P.D. & A.D.	607	50
East Freemantle Corporation v Annois	P.C.	—	42	[1902] A. C. 213; 71 L. J. P. C. 39; 85 L. T. 732
East Stonehouse Local Board v Willoughby	K.B.D.	698	96
Eastern and South African Telegraph Co. v Cape Town Tramways Co.	P.C.	657	124	[1902] A. C. 381; 86 L. T. 457
Easton v Isted	CHD.JOYCE,J.	472	55	71 L. J. Ch. 442; 86 L. T. 442
Economic Life Assurance Society v Usborne	H.L.	—	44	[1902] A. C. 147; 71 L. J. P. C. 34; 85 L. T. 587
Edelstein v Schuler & Co.	K.B.D.	493	19	[1902] 2 K. B. 144; 71 L. J. K. B. 572
Edgcombe, In re	C.A.	678	10
Edgill v Alward	K.B.D.	—	162	[1902] 2 K. B. 239
Edwardes v Barrington	H.L.	358	91	85 L. T. 650
Edwards v Liverpool Corporation	K.B.D.	—	21	86 L. T. 627
Egham Rural District Council v Gordon	K.B.D.	703	66	[1902] 2 K. B. 120; 71 L. J. K. B. 523
Elgood v Jones. In re Jones	CH.D.BUCK.J.	215	3	[1902] 1 Ch. 92; 71 L. J. Ch. 6; 85 L. T. 608
Elliott v Elliott	P.D. & A.D.	—	52	85 L. T. 648
——— v Garrett	C.A.	504	138	[1902] 1 K. B. 870; 71 L. J. K. B. 415; 86 L. T. 441
——— v Pilcher	K.B.D.	—	7	[1901] 2 K. B. 817; 70 L. J. K. B. 795; 85 L. T. 50
——— v Ziggins	K.B.D.	524	106	[1902] 2 K. B. 84; 71 L. J. K. B. 483
Ellis v Cory	C.A.	131	113	[1902] 1 K. B. 38; 71 L. J. K. B. 72; 85 L. T. 499
Erskine & Co. v Sachs	C.A.	—	168	[1901] 2 K. B. 504; 70 L. J. K. B. 978; 85 L. T. 385
Esam v Attorney-General. In re Wilkinson	CH.D.KEK.J.	—	22	[1902] 1 Ch. 841; 71 L. J. Ch. 663
Esher District Council v Marks	K.B.D.	330	67	71 L. J. K. B. 309; 86 L. T. 222
Evans v Chapman	CHD.JOYCE,J.	—	24	86 L. T. 381
Ewart v Fryer	CHD.JOYCE,J.	—	135	86 L. T. 676
F. v F.	CH.D.FAR.J.	—	71	[1902] 1 Ch. 688; 71 L. J. Ch. 415
Falkner's Gold Mining Co. v McKinnery	P.C.	—	125	[1901] A. C. 581; 70 L. J. P. C. 116; 85 L. T. 361
Farmer v Pitt	CHD.BYRNE,J	453	120	[1902] 1 Ch. 954; 71 L. J. Ch. 500
Farquharson v King	H.L.	—	151	[1902] A. C. 325; 71 L. J. K. B. 667; 86 L. T. 810
Faulder's Trade-Mark, In re	C.A.	—	171	[1902] 1 Ch. 125; 71 L. J. Ch. 124; 86 L. T. 66
Fenwick, Stobart, & Co., In re. Deep Sea Fishery Co.'s Claim	CH.D.BUCK.J.	—	30	[1902] 1 Ch. 507; 71 L. J. Ch. 321; 86 L. T. 193
Fergusson's Trust, In re	CHD.BYRNE,J	312	188	[1902] 1 Ch. 483; 71 L. J. Ch. 360
Ferneley's Estate, In re	CH.D.BADY,J	346	195	[1902] 1 Ch. 543; 71 L. J. Ch. 422; 86 L. T. 413
Feyericks v Hubbard	K.B.D.	557	139	71 L. J. K. B. 509; 86 L. T. 829
Field v Longden	C.A.	212	106	[1902] 1 K. B. 47; 71 L. J. K. B. 120; 85 L. T. 571
Finchley Electric Light Co. v Finchley Urban District Council	CH.D.FAR.J.	470	102	[1902] 1 Ch. 866; 71 L. J. Ch. 450; 86 L. T. 286
Fitzpatrick v Evans	C.A.	290	107	[1902] 1 K. B. 505; 71 L. J. K. B. 302; 86 L. T. 141
Fitzroy v Hunloke. In re Hunloke	CH.D.BADY,J.	—	153	[1902] 1 Ch. 941; 71 L. J. Ch. 530; 86 L. T. 829
Fleming v Loe	CH.D.HDY.J.	55	38	[1901] 2 Ch. 594; 70 L. J. Ch. 805; 85 L. T. 480
———	C.A.	—	—	[1902] 2 Ch. 359
Fletcher v Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Co.	CH.D.BUCK.J	423	181	[1902] 1 Ch. 901; 71 L. J. Ch. 590
——— v London United Tramways	C.A.	597	108	[1902] 2 K. B. 269; 71 L. J. K. B. 653; 86 L. T. 700
Forbes-Smith v Forbes-Smith	C.A.	6	49	[1901] P. 258; 70 L. J. P. 61; 84 L. T. 789
Ford, In re. Ford v Ford	CH.D.BUCK.J.	91	3	[1902] 1 Ch. 218; 71 L. J. Ch. 24; 85 L. T. 609
Foulger v Arding	C.A.	417	91	[1902] 1 K. B. 700; 71 L. J. K. B. 499; 86 L. T. 488
Freake's Settlement, In re. Kinnaird v Freake	CHD.JOYCE,J.	237	152	[1902] 1 Ch. 97; 71 L. J. Ch. 20; 85 L. T. 454

Name of Case.	Court.	Page in W. R. 1901-02.	Column in Digest.	References to Contemporaneous Reports.
Frith, In re. Hindson v Wood	CHD.JOYCE,J.	—	187	85 L. T. 455
———. Newton v Rolfe	CH.D. KEK. J.	—	173	[1902] 1 Ch. 342; 71 L. J. Ch. 199; 86 L. T. 212
Frogley v Phillips	CHD.BYRNE,J	184	141
Fryer v Ewart	H.L.	—	91	[1902] A. C. 187; 71 L. J. Ch. 433; 86 L. T. 242
Garnett-Botfield v Garnett-Botfield	P.D. & A.D.	—	193	[1901] P. 335; 71 L. J. P. 1; 85 L. T. 641
Garrioch v Barclay. In re Telfair	CH.D. FAR. J.	—	189	86 L. T. 496
Gates v Bill & Son	C.A.	546	116	[1902] 2 K. B. 38
Gattward v Knee	P.D. & A.D.	—	147	[1902] P. 99; 71 L. J. P. 34; 86 L. T. 119
Gee v Oldham Justices	K.B.D.	394	95	86 L. T. 389
General Accident Assurance Corporation v Noel	K.B.D.	381	144	[1902] 1 K. B. 377; 71 L. J. K. B. 236; 86 L. T. 555
Geutel v Rapps	K.B.D.	216	102	[1902] 1 K. B. 160; 71 L. J. K. B. 105; 85 L. T. 683
Glamorganshire Canal Navigation Co. v Nixon's Canal Navigation Co.	C.A.	—	182	85 L. T. 53
Goddard v Brodie. In re Chisholm	CH.D. KEK. J.	—	4	[1902] 1 Ch. 457; 71 L. J. Ch. 289; 86 L. T. 183
Godwin v Schweppes	CHD.JOYCE,J.	409	55	[1902] 1 Ch. 926; 71 L. J. Ch. 438; 86 L. T. 377
Goodhart v Woodhead. In re Greenwood	CHD.JOYCE,J.	—	186	[1902] 2 Ch. 198; 71 L. J. Ch. 579; 86 L. T. 500
Goodrich v Grimsby (Town Clerk)	K.B.D.	170	58	[1902] 1 K. B. 301; 71 L. J. K. B. 99; 85 L. T. 583
Goodwin v Sheffield Corporation	K.B.D.	—	129	[1902] 1 K. B. 629; 71 L. J. K. B. 492; 86 L. T. 682
Gophir Diamond Co. v Wood	CH.D.EADY.J.	603	39	[1902] 1 Ch. 950; 71 L. J. Ch. 550; 86 L. T. 801
Gordon v London, City, and Midland Bank. Gordon v Capital and Counties Bank	C.A.	276	11	[1902] 1 K. B. 242; 71 L. J. K. B. 215; 86 L. T. 98
Gorringe v Shoreditch Corporation	K.B.D.	—	116	86 L. T. 592
Gossling, In re. Gossling v Elcock	CH.D.EADY,J	—	194	[1902] 1 Ch. 945
Graham v Works and Public Buildings Commissioners	K.B.D.	122	47	[1901] 2 K. B. 781; 70 L. J. K. B. 860; 85 L. T. 96
Great Northern and City Railway Co., In re	C.A.	402	132	[1902] 1 K. B. 812; 71 L. J. K. B. 598; 86 L. T. 440
Great Northern and City Railway Co. v Tillett	K.B.D.	652	93	[1902] 1 K. B. 874; 71 L. J. K. B. 525; 86 L. T. 723
Great Western Railway Co. v Blades	CH.D.BUCK.J.	—	119	[1901] 2 Ch. 624; 70 L. J. Ch. 847; 85 L. T. 308
——— v London and County Banking Co.	H.L.	50	11	[1901] A. C. 414; 70 L. J. K. B. 915; 85 L. T. 152
——— v Solihull District Council	C.A.	—	65	86 L. T. 852
Green v Carstang	K.B.D.	—	185	85 L. T. 615
Greenwell v Porter	CH.D. EADY,J	—	33	[1902] 1 Ch. 530; 71 L. J. Ch. 243; 86 L. T. 220
Greenwood, In re. Goodhart v Woodhead	CHD.JOYCE,J.	—	186	[1902] 2 Ch. 198; 71 L. J. Ch. 579; 86 L. T. 500
——— v Backhouse	K.B.D.	—	8	86 L. T. 566
Gregg v Holland. In re Holland	C.A.	575	137	71 L. J. Ch. 518; 86 L. T. 542
Gresham Life Assurance Society v Bishop	H.L.	593	75	[1902] A. C. 287; 71 L. J. K. B. 618; 86 L. T. 693
Griffin v Griffin	C.A.	250	62	[1902] 1 Ch. 135; 71 L. J. Ch. 112; 86 L. T. 38
Griffith v Davis. In re Davis	CH.D. FAR. J.	—	54	86 L. T. 889
Griffiths Cycle Corporation, In re	C.A.	—	135	85 L. T. 776
Grosvenor House, &c., Building Society, In re	CH.D.BUCK,J.	630	20
Ground Rent Development Co. v West	CH.D. KEK.J.	—	88	[1902] 1 Ch. 674; 71 L. J. Ch. 354; 86 L. T. 403
Grove v Portal	CHD.JOYCE,J.	—	90	[1902] 1 Ch. 727; 71 L. J. Ch. 299; 86 L. T. 350
Gunn v Showell's Brewery	C.A.	659	144
Guyton and Rosenberg's Contract, In re	CH.D. HDY. J.	38	187	[1901] 2 Ch. 591; 70 L. J. Ch. 751; 85 L. T. 66
Haedicke & Lipski's Contract, In re	CHD.BYRNE,J	20	177	[1901] 2 Ch. 666; 70 L. J. Ch. 811; 85 L. T. 402
Hall v McWilliam	K.B.D.	—	104	85 L. T. 239
——— v Michelmore	K.B.D.	172	58	86 L. T. 17
Hamilton-Russell v Inland Revenue Commissioners	C.A.	193	79	[1902] 1 K. B. 142; 71 L. J. K. B. 201; 85 L. T. 738
Hancock v Watson	H.L.	321	194	[1902] A. C. 14; 71 L. J. Ch. 149; 85 L. T. 729
Hand v Blow	C.A.	5	92	[1901] 2 Ch. 271; 70 L. J. Ch. 687; 85 L. T. 156
Handley v London, Edinburgh, and Glasgow Assurance Co.	K.B.D.	—	43	[1902] 1 K. B. 350; 71 L. J. K. B. 39
Handman and Wilcox, In re	C.A.	—	153	[1902] 1 Ch. 599; 86 L. T. 246
Hannen v Hillyer. In re Davis	CH.D.BUCK,J.	378	185	[1902] 1 Ch. 876; 71 L. J. Ch. 459; 86 L. T. 292
Harburg India Rubber Comb Co. v Martin	C.A.	449	64	[1902] 1 K. B. 778; 71 L. J. K. B. 529; 86 L. T. 505
Hargreaves, In re. Hargreaves v Hargreaves	CHD.JOYCE,J.	—	188	86 L. T. 43
Harries v Harries	P.D. & A.D.	—	50	86 L. T. 262
Harrow v Marylebone District Property Co. White v Harrow	CH.D.JOYCE,J.	166	91
———	C.A.	259	91	86 L. T. 4
Hartley v Pendarves	CH.D. HDY. J.	56	4	[1901] 2 Ch. 498; 70 L. J. Ch. 745; 85 L. T. 64
Hartopp v Hartopp	C.A.	—	51	71 L. J. P. 78
Haslam and Hier Evans, In re	C.A.	444	165	86 L. T. 663

Name of Case.	Court.	Page in W. R. 1901-02.	Column in Digest.	References to Contemporaneous Reports.
Hawke v Mackenzie (No. 1)	K.B.D.	—	63	[1902] 2 K. B. 225; 71 L. J. K. B. 565
——— (No. 2)	K.B.D.	—	63	[1902] 2 K. B. 225; 71 L. J. K. B. 565
——— (No. 3)	K.B.D.	—	87	[1902] 2 K. B. 234; 71 L. J. K. B. 570
Helyar, In re. Helyar v Beckett	CHD. JOYCE, J.	285	71	[1902] 1 Ch. 391; 71 L. J. Ch. 209; 85 L. T. 627
Henderson's Patent, In re	P.C.	—	128	[1901] A. C. 616; 70 L. J. P. C. 119; 85 L. T. 358
Herbert v McQuade	K.B.D.	—	74	[1901] 2 K. B. 761; 70 L. J. K. B. 725; 84 L. T. 661
Herdman v Wheeler	K.B.D.	300	18	[1902] 1 K. B. 361; 71 L. J. K. B. 270; 86 L. T. 48
Hertfordshire County Council v Barnet District Council	C.A.	582	67	[1902] 2 K. B. 48; 71 L. J. K. B. 610; 86 L. T. 880
Higgins v Dawson	H.L.	337	186	[1902] A. C. 1; 71 L. J. Ch. 132; 85 L. T. 763
Highett and Bird's Contract, In re	CH. D. EADY, J.	424	180	[1902] 2 Ch. 214; 71 L. J. Ch. 508
Hill, In re. Hill v Hill	C.A.	434	187	[1902] 1 Ch. 807; 71 L. J. Ch. 417; 86 L. T. 336
——— v Hill	P.D. & A.D.	400	87	[1902] P. 140; 71 L. J. P. 81; 86 L. T. 597
Hindson v Wood. Frick, In re	CHD. JOYCE, J.	—	187	85 L. T. 455
Hiscoe, In re. Hiscoe v Waite	CH. D. KEK. J.	—	185	71 L. J. Ch. 347
Hoare v Lewisham	K.B.D.	—	116	85 L. T. 281
Hoare v Truman, Hanbury, Buxton & Co.	K.B.D.	396	60	71 L. J. K. B. 380; 86 L. T. 417
Holden (Limited) v Bostock & Co. (Limited)	C.A.	323	47
Holland, In re. Gregg v Holland	C.A.	575	157	71 L. J. Ch. 518; 86 L. T. 542
Holland v Bennett	C.A.	401	143	[1902] 1 K. B. 867; 71 L. J. K. B. 490; 86 L. T. 485
Holland v Hall	K.B.D.	525	64
Home and Colonial Stores v Colls	C.A.	227	56	[1902] 1 Ch. 302; 71 L. J. Ch. 146; 85 L. T. 701
Honywood v Honywood	CHD. BYRNE, J.	—	158	[1902] 1 Ch. 347; 71 L. J. Ch. 174; 86 L. T. 215
Hope v Hope	C.A.	—	132	86 L. T. 363
Hopkins, In re. Ex parte de Stedingk	BKCY.	—	15	86 L. T. 504
———	C.A.	—	15	86 L. T. 676
——— v McBride	K.B.D.	255	164
Horne v Struben	P.C.	—	20	[1902] A. C. 454
Hornsey Urban District Council v Hennell	K.B.D.	521	100	[1902] 2 K. B. 73; 71 L. J. K. B. 479; 83 L. T. 423
Hotham, In re. Hotham v Doughty	CH. D. HDY. J.	150	153	[1901] 2 Ch. 790; 71 L. J. Ch. 68; 85 L. T. 543
———	C.A.	692	153
Ho Tung v Man On Ins. Co.	P.C.	—	68	[1902] A. C. 232; 71 L. J. P. C. 46; 85 L. T. 617
Hounsell v Dunning	CHD. JOYCE, J.	—	97	[1902] 1 Ch. 512; 71 L. J. Ch. 259; 86 L. T. 382
Howells v Vivian	C.A.	163	108	85 L. T. 529
Howgate and Osborn, In re	CH. D. KEK. J.	—	48	[1902] 1 Ch. 451; 71 L. J. Ch. 279; 86 L. T. 180
Hudson v Gribble	K.B.D.	685	75
Hughes v Pump House Hotel Co.	C.A.	660	9	[1902] 2 K. B. 190; 71 L. J. K. B. 630; 86 L. T. 794
——— (No. 2)	C.A.	677	140
Hull Electric Co. v Ottawa Electric Co.	P.C.	—	20	[1902] A. C. 237; 71 L. J. P. C. 58; 86 L. T. 208
Hulthen v Stewart & Co.	C.A.	538	161	[1902] 2 K. B. 199; 71 L. J. K. B. 624; 86 L. T. 397
Humber & Co. v Griffiths Cycle Co.	H.L.	—	36	85 L. T. 141
Humble v Humphreys	P.C.	—	120	[1902] A. C. 207; 71 L. J. P. C. 18; 85 L. T. 563
Hunloke, In re. Fitzroy v Hunloke	CH. D. EADY, J.	—	153	[1902] 1 Ch. 941; 71 L. J. Ch. 530; 86 L. T. 829
Hunt, Sir Frederick S., In re. Harvey's Claim	C.A.	—	85	[1902] 2 Ch. 318n; 86 L. T. 504
Hunt v Luck	C.A.	291	180	[1902] 1 Ch. 428; 71 L. J. Ch. 239; 86 L. T. 68
Hunter v Rex	K.B.D.	618	75	[1902] 2 K. B. 255
Husey v London Electric Supply Corporation	C.A.	420	59	[1902] 1 Ch. 411; 71 L. J. Ch. 313; 86 L. T. 166
Husey Hunt v Bozzelli. Bozzelli's Settlement, In re	CH. D. EADY, J.	447	37	[1902] 1 Ch. 751; 71 L. J. Ch. 505; 86 L. T. 445
Huxtable, In re. Huxtable v Crawfurd	CH. D. FAR. J.	185	194	[1902] 1 Ch. 214; 71 L. J. Ch. 168; 85 L. T. 516
Inderwick v Tatchell	C.A.	100	191	[1901] 2 Ch. 738; 71 L. J. Ch. 1; 85 L. T. 432
Ireland v Hart	CHD. JOYCE, J.	315	35	[1902] 1 Ch. 522; 71 L. J. Ch. 276; 86 L. T. 385
Jackson v Commissioners of Inland Revenue	K.B.D.	666	78
Jackson's Settled Estate, In re	CH. D. BUCK. J.	235	156	[1902] 1 Ch. 258; 71 L. J. Ch. 154; 85 L. T. 625
Jacob v Gaviller	K.B.D.	423	84

Name of Case.	Court.	Page in W. R. 1901-02.	Column in Digest.	References to Contemporaneous Reports.
Jacob's v Booth's Distillery Co.	H.L.	49	140	85 L. T. 262
Jacobs v Morris	C.A.	371	145	[1902] 1 Ch. 816; 71 L. J. Ch. [illegible]; 86 L. T. 275
Jarrah Timber and Wood Paving Corporation v Samuel	CH.D. KEK. J.	601	122
Jarred v Clements	CHD. BYRNE J.	611	178	86 L. T. 887
Jennings v Mather	C.A.	52	14	[1902] 1 K. B. 1; 70 L. J. K. B. 1032; 85 L. T. 396
Johnson & Co. (Limited), In re	C.A.	482	27	[1902] 2 Ch. 101; 71 L. J. Ch. 576; 86 L. T. 791
Jones, In re. Elgood v Jones	CH.D. BUCK. J.	215	3	[1902] 1 Ch. 92; 71 L. J. Ch. 6; 85 L. T. 608
Jones v Davies	K.B.D.	—	61	86 L. T. 447
Jones v Gardiner	CHD. BYRNE, J	265	178	[1902] 1 Ch. 191; 71 L. J. Ch. 93; 86 L. T. 74
——— v Humphreys	K.B.D.	191	133	[1902] 1 K. B. 10; 71 L. J. K. B. 23; 85 L. T. 488
——— v Rowland. In re Rowland	CH.D. EADY, J.	—	191	86 L. T. 78
Joplin's Brewery Co., In re	CH.D. BUCK. J.	75	27	[1902] 1 Ch. 79; 71 L. J. Ch. 21; 85 L. T. 411
Jukes, In re. Ex parte Official Receiver	BKCY.	560	13	[1902] 2 K. B. 58; 86 L. T. 456
Karunaratne v Ferdinandus	P.C.	—	21	[1902] A. C. 405; 86 L. T. 329
Kaye v Kaye	C.A.	499	53	86 L. T. 638
Keates v Woodward	C.A.	258	43	[1902] 1 K. B. 532; 71 L. J. K. B. 325; 86 L. T. 369
Keen & Keen, In re. Ex parte Bristol School Board	BKCY.	334	16	[1902] 1 K. B. 555; 71 L. J. K. B. 487; 86 L. T. 235
Kelcey v Harrison. In re Peacock	CH.D. EADY, J	473	4	[1902] 1 Ch. 552; 71 L. J. Ch. 325; 86 L. T. 414
Kelly's Directories v Gavin and Lloyd's	C.A.	385	42	[1902] 1 Ch. 631; 71 L. J. Ch. 405; 86 L. T. 393
——— (No. 2)	CHD. BYRNE, J	—	136	[1901] 2 Ch. 763; 70 L. J. Ch. 786; 85 L. T. 399
Kenny v Harrison	C.A.	—	109	[1902] 2 K. B. 168
Kensington (Baron), In re. Longford (Earl) v Kensington	CH.D. FAR. J.	201	5	[1902] 1 Ch. 203; 71 L. J. Ch. 170; 85 L. T. 577
Kent v Kent	P.D. & A.D.	—	130	[1902] P. 108; 71 L. J. P. 50; 86 L. T. 536
Key & Son, In re	CHD. BYRNE, J	234	30	[1902] 1 Ch. 467; 71 L. J. Ch. 254; 86 L. T. 374
Kidston v Moncean Ironworks Co.	K.B.D.	—	151	86 L. T. 556
Kingdon and Wilson, In re	C.A.	533	136	[1902] 2 Ch. 242; 71 L. J. Ch. 604; 86 L. T. 639
King's College, Cambridge v Uxbridge Rural Council	CHD. BYRNE, J	—	158	[1901] 2 Ch. 768; 70 L. J. Ch. 844; 85 L. T. 303
Kinnaird v Freake. In re Freake's Settlement	CHD. JOYCE, J	237	152	[1902] 1 Ch. 97; 71 L. J. Ch. 20; 85 L. T. 454
Kirby, In the Goods of	P.D. & A.D.	—	146	[1902] P. 188
Kirk v Kirk	P.D. & A.D.	—	50	[1902] P. 145; 71 L. J. P. 78
Kirkhouse v Blakeway	K.B.D.	206	59	[1902] 1 K. B. 306; 71 L. J. K. B. 130; 86 L. T. 19
Knight v Cubitt	C.A.	113	112	[1902] 1 K. B. 31; 71 L. J. K. B. 65; 85 L. T. 526
Kniveton v Northern Employers' Mutual Indemnity Co.	K.B.D.	70[illegible]	42	[1902] 1 K. B. 880; 71 L. J. K. B. 588; 86 L. T. 721
Lagunas Nitrate Co. v Schroeder	CHD. JOYCE, J	—	29	85 L. T. 22
Lalor, In the Goods of	P.D. & A.D.	—	185	71 L. J. P. 17; 85 L. T. 643
Lancashire Brick and Terra Cotta Co. v Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Co.	C.A.	—	149	[1902] 1 K. B. 651; 71 L. J. K. B. 431; 86 L. T. 176
Langham v Langham. In re New	C.A.	17	175	[1901] 2 Ch. 534; 70 L. J. Ch. 710; 85 L. T. 174
Law Union and Crown Insurance Co. v Hill	H.L.	—	192	[1902] A. C. 263; 71 L. J. Ch. 602; 86 L. T. 773
Lawford & Lawrence, In re	BKCY.	592	14	86 L. T. 693
Lawson v Harvey. In re Richards	CH.D. HDY. J.	57	3	[1901] 2 Ch. 399; 70 L. J. Ch. 699; 85 L. T. 273
Leas Hotel Co., In re. Salter v Leas Hotel Co.	CH.D. KEK. J.	409	27	[1902] 1 Ch. 332; 71 L. J. Ch. 294; 86 L. T. 182
Legh's Settled Estates, In re	CH.D. KEK. J.	570	155	[1902] 2 Ch. 274; 71 L. J. Ch. 668; 86 L. T. 884
Leigh v Leigh	CH D. EADY, J.	380	7	[1902] 1 Ch. 400; 71 L. J. Ch. 195; 86 L. T. 219
——— v Taylor	H.L.	623	61	[1902] A. C. 157; 71 L. J. Ch. 272; 86 L. T. 239
Lester v Quested	K.B.D.	207	62	85 L. T. 487
Leveridge, In re. Spain v Lejoindre	CHD. JOYCE, J.	205	187	[1901] 2 Ch. 830; 71 L. J. Ch. 23; 85 L. T. 458
Levi v Anglo-Continental Gold Reefs of Rhodesia	C.A.	625	141	86 L. T. 857
Lewis v Sutton. In re Sutton	CH.D. BUCK. J.	—	23	[1091] 2 Ch. 640; 70 L. J. Ch. 747; 85 L. T. 411
Leyton and Walthamstow Cycle Co., In re	CH.D. WRI. J.	93	35
Lightbody v West	K.B.D.	494	147
Lisle v Reeve	C.A.	231	122	[1902] 1 Ch. 53; 71 L. J. Ch. 42; 85 L. T. 464

Name of Case.	Court.	Page in W. R. 1901-02.	Column in Digest	References to Contemporaneous Reports.
Llewellyn v Washington. Maddock, In re	CH.D. KEK.J.	54	4	[1901] 2 Ch. 372; 70 L. J. Ch. 660; 85 L. T. 12
——. . . .	C.A.	598	4	[1902] 2 Ch. 220; 71 L. J. Ch. 567; 86 L. T. 644
Lloyd v Hathern Station Brick Co. .	C.A.	—	136	85 L. T. 158
—— v Steel. In re Wilkinson .	CH.D. HDY. J.	—	194	85 L. T. 43
—— (Edward) (Limited) v Sturgeon Falls Pulp Co.	K.B.D.	—	39	85 L. T. 162
Lockie & Craggs, In re . .	K.B.D.	—	39	86 L. T. 388
London County Council v Attorney-General	H.L.	497	99	[1902] A. C. 165; 71 L. J. Ch. 268; 86 L. T. 161
London and Globe Finance Co., In re	CHD.BYRNE,J	253	36
London and India Docks Co. v Great Eastern Railway Co.	C.A.	461	149	[1902] 1 K. B. 568; 71 L. J. K. B. 369; 86 L. T. 339
—— v Woolwich (Borough) .	K.B.D.	639	100	[1902] 1 K. B. 750; 71 L. J. K. B. 394; 86 L. T. 619
London and Northern Bank, In re. Archer's case	CH.D. WRI. J	167	36
——	C.A.	262	36	85 L. T. 698
—— Haddock's case. Hoyle's case	CHD.BYRNE,J	386	36
——	C.A.	536	36	[1902] 2 Ch. 73; 71 L. J. Ch. 511; 86 L. T. 430
London and North-Western Railway Co. v Westminster (Mayor)	CHD.JOYCE,J	268	118	[1902] 1 Ch. 269; 71 L. J. Ch. 34; 85 L. T. 544
Long Eaton Recreation Grounds Co. v Midland Railway Co.	K.B.D.	120	94	71 L. J. K. B. 74; 85 L. T. 278
——.	C.A.	693	94	86 L. T. 873
Longford (Earl) v Kensington. In re Kensington	CH.D. FAR. J.	201	5	[1902] 1 Ch. 203; 71 L. J. Ch. 170; 85 L. T. 577
Lord Advocate v Stewart . .	H.L.	673	74	[1902] A. C. 344; 71 L. J. P. C. 66; 86 L. T. 603
Lowe v Adams . . .	CH.D. HDY. J	37	93	[1901] 2 Ch. 598; 70 L. J. Ch. 783; 85 L. T. 195
McCheane v Gyles (No. 1) . .	C.A.	376	143	[1902] 1 Ch. 287; 71 L. J. Ch. 183; 86 L. T. 1
—— (No. 2) . . .	CH.D.BUCK J.	387	140	[1902] 1. Ch. 911; 71 L. J. Ch. 446; 86 L. T. 217
McDonald v Hughes . .	K.B.D.	318	94	[1902] 1 K. B. 94; 71 L. J. K. B. 43; 85 L. T. 727
McDowall v Great Western Railway Co.	K.B.D.	—	124	[1902] 1 K. B. 618; 71 L. J. K. B. 330; 86 L. T. 558
McEacharn v Cotton . . .	P.C.	—	90	[1902] 2 A. C. 104; 71 L. J. P. C. 20; 85 L. T. 594
McGrath v Neill . . .	C.A.	162	107	[1902] 1 K. B. 211; 71 L. J. K. B. 58
McIver v Tate Steamers . .	C.A.	642	137	[1902] 2 K. B. 184
Mackenzie v Hawke . .	K.B.D.	—	64	[1902] 2 K. B. 216; 71 L. J. K. B. 561
McKinnon v Barclay . . .	H.L.	—	115	85 L. T. 286
McMurdo, In re. Penfield v McMurdo	CH.D. EADY,J.	—	—	86 L. T. 553
——.	C.A.	644	3	86 L. T. 814
Macoun v Erskine & Co. . .	C.A.	—	168	[1901] 2 K. B. 493; 70 L. J. K. B. 973; 85 L. T. 372
Maddock, In re. Llewellyn v Washington	CH.D. KEK. J.	54	4	[1901] 2 Ch. 372; 70 L. J. Ch. 660; 85 L. T. 12
——.	C.A.	598	4	[1902] 2 Ch. 220; 71 L. J. Ch. 567; 86 L. T. 644
Maddy, In re. Maddy v Maddy .	CHD.JOYCE,J.	—	156	[1901] 2 Ch. 820; 71 L. J. Ch. 18; 85 L. T. 341
Magdalen College, Oxford, In re .	CH.D. HDY. J.	90	141	[1901] 2 Ch. 786; 70 L. J. Ch. 821; 85 L. T. 479
Manchester Brewery Co. v Coombs .	CH.D. FAR. J.	—	89	[1901] 2 Ch. 608; 70 L. J. Ch. 814
Manchester Liners v British and Foreign Marine Insurance Co.	K.B.D.	—	84	86 L. T. 148
Mander, In re . . .	K.B.D.	—	16	86 L. T. 234
Manners v Tyler . . .	K.B.D.	604	7	[1902] 1 K. B. 901; 71 L. J. K. B. 585; 86 L. T. 716
Marais v General Officer Commanding in South Africa	P.C.	273	106	[1902] A. C. 109; 71 L. J. P. C. 42; 85 L. T. 734
Marchant v Morton . .	K.B.D.	—	9	[1901] 2 K. B. 529; 70 L. J. K. B. 820; 85 L. T. 169
Mare, In re. Mare v Howey . .	CH.D KEK.J	—	157	[1902] 2 Ch. 112; 71 L. J. Ch. 649
"Margery," The . .	P.D. & A.D.	654	162	[1902] P. 157; 71 L. J. P. 83; 86 L. T. 863
Maritime Insurance Co. v Stearns .	K.B.D.	238	84	[1901] 2 K. B. 912; 71 L. J. K. B. 86
Marrs v Thompson . .	K.B.D.	—	29	86 L. T. 759
Marshall v Bull . . .	C.A.	—	42	85 L. T. 77
—— v Rudeforth . .	C.A.	596	107	[1902] 2 K. B. 175; 86 L. T. 752
Marshall and Scottish Employers' Liability Co., In re	K.B.D.	—	81	85 L. T. 757
Marten, In re. Shaw v Marten .	C.A.	209	130	[1902] 1 Ch. 314; 71 L. J. Ch 203; 85 L. T. 704
—— v Steamship Owners' Underwriting Association	K.B.D.	587	83
Maskelyne v Smith . .	K.B.D.	—	62	[1902] 2 K. B. 158; 71 L. J. K. B. 476; 86 L. T. 832
Masters v Fraser . . .	K.B.D.	—	89	85 L. T. 611
Mayhew v Sutton . .	K.B.D.	216	65	71 L. J. K. B. 46; 88 L. T. 18

Name of Case.	Court.	Page in W. R. 1901-02.	Column in Digest.	References to Contemporaneous Reports.
Mre v Cruikshank	K.B D.	—	145	86 L. T. 708
Mellor's Trustee v Maas	BKCY.	111	13	[1902] 1 K. B. 137; 71 L. J. K. B. 26; 85 L. T. 490
Mercer v Liverpool and South Lancashire Railway Co.	K.B.D.	155	94	[1901] 2 K. B. 753; 70 L. J. K. B. 775; 85 L. T. 283
"Mersey," The	P.D. & A.D.	—	162	[1901] P. 369; 70 L. J. P. 100; 85 L. T. 584
Metal Constituents (Limited), In re. Lord Lurgan's case	CH.D BUCK J.	492	33	[1902] 1 Ch. 707; 71 L. J. Ch. 323; 86 L. T. 291
Mexborough, In re. Savile v Mexb rough	C.A.	—	185	86 L. T. 331
Michael v Hart	K.B.D.	154	—	[1901] 2 K. B. 867; 70 L. J. K. B. 1000; 85 L. T. 548
———	C.A.	308	167	[1902] 1 K. B. 482; 71 L. J. K. B. 265; 86 L. T. 474
Midland Railway Co. v Attorney-General	H.L.	433	77	[1902] A. C. 171; 71 L. J. K. B. 315; 86 L. T. 206
Millar v Law Accident Insurance Society	K.B.D.	474	83	71 L. J. K. B. 551
Minister & Co. v Apperley	K.B.D.	510	134	[1902] 1 K. B. 643; 71 L. J. K. B. 452; 86 L. T. 625
"Minneapolis," The	P.D. & A D.	—	162	[1902] P. 30; 71 L. J. P. 28; 86 L. T. 263
Mitchinson v Spencer	CH.D.EADY,J.	—	164	86 L. T. 618
Modisto Pineiro v Dupre	K.B.D.	—	159	86 L. T. 560
Moffatt & Paige v Gill & Sons	C.A.	528	41	86 L. T. 465
Monk v Arnold	K.B.D.	667	60	[1902] 1 K. B. 761; 71 L. J. K. B. 441; 86 L. T. 581
Montgomery & Co. v Indemnity Mutual Marine Insurance Co.	C.A.	440	82	[1902] 1 K. B. 734; 71 L. J. K. B. 467; 86 L. T. 462
Moore v Keyte	K.B.D.	457	176	[1902] 1 K. B. 768; 71 L. J. K. B. 454; 86 L. T. 532
Morgan's Brewery Co. v Crosskill	CH D.BUCK.J	—	31	[1902] 1 Ch. 898; 71 L. J. Ch. 585
Morris (Jenny), In re	P.D. & A.D.	—	68	[1902] P. 104; 71 L. J. P. 56; 86 L. T. 596
Morris v Northern Employers' Mutual Indemnity Co.	C.A.	545	114	[1902] 2 K. B. 165; 86 L. T. 748
Mortgage Insurance Corporation v Canadian Agricultural, &c., Co.	CH.D. KEK. J.	—	26	[1901] 2 Ch. 377; 70 L. J. Ch. 684; 84 L. T. 861
Morton v Woodward	C.A.	—	113	[1902] 2 K. B. 276; 86 L. T. 878
Moses, In re. Beddington v Beddington	C.A.	—	131	[1902] 1 Ch. 100; 71 L. J. Ch. 101; 85 L. T. 596
Mostyn v Fitzsimmons	K.B D.	—	92	[1902] 1 K. B. 512; 71 L. J. K. B. 89
Mumford v Walker	K.B.D.	—	90	71 L. J. K. B. 19; 85 L. T. 518
"Mystery," The	P.D. & A D.	414	160	[1902] P. 115; 71 L. J. P. 39; 86 L. T. 359
Nairne v Nairne	P.D. & A.D.	—	48	71 L. J. P. 37; 85 L. T. 649
Nash v Finlay	K.B.D.	—	98	85 L. T. 682
National Bank of Wales, In re	CH.D.BUCK.J.	541	35
National Company for the Distribution of Electricity, In re	C.A.	—	37	[1902] 2 Ch. 34
National Telephone Co. v Tunbridge Wells Corporation	C.A.	—	44	85 L. T. 368
Neale v Gordon-Lennox	C.A.	487	133	[1902] 1 K. B. 838; 71 L. J. K B. 536; 86 L. T. 574
Neaverson v Peterborough Rural District Council	C A.	549	70	[1902] 1 Ch. 557; 71 L. J. Ch. 378; 86 L. T. 738
Nelson v Rex	P.C.	—	45	[1902] A. C. 250; 71 L. J. P. C. 55; 86 L. T. 164
Nesbitt v Wallace	ARCHES CT.	—	58	[1901] P. 354
Neville v Benjamin. In re Benjamin	CHD.JOYCE,J.	—	196	[1902] 1 Ch. 723; 71 L. J. Ch. 319; 86 L. T. 387
New, In re. Langham v Langham	C.A.	17	175	[1901] 2 Ch. 534; 70 L. J. Ch. 710; 85 L. T. 174
Newbridge Rhondda Brewery Co. v Evans	K.B.D.	—	72	86 L. T. 453
Newcastle (Duke) v Worksop District Council	CH.D. FAR. J.	—	104	[1902] 2 Ch. 145; 71 L. J. Ch. 487; 86 L. T. 405
Newton v Rolfe. In re Frith	CH.D. KEK.J.	—	173	[1902] 1 Ch. 342; 71 L. J. Ch. 199; 86 L. T. 212
Nigel Gold Mining Co. v Hoade	K.B.D.	108	80	[1901] 2 K. B. 849; 70 L. J. K. B. 1006; 85 L. T. 482
Nightingale v Reynolds	CH.D. KEK.J.	—	121	[1902] 2 Ch. 117; 71 L. J. Ch. 586; 86 L. T. 703
Nixon v Smith. In re Timmins	CH.D. KEK.J.	164	174	[1902] 1 Ch. 176; 71 L. J. Ch. 118; 85 L. T. 672
Noakes v Rice	H.L.	305	122	[1902] A. C. 24; 71 L. J. Ch. 139; 86 L. T. 62
Norris, In re	CH.D. EADY J	316	165	[1902] 1 Ch. 741; 71 L. J. Ch. 187; 86 L. T. 56, 616
Nunn v Tyson	K B.D.	16	105	[1901] 2 K. B. 487; 70 L. J. K. B. 854; 85 L. T. 123
Official Receiver, Ex parte. In re Dunn	C.A.	183	183	[1902] 1 K. B. 107; 71 L. J. K. B. 83; 85 L. T. 567
Oliver v Bank of England	C.A.	340	145	[1902] 1 Ch. 610; 71 L. J. Ch. 388, 86 L. T. 248
Osborne & Bright's (Limited), In re	CH.D. KEK. J.	468	152	[1902] 1 Ch. 385; 71 L. J. Ch. 285; 86 L. T. 178
Owen v Gibbons	C.A.	—	71	[1902] 1 Ch. 636; 71 L. J. Ch. 338; 86 L. T. 571
Paine v Paine	P.D. & A.D.	382	51
Palmer v Culverwell	K.B.D.	—	9	85 L. T. 758
——— v Grand Junction Waterworks Co.	CH.D.EADY,J	—	155	86 L. T. 352

Name of Case.	Court.	Page in W. R. 1901-02.	Column in Digest.	References to Contemporaneous Reports.
Palmer v Thames Conservators	CH.D. KEK. J.	—	183	[1902] 1 Ch. 163; 71 L. J. Ch. 212; 85 L. T. 537
Panhard et Levassor v Panhard Levassor Motor Co.	CH.D. FAR. J	74	172	[1901] 2 Ch. 513; 70 L. J. Ch. 738; 85 L. T. 20
Paquin v Robinson	C.A.	—	140	85 L. T. 5
Parker v Bournemouth Corporation	K.B.D.	—	98	86 L. T. 449
——— v Stanley	CH.D. FAR. J.	282	56
Partington, In re. Reigh v Kane	CH.D. BUCK, J	388	154	[1902] 1 Ch. 711; 71 L. J. Ch. 472; 86 L. T. 194
Peach's Patent	P.C.	—	128	[1902] A. C. 414
Peacock, In re. Kelsey v Harrison	CH.D. EADY, J.	473	4	[1902] 1 Ch. 552; 71 L. J. Ch. 325; 86 L. T. 414
Pearce v Bolton	K.B.D.	—	43	[1902] 2 K. B. 111; 71 L. J. K. B. 558; 86 L. T. 530
Pearks v Houghton	K.B.D.	605	5	[1902] 1 K. B. 889; 71 L. J. K. B. 385; 86 L. T. 325
——— v Knight and Van Tromp	K.B.D.	104	5	[1901] 2 K. B. 825; 70 L. J. K. B. 1002; 85 L. T. 379
——— v Richardson	K.B.D.	286	6	[1902] 1 K. B. 91; 71 L. J. K. B. 18; 85 L. T. 616
——— v Ward	K.B.D.	—	6	[1902] 2 K. B. 1; 71 L. J. K. B. 656
Pegler v Pegler	P.D. & A.D.	—	49	85 L. T. 649
Pelham Clinton v Newcastle (Duke)	C.A.	83	188	[1902] 1 Ch. 34; 71 L. J. Ch. 53; 85 L. T. 439
Penfield v McMurdo. In re McMurdo	C.A.	644	3	86 L. T. 814
Penfold v Dixon. In re Dixon	CH.D. BUCK. J.	203	73	[1902] 1 Ch. 248; 71 L. J. Ch. 96; 85 L. T. 622
Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Co. v Rex	K.B.D.	—	164	[1901] 2 K. B. 686; 70 L. J. K. B. 845; 85 L. T. 71
Pepin v Bruyère	C.A.	34	38	[1902] 1 Ch. 24; 71 L. J. Ch. 39; 85 L. T. 461
Peppercll v Hird	CHD BYRNE, J	491	142	[1902] 1 Ch. 477; 71 L. J. Ch. 282
Peverett, In the Goods of	P.D. & A.D.	—	147	[1902] P. 205
Phillips v Howell	CHD. BYRNE, J	73	142	[1901] 2 Ch. 773; 71 L. J. Ch. 13; 85 L. T. 777
Pidgeon v Great Yarmouth Waterworks Co.	K.B.D.	—	183	[1902] 1 K. B. 310; 71 L. J. K. B. 61; 85 L. T. 632
Piper v Piper	P.D. & A.D.	—	68	[1902] P. 198
Pitt-Rivers, In re. Scott v Pitt-Rivers	C.A.	342	192	[1902] 1 Ch. 403; 71 L. J. Ch. 225; 86 L. T. 6
Poisson v Robertson	CH.D JOYCE, J	186	140
———	C.A.	260	—	86 L. T. 302
Poll v Dambe	K.B.D.	28	164	[1901] 2 K. B. 579; 70 L J. K. B. 721; 84 L. T. 870
Pope v Hawtrey	C.A.	—	140	85 L. T. 268
"Port Victoria," The	P.D. & A.D.	383	162	[1902] P. 25; 71 L. J. P. 36; 86 L. T. 804
Pritty v Child	K.B.D.	—	123	71 L. J. K. B. 512
Property Exchange v Wandsworth Local Board	C.A.	—	119	[1902] 2 K. B. 61; 71 L. J. K. B. 515; 86 L. T. 481
Pryce v Penrikyber Navigation Colliery Co.	C.A.	197	108	[1902] 1 K. B. 221; 71 L. J. K. B. 192
Pryce Jones v Williams	CH.D. JOYCE J	586	179
Puckett & Smith, In re	C.A.	532	179	[1902] 2 Ch. 258; 71 L. J. Ch. 666
Quinlan v Quinlan	P.C.	—	139	[1901] A. C. 612; 70 L. J. P. C. 122; 85 L. T. 360
Quinn v Leathem	H.L.	139	173	[1901] A. C. 495; 70 L. J. P. C. 76; 85 L. T. 289
Randall v British and American Shoe Co.	CH.D. EADY, J.	697	30	[1902] 2 Ch. 354
Randt Gold Mining Co. v New Balkis Eersteling	K.B.D.	—	33	71 L. J. K. B. 346; 85 L T. 780
Ratcliff v Mendellsohn	K.B.D.	106	167	[1901] 2 K. B. 844; 70 L. J. K. B. 969; 85 L. T. 426
Read v Friendly Society of Operative Stonemasons	K.B.D.	619	2	[1902] 2 K. B. 88; 71 L. J. K. B. 634; 86 L. T. 593
Reade, In the Goods of	P.D. & A.D.	—	146	[1902] P. 75; 71 L. J. P. 45; 86 L. T. 258
Redfern v Rosenthal	K.B.D.	—	19	85 L. T. 318
———	C.A.	—	19	86 L. T. 855
Redman, In re. Warton v Redman	CH.D. KEK. J.	19	62	[1901] 2 Ch. 471; 70 L. J. Ch. 669; 85 L. T. 13
Reeks v Kynoch	C.A.	113	111
Reeves & Co., In re	C.A.	252	133	[1902] 1 Ch. 29; 71 L. J. Ch. 70; 85 L. T. 495
Reg. v Barton	H.L.	—	21	[1902] A. C. 268
——— v Marais	P.C.	—	123	[1902] A. C. 51; 71 L. J. P. C. 82; 85 L. T. 363
Reigh v Kane. In re Partington	CH.D. BUCK. J.	388	154	[1902] 1 Ch. 711; 71 L. J. Ch. 472; 86 L. T. 194
Rex v Bros	K.B.D.	—	87	85 L. T. 581
——— v Burnby	K.B.D.	—	45	85 L. T. 168
——— v Canterbury (Archbishop). In re Gore	K.B.D.	348	58	86 L. T. 79
——— (No. 2)	K.B.D.	476	134	86 L. T. 450
——— v Clerkenwell Income Tax Commissioners	C.A.	—	76	[1901] 2 K. B. 879; 70 L. J. K. B. 1010; 85 L. T. 503
——— v Crompton District Council	K.B.D.	—	67	86 L. T. 762
——— v D'Eyncourt	C.A.	—	132	85 L. T. 501
——— v Essex Justices	K.B.D.	188	130	[1902] 1 K. B. 180; 71 L. J. K. B. 148; 85 L. T. 678

Name of Case.	Court.	Page in W. R. 1901-02.	Column in Digest.	References to Contemporaneous Reports.
Rex v Farnham (Justices of)	K.B.D.	573	87	86 L. T. 839
——— v French	Q.B.D.	555	86	[1902] 1 K. B. 637; 71 L. J. K. B. 382; 86 L. T. 587
——— v Hadwen	C.C.R.	589	46	[1902] 1 K. B. 882; 71 L. J. K. B. 581; 86 L. T. 601
——— v James	C.C.R.	286	47	[1902] 1 K. B. 540; 71 L. J. K. B. 211; 86 L. T. 202
——— v Kennedy	K.B.D.	633	86	86 L. T. 753
——— v Kingston Justices	K.B.D.	—	95	86 L. T. 589
——— v Lines	C.C.R.	303	46	[1902] 1 K. B 199; 71 L. J. K. B. 125; 85 L. T. 790
——— v Mallison	C.C.R.	—	46	86 L. T. 600
——— v Mead	K.B.D.	589	169	[1902] 2 K. B. 212
——— v Penfold	C.C.R.	671	45	[1902] 1 K. B. 547; 71 L. J. K. B. 306; 86 L. T. 204
——— v Pike	C.C.R.	672	46	[1902] 1 K. B. 552; 71 L. J. K. B. 287; 86 L. T. 205
——— v Plummer	C.C.R.	—	45	86 L. T. 836
——— v Stepney Borough Council	K.B.D.	412	99	[1902] 1 K. B. 317; 71 L. J. K. B. 238; 86 L. T. 21
——— v Tibbits	C.C.R.	125	45	[1902] 1 K. B. 77; 71 L. J. K. B. 4; 85 L. T. 521
——— v Tristram	C.A.	477	57	[1902] 1 K. B. 816; 71 L. J. K. B. 418; 86 L. T. 515
——— v Warwickshire (Justices)	K.B.D.	—	85	[1902] 2 K. B. 101; 71 L. J. K. B. 505; 86 L. T 568
——— v Wiseman	C.C.R.	333	44	71 L. J. K. B. 128; 85 L. T. 791
Reynolds v Ellis. In re Bankes	CH.D.BUCK J.	663	106	[1902] 2 Ch. 333
"Rhein," The	P.D. & A.D.	—	160	86 L. T. 265
Richards, In re. Lawson v Harvey	CH.D.EDY.J.	57	3	[1901] 2 Ch. 399; 70 L. J. Ch. 699; 85 L. T. 273
———, In re. Uglow v Richards	CH.D. FAR. J.	90	192	[1902] 1 Ch. 76; 71 L. J. Ch. 66; 85 L T. 452
——— v De Winton. Richards v Evans	CH.D. KEK.J.	87	24	[1901] 2 Ch. 566; 70 L. J. Ch. 719; 84 L. T. 831
Richardson, In re. Ex parte Thompson	BKCY.	—	15	86 L. T. 25
Richardson & Cook, In re. Ex parte Grime	BKCY.	—	17	86 L. T. 690
Ridd v Thorne	CH.D.JOYCE,J	542	166	[1902] 2 Ch. 344; 71 L. J. Ch. 624; 86 L. T. 655
Rimmer v Webster	CH.D. FAR. J.	517	173	[1902] 2 Ch. 163; 71 L. J. Ch. 561; 86 L. T. 491
Ripley v Arthur	CH.D. FAR. J	—	10	86 L. T. 495
———	C.A.	—	10	86 L. T. 735
Roberts, In re. Roberts v Parry	CHD.BYRNE,J	469	196
Robertson v Shuckburgh. In re Shuckburgh	CH.D. FAR. J	133	151	[1901] 2 Ch. 794; 71 L. J. Ch. 32; 85 L. T. 406
Robinson Gold Mining Co. v Alliance Marine, &c, Assurance Co.	K.B.D.	109	80	[1901] 2 K. B. 919; 70 L. J. K. B. 892; 85 L. T. 419
Rochdale Canal Co. v Manchester Ship Canal	H.L.	—	182	85 L. T 585
Rose v Buckett	C.A.	8	12	[1901] 2 K. B. 449; 70 L. J. K. B. 736; 84 L. T. 670
Rowland, In re. Jones v Rowland	CH.D.EADY,J	—	191	86 L. T. 78
Rowlands v Rowlands	K.B.D.	—	69	86 L. T. 125
Royal Baking Powder Co.'s Trade-Mark, In re	CH.D. FAR. J.	454	170
Royal Exchange Assurance Corporation v Sjoforsakrings Aktie Bolaget Vega	K.B.D.	25	85	[1901] 2 K. B. 567; 70 L J. K. B. 874; 85 L. T. 241
———	C.A.	694	85
Russell (Earl), In re	H.L.	—	17	[1901] A. C. 446; 70 L. J. K. B. 998; 85 L. T. 253
Rutherglen Parish Council v Glasgow Parish Council	H.L.	—	130	[1902] A. C. 360; 86 L. T. 607
Sachs v Henderson	C.A.	418	134	[1902] 1 K. B. 612; 71 L. J. K. B. 392; 86 L. T. 437
St. Stephen's (Churchwardens) v Great Northern and City Railway Co.	K.B.D.	395	118	86 L. T. 390
St. Thomas Rural Council and Heavitree Urban Council, In re	K.B.D.	—	103	86 L. T. 153
Salter v Leas Hotel Co. In re Leas Hotel Co.	CH.D. KEK.J.	409	27	[1902] 1 Ch. 332; 71 L. J. Ch. 294; 86 L. T. 182
Sandkuhl v Schnadhorst. In re Schnadhorst	C.A.	485	190	[1902] 2 Ch. 234; 71 L. J. Ch. 454; 86 L. T. 426
Saunders v White	C.A.	325	19	[1902] 1 K. B. 472; 71 L. J. K. B. 318; 86 L. T. 173
Savile v Mexborough. In re Mexborough	C A.	—	185	86 L. T. 331
Savill Bros. v Bethell	C.A.	580	177	71 L. J. Ch. 652
Scarisbrick v Nevinson. In re Chetwynd's Settlement	CH.D. FAR. J.	361	175	[1902] 1 Ch. 692; 71 L. J. Ch. 352; 86 L. T. 216

Name of Case.	Court.	Page in W. R. 1901-02.	Column in Digest.	References to Contemporaneous Reports.
Schmarr, In re	C.A.	245	135	[1902] 1 Ch. 326; 71 L. J. Ch. 219; 86 L. T. 71
Schnadhorst, In re. Sandkuhl v Schnadhorst	C.A.	485	190	[1902] 2 Ch. 234; 71 L. J. Ch. 454; 86 L. T. 426
Scott, In re. Scott v Scott	CH.D.BUCK.J.	454	70	[1902] 1 Ch. 918; 71 L. J. Ch. 475; 86 L. T. 348
——— v Clifford. In re Clifford	CH.D.BUCK.J	58	154	[1902] 1 Ch. 87; 71 L. J. Ch. 10; 85 L. T. 410
——— v Godfrey	K.B.D.	61	167	[1901] 2 K. B. 726; 70 L. J. K. B. 954; 85 L. T. 415
——— v Lowe	K.B.D.	—	117	86 L. T. 421
——— v Pitt-Rivers. In re Pitt-Rivers	C.A.	342	192	[1902] 1 Ch. 403; 71 L. J. Ch. 225; 86 L. T. 6
——— and Eave, In re	CH.D.EADY.J.	—	179	86 L. T. 617
Scottish Equitable Life Assurance Society's Policy, In re	CH.D.JOYCE,J	327	81	[1902] 1 Ch. 282; 71 L. J. Ch. 189; 85 L. T. 720
Sealy, In re. Tomkins v Tucker	CH.D. FAR.J.	--	192	85 L. T. 451
Sealey v Tandy	K.B.D.	347	95	[1902] 1 K. B. 296; 71 L. J. K. B. 41; 85 L. T. 459
Selot's Trust, In re	CH.D. FAR. J.	—	37	[1902] 1 Ch. 488; 71 L. J. Ch. 192
Seton Smith, In re. Burnand v Waite	CH.D.BUCK.J	456	187	[1902] 1 Ch. 717; 71 L. J. Ch. 386; 86 L. T. 322
Shaw v Marten. In re Marten	C.A.	209	130	[1902] 1 Ch. 314; 71 L. J. Ch. 203; 85 L. T. 704
Shuckburgh, In re. Robertson v Shuckburgh	CH.D. FAR. J.	133	131	[1901] 2 Ch. 794; 71 L. J. Ch. 32; 85 L. T. 406
Sidebottom, In re Beeley v Waterhouse	C.A.	641	21	72 L. J. Ch. 662
Silkstone and Haigh Moor Coal Co. v Edey	C.A.	—	138	[1901] 2 Ch. 652; 70 L. J. Ch. 774; 85 L. T. 300
Simpson v Teignmouth Bridge Co.	K.B.D.	—	102	85 L. T. 726
Skene v Cook	C.A.	506	96	[1902] 1 K. B. 682; 71 L. J. K. B. 446; 86 L. T. 619
Smith, In re. Smith v Smith. Smith v Thompson	CH.D. KEK.J.	—	175	71 L. J. Ch. 411; 86 L. T. 401
——— v Kerr	C.A.	—	22	[1902] 1 Ch. 774; 71 L. J. Ch. 369; 86 L. T. 477
——— v Kyle	K.B.D.	319	115	[1902] 1 K. B. 286; 71 L. J. K. B. 16; 85 L. T. 428
——— v Northleach Rural Council	CH.D. FAR. J.	104	134	[1902] 1 Ch. 197; 71 L. J. Ch. 8; 85 L. T. 449
——— v Southampton Corporation	K.B.D.	651	99	[1902] 2 K. B. 244; 71 L. J. K. B. 639
——— v Wisden	K.B.D.	—	6	85 L. T. 760
Smithies v Bridge	K.B.D.	686	7	[1902] 2 K. B. 13; 71 L. J. K. B. 555
Soames v Nicholson	K B.D.	169	92	[1902] 1 K. B. 157; 71 L. J. K. B. 24; 85 L. T. 614
Solicitor, A, In re	C.A.	196	165	[1902] 1 K. B. 128; 71 L. J. K. B. 36; 85 L. T 619
South-Western Venezuela Railway Co., In re	CH.D.BUCK.J.	300	36	[1902] 1 Ch. 701; 71 L. J. Ch. 407; 86 L. T. 321
Spain v Lejoindre. In re Leveridge	CH.D.JOYCE,J	205	187	[1901] 2 Ch. 830; 71 L. J. Ch. 23; 85 L. T. 458
Spiral Globe Co., In re	CH.D.EADY,J.	187	26	[1902] 1 Ch. 396; 71 L. J. Ch. 178; 85 L. T. 778
Spiral Globe (Limited), In re. Watson v Spiral Globe (Limited)	CH.D.JOYCE,J	—	27	[1902] 2 Ch. 209; 71 L. J. Ch. 538; 86 L. T. 499
Spurrier v La Cloche	P.C.	—	81	[1902] A. C. 446; 86 L. T. 631
Stang v Medway (Upper) Navigation Co.	CH.D.EADY,J.	416	24
Stedall v Stedall	P.D. & A.D.	320	52	86 L. T. 124
Stein v Pope	C.A.	374	13	[1902] 1 K. B. 595; 71 L. J. K. B. 322; 86 L. T. 283
Stephens v Mysore Reefs (Kanzundy) Mining Co.	CH.D.EADY,J.	509	30	[1902] 1 Ch. 745; 71 L. J. Ch. 295; 86 L. T. 221
Stoddart v Hawke	K.B.D.	93	63	[1902] 1 K. B. 353; 71 L. J. K. B. 133; 85 L. T. 687
——— v Mitchell	K.B.D.	—	115	85 L. T. 686
Stokes v Mitcheson	K.B.D.	553	120	[1902] 1 K. B. 857; 71 L. J. K. B. 677; 86 L. T. 767
Stourbridge Drainage Board v Seisdon Union	K.B.D.	—	100	86 L. T. 415
Surrey Cricket Club, In re	K.B.D.	173	72	[1901] 2 K. B. 400; 70 L. J. K. B. 823; 85 L. T. 213
Sutton, In re. Lewis v Sutton	CH D BUCK.J.	—	23	[1901] 2 Ch. 640; 70 L. J. Ch. 747; 85 L. T. 411
——— v English and Colonial Produce Co.	CH.D.BUCK.J	571	28
Sweet v Ely (Bishop)	CH.D.JOYCE,J	520	58	86 L. T. 679
——— v Gordon Young	ROCHESTER CONSIST. CT.	96	57	[1902] P. 37
Synge, In re	C.A.	—	9	85 L. T. 736
——— v Synge	C.A.	—	50	[1901] P. 317; 70 L. J. P. 97; 85 L. T. 83
Taff Vale Railway Co. v Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants	H.L.	44	172	[1901] A. C. 426; 70 L. J. K. B. 905; 85 L. T. 147
Taylor v Hollard	K.B.D.	558	95	[1902] 1 K. B. 676; 71 L. J. K. B. 278; 86 L. T. 228
Telfair, In re. Garrioch v Barclay	CH.D. FAR. J.	—	189	86 L. T. 496
Te Teira Te Paca v Te Roera Tareha	P.C.	—	125	[1902] A. C. 56; 71 L. J. P. C. 11; 85 L. T. 558

Name of Case.	Court.	Page in W. R. 1901-02.	Column in Digest.	References to Contemporaneous Reports.
Thompson v City Glass Bottle Co.	C.A.	—	110	[1902] 1 K. B. 233; 71 L. J. K. B. 145; 85 L. T. 661
——— v Thompson	P.D. & A.D.	—	49	85 L. T. 172
Threlkeld v Smith	K.B.D.	158	46	[1901] 2 K. B. 531; 70 L. J. K. B. 921; 85 L. T. 275
Thurston v Nottingham Building Society	C.A.	179	70	[1902] 1 Ch. 1; 71 L. J. Ch. 83; 86 L. T. 35
Timmins, In re	CH.D.BUCK J.	134	34	[1902] 1 Ch. 238; 71 L. J. Ch. 121
Timmis. In re. Nixon v Smith	CH.D.KEK. J.	164	173	[1902] 1 Ch. 176; 71 L. J. Ch 118; 85 L. T. 672
Tolhurst v Associated Portland Cement Manufacturers	K.B.D.	—	38	[1901] 2 K. B. 811; 70 L. J. K. B. 1036
Tomkins v Tucker. In re Sealy	CH.D. FAR. J.	—	192	85 L. T. 451
Tong v Great Northern Railway Co.	K.B.D.	—	112	86 L. T. 802
Trenchard v Trenchard	CH.D.BUCK. J	266	153	[1902] 1 Ch. 378; 71 L. J. Ch. 178; 86 L. T. 196
Truro (Corporation) v Rowe	K.B.D.	151	61	[1901] 2 K. B. 870; 70 L. J. K. B. 1026; 85 L. T. 422
Turnbull v Duval	P.C.	—	140	[1902] A. C. 429
Turner v Moon	CH.D JOYCE,J	237	178	[1901] 2 Ch. 825; 70 L. J. Ch. 822; 85 L. T. 90
Twist v Tye	P.D. & A.D.	—	148	[1902] P. 92; 71 L. J. P. 47; 86 L. T. 259
Tyrer and Hessler, In re	C.A.	—	159	86 L. T. 697
Uglow v Richards. In re Richards	CH.D. FAR.J.	90	192	[1902] 1 Ch. 76; 71 L. J. Ch. 66; 85 L. T. 452
Uneeda Trade-Mark, In re	C.A.	467	171	[1902] 1 Ch. 783; 71 L. J. Ch. 353; 86 L. T. 439
Vallentine v Vallentine	P.D & A.D.	—	51	[1901] P. 283; 70 L. J. P. 89; 85 L. T. 171
Van Grutten v Trevenn	C.A.	516	92	[1902] 2 K. B. 82; 71 L. J. K. B. 544
Vannini, In the Goods of	P D. & A.D.	—	146	[1901] P. 330; 71 L. J. P. 7; 85 L. T. 639
Van Praagh v Everidge	CH.D. KEK.J.	—	181	[1902] 2 Ch. 266; 71 L. J. Ch. 598
Van Straubenzee, In re. Bousfield v Cooper	CH.D. HDY. J.	—	158	[1901] 2 Ch. 779; 70 L. J. Ch. 825; 85 L. T. 541
Veazey v Chattle	C.A.	263	110	[1902] 1 K. B. 494; 71 L. J. K. B. 252; 85 L. T. 574
"Veritas," The	P.D. & A D.	30	163	[1901] P. 304; 70 L. J. P. 75; 85 L. T. 136
Vinters v Freedman	K.B.D.	—	87	71 L. J. K. B. 48; 85 L. T. 628
Wagstaffe v Bentley	C.A.	—	135	[1902] 1 K. B. 124; 71 L. J. K. B. 55; 85 L. T. 744
Waite v Parkinson	CH.D.JOYCE,J	—	174	85 L. T. 456
Wakefield (Corporation) v Cooke	K.B.D.	254	66	[1902] 1 K. B. 188; 71 L. J. K. B. 257; 86 L. T. 198
Waldock v Winfield	C.A.	—	114	[1901] 2 K. B. 596; 70 L. J. K. B. 925; 85 L. T. 202
Wales v Carr	CH.D. FAR. J.	313	120	[1902] 1 Ch. 860; 71 L. J. Ch. 483; 86 L. T. 288
Walker v Elmore's German Metal Co.	C.A.	—	26	85 L. T. 767
Walker and Oakshott's Contract, In re	CH.D.JOYCE,J	41	181	[1901] 2 Ch. 383; 70 L. J. Ch. 666; 84 L. T. 809
Walker District Council v Wigham	CH.D. FAR. J.	—	101	85 L. T. 579
Wallace, Ex parte	C.A.	678	142
Wallis, In re. Ex parte The Trustee	BKCY.	430	15	[1902] 1 K. B. 719; 71 L. J. K. B. 465; 86 L T. 237
Walter v Ashton	CH.D BYRNE,J	—	172	[1902] 2 Ch. 282
Walters v Harrison. In re Whitmore	C.A.	—	189	[1902] 2 Ch. 66
Ward v Dwelley. In re Chenoweth	CH.D. FAR. J.	663	64	86 L. T. 890
Ward v Fry	C.A.	72	16	85 L. T. 394
Warren v Brown	C.A.	97	56	[1902] 1 K. B. 15; 71 L. J. K. B. 12; 85 L. T. 444
Warton v Redman. In re Redman	CH.D. KEK J.	19	62	[1901] 2 Ch. 471; 70 L. J. Ch. 669; 85 L. T. 13
Warwick Warwick	P.D. & A.D.	—	52	85 L. T. 173
Wastwater Steamship Co. v Neale & Co.	P.D. & A.D.	—	159	86 L. T. 266
Watkin v Lamb	K.B.D.	—	18	85 L. T. 483
Waudby v Waudby	P D. & A.D.	176	49	[1902] P. 85; 71 L. J. P. 43; 86 L. T. 123
Way, In the Goods of	P.D. & A.D.	—	193	[1901] P. 345; 71 L. J. P. 13; 85 L. T. 643
Weibking, In re. Ex parte Ward	BKCY.	460	16	[1902] 1 K. B. 713; 71 L. J. K. B. 389; 86 L. T. 455
Weld v Clayton-le-Moors District Council	K.B.D.	—	89	86 L T. 584
Wellington (Mayor) v Johnston	P.C.	—	126	[1902] A. C. 396; 86 L. T. 538
Wells v Army and Navy Co-operative Society	K.B.D.	—	38	86 L. T. 764
West Ham Union v London County Council	C.A.	275	130	[1902] 1 K. B. 562; 71 L. J. K. B. 299; 86 L. T. 134
Westminster City Council v Army and Navy Auxiliary, &c.	K.B.D.	631	118	[1902] 2 K. B. 125; 71 L. J. K. B. 546
——— v London County Council	K.B.D.	429	98	[1902] 1 K. B. 326; 71 L. J. K. B. 244; 86 L. T. 53
——— v Watson	K.B.D.	—	116	71 L. J. K. B. 603
Weston, In re. Bartholomew v Menzies	CH.D.BYRNE,J	294	54	[1902] 1 Ch. 680; 71 L. J. Ch. 343; 86 L. T. 551
Wheatley's Trustee v Wheatley	BKCY.	—	12	85 L. T. 491
Whitaker v Pomfret	K.B.D.	393	6	[1902] 1 K. B. 661; 71 L. J. K. B. 353; 86 L. T. 420

Name of Case.	Court.	Page in W. R. 1901-02	Column in Digest.	References to Contemporaneous Reports.
Whitbourne v Williams	C.A.	—	151	[1901] 2 K. B. 722; 70 L. J. K. B. 933; 85 L. T. 271
Whitbread & Co. v Watt	C.A.	442	178	[1902] 1 Ch. 835; 71 L. J. Ch. 424; 86 L. T. 395
White v Harrow. Harrow v Marylebone District Property Co.	CH.D. JOYCE, J	166	91
——.	C.A.	259	91	86 L. T. 4
Whitechurch v Cavan'gh	H.L.	218	29	[1902] A. C. 117; 71 L. J. K. B. 400; 85 L. T. 349
Whitmore, In re. Walters v Harrison	C.A.	—	189	[1902] 2 Ch. 66
Whitton v Whitton	P.D. & A.D.	—	52	[1901] P. 348; 71 L. J. P. 10; 85 L. T. 646
Wightwick v Pope	C.A.	531	132	[1902] 2 K. B. 99; 86 L. T. 750
Wilkinson, In re. Esam v Attorney-General	CH.D. KEK.J.	—	22	[1902] 1 Ch. 841; 71 L. J. Ch. 663
Wilkinson, In re. Lloyd v Steel	CH.D. HDY.J.	—	194	85 L. T. 43
Williams & Co. v Canton Insurance Office	H.L.	—	82	[1901] A. C. 462; 70 L J. K. B. 962; 85 L. T. 317
Willis, In re. Willis v Willis	C.A.	70	157	[1902] 1 Ch 15; 71 L. J. Ch. 73; 85 L. T. 436
—— v Barron	H.L.	—	48	[1902] A. C. 271; 71 L. J. Ch. 609; 86 L. T. 805
Wilmott v Paton	C.A.	148	109	[1902] 1 K. B. 237; 71 L. J. K. B. 1; 85 L. T. 569
"Winkfield," The	C.A.	246	10	[1902] P. 42; 71 L. J. P. 21; 85 L. T. 668
Wise v Dunning	K.B.D.	317	87	[1902] 1 K. B. 167; 71 L. J. K. B. 165; 85 L. T. 721
Wood v Wood	CH.D. KEK.J.	102	190	[1901] 2 Ch. 578; 70 L. J. Ch. 856; 85 L. T. 447
——	C.A.	695	190
Woodford District Council v Stark	K.B.D.	—	98	86 L. T. 685
Woolnoth v Woolnoth	P.D. & A.D.	—	50	86 L. T. 598
Wootton Isaacson v Wootton Isaacson	P.D. & A.D.	—	52	[1902] P. 146; 71 L. J. P. 80
Wright v Carter	CH.D. KEK. J.	—	176	86 L. T. 110
—— v Glyn	C.A.	402	144	[1902] 1 K. B. 745; 71 L. J. K. B. 497; 86 L. T. 373
Wright, Crossley, & Co., In re	C.A.	—	137	86 L. T. 280
Wrigley v Whittaker	H.L.	656	111	[1902] A. C. 299; 71 L. J. K. B. 600; 86 L. T. 775
Wyatt v London County Council	K.B.D.	—	103	85 L. T. 629
X. Y., In re. Ex parte Haes	C.A.	182	14	[1902] 1 K. B. 98; 71 L. J. K. B. 102; 85 L. T. 564
Yates v Terry	C.A.	293	133	[1902] 1 K. B. 527; 71 L J. K. B. 282; 86 L. T. 133
Young v Star Omnibus Co.	CH.D. FAR J.	—	57	86 L. T. 41

THE

WEEKLY REPORTER,

1901-1902.

House of Lords.

From C. A. (Ireland). } May 2, 1901.

BULLIVANT AND OTHERS v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOR VICTORIA. (a.)

Practice—Discovery—Privilege—Solicitor and client—Evasion of statute.

Confidential communications between solicitor and client, which are not in themselves parts of a criminal or illegal proceeding, are privileged from disclosure, and this is not displaced by a mere allegation that certain documents were prepared "with intent to evade" the payment of duty. The word "evade" is ambiguous, and to displace such privilege there must be some definite charge.

Decision of Court of Appeal reversed.

Appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal (Collins and Romer, L.JJ.) [1900] 2 Q. B. 163, 48 W. R. Dig. 149, affirming that of Mathew, J., ordering production of documents.

An information was filed by the Attorney-General of Victoria against the executors of the late James Austin on the ground that before his death he executed certain voluntary conveyances with the intention and for the purpose of evading the provisions of a Victorian Act (54 Vict. No. mlx).

A commission had been issued from the Supreme Court of Victoria for taking the evidence of Stanley Austin and others in this country. He was a solicitor and admitted that the conveyances were settlements made for the benefit of himself and others and prepared by his late firm, and that he had in his possession a diary of his former partner and other documents which contained entries of instructions given by the testator with respect to these conveyances, but he objected to produce them on account of privilege as solicitor.

Section 115 of the Administration of Probate Act of the Colony of Victoria, 1890, provides that if any person makes any conveyance, assignment, gift, &c., of any estate, real or personal, &c., "with intent to evade the payment of duty," such property shall be liable.

Sir R. T. Reid, K.C., and Upjohn, K.C. (E. M. Pollock with them), for the appellants.—The allegation of fraud is not sufficient to displace the privilege of a solicitor in this case. The charge is not specific and clear. The mere statement of an "intent to evade" is insufficient; there must be evidence of some device or contrivance for that purpose: Simms v. Registrar of Probate, [1900] A. C. 323, 48 W. R. Dig. 184.

Reg. v. Cox, 33 W. R. 396, 14 Q. B. D. 153; In re Postlethwaite, 35 W. R. 563, 35 Ch. D. 722; and Williams v. Quebrada Railway, &c., Co., 44 W. R. 76, [1895] 2 Ch. 751, were also referred to.

Haldane, K.C., and Rowlatt, for the respondent.—The charge amounts to this, that there is a secret trust which the documents of which discovery is sought afford evidence. The privilege was personal to the testator.

Sir R. T. Reid, K.C., replied.

Earl of HALSBURY, L.C.—It appears to me that the judgment appealed from ought to be reversed. I do not think it desirable to express any opinion with reference to the true construction of the Victorian statute beyond this: We are not here upon the question of sufficiency of pleading at all. I think it fallacious to suppose that we are to ascertain for the purpose of this inquiry whether or not the pleadings do mean or do not mean one or the other of the two different sets of meanings which have been attributed to them.

I think that the broad propositions may be very simply stated: for the perfect administration of justice, and for the protection of the confidence which exists between a solicitor and his client, it has been established as a principle of public policy that those confidential communications shall not be subject to production. But to that, of course, this limitation has been put, and justly put, that no court can be called upon to protect communications which are in themselves parts of a criminal or unlawful proceeding. Those are the two principles, and of course it would be possible to make both propositions absurd, as is very often the case with all propositions, by taking extreme cases on either side. If you are to say, "I will not say what these communications are because until you have actually proved me guilty of a crime they may be privileged as confidential," the result would be that they could never be produced at all, because until the whole thing is over you cannot have the proof of guilt. On the other hand, if it is sufficient for the party demanding the production to say, as a mere surmise or conjecture, that the thing into which he is endeavouring to inquire may have been illegal or not, the privilege in all cases disappear at once. The line which the courts have hitherto taken, and will, I hope, preserve, is this: that in order to displace the primâ facie right of silence by a witness who has been put into the relation of professional confidence with his client, before that confidence can be broken you must have some definite charge either by way of allegation or affidavit or what not. I do not at present go into the modes by which that can be made out, but there must be some definite charge of something which displaces the privilege.

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Now, when I look at all that is to be found here, I find no such definite charge at all. If, for the purpose of evading the payment of duty to which the man was liable, he entered into some secret and covinous arrangement whereby, although he should still retain the property during his lifetime, nevertheless colourable deeds should be executed which would show that the property was not liable to duty, that would undoubtedly be a fraud, and I think that there would be no doubt that a person who was engaged in such a transaction could be compelled either to produce the correspondence or to state the conversation showing how it was intended to carry out the alleged fraud. But there is no such allegation—there is nothing here which any court can regard as an allegation of fact sufficient to displace the privilege. If the fact were merely that the person did execute voluntary deeds the effect whereof was that the tax never fell upon the property at all, I do not know that there is any offence in that either in Victoria or in this country. People are not bound to continue in the same condition of things, either as regards their direct or indirect taxation, which will render either the consumption of articles in the one case or the property they have in the other always liable to the tax, and I decline to believe that the colony has made such an enactment until it is established that that is the enactment which they have made.

In the parallel, but not exactly similar, case in the Privy Council where the word "evade" was used, the Privy Council held (I myself was a party to that judgment) that it must be understood that where it was intended to be an allegation that a fraud had been committed you must allege it and prove it, and that it was no fraud for a man to make a voluntary conveyance of his estates, not having any secret trust, and not having any arrangement whereby the deed could say one thing and the voluntary arrangement mean another; that the fact that he did intend to make a gift during his lifetime was no offence and no breach of the Act of Parliament, and nothing that could be considered tainted with the character of fraud: Simms v. Registrar of Probates. That being so, it appears to me that it would be an abandonment of the principle which has been held sacred in this country if, when a person has done that which in itself may be innocent, you should simply, because you choose to suggest that it was done with the view of evading the payment of a tax, require the witness to disclose the whole of his affairs, and enable the private communications between himself and his solicitor to be displayed to the court.

I cannot help thinking that if this question had arisen in the ordinary course the error which has been committed would not have been committed, but we have got into a somewhat artificial condition of things by the method in which we are endeavouring to apply the procedure here, which would be a proceeding in open court. Here there is a commission, and to fortify such commission a statute has been passed for the purpose of giving the judges in this country power to enforce the attendance of witnesses just as if the cause of action had arisen in this country. If you construe the statute, bearing its object in mind, it is simple enough. The statute was passed for the purpose of assimilating the administration of justice all over her Majesty's dominions. What you would have to do when you got to trial and the privilege was pleaded would be this—the judge would have to satisfy himself whether there was really established to his satisfaction a charge of fraud or something that would displace the privilege—I do not say that it must be proved—but that it would be a reasonable and proper thing under the circumstances to establish the proposition that the issue to be tried was whether there was really a fraud or not, and that this was a piece of evidence relevant to establish the fraud. In this case it is obvious that nobody can suggest there is any evidence of it, nor, as it appears to me, any allegation of it, and, upon the broad proposition that there is neither proof nor allegation, nor anything which would displace the privilege, it appears to me that the orders made in this case were wrong, and that your lordships ought to reverse them.

Lord SHAND.—If the respondent had made a relevant averment of fraud or of a fraudulent contrivance to defeat the right of the Government to death duty, to which in the actual circumstances the Government was entitled, I should have held the order made by Mathew, J., and the Court of Appeal to be right. Privilege could not be pleaded as a protection to fraud, and the averment of fraud or fraudulent contrivance with a specification of particulars would, in my opinion, be enough. In this case I agree that there is no averment of fraud or even of illegality, having regard to the decision of the Privy Council in Simms's case. The statement is merely that the deeds in question were granted to "evade" payment of death duty due, using the word which occurs in the statute. If that term merely means to "avoid" the duty, as was held in Simms's case, then there is here no averment of fraudulent contrivance, or indeed of any illegal proceeding, and in the absence of this I agree that the alleged privilege fails.

Lord DAVEY.—I am of the same opinion. I do not dissent from what was said by Mr. Haldane, that it must be assumed for the present purpose that the case stated in the pleadings is true for the purpose of testing the right of production. But that renders it, of course, of extreme importance to see what is stated in the pleadings, and what are the issues upon which the trial is now presumed to be proceeding. I also agree with what was said by Sir Robert Reid, that if a man in his pleading, whether he be the Attorney-General or anybody else, merely sets out a sentence from a statute which is capable of two meanings without saying which he means, the one being consistent with the absolute innocence of the transaction and the other meaning involving a charge of either fraud or illegality, he must say which he means, and if he intends to charge illegality he must state facts for the purpose of showing what the illegality is. I agree with the Lord Chancellor that it is not a question of pleadings as between the parties, but that what we have to see is whether a witness who is called upon to produce privileged documents is bound to produce them or not, and for that purpose we must look to see what are the issues which are raised by the pleadings.

Now the information states only certain voluntary deeds, and then contains an allegation that these voluntary deeds were executed for the purpose of evading payment of certain death duties which are imposed upon property passing upon the death of the testator. The section under which it is sought to say that it was an illegal transaction is this—I will read it shortly: "If any person has made, or shall hereafter make, any conveyance," and so forth, "with intent to evade payment of duty under this part of the Act." If the duty never attached, if there is no section of the Act which imposes a duty upon voluntary inter vivos transactions, I cannot see how a person who is a party to such a transaction can be said to do it with intent to evade payment of a duty which the Act does not impose upon the transaction itself. I do not mean to give any definite opinion upon the construction of this clause. It is, however, certainly capable of that meaning, and if it is capable of that meaning, the witness is entitled to say that if you mean to say that the executing of these voluntary conveyances which, upon the face of them, purport to be a parting by the testator with the property comprised in them out and out, a parting with the whole jus disponendi of it, so that it would become no longer his property but the property of somebody else, and would be property of somebody else at his death—if you mean to say that the executing of those conveyances was an illegal transaction, you must tell us in what respect it was illegal; and if you merely quote the words of the statute to which I have already referred, if they are capable, as I think they are at least capable—I do not put it higher than that—of a perfectly innocent meaning which would render those transactions perfectly innocent in themselves, then I do not think that is stating such a case or raising such an issue for trial between the parties as would enable you to call upon a witness to produce documents which would otherwise be privileged from production.

I think that the fallacy of the Court of Appeal, if I may respectfully say so, is in treating the statute as if it made the execution of voluntary deeds with or without the intention to put property in such a position as not to incur liability to the tax as being an improper or an illegal act. In my opinion it is nothing of the kind. It is a perfectly legal act, and there is nothing upon this information which to my mind clearly states any such case of illegality as would overrule the privilege on the part of a witness.

Lord BRAMPTON.—I entirely concur.

Lord LINDLEY.—I also concur; but I will add a few words out of respect to the learned Lords Justices, from whom I differ.

The question arises in this way: In May, 1896, a gentleman died, and under the colonial law his estate had to pay certain duty. Some time before he died he executed some voluntary conveyances, and it is said that under the law of the colony the property comprised in those voluntary conveyances was subject to duty. In order to obtain evidence about those documents a commission was sent over here, and under the statute to which reference has been made (22 Vict. c. 20) witnesses were called before that commission, and we have to consider the matter from the point of view of an action or information in this country raising certain definite issues, in support of which witnesses were called and examined. When the witnesses were called they were asked to produce these documents, and above all the instructions given to the solicitor who prepared them. The answer was at once set up by the witnesses, "Those are privileged documents," the privilege being founded upon the ordinary professional confidence which has been held in this country to be a good ground for the non-production of documents.

Now, starting there, I observe that the grounds, whatever they are, are legal as well as equitable. There is no equitable doctrine, as distinguished from a legal doctrine, involved in the matter. Primâ facie, if a witness swears, as this witness did, to circumstances which give rise to the privilege, the privilege must prevail, unless there is a good answer. What we have to consider, therefore, is the answer to the privilege so raised.

Now, there are two answers. The first is a very short one, if it is good for anything. It is said that, the testator being dead, the privilege is gone. I am satisfied that that answer is insufficient. It struck one at first as curious. I never heard it stated before; but it does appear that in the case of Russell v. Jackson, 10 Hare 204, it was considered, and in the judgment of Turner, V.C., there are some passages which have been invoked in favour of that being a good answer; but they are easily explicable when one comes to look at them. The mere fact that a testator is dead does not destroy the privilege. The privilege is founded upon the views which are taken in this country of public policy, and that privilege has to be weighed, and unless the people concerned in the case of an ordinary controversy like this waive it, the privilege is not gone—it remains. In the case before Turner, V.C., for the reasons which were given by Mr. Haldane, and are apparent in the judgment, the privilege could not be set up. One person was trying to set it up against the other, both claiming under the testator, and the Vice-Chancellor held that it could not be set up. So much for that answer.

The next answer given to this claim of privilege is that there was illegality or fraud or trickery, and that this solicitor, or those concerned, cannot set up the privilege because there is no privilege involved in consulting a solicitor as to how you are to do an illegal act. That raises the question whether there was any illegality at all involved in the preparation of these deeds. As to that, the case stands in this way. The whole claim for this duty is based upon a colonial Act of Parliament which renders the duty payable upon any conveyance with intent to evade the payment of duty. The word "evade" is ambiguous. There are various ways of evading a statute. The discussion and the decision which took place in the Privy Council in the case of Simms v. Registrar of Probates show the ambiguity of the expression. Now the pleadings follow the Act of Parliament. I do not see that the witness can quarrel with that in any way, and the affidavit made in support of the application for an order for the production of these documents follows the Act of Parliament—they both use the ambiguous expression "evade." As I have said, there are two ways of construing the word "evade"; one is, that a person may go to a solicitor and ask him how to keep out of an Act of Parliament—how to do something which does not bring him within the scope of it. That is evading in one sense, but there is nothing illegal in it. The other is, when he goes to his solicitor and says, "Tell me how to escape from the consequences of the Act of Parliament, although I am brought within it." This is an act of quite a different character. Now when we look at the answer given to the witnesses who set up this privilege, we find that the answer says: "You are evading the Act of Parliament." What does that mean? Do you mean to say that I, as a solicitor, have been conspiring to do that which is illegal? That is not said—there is no pretence for it. If you mean that, you have not said so; if you mean the other thing, your answer does not destroy the privilege. That is the short answer.

It appears to me that the Court of Appeal have overlooked the fact that the word "evade" has the double meaning to which I have referred. They seem to have assumed that what was done here must have been a conspiracy to avoid the consequences of the Act. Under these circumstances I think that the appeal ought to succeed, and that the order appealed from should be reversed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Crowders, Vizards, & Oldham; Freshfields.

Court of Appeal.

From K. B. Div. (Vaughan Williams and Stirling, L.JJ.) — Aug. 2, 1901.

In re COLLYER-BRISTOW & CO. (a.)

Solicitor—Bill of costs—Taxation—Preparing umpire's award—Award taken up by one party to the arbitration and costs of umpire paid—Right of party to an order for taxation in Chancery Division—Solicitors Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73), ss. 38, 41.

One of the parties to a reference took up the award and paid the amount fixed by the umpire. The amount included the bill of costs of the solicitors employed by the umpire to draw up the award, and it directed that the solicitors' bill of costs should be taxed under section 38 of the Solicitors Act, 1843.

An order for taxation having been obtained in the King's Bench Division to tax the solicitors' bill, the solicitors appealed.

Held, dismissing the appeal, that the umpire being chargeable with the bill and the party who took up the award having paid it, the case came within the words of the Act, and that although the obtaining of the order to tax in the King's Bench Division was irregular, still the judge had jurisdiction to direct taxation. Following, however, the decision in In re Pollard, 36 W. R. 515, 20 Q. B. D. 656, the order must be varied by directing that the taxation should take place in the Chancery Division.

Appeal from an order of Phillimore, J., at chambers, affirming an order of Master Chitty, directing the taxation of a firm of solicitors' bill of costs in connection with the preparation of an award under the Lands Clauses Acts.

The Lowestoft Water and Gas Co. served upon Sir Savile Crossley notice to treat for the purchase of land under the Lands Clauses Acts, and each party appointed an arbitrator, and the arbitrators appointed a lay umpire.

The arbitrators having differed, the umpire made his award.

In drawing it up he employed the solicitors, Messrs. Collyer-Bristow & Co., and notice was given to the parties that the award was ready and could be taken up on payment of £107 6s. 4d., being the fee and legal expenses of the umpire.

The Lowestoft Water and Gas Co. paid the umpire his fees and took up the award.

The umpire awarded the sum of £4,119, and the award directed the company to pay to Sir Savile Crossley his costs of the reference and the costs of the award, including the fees of the arbitrators, which were assessed at sixty guineas each, and the umpire's fee of seventy-five guineas, and in addition the costs and expenses of and incidental to preparing and perfecting the umpire's award.

In drawing up the award the solicitors, Messrs. Collyer-Bristow & Co., had consulted counsel in the matter, and the award was drafted by counsel.

The Lowestoft Water and Gas Co. took out a summons for the taxation of the solicitors' bill of costs as between solicitor and client.

The masters and the judge at chambers made the order to tax.

Messrs. Collyer-Bristow & Co. appealed.

Ernest M. Pollock, for the solicitors.—There is no jurisdiction to order this bill to be taxed under section 38 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, as the bill is but a mere item in a larger bill of costs which the company would have to pay to Sir Savile Crossley, and which they would have obtained an order to tax as between party and party. The company cannot pick out one item and apply to have that item taxed as between solicitor and client, and then impose upon the solicitor a liability to pay the costs of taxation if one-sixth were taxed off. In re Cowdell, 31 W. R. 335, 52 L. J. Ch. 246, decided that a person liable to pay costs as between party and party is not entitled to a reference for taxation under the third-party clause (section 38) of the Solicitors Act, 1843. Moreover, this bill of costs has been already paid, and there are no special circumstances which entitle the company to have a paid bill taxed. Again, this bill of costs not being for work done in any court of law or equity the taxation if the order stand must take place in the Chancery Division: In re Pollard, 36 W. R. 515, 20 Q. B. D. 656; Wombwell v. Barnsley Corporation, 36 L. T. Rep. 708, 25 W. R. Dig. 141.

C. Herbert Smith, for the company, was heard only on the question whether the taxation should not take place in the Chancery Division, and said the company raised no objection to the order being varied.

THE COURT dismissed the appeal, but varied the order by directing the taxation to take place in the Chancery Division.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—The result of this case is that in the main the appeal fails because, according to our judgment, although the application that the bill of costs should be taxed in the King's Bench Division was irregular, there was jurisdiction in that court to make the order appealed from, and under this part of the case all we have to do is to make the same order indicated as the correct one in In re Pollard, so as to bring the taxation into the Chancery Division. As regards the question whether the taxation is one that can be dealt with under section 38 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, I am of opinion that it is. The bill of costs is not the bill of the solicitor to one of the two parties to the reference, but of the umpire's solicitor. It seems to me that it is a bill of costs which ought to be taxed as between solicitor and client, and that the case is within the very words of section 38. In my judgment there was a liability on the company to pay these charges of the umpire's solicitor, and although those charges were void before the order for taxation was asked for there are ample special circumstances justifying the making of an order to tax because at the moment when the award was taken up it was impossible to predict what the effect of the award would be. There only remained the last question—namely, in what division ought the taxation to take place? In my opinion, though the application to the King's Bench Division to make an order for taxation of this bill was irregular, still there was jurisdiction in that division to make this order for taxation, and in these circumstances the only thing that is now necessary to be done is to make the same order as in In re Pollard—namely, to direct the taxation to take place in the Chancery Division. I am therefore of opinion that this appeal, the order being so varied, should be dismissed.

STIRLING, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. Three points were argued—whether there could be a taxation under section 38 of the Solicitors Act, 1843; whether there were special circumstances justifying the making of the order; and whether if taxation is ordered it should be carried out in the Chancery Division or in the King's Bench Division. [Having stated the facts that gave rise to these questions, the learned Lord

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Justice said :] Following the words of the section we have to inquire who was the party charged. Clearly the umpire was the party charged. Then who is the party who had the bill? It has been paid, not by the umpire, but by the company, so that we have the company not chargeable with the bill but having paid it. The case is thus brought within the terms of the section and the company are entitled to make such application for a reference for the taxation of the bill as the umpire might himself make, and that application must be for taxation of the bill as between solicitor and client.

Great stress was laid on the decision in In re Cowdell, but that case was different from the present one. There the solicitor whose bill of costs was in question was solicitor to one of the parties to a reference and had delivered a bill of costs made out as between solicitor and client. The local board, who were the other parties to the reference, applied for taxation under section 38 of the Solicitors Act, 1843. Fry, J., declined, and in my opinion justly declined, to order taxation on the ground that the bill delivered by the solicitor was a different bill from that for which his clients were made liable for. Hence the application was to tax the costs of the umpire's solicitors, and nothing else, and it appeared to me that there was ample jurisdiction to make an order under section 38. It was next argued that as there had been payment of the bill taxation could only take place if there were special circumstances either generally under section 41 or applicable to the person making the application under the latter part of section 38. The question of what are special circumstances has been considered in many cases in which it is needless to enter. The position in this case is that as between the umpire and solicitor there does not appear to have been any payment by the umpire and the company made the payment to the umpire at a time when it was not known what the provisions of the award would be.

Under this state of things there are special circumstances to justify the making of an order for taxation.

On the last question, in view of the decision in In re Pollard, I think taxation should take place in the Chancery Division.

I wish, however, to add this. If there was a party and party taxation proceeding under the Lands Clauses Acts in the King's Bench Division, I do not think it would be improper for the master who was taxing the costs in that division, and who had seisin of the whole cause, to deal with the whole matter. But in the present case the only question is as to the taxation of the bill of costs of the umpire's solicitors. I think such a bill of costs in the present circumstances should be taxed in the Chancery Division, and with that variation the order made for taxation is one that should stand.

Solicitors, Collyer-Bristow & Co.; Williams & James, for Worship & Rising, Great Yarmouth.

From Chan. Div. (Rigby, Collins, and Romer, L.JJ.) June 27, 1901.

HAND v. BLOW. (a.)

Landlord and tenant—Mortgage by sub-demise—Appointment of receiver—Liability to pay rent and damages.

A receiver appointed by the court on behalf of mortgagees of leasehold property by way of sub-demise, who has gone into possession, is under no liability to pay to the lessor rent due under the lease out of funds coming to hand during his occupation of the premises. A receiver in such a case is in exactly the same position as the mortgagees would have been in had they gone into possession, and no special right arises against him in favour of the landlord by reason of his position as an officer of the court.

This was an appeal from a decision of Stirling, J.

The action was a debenture-holder's action, the debentures being secured by a trust deed which in various ways dealt with the property of the company named Owen Jones (Limited), which had issued them.

Part of the property of the company consisted of certain leasehold houses, Nos. 116, 118, 120, 122, and 124, Edgware-road.

By the trust deed that property was charged with the debenture debt, and it also purported to be sub-demised to the trustees by the company. It was doubtful whether that sub-demise was effectual by reason of a mistake with reference to the original lease under which the property was held; but it was admitted that the trustees of the debenture deed were not assignees of the lease under which the company held, but that at most they were sub-lessees.

Under the lease the rent was payable in advance, and the rent was paid down to the 25th of December, 1899, thus covering the period to the 25th of March, 1900.

On the 29th of August, 1899, in this action an order was made appointing one Page to collect, get in, and receive the debts, &c., of the business carried on by the defendant company, and to manage the said business, and accordingly he entered into possession of these leasehold houses on behalf of the debenture-holders.

On the 24th of March the receiver removed all the chattels of the defendant company from these premises. He did not pay the rent which fell due on the 25th of March nor did he deliver up possession to the landlord.

On the 29th of March, the rent not having been paid, the landlord took out a summons asking that he might be at liberty to distrain for the rent which had become due.

On the 26th of April that summons was amended by asking that in default of sufficient distress being found or non-payment of the rent and costs the applicant might be at liberty to enter upon the premises and determine the lease, and in the latter alternative that the receiver be ordered to pay to the applicant a sum calculated at the rate of £930 per annum for use and occupation by the receiver and manager from the 25th of March, 1900, to the date of determination, together with such sum as might be due for dilapidations under the covenant in that behalf to the date of re-entry.

On the 7th of May the master in chambers gave leave to the applicant to re-enter and determine the lease, and on the 9th of May such re-entry was actually made.

The question was now raised whether or no it was right and proper that the receiver should be ordered to pay the rent for the period from the 25th of March, 1900, down to the 9th of May, when the lease was put an end to, and also pay for dilapidations, by which it seems was meant damages for breaches of certain covenants, as, for example, the covenant to deliver up in a proper state of repair.

Stirling, J., held that the receiver was under no such liability.

P. F. Wheeler (Upjohn, K.C., and Begg with him), for the appeal, referred to Eyton v. Denbigh, Ruthin, and Corwen Railway Co., 16 W. R. 928, L. R. 6

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Eq. 14, 488; Great Eastern Railway Co. v. East London Railway Co., 44 L. T. Rep. 903, 29 W. R. Dig. 188; Jacobs v. Van Boolen, 34 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL 97; Balfe v. Blake, 1 Ir. Ch. Rep. 365; In re Lundy Granite Co., 19 W. R. 609, L. R. 6 Ch. App. 462; In re Oak Pits Colliery Co., 30 W. R. 759, 21 Ch. D. 322; In re Marriage, Neave, & Co., 45 W. R. 42, [1896] 2 Ch. 663; Paterson v. Gas Light and Coke Co., [1896] 2 Ch. 476, 45 W. R. Dig. 61; Neate v. Pink, 15 Sim. 450.

Martelli, for the trustees and receiver, was not called upon.

RIGBY, L.J.—I think for the reasons given by Stirling, J., in his judgment, which has been read, that this claim cannot be sustained, and the appeal must therefore be dismissed with costs.

COLLINS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. [His lordship stated the facts, and continued:] Mr. Wheeler, who has argued this case with great ingenuity, has admitted that there was no privity of estate at law between the trustees and the head lessor, and that therefore there was no liability for rent as between the trustees and the head lessor. But then comes the main basis of his contention. He says that the court has assisted the debenture-holders by putting in its own officer as receiver, and therefore a new right arises as against the receiver. But is there any reason why a lessor should be in a better position because a receiver has been substituted for the original sub-lessee? The lessor had no right against the original sub-lessee, and if the sub-lessee had done what the receiver has done the lessor would have been in exactly the same position as he is now. It seems to me, therefore, the appellant can show no ground why the receiver should be under any greater liability than the sub-lessees. But then it is said that when a receiver has been appointed the rights of the landlord are suspended, and that if, in the present case, there had been no receiver the lessor might have been able to realize the assets; and it does seem to me that there is some ground for saying that if damage has accrued to the landlord by the action of the court the receiver should make good the loss. But there is no authority for that proposition, and it is not my province to create a new equity. The court does not protect every inconvenience arising from its action. The cases which have been cited on behalf of the appellant have been distinguished by Stirling, J., in his judgment. Broadly speaking, they are all cases of direct liability between a lessor and his lessee; in none of them was there any question between a lessor and his sub-lessee. For the reasons I have given the appellant's claim rests on no right in law, and he has no right in equity by reason of the receiver having been appointed in substitution for the sub-lessees; while, if any right could arise in his favour by reason of his having lost certain rights through the appointment of a receiver, there is no case carrying him so far. I think the judgment of Stirling, J., was right and on the grounds he has given.

ROMER, L.J.—I agree. This appeal fails for the reasons given by Collins, L.J. The case has been well argued, and I only desire to add a few words on the principles laid down by the authorities. If in the case of a company or person whose estate is being dealt with by the court a receiver or liquidator has occupied or used premises which are part of the estate, then the court will see that the rent or other liabilities payable to the landlord in respect of those premises and as to which the person whose estate is being dealt with is liable, are paid to the landlord by the receiver. But this principle does not apply and cannot be applied to a case between mortgagor and mortgagee, where the mortgaged premises are leaseholds subdemised or agreed to be subdemised by the mortgagor to the mortgagee, and mortgaged by the mortgagor to the mortgagee; in that case the mortgagee is not liable to pay rent either to the mortgagor or to the mortgagor's landlord. In such a case the receiver is appointed in right of the mortgagee. The court is not administering the mortgagor's estate; it is only dealing with the mortgaged property, and that mortgaged property involved, ex hypothesi, no liability to the landlord in respect of rent or any other outgoings. It should be remembered that in such a case, between mortgagee and mortgagor the latter remains liable for the rent, even if the mortgagee should go into possession, and that the mortgagee, even though going into possession and paying no rent, is not liable to the landlord for rent in respect of such occupation. Is the position changed by the appointment of a receiver? Not at all. The appointment of a receiver does not take away from the mortgagor his primary liability. The landlord has no claim as against either the mortgagee or the receiver. Of course in a case where the landlord has got a right to re-enter he can apply to the court, notwithstanding the appointment of a receiver, and get leave to re-enter; but the mere fact that by reason of the appointment of a receiver an application has first to be made to the court does not in itself give him any special rights. There is no authority whatever in support of the proposition, that in such a case as I have indicated, between an ordinary mortgagor and an ordinary mortgagee, where a receiver has been appointed by the mortgagee to enforce his security, the landlord has a right to apply to the court and ask for his rent to be discharged out of the assets received by the receiver during his occupation of the property. An argument as to there being something unfair or dishonest in the receiver remaining in occupation without paying rent, and that such a state of things requires the intervention of the court, is only a plea ad misericordiam. This is a question of a right legal or equitable, and if the applicant has no right, there is no dishonesty in refusing to comply with the application. If this application had been right, which in my opinion it clearly is not, a general principle would have had to be laid down in all cases between a mortgagor and a mortgagee. I think it clear that such a principle ought not to be established.

Solicitors, Duffield, Bruty, & Co.; H. E. Warner & Co.

From P. D. & A. Div. (Rigby and Collins, L.JJ.) — June 13, 14, 1901.

FORBES SMITH v. FORBES SMITH. (a.)

Costs—Divorce—Wife's petition—Husband's petition—Costs against co-respondent—Costs of wife's petition—Party to proceedings—Appeal—Final order—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), s. 34—Judicature Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 44), s. 5.

The power to order payment of costs conferred on the court by section 5 of the Judicature Act, 1890, must be confined to parties to the proceedings. The co-respondent to a petition presented by a husband does not become a party to a cross-petition presented by the wife on the making of an order for the consolidation of the two suits, as such an order is only an arrangement for the convenience of trying the two suits together and involves nothing analogous to "consolidation" at common law.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

A co-respondent, therefore, in such a case not being a "party to the proceedings" within section 34 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, there is no jurisdiction to make him pay the costs of the wife's petition.

An order directing payment of costs is not an interlocutory order working out the final judgment, but is part of the final judgment though separated from it by an interval of some days.

This was an appeal from a decision of Jeune, P.

On the 2nd of February, 1900, the wife, the respondent in the present proceedings, presented a petition for a judicial separation on the ground of her husband's cruelty.

On the 27th of March, 1900, the husband presented a petition for the dissolution of the marriage on the ground of the wife's adultery with the co-respondent Chadwick. Damages were claimed against the co-respondent.

On the 26th of April, 1900, the registrar ordered the husband's suit to be consolidated with the wife's suit.

The co-respondent made no objection to this order. The wife and the co-respondent filed answers to the husband's petition denying the adultery.

On the 18th of July, 1900, the suits were tried by the President with a jury.

At the trial the charges of cruelty against the husband were withdrawn, there being no evidence in support of them. The wife's petition was, therefore, dismissed.

On the husband's petition, the adultery was found proved as against the wife and the co-respondent and damages were awarded against the co-respondent. A decree nisi was made for dissolution of the marriage with costs and damages against the co-respondent.

On the 28th of January, 1901, the decree was made absolute.

On the taxation of costs the husband claimed to tax against the co-respondent not only his costs of his own petition but also his costs of the wife's petition, on the ground that by reason of the consolidation order the two suits were united and had become the proceedings within section 34 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857. The matter was referred by the registrar to the court.

Before the President it was contended that the husband's costs of the wife's petition could be ordered to be taxed against the co-respondent under section 34 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, and that in any event jurisdiction was given to the court to do so under section 5 of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1890.

On the 20th of May Jeune, P., held that, though the discretion given by section 5 of the Act of 1890 must be confined to persons who were parties to the proceedings, yet that the co-respondent was a party to the wife's petition within section 34 of the Act of 1857, and he ordered him to pay the costs accordingly.

The co-respondent appealed.

There was some doubt whether the appeal was an interlocutory or final appeal. Leave to appeal was refused both by the President and the Court of Appeal. The co-respondent, however, brought on the appeal.

By section 34 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, "Whenever in any petition presented by a husband the alleged adulterer shall have been made a co-respondent, and the adultery shall have been established, it shall be lawful for the court to order the adulterer to pay the whole or any part of the costs of the proceedings."

By section 5 of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1890, "Subject to the Supreme Court of Judicature Acts, and the rules of court made thereunder, and to the express provisions of any statute, whether passed before or after the commencement of this Act, the costs of and incident to all proceedings in the Supreme Court, including the administration of estates and trusts, shall be in the discretion of the court or judge, and the court or judge shall have full power to determine by whom and to what extent such costs are to be paid."

Marshall Hall, K.C., and Moore, for the appellant.—There was no jurisdiction to order the appellant to pay the costs of the wife's petition. The consolidation order was merely a direction to try the suits together for the convenience of all parties.

Grazebrook, contrà.—First of all, the order appealed from was an interlocutory order, and leave to appeal has been refused. On the merits I submit that the decision was right, especially having regard to the extensive jurisdiction given to the court by section 5 of the Judicature Act, 1890.

Marshall Hall, K.C., replied.

The following cases were referred to: In re Binstead, 41 W. R. 452, [1893] 1 Q. B. 199; Blakey v. Latham, 38 W. R. 193, 43 Ch. D. 23; London County Council v. Churchwardens of West Ham, 40 W. R. 662, [1892] 2 Q. B. 173; In re Fisher, 42 W. R. 241, [1894] 1 Ch. 450; The City of Manchester, 5 P. D. 221; and Marsden v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Co., 29 W. R. 580, 7 Q. B. D. 641.

RIGBY, L.J.—For the reasons which my brother Collins will state in detail I think there was no jurisdiction to order the co-respondent to pay the costs of the proceedings upon the wife's petition, and therefore I think the decision of the learned President ought to be reversed.

COLLINS, L.J.—The first question is whether there is any right of appeal at all. It is said that the order appealed from is an interlocutory one, and leave to appeal from it has not been obtained. If the order was interlocutory, it is clear that no appeal can be brought without the leave of the court. But, having regard to the authorities which have been cited by the appellant's counsel, I have come to the conclusion that the order was a final one, and consequently the leave of the court is not required. [His lordship stated the facts, and continued:] It appears to me that the order of the President is, under the circumstances, really part of the final judgment. There was no jurisdiction to make any order as to costs, except as part of the final judgment; and although the order which interpreted the final judgment was not originally part of it and was separated from it by some days, I think it was not the less a part of the final judgment. It seems to me that The City of Manchester is an authority for so holding. In that case, in an action for a collision at sea by which the plaintiffs' ship was sunk, the Admiralty Division, on the 25th of April, held both vessels to blame, and ordered the owners of The City of Manchester to pay the plaintiffs half their damages. On the 20th of May a supplemental order was made giving the plaintiffs their costs of the action. On appeal by the defendants it was objected that the second order was interlocutory, and that the appeal, having been brought after twenty-one days, was too late. The Court of Appeal held that the order was final. James, L.J., said: "The order as to costs which is under appeal can only be sustained on the ground of its being part of the decree, for if the case had been disposed of by a final judgment the court would have had no jurisdiction to make a subsequent order. There is, therefore, no ground for the objection that this is an interlocutory order which must be appealed from within twenty-one days."

And I think Marsden v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Co. bears out the same view. In my opinion this order was not an interlocutory order for working out the final decree, but was part and parcel of the final decree itself.

This, then, being an appeal against a final order, the question next arises whether the decision was right. The parties have consented that the appeal shall be heard by two judges. Can the order be maintained? The question turns upon section 34 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857. The power to order a co-respondent to pay costs is a statutory one; the court has no inherent power to visit with costs a co-respondent who is not in the strictest sense of the word a "party" to the proceedings. He is introduced into the suit by virtue of the provisions of the statute. It seems to me that the learned President was quite right in holding that the power given by section 34 is limited to persons who are parties to the proceedings. And I think "the proceedings" must mean the proceedings in a suit to which the co-respondent is a party—i.e., the proceedings upon "a petition presented by a husband." The section gives no power of itself to visit with costs any person who is not a party to the proceedings.

Then comes the fact that an order was made for the consolidation of the two suits, and it seems to me that, rightly considered, this was not a "consolidation" order in the only sense which would make it material for the present purpose. No power to consolidate suits is given by the Matrimonial Causes Acts, or in the Divorce Court Rules made thereunder. Then, if we endeavour to ascertain the meaning of consolidation in the Supreme Court, we find that by rule 8 of order 49, "Causes or matters pending in the same division may be consolidated by order of the court or a judge in the manner in use before the commencement of the principal Act in the superior courts of common law." That throws us back upon what was meant by consolidation in the common law courts before the Judicature Act, and this is thus stated in Lush's Practice (2nd ed.), at p. 752. [His lordship read from "If two or more actions are depending at one time by the same plaintiff against the same defendant," down to "with such other terms as may be agreed on, or (if the order be made against the plaintiff's consent) imposed by the court or judge," and continued:] The cases there mentioned are all cases of actions brought by the same plaintiff, and capable of being joined in one writ, and the term "consolidation" cannot, as it seems to me, have any application when the actions or suits are brought by different persons, one by A. against B., and another by B. against A. To apply the term "consolidation" to such a case as the present would be a misuse, or, at any rate, a loose use of the term, and I cannot see that in such a case the suits can, strictly speaking, be consolidated. Unless the two suits are made one, so that the cost of the wife's petition can properly be described as part of the costs of the husband's petition, the court has no power under section 34 to compel the co-respondent to pay the costs of the wife's petition. We cannot visit him with the costs of proceedings to which he was not a party. The jurisdiction arises only if the proceedings on the wife's petition have become part of the proceedings on the husband's petition, and I do not think that is the result of the order for consolidation. In my opinion there has been in this case nothing analogous to consolidation at common law. The practice of trying at the same time petitions by a husband and a wife has been adopted merely for convenience, and does not operate to consolidate the two suits in the sense of constituting one suit out of the two.

The last point taken was upon section 5 of the Act of 1890. The learned President has satisfactorily disposed of the argument upon that section, and I entirely concur with him. Some limitation must be put upon the generality of the words. They cannot enable the court to order the costs to be paid by a stranger to the proceedings; they can only mean that the court may order the costs to be paid by any of the parties. The section does not confer jurisdiction to visit a co-respondent with costs unless he is a party to the proceedings, and here the co-respondent was not a party to the wife's petition unless the consolidation order has made him one. I have already stated my reasons for holding that the consolidation order had no such effect. In my opinion, therefore, the learned President had no jurisdiction to order the co-respondent to pay the costs of the proceedings on the wife's petition, though, if he had jurisdiction, he may have had abundant ground for exercising his discretion in that way.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Fladgate & Co.; Williamson, Hill, & Co.

From K. B. D. (Collins and Stirling, L.JJ.) } May 15, 16, 23, 1901.

ROSE v. BUCKETT. (a.)

Bankruptcy—Action for trespass—Claim for personal damage—Bankruptcy of plaintiff—Cause of action remaining in plaintiff.

An action was brought for trespass and conversion of goods, and damages were claimed for the personal inconvenience thereby occasioned to the plaintiff. The plaintiff subsequently became bankrupt.

Held, that, the damage to the goods being admitted to be nominal, the essential cause of action was the personal injury to the plaintiff, and that this cause of action did not pass to the trustee in bankruptcy but remained in the plaintiff, who was, therefore, entitled to prosecute his action.

As to where one and the same cause of action results in substantial damage to the property of the bankrupt, as well as injury to his person, Quære.

This was an appeal from a decision of Grantham, J.

An action was brought for trespass and conversion of the plaintiff's goods, which had been given as security for a bill of sale, and damages were claimed for the personal annoyance thereby caused to the plaintiff.

After the action was entered for trial the plaintiff became bankrupt, and his trustee in bankruptcy refused to prosecute the action.

The plaintiff brought the action on for trial, but on the application of the defendant Grantham, J., stayed all proceedings on the ground that all causes of action were vested in the plaintiff's trustee in bankruptcy.

The plaintiff appealed.

W. R. Warren, for the appellant.—The damages to the plaintiff's house and goods are merely nominal, and if damages can be recovered at all it must be for the personal inconvenience he has sustained. The claim, therefore, is one for personal damage, which does not pass to the trustee in bankruptcy. The action can be maintained by the plaintiff on two grounds—first, the personal claim can be separated from the trespass; secondly, there having been no damage to the goods the only ground of action is the personal claim.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

He cited Clark v. Calvert, 8 Taunt. 742, 3 Moore 96; Beckham v. Drake, 2 H. L. Cas. 579; Rogers v. Spence, 12 Cl. & Fin. 700, 13 M. & W. 571; Hodgson v. Sidney, 14 W. R. 923, L. R. 1 Ex. 313; Morgan v. Steble, L. R. 7 Q. B. 611, 20 W. R. C L. Dig. 8; Brewer v. Dew, 11 M. & W. 625; and Howard v. Crowther, 8 M. & W. 601.

Blake Odgers, K.C., and Spokes, for the respondent.—Where there is a cause of action for injury to the to the property of a bankrupt that passes to the trustee in bankruptcy, and where there is a cause of action for injury to the person or reputation of the bankrupt that remains in him. But the cause of action in respect of property passes to the trustee, even though personal damage be sustained, and the authorities show that in such a case the cause of action cannot be split up: Brunsden v. Humphrey, 32 W. R. 944, 14 Q. B. D. 141; Cohen v. Mitchell, 38 W. R. 551, 25 Q. B. D. 262; Wadling v. Oliphant, 24 W. R. 246, 1 Q. B. D. 145; Emden v. Carte, 29 W. R. 600, 17 Ch. D. 169; Metropolitan Bank v. Pooley, 33 W. R. 709, 10 App. Cas. 210. [COLLINS, L.J., referred to Baldwin on Bankruptcy (8th ed.), p. 293, and to Boddington v. Castelli, 1 W. R. 359, 23 L. J. Q. B. 31.] [STIRLING, L.J., referred to Ex parte Vine, In re Wilson, 26 W. R. 582, 8 Ch. D. 364.]

Warren, in reply, cited Stanton v. Collier, 2 W. R. 197, 3 El. & Bl. 274; Chamberlain v. Williamson, 2 M. & Sel. 408; Ashby v. White, 2 Ld. Raym. 938, cited from Pollock on Torts (6th ed.), p. 182; Williams on Bankruptcy (7th ed.), p. 200; Prosser v. Edmunds, 1 Y. & C. Eq. Ex. 481; Hill v. Boyle, L. R. 4 Eq. 260; Wood v. Downes, 18 Ves. 120.

Cur. adv. vult.

COLLINS, L.J.—This case appeared to raise a point of some difficulty, upon which the authorities were not easy to reconcile, and we therefore took time to look into them. The action was for trespass and conversion of the plaintiff's goods, and damages were claimed in addition for the personal annoyance caused thereby to the plaintiff. After the cause was entered for trial the plaintiff became bankrupt, and, on application made to Grantham, J., before the jury were sworn, he stayed all proceedings on the ground "that all causes of action were vested in the trustee in the bankruptcy"—i.e., the official receiver. From this order the plaintiff appeals. The general principles which determine whether a cause of action does or does not pass to the trustee in a bankruptcy are well settled, and may be stated in the language of Parke, B., in Beckham v. Drake. [His lordship read from the judgment on p. 627, and continued:] It is admitted in the present case that the damage to the land and goods was merely nominal, and, if substantial damages could be recovered at all, it would be for the annoyance and personal inconvenience caused to the bankrupt, and it was contended, therefore, for the plaintiff that the cause of action remained in the bankrupt and did not pass to his trustee. On the other hand, it was contended that the action was one of trespass to the land and conversion of the chattels of the plaintiff which imported some injury to his estate, the damages for which, even though nominal only, would, therefore, pass to the trustee, and that the annoyance, &c., was not itself a cause of action, but only damage flowing from the original cause of action which was single and passed to the trustee. This raised a question as to the possibility of dividing a cause of action, and leaving one part to be sued on by the bankrupt and the other by the trustee, and Brewer v. Dew, Rogers v. Spence, and Hodgson v. Sidney followed in Morgan v. Steble, were cited. It is not, however, necessary in my opinion to review these authorities or to determine the vexed questions left undecided by Parke, B. (see Beckham v. Drake, and Lord Campbell in Rogers v. Spence), for I think this case stands clear of the difficulty which would arise where one and the same cause of action results in substantial damage to the property of the bankrupt as well as injury to his person or annoyance to his feelings. Where the damages to property by trespass and conversion are merely nominal the cause of action in respect thereof is not regarded as one affecting the value of the property passing to the trustee, so as to give him a right of action in respect thereof, but rather as a wrong personal to the bankrupt himself on which his trustee could not found an action. This view is well put by Cresswell, J., in his opinion delivered to the House of Lords in Beckham v. Drake, summing up the result of Clark v. Calvert, Rogers v. Spence, and Brewer v. Dew. He says: "In Clark v. Calvert, Rogers v. Spence, and Brewer v. Dew it was decided that rights of action for trespass to land or goods in the actual possession of a trader do not pass to his assignee if he becomes bankrupt, because those rights of action are given in respect of the immediate and present violation of the possession of the bankrupt independently of his rights of property and are an extension of the protection given to his person, and the primary personal injury to the bankrupt is the principal and essential cause of action." Passages to similar effect in different language will be found in the opinion of the other judges: see, in particular, Parke, B., at p. 626 and Wilde, C.J., at p. 634 of 2 H. L. Cas. These opinions are specially valuable coming from judges some of whom had taken part in the cases referred to, summarising their effect, and they negative the technical ground on which alone Mr. Odgers contended that Clark v. Calvert and Rogers v. Spence were decided—viz., that under the then statute the assignees unless they interfered took no interest in land let to the bankrupt. Grantham, J., treated the action as one that could not under the circumstances give rise to "vindictive" damages, and therefore as not falling within the test applied by Lord Abinger in Brewer v. Dew as determining that the right to sue remained in the bankrupt. But the damages claimed here, whether the facts will support the claim or not, are technically "vindictive" in the sense in which Lord Abinger used the words—that is to say, they are not merely compensation for damage to land or goods, but something more, and so far as they are more they are in character "vindictive" in the legal sense. But as I have already shown, even if the damages were nominal only, the cause of action remains in the bankrupt. I am of opinion therefore that the action here is one in which, in the words of Cresswell, J., above cited, "the primary personal injury to the bankrupt is the principal and essential cause of action," and though the facts as far as one can surmise them from the pleadings and materials before Grantham, J., make vindictive damages in the popular sense improbable, we should not be justified in interfering with the plaintiff's right to have the stay removed if the cause of action is in point of law vested in him notwithstanding his bankruptcy. I think the appeal must be allowed. As regards the costs the learned judge in the court below did not give judgment; he simply stayed the action. I do not think that the analogy of a new trial will apply to this case. I think that the appellant ought to have the costs of this appeal. The other costs will, of course, be dealt with in the action—that is to say, those costs will abide the event.

STIRLING, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I desire also to rely on the very clear expression of opinion of Cresswell, J., in the case which has been referred to of Beckham v. Drake. As to the earlier authorities which were the foundation of the argument on behalf of the appellant in the present case I should desire to add only one word with reference to the question whether there has been any such change in the bankruptcy law since the time when those cases were decided as to alter the right of the bankrupt and his trustee. Now it is quite true that the language of the present Act is different from that which was in force at the time when those cases were decided. Even under the general words which were found in the old bankruptcy statutes—such, for example, as "goods and chattels," it was decided so long ago as the well-known case of Ryall v. Rowles, 1 Ves. sen. 348, by Lord Hardwicke that choses in action were included. In the present Bankruptcy Act in the definition section 168 there is found a definition of "property," which is the word used in the body of the Act, and it is defined to include "money, goods, things in action, land, and every description of property whether real or personal," and also a number of other things which I need not mention. That change in the language of the Bankruptcy Act was first introduced in the Bankruptcy Act of 1869, and it was pointed out very properly that under this Act things in action are specifically referred to which they were not in the previous Bankruptcy Act. Upon that it seems to me that there is direct authority which shows that nevertheless the state of the law as determined by the earlier cases to which I have referred still remains in force. That is the case of Ex parte Vine, In re Wilson, alluded to in the course of the argument, where it was held in the Court of Appeal that under the Bankruptcy Act of 1869, as before it, damages in an action for personal tort recovered by an undischarged bankrupt did not pass to the trustee in bankruptcy. The language of the Act of 1883 is in this respect undistinguishable from that of the Act of 1869, and it seems to me that it is an authority which guides us in the present case. I therefore arrive at the same conclusion as the Lords Justices.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Farlow & Fuller.

Solicitors for the respondent, Ellis, Mundy, & Clarke.

(1902) 2 Ch. 632.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } Farwell, J. } July 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 11, 1901.

CACKETT v. KESWICK. (a.)

Company — Prospectus — Director — Promoter — Shareholder—Contract by directors and promoters—Omission from prospectus—"Fraudulent" prospectus—Waiver clause—Measure of damages—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), s. 38.

An arrangement under which the promoters and directors of a company about to be formed agreed with a firm that, in consideration of the latter's underwriting 10,000 shares in the company, the firm was to receive 12,000 vendor shares as commission therefor, but 10,000 shares were in fact for the use of the firm's name on the prospectus on their approving of the soundness of the undertaking, and, further, that the firm was to be appointed commercial agents of the company, whose registered office was to be located at its address, while a member of the firm was to go on the prospectus as chairman of the company, held to be a contract material to be disclosed in the prospectus within the meaning of the 38*th section of the Companies Act*, 1867.

The 38*th section cannot be evaded by a "waiver clause" saying that "there may also be various trade contracts and business arrangements" in a case where such a contract as that mentioned above has not been disclosed in the prospectus.*

In refusing to give effect, as against a shareholder, to such a waiver clause and in holding that the prospectus by reason of the omission of a material contract is "fraudulent" within the meaning of the 38*th section, the court will measure the damages due to the shareholder by the difference between the amount paid by him for his shares and the actual value of the shares on the day after they were allotted to him.*

Greenwood v. Leather Shod Wheel Co., [1900] 1 Ch. 421, 48 W. R. Dig. 35, followed.

Action with witnesses.

The plaintiff Cackett, an architect residing at Newcastle-on-Tyne, claimed relief for non-disclosure in a company prospectus of a contract in breach of section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867, on the faith of which he had applied for shares which were allotted to him.

The defendants were William Keswick, a member of the firm of Matheson & Co., of 3, Lombard-street, London, E.C., who since its incorporation had been chairman of the board of directors of the Panuco Copper Co. (Limited); Samuel Watkin Carlton, a metal merchant, the vendor to the company, and also one of the directors; and Edmund Cook Wheater, a stockbroker in Newcastle.

The last two defendants had been engaged in the formation and promotion of the company.

The company was incorporated on the 24th of May, 1899, with a capital of £500,000 divided into shares of £1, and with the object of acquiring copper mines situated at Monclova in the Republic of Mexico.

In the same month a prospectus was issued to the public, as the plaintiff alleged, by the defendants, inviting subscriptions for 333,334 shares, in which Mr. Keswick and Mr. Carlton were named as directors and the firm of Messrs. Matheson & Co. were described as commercial agents to the company.

The prospectus, after setting forth the objects of the company, and extracts from reports of experts showing the probability of successful working of the mine and the prospect of large profits, proceeded as follows: "The directors with other underwriters have guaranteed the subscription of part of the company's capital and will receive a commission from the vendor for so doing. The following contracts have been or will be entered into: An agreement dated the 8th of February, 1899, and made between the Panuco Copper Mining Co. of the one part and Samuel Watkin Carlton of the other part, under which the vendor agreed to purchase the mine and other property to be acquired by this company. An agreement also dated the 8th of February, 1899, and made between the same parties as the last-mentioned agreement extending the time fixed for the completion thereof. An agreement dated the 10th of March, 1899, and made between the said Samuel Watkin Carlton of the one part and the said Edmund Cook Wheater of the other part, providing for the division of the profits of the resale to this company.

(a.) Reported by WARWICK H. DRAPER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

An agreement between the said Samuel Watkin Carlton of the one part and this company of the other part, providing for the resale to this company at a profit. There may also be various trade contracts and business arrangements in addition to the before-mentioned agreement of the 3rd of January, 1898. As these contracts and arrangements and the above-mentioned underwriting agreements may constitute contracts within the meaning of section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867, applicants for shares shall be deemed to waive the insertion of the dates of and names of the parties to any such contracts, arrangements, or agreements, and shall accept the foregoing as a sufficient compliance with section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867, or otherwise."

By the form of application for shares accompanying the prospectus it was provided that the applicant agreed with the company, as trustee for the directors and other persons liable, to waive any further compliance with section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867, than that contained in such prospectus.

The plaintiff, who was an architect residing at Newcastle-on-Tyne, on the faith of the prospectus, as he alleged, applied for 500 shares in the company on the 26th of May, and paid the full nominal value in cash.

The company did not prove successful, and an order for compulsory winding up was made on the 4th of April, 1900.

A dividend of 4s. a share had since been paid, but the plaintiff alleged that the assets would only be sufficient to pay a small further dividend.

After the winding-up proceedings had commenced the plaintiff discovered that on the 10th of March, 1899, the firm of Messrs. Saunders, Fielding, & Carlton, metal workers, in which the defendant Carlton was a partner, had written to Messrs. Matheson & Co. a letter in the following terms:

"Messrs. Matheson & Co., 3, Lombard-street. 10th of March, 1899. Dear Sirs,—In re Pannco Copper Co.—We beg to confirm the following arrangement made with you to-day—namely, that in consideration of your underwriting 10,000 shares in the above company about to be formed, you are to receive 12,000 vendor shares as commission therefor. You are also to be appointed commercial agents for the company, and the registered offices are to be located at your address. It is further agreed that your Mr. Keswick will go on the prospectus as chairman of the company.—Yours faithfully, SAUNDERS, FIELDING, & CARLTON."

It was admitted that in pursuance of the contract contained in this letter Messrs. Matheson & Co. underwrote 10,000 shares, were appointed commercial agents of the company, whose registered offices were located at their address, and that they received 12,000 shares.

In view of the existence of this contract, the plaintiff contended that the statement in the prospectus as to the contracts entered into was misleading and untrue, and alleged that if he had known of the said contract, he would never have applied for shares. Accordingly, he claimed a declaration that the prospectus of the company was fraudulent on the part of the defendants, who knowingly issued the same without specifying the date and names of the parties to the contract contained in the letter of the 10th of March, 1899, and damages.

Swinfen Eady, K.C., Upjohn, K.C., and E. W. Martelli, for the plaintiff.—The arrangement described in the letter of the 10th of March, 1899, is a contract within the meaning of section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867,* and should have been disclosed in the prospectus: Sullivan v. Metcalfe, 29 W. R. 181. 5 C. P. D. 455; Greenwood v. Leather Shod Wheel Co., [1900] 1 Ch. 421, 48 W. R. 35.

Rufus Isaacs, K.C., and M. J. Muir Mackenzie, for the defendant Keswick.—Before the letter of the 10th of March, 1899, was written, the defendant Wheater, on behalf of himself and the defendant Carlton, had invited and requested Matheson & Co. to undertake the duties and position of commercial agents to the company when it was formed. For undertaking this agency and its duties Matheson & Co. stipulated that the offices of the company should be at their address, that there should be paid to the firm £10,000 in fully paid up shares in the company, and that some member of the firm should be one of the directors. At the same time Matheson & Co. promised to underwrite 10,000 shares at a commission of 20 per cent. The letter of the 10th of March, 1899, was intended to embody and was understood by me to embody the terms of this arrangement, 2,000 shares being the 20 per cent. commission for underwriting and 10,000 shares being the amount stipulated for in reference to the commercial agency. I submit that this was the true nature of the transaction, and therefore it was not a contract material to be stated within the terms of section 38, not being a contract which would operate on the mind of any person proposing to apply for shares. It is not such a promotion contract as that which in Greenwood v. Leather Shod Wheel Co. the promoter Lambert made every effort to conceal. Assuming, however, that it was such a material contract, then, in the first place, it is a pure question of fact whether the plaintiff relied on the defective prospectus, and as to this he gave an incoherent answer. [FARWELL, J., here referred to the principle as to evidence laid down by Lord Halsbury in Arnison v. Smith, 37 W. R. 739, 41 Ch. D. 308.] And, secondly, I mainly rely on the "waiver clause" in the prospectus and submit that it operates so as to preclude me from any liability under this prospectus. The transaction was a trade contract or business arrangement within the express terms of the "waiver clause," and the fact of some inaccuracy in the "waiver clause" is not enough to prevent its operation. [FARWELL, J.—The "waiver clause," it is true, says that "there may be" such trade contracts; but are you not in this dilemma—that, if there were and you knew, the clause does not avail you; if there were not, there was nothing to avail?] As to the measure of damages, it does not follow from section 38 that because the non-disclosure be "fraudulent," therefore the plaintiff has suffered the damage which is the loss of the shares: see Twycross v. Grant, 25 W. R. 701, 2 C. P. D. 469. I cannot be said to have been dishonest, and the prospectus was not fraudulent so far as I was concerned. [FARWELL, J.—I do not think personal dishonesty is necessary for the plaintiff's case, but it may prove that there was fraud under the Act, even though not primâ facie.] The "waiver clause" was not a tricky one as in Greenwood v. Leather Shod Wheel Co.

* Section 38 provides as follows: "Every prospectus of a company, and every notice inviting persons to subscribe for shares in any joint stock company, shall specify the dates and the names of the parties to any contract entered into by the company, or the promoters, directors, or trustees thereof, before the issue of such prospectus or notice, whether subject to adoption by the directors or the company, or otherwise; and any prospectus or notice not specifying the same shall be deemed fraudulent on the part of the promoters, directors, and officers of the company knowingly issuing the same, as regards any person taking shares in the company on the faith of such prospectus, unless he shall have had notice of such contract."

Neville, K.C., and Daniel Jones, for the defendant Carlton.—I adopt the defence of the defendant Keswick, but also say that I was out of the country from the 3rd of May to the 31st of May, and submit that the prospectus on which the plaintiff alleges that he relied was one issued in my absence and without my approval.

Younger, K.C., and Pattullo, for the defendant Wheater.—I make the same defence, but also say that I was not a director, and therefore am not responsible for the prospectus.

Cur. adv. vult.

FARWELL, J.—The plaintiff claims damages against the defendants for non-disclosure in the prospectus of a contract in breach of section 38 of the Companies Acts, 1867. The company in respect of which the dispute arises is the Panuco Copper Co., which was incorporated on the 24th of May, 1899, and is now in liquidation. The defendant Keswick was chairman of the board of directors. He is a partner in the well-known firm of Mathesons, and his firm have acted for many years as commercial agents for the Rio Tinto Co. and the Mountain Copper Co., and are well known and of high reputation in the copper trade. The defendant Carlton is also a metal merchant and a director of the company, and the defendant Wheater is a stockbroker in Newcastle. I find as a fact that both were promoters of the company. In January, 1899, the defendant Carlton obtained an option to buy the Panuco mine, and he and the defendant Wheater determined to combine to promote and form a company to purchase the mine from Carlton at a profit. With a view to ensuring success in their appeal to the public to take shares they desired to associate Mr. Keswick and the firm of Mathesons with their adventure, and some negotiations took place in February, which, however, came to an end on the the 24th of February, but, after some abortive negotiations with a Mr. Lazarus, Mr. Wheater saw Mr. Keswick on the 10th of March, 1899, and made an arrangement with him, which he reported to Carlton, and Carlton embodied it in a letter written and signed by him in the name of his firm and sent to Mathesons. The letter is as follows: "Messrs. Matheson & Co., 3, Lombard-street, the 10th of March, 1899. Dear Sirs,—Re Panuco Copper Co.—We beg to confirm the following arrangement made with you to-day—namely, that in consideration of your underwriting 10,000 shares in the above company about to be formed you are to receive 12,000 vendor shares as commission therefor. You are also to be appointed commercial agents for the company and the registered offices are to be located at your address. It is further agreed that your Mr. Keswick will go on the prospectus as chairman of the company.—Yours faithfully, Saunders, Fielding, & Carlton." No one now contends that this letter expresses the real bargain with precise accuracy. It is common ground that the whole 12,000 shares were not the commission for underwriting 10,000 shares; 2,000 only were attributable to this commission, and the balance of 10,000 is said by the plaintiffs to be for the use of the names of Mathesons and Keswick on the prospectus, and is said by the defendants to be remuneration for acting as commercial agents for the company. This contract was not disclosed in the prospectus. Now I desire to state clearly that I find no ground whatever for imputing to any of the defendants any fraudulent intention of or any scheme for concealing this contract. I think that its omission arose from an unfortunate misunderstanding between counsel and solicitor, due to some extent to the fact that the contract on the face of it appeared to be an underwriting contract only. But this is not sufficient to relieve the defendants from liability under the Act. The statute provides that the omission, with knowledge of their existence, of material contracts shall be deemed to be fraudulent—that is to say, it creates a new cause of action and imposes the civil penalties of actual fraud on omissions which are not actually fraudulent: see Twycross v. Grant. At common law the plaintiff in an action for deceit has to prove actual fraud (Derry v. Peek, 38 W. R. 33, 14 App. Cas. 337); at common law mere non-disclosure of facts, however morally censurable, will not support an action for deceit: Peek v. Gurney, 22 W. R. 29, L. R. 6 H. L. 377, at p. 403, per Lord Cairns. But the Act not merely makes non-disclosure a cause of action, but makes it a cause of action based on fraud not proved to exist but deemed to exist as a statutory fiction for the purpose of supporting the action. The first question is, did the plaintiff subscribe on the faith that there was no such contract as that on the 10th of March in existence because it was not stated in the prospectus? I apprehend that in this respect the same principles must apply to the omission of a material fact as apply to the insertion of an untruth in a prospectus. In the case of a positive statement the plaintiff's allegation is that such untruth was the inducing cause of his entering into the contract. It is, perhaps, not accurate to say that an omission is an inducing cause. The prospectus is in each case the inducing cause, in the one case because it does, in the other because it does not, contain something, so that in the case of a misstatement the plaintiff's allegation is that, if he had not been told, and in the case of an omission that if he had been told, so and so, he would not have subscribed. Now it cannot be enough for a man to swear that he would not have entered into the contract if he had known of something that was concealed from him. It is easy to be wise after the event, and many men can honestly persuade themselves, when a company has failed, that they would have been influenced by a circumstance which in all probability would have made no impression whatever on their mind when considering an investment or speculation. The test must be, Is the omission material? and if the court sees that the fact omitted is of such a nature that it might reasonably deter, or tend to deter, the ordinary investor from entering into the contract, this is sufficient. It is in great measure an inference of fact to be drawn by the court or a jury from the circumstances of the case. If a material fact is omitted from a statement put forward to induce a person to enter into a contract and he does enter into the contract on the faith of that statement, it is a fair inference that he would not have contracted if he had known of the fact, and that in this sense the omission induced the contract. As Lord Blackburn points out in Smith v. Chadwick, 30 W. R. 661, 9 App. Cas. 187, at p. 196, the plaintiff could not be called as a witness in his own behalf in the days when Pasley v. Freeman, 3 T. R. 51, was decided, and he must have succeeded, therefore, on the inference drawn from the circumstances of the case. It would, no doubt, be matter of comment if a plaintiff were not called nowadays to swear that the fact omitted would have deterred him from contracting, but neither his testimony or his absence is conclusive. This is perhaps only another way of stating that the generality of the terms of section 38 must be limited, as pointed out by Thesiger, L.J., in Sullivan v. Metcalfe, 29 W. R. 181, 5 C. P. D. 455, at p. 461. "Every contract relating to the formation of a company, or to its capital, property, or business, when formed, or to the position, pecuniary or otherwise, in regard to the company or its promoters or vendors, of the directors or other officers of the company and which is material to be made known to persons invited to take shares in order to enable them to form a judgment as to the policy of so doing, is a contract within the meaning of section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867, and as such must be disclosed under the circumstances and to the extent which the section points out, provided that one of the parties to it is at its date, or subsequently becomes, a promoter, director, or trustee of the company." Now, in order to answer the question whether this contract is material or not, I have to determine what it really is. I am unable to accept the defendant's suggestion that it is a contract to act as commercial agents for the company in consideration of a payment of 10,000 shares. There was no company in existence which could so contract or which could ratify such a contract. No period or terms of agency are mentioned. If Mathesons had refused to act the company could have recovered nothing against them, and the measure of damages in an action by Carlton would have been on a totally different basis, and Carlton would have recovered for himself and not for the company. Further, the evidence does not support any such contract. Mr. Keswick was examined in the liquidation and his depositions are evidence against him, though not against the two other defendants. After stating his view of the bargain with Carlton in answers 18 and 19, he is asked (20), "What were you to give in return for that fee of £10,000?" and he answers, "We were to examine the prospectus, we were to look into the business of the company, we were to satisfy ourselves (which we did) that it was an undertaking that we could honourably attach our names to, and we were to locate and take charge of the business, have the directors' meetings in our office, find a board room, and so forth. For officers and staff there was a separate charge, which would have come in if the company had gone on." He was then asked (21), "The benefit for that was the attaching of your names to the prospectus, I suppose?" Answer.—"I do not know about that." Question 22—"By your name I mean your firm's name." Answer.—"That did not occur to me. We expect to be rewarded in commercial matters for what we do, and that was our fee for placing ourselves in that position." Mr. Keswick's evidence in the box does not differ from this. He stated in effect that Mathesons had to be remunerated for what they had to do in going over the prospectus, in undertaking the responsibilities, and in adopting the company. Mr. Carlton, in his examination before the registrar said, in answer to the question (770), "What were you giving them 10,000 shares for?"—"I understood from Mr. Wheater that he arranged that for taking the business up." (771)—"What do you mean by taking the business up?"—"Well, what shall I say? In being interested in taking it under their wing, a large financial house like that." And although he went on to state, that so far as he knew the whole 12,000 shares were for underwriting, this is not now seriously put forward, and in giving evidence before me Mr. Carlton said that he thought that Mathesons' name was important on the prospectus and would lead the public to subscribe, and that he was doing the best for his underwriters. Mr. Wheater, in his examination before the registrar, said (912), "Mr. Keswick or Mr. Macdonald said: 'If we allow our name to go on the prospectus, and if one of us becomes chairman, or if we have to find a chairman, we shall require a certain fee or a number of shares.'" With regard to this answer I desire to point out that in the office copy supplied there is a red ink note of correction or explanation on the opposite page, which is not signed or verified in any way or referred to in the memorandum signed by the witness, and I call attention to the irregularity. I have read the correction, and, as the result of the whole of the evidence that I have read and heard, I am convinced that the original answer is a correct statement of the facts, and that there is no ground for the correction, if it be authentic. I find as a fact that the consideration for the 10,000 shares was the agreement by Mathesons to take the company into their office, not merely to lend their name to it, for this might imply that they simply sold their name without more, and this would be unjust to them; it was to induce them "to qualify," as an expert witness would say. I give them credit for intending to satisfy themselves that the matter was sound before they allowed their name to be used, but the consideration was for taking the steps necessary to satisfy themselves and allowing their name to be used if and when they were satisfied. The agency was a part of the consideration moving to, not from, Mathesons. It was likely to be valuable to them. Carlton had tried to get Mathesons to give him 5,000 shares for giving up his claim to it in their favour. If the 10,000 shares had really been part payment for acting as commercial agents it ought to have been disclosed to the directors at the first meeting when Mathesons were appointed agents on terms to be arranged, but it was not mentioned. It is not suggested that the other matters mentioned in the letter of the 10th of March—namely, the promise of offices and the chairmanship, were in any way paid for by these shares. All these three matters were in fact dealt with as separate matters to be contracted and paid for by the company and the contract of the 10th of March was never mentioned to any member of the board. The existence of such a contract is, in my opinion, material for the consideration of an intending investor. He subscribes on the faith of Mathesons' name and on the well-founded assumption that they have looked into the matter and are so well satisfied with the venture as to take it under their protection. How can it be said that it cannot affect his judgment to know that Mathesons do not take the matter up simply on its merits, but because they have been paid to do so by the vendor, and that such payment, being in shares of the company, was necessarily dependent on the successful flotation of the company, and that such payment was made by the vendor out of his vendor's shares, so that the burden was in effect borne by the company itself? I cannot bring myself to doubt that "the careful man, disposed to invest in an undertaking," spoken of by Cockburn, C.J., in Twycross v. Grant (2 C. P. D., at p. 528), would think the difference very material between the support of Mathesons to a company on the ground of the merits of the company alone and such support on the ground of payment dependent on the existence of merits sufficient to induce the public to subscribe. If I employ an agent to advise me on the value of an estate that I think of purchasing, I should certainly consider it material to know that he was to be paid by the vendor for inspecting the estate a fee dependent on my purchasing. The next question arises on the waiver clause in the prospectus. I hold that all the defendants approved and authorized the issue of the prospectus dated the 27th of May or the 24th of May, and that the plaintiff subscribed on the faith of this prospectus. Mr. Neville, for Mr. Carlton, endeavoured to show that the plaintiff could not have subscribed on any prospectus issued by Carlton's authority; but, in my opinion, the evidence of the plaintiff, coupled with and explained by the application form signed by him, and on which Rutherford's name appears, is conclusive that the prospectus seen by the plaintiff and on which he subscribed was that of the 27th of May, and this was knowingly issued by all the defendants within the meaning of the Act. The waiver clause is in these terms: "There may also be various trade contracts and business arrangements in addition to the before-mentioned agreement of the 3rd of January, 1898. As these contracts and arrangements and the above-mentioned underwriting agreements may constitute contracts within the meaning of section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867, applicants for shares shall be deemed to waive the insertion of the dates of and names of the parties to any such contracts, arrangements, or agreements, and shall accept the foregoing as a sufficient compliance with section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867, or otherwise." Now, as a matter of construction, is the agreement of the 10th of March a trade contract or business arrangement within the meaning of this clause? In my opinion it is not. The company were taking over as a going concern an open mine which was being worked in Mexico. One contract relating to taking the produce of the mine was mentioned in the prospectus. It is obvious that there might be many similar to it of which the directors could not be expected to know, and the collocation of the words shows that the draftsman was referring to contracts and arrangements similar to that specified. I have heard the evidence of counsel and solicitor as to the settlement of the prospectus, and assuming that counsel, who loyally took the burden on himself, is accurate in his recollection, and did really say that it was not necessary to mention this contract in the prospectus, it must, as his own contemporaneous opinion shows, have been on the ground that it was an underwriting contract, not that it was a trade or business arrangement. It was, I think, overlooked in the argument that counsel had the written document, which purports to give 12,000 shares for underwriting 10,000, before him, and not the oral evidence, which shows the true nature of the agreement, and he had himself written in an express reference to underwriting contracts. Further, I do not think that it lies in the mouth of the defendants consistently with honesty to say that they knew of and intended the contract of the 10th of March to fall under the head of trade contracts and business arrangements when they stated not that "there are" but that "there may be" such contracts. In the view that I take of the construction of the clause it is hardly necessary for me to consider the other point argued, but as it has been argued, I desire to say that I agree with Romer, L.J.'s, statement in Greenwood v. Leather Shod Wheel Co., [1900] 1 Ch., at p. 431: "Assume that there was a contract by the plaintiff not to take advantage of the Act, how can you bind him when you state in your prospectus that there 'may be' other agreements when you knew there were? In your case you are a promoter knowing of this contract, and yet you put in a misleading statement that there 'may be' other agreements. That surely, is not a case in which you can say there is a waiver." A man who desires to take advantage of a waiver clause must state the facts fairly. If he states that there may be contracts, he intends it to be inferred that he knows of none. It is immaterial whether he intended to deceive or not when he made the statement, but if the element of unfairness is requisite, it is found when he insists that its effect is to make the other contracting party give up something of the existence of which the assertor knew and the other contracting party was ignorant. As I read the judgments in Greenwood's case, the decision and the reasons given for it involve that the statutory rights under section 38 can be waived, that any waiver obtained by unfair dealing or trickery is void, that the person said to have waived must have sufficient information of what he was waiving, and that apart from fraud, the same principles apply to waiver clauses as are applicable to ambiguous or misleading statements in conditions of sale or releases. I should add that the question of damages, which Mr. Isaacs argued last as a separate point, is really the same as the question of materiality that I have already disposed of. As Lord Blackburn says in Smith v. Chadwick, 9 App. Cas., at p. 195: "Whatever difficulties there may be as to defining what is fraud and deceit, I think no one will venture to dispute that the plaintiff cannot recover unless he proves damage. In an ordinary action of deceit the plaintiff alleges that false and fraudulent representations were made by the defendant to the plaintiff in order to induce him, the plaintiff, to act upon them. I think that if he did act upon those representations, he shows damage—if he did not, he shows none." There was some little misunderstanding about the measure of damages, and as this is a test action I think that it would not be right to hold Mr. Isaacs to his admissions Mr. Eady very properly leaves the matter to me, and I hold that the measure of damages is the difference between the amount paid by the plaintiff for his shares and the actual value of the shares on the day after they were allotted to the plaintiff. In the present case I must depart from the usual rule to which Lord Bowen, when sitting in the Court of Appeal, said that the Chancery Division ought to adhere, and on which I have always acted—viz., that it is as necessary, in the absence of a prior order of the court or agreement between the parties, for the plaintiff to prove the amount of damages that he has suffered as it is to prove every other part of his case, and I direct an inquiry what was the real value of the shares on the day after they were allotted to the plaintiff, and I refer to the judgments of the Lords Justices in Peek v. Derry, as showing the basis on which the inquiry is to proceed. There will be a declaration of the defendants' liability, and the defendants must pay the costs of the action.

Solicitors, Rowcliffes, Rawle, & Co., for Clayton & Gibson, Newcastle-upon-Tyne; Stephenson, Harwood, & Co.; Nicoll, Son, & Jones; Neish, Howell, & Macfarlane.

1903, 1 Ch. 612.

Chan. Div. Farwell, J. } July 6, 11, 1901.

BATY v. KESWICK. (a.)

Company—Prospectus — Director — Promoter — Underwriter—Contract by directors and promoters—Omission from prospectus—Materiality—Careful investor —Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), s. 38.

In order that a shareholder may obtain relief under section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867, for non-disclosure in the prospectus of a material contract he must show that he applied for his shares on the faith of that prospectus, and that such prospectus had been "knowingly issued" by the promoters and directors of the company before he acted upon it.

(a.) Reported by WARWICK H. DRAPER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

An underwriter who pays attention to nothing in the prospectus but the names of the directors will not be considered by the court as a careful investor in determining the materiality of a contract not disclosed in the prospectus.

Action with witnesses.

The circumstances of this action were the same as those of Cackett v. Keswick (reported ante, p. 10), save in so far as appears from the judgment of his lordship set out below.

The action was heard immediately afterwards, and before his lordship gave judgment in Cackett v. Keswick.

By arrangement the defendants' evidence in the former action was taken as given in this action also, and, after the examination of the plaintiff Baty, who had underwritten certain shares in the company and claimed relief similar to that claimed in the former action, submissions were shortly made by

Swinfen Eady, K.C., Upjohn, K.C., and E. W. Martelli, for the plaintiff;

Rufus Isaacs, K.C., and M. J. Muir Mackenzie, for the defendant Keswick;

Neville, K.C., and Daniel Jones, for the defendant Carlton; and Younger, K.C., and Pattullo, for the defendant Wheater.

Cur. adv. vult.

FARWELL, J.—In this action also the plaintiff seeks to recover damages for non-disclosure of the same agreement of the 10th of March, 1899, in the prospectus, but the circumstances of the case are different. It has been arranged that the defendants' evidence in the former action should be taken as given in this action also, but it is necessary to state some facts that were not relevant to the former case. During the month of March the prospectus was in course of preparation, and was settled by counsel in consultation on the 11th of March. On the 13th, however, a difficulty arose as to title, and Mr. Keswick refused to go on until this was cleared up. A clause to meet the difficulty was settled by counsel and was printed in a draft prospectus, but Mr. Keswick declined to authorize the issue of any prospectus until the difficulty was cleared up. As I have found in the other action, the actual prospectus, dated the 27th of May, was not approved and authorized for issue or issued before the 24th of May, 1899. On the 13th of March, 1899, the plaintiff met a friend of his, a Mr. Ainslie, who mentioned the Panuco Co. to him and took a prospectus out of his pocket and gave it to him to read. He was attracted by the names of Mathesons and Keswick on the front sheet, and he told me in the box that he did not remember reading anything about contracts. I find this expressly as a fact, because the shorthand note shown to me is inaccurate in this respect, and is inaccurate also in the statement of what passed on Mr. Neville's proposing to cross-examine. I read my note. "I don't remember reading anything about contracts," and this is correct. The plaintiff went on to say that he remembered noticing the names of the directors, that Ainslie asked him if he would do some underwriting, and that he went a little later on the same day to Wheater's office and signed the underwriting agreement for 250 shares, and gave a cheque for £62 10s. On the 28th of March the plaintiff was informed by letter that the directors had decided not to issue the prospectus before Easter, and his money was returned to him, but on the 8th of April he again signed a cheque for the amount and also an application for the 250 shares which he had underwritten. The plaintiff, who gave his evidence very fairly, said that he thought that he did not send his cheque and application until some days after, and this is probably correct. I cannot fix the exact date on which they were sent, but it was before the end of April; nor is it clear when he received the acceptance of his underwriting, but in the view that I take of the case it is not material. The plaintiff is suing on the 38th section and not otherwise, and he has to bring his case within the words of that section. That section provides that any prospectus not specifying a material contract "shall be deemed fraudulent on the part of the promoters, directors, and officers of the company knowingly issuing the same, as regards any person taking shares in the company on the faith of such prospectus," i.e., the prospectus knowingly issued. But the plaintiff signed his underwriting agreement and application for shares before any prospectus had been issued to the public, as he must have known, because the agreement mentions the prospectus as a document to be issued in the future. He signed his application on the 8th of April on a form referring to a prospectus dated — April, and he says that he did not alter or authorize anyone else to alter the April in the print to the 27th of May, and the alteration was made after he signed. Now, when the Act of Parliament says "knowingly issued," I hold that it means intentionally issued to the public. This is the view taken by Cockburn, C.J., in Twycross v. Grant, 25 W. R. 701, 2 C. P. D. 469, at p. 540, where he says: "Now there is nothing in the Act to indicate the sense in which the term 'issue' is used. I think it must be taken to mean the making the prospectus public, after its adoption, with a view to inviting persons to take shares and become members of the company. I agree in thinking that it must be taken to refer to an official publication, authorized by those who at the time have the government of the company, which in this instance would be the directors. It would otherwise not be the prospectus of the company." The plaintiff has to show that he acted on the faith of a prospectus, and that such prospectus had been knowingly issued before he so acted, in order to bring himself within the section. Suppose the authorized prospectus of the 27th of May had disclosed a contract which was not disclosed in the earlier proof on which the plaintiff acted, could he possibly succeed under this section? The Act was not intended and is not expressed in such a manner as to impose the very serious consequences of disobedience to its provisions on persons engaged in settling prospectuses in respect of copies not authorized for publication but shown to friends or speculators, not as members of the public but by way of anticipation of the public, and in order to induce them to co-operate with the promoters in placing the shares with the public. If such persons are deceived they have certain rights in law or equity, but they cannot get the benefit of this statute. This is sufficient to dispose of the plaintiff's case, but there is another ground on which I hold that he fails. I hold that he has failed to prove that he subscribed on the faith that there was no such contract as that of the 10th of March in existence, because it was not stated in the prospectus and that such omission was material. I will not repeat the statement that I have already made in Cackett v. Keswick (ante, p. 10) of my view of the principles applicable to this question, but I find as a fact that the plaintiff acted on the faith of the directors' names and that he never read the contract clause in the prospectus and attached no importance to it. I observed that, when he was cross-examined as to the identity of the prospectus that he had seen, he did not turn over the page but looked simply at the list of directors.

He had no idea whether the very special clause inserted in one proof to meet the difficulty as to title was or was not in the proof that he saw, and I am convinced that he individually attached no weight to anything but the directors' names. And when I come to draw the inference of fact mentioned by Lord Blackburn, and to which I have already adverted, the considerations that affect the careful man, disposed to invest in an undertaking, are very different from those that affect the underwriter, who when he underwrote "thought that the public was going to take the thing up and that he would get his 20 per cent. without being liable to take any shares at all." (I am quoting the plaintiff's evidence.) The investor wants a sound concern, the underwriter wants an attractive prospectus. I do not say that the underwriter supposes or desires that there should be any misstatement or concealment, but it is obvious that his interest is that the public should be induced to subscribe, and a long list of disclosed contracts which might be satisfactory to the careful investor would be deterrent to the speculator. I do not forget that the plaintiff's commission was payable in shares, but I think that this is not sufficient to lead me to infer that he is to be regarded as the careful investor for the purpose of considering what facts may fairly be deemed likely to affect his judgment It may well be that an underwriter, knowing of such an agreement as that of the 10th of March purported to be—i.e., that another underwriter was to get a much larger commission than himself, would refrain from underwriting, but this would not be on account of the detriment to the company but by reason of the inequality of the commission. The contract of underwriting with the promoter is wholly distinct from the contract with the company to take shares, and different considerations apply to the materiality of facts according as they affect the one or the other. The action fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Solicitors, Rowcliffes, Rawle, & Co., for Clayton & Gibson, Newcastle-upon-Tyne; Stephenson, Harwood, & Co.; Nicoll, Son, & Jones; Nelsh, Howell, & Macfarlane.

K. B. Div.
(Ridley and Bigham, JJ.) June 21, 1901.

NUNN & CO. v. TYSON.
JANE TYSON, Claimant. (a.)

Married woman—Liability to costs—Separate estate—Restraint on anticipation—Claim by wife to goods seized for husband's debts—"Proceedings instituted"—County Court Rules, 1889, ord. 27, rr. 1, 2, 4 (a)—Married Women's Property Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 63), s. 2.

A married woman by notice in writing directed to the sheriff or high bailiff claimed certain goods levied on for her husband's debts under process of a county court. The high bailiff, in whose possession the goods were, thereupon took out an interpleader summons, and at the trial of the interpleader issue the claimant failed to establish her claim.

Held, that the proceedings were "instituted" by her within the meaning of section 2 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1893, and therefore that the court had jurisdiction to order her to pay the costs so incurred out of her separate estate subject to a restraint on anticipation, and to enforce payment thereof by the appointment of a receiver.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Appeal by the plaintiff company in an action from a decision of the learned judge of the Herefordshire County Court, refusing to make an order against the claimant Jane Tyson to pay the costs of an interpleader issue, in which she was the plaintiff and had failed to establish her claim, under section 2 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1893.

The plaintiff company had obtained judgment in the county court against the claimant's husband and had put in execution on certain goods believed to be the debtor's property.

The claimant thereupon made a claim to the goods in writing as required by ord. 27, r. 1, of the County Court Rules, which claim was duly addressed and sent to the registrar of the county court, who was also the high bailiff.

The high bailiff thereupon took out an interpleader summons and under ord. 27, r. 4 (a), of the County Court Rules the claimant furnished particulars of her claim, whereby she claimed the return of the goods and £50 damages against the company and the high bailiff.

The summons came on for trial and the plaintiff failed to make out a title to the goods, and judgment was accordingly given against her.

Section 2 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1893, provides that: "In any action or proceeding now or hereafter instituted by a married woman, or by a next friend on her behalf, the court before which such action or proceeding is pending shall have jurisdiction by judgment or order from time to time to order payment of the costs of the opposite party out of property which is subject to a restraint upon anticipation, and may enforce such payment by the appointment of a receiver and the sale of the property or otherwise as may be just."

Under that section the company applied to the county court judge for an order for payment of the costs of the proceedings out of the property of the claimant which was subject to a restraint upon anticipation and for the appointment of a receiver, but the learned judge refused to make such an order on the ground that it was not a case in which proceedings had been instituted by the claimant within the meaning of the section above cited.

H. Herford, for the appellants.—The proceedings were "instituted" by the claimant within the meaning of section 2 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1893, as the notice of claim to the high bailiff was the foundation and commencement of the interpleader proceedings, and was a proceeding instituted by her. The county court judge was therefore in error when he held that neither the claim for goods nor that for damages was a proceeding "instituted" by her within the meaning of the Act, and that the interpleader proceedings were instituted by the high bailiff. Hood Barrs v. Cathcart, [1894] 3 Ch. 376, 43 W. R. Dig. 110; Hood Barrs v. Heriot (No. 3), 45 W. R 507, [1897] A. C. 177; and Moran v. Place, 44 W. R. 593, [1896] P. 214, relied on by the respondent, are not cases in point. The two first merely decide that an appeal brought by a married woman in an action in which she was the defendant was merely a step in an action already instituted, not by her, but by the plaintiffs in the court below. Moran v. Place is distinguishable because the entry of a caveat was merely the giving of a warning to communicate with the caveator before allowing any probate proceedings to be instituted.

He also cited Temple v. Temple, 63 L. J. Q. B. 556.

A. Houston, for the respondent.—A "proceeding instituted" by a married woman within the meaning of the Act must mean a step taken in court and does not include an act done out of court. It must be something in the nature of the issuing of a writ as pointed out by Lopes, L.J., in Hood Barrs v. Cathcart, as the words convey the idea of "an action commenced or proceeding initiated." The decision given in Moran v. Place covers the present case. The inevitable effect of entering a caveat is that the executors have to bring an action. The notice served by the claimant is not equivalent to a writ in detinue for the return of the goods, for the lady could have got them by reason of the abandonment of the execution if the execution creditors had been satisfied that the real ownership of the goods was vested in her.

THE COURT allowed the appeal.

RIDLEY, J.—I think the learned county court judge has come to a wrong conclusion in this case. The conclusion I have come to after having heard the arguments is that the institution of the proceedings did not commence with the taking out of the summons by the high bailiff, but commenced with the notice sent by the claimant. The case of Hood Barrs v. Heriot does not seem to me to conclude this case, for all that decision really decides is that a defendant who unsuccessfully appealed against a decision did not thereby "institute" proceedings. In Moran v. Place, relied on by the respondent, it was held that a woman who had entered a caveat in respect of a will had not thereby instituted proceedings and was not liable for the costs, but there the lady claimed nothing. She merely asked that if anything was done to set up the will she should have notice. The instituting of the proceedings there was what was subsequently done. Here, however, Mrs. Tyson claimed the goods as her property and gave the high bailiff notice to that effect. If the execution creditor had admitted her claim, she would have obtained possession of the goods and the notice of her claim to them would have been the step—the initiation—of the process by which she established her right to the goods. Clearly, therefore, by this act she instituted proceedings to establish her claim, and the section applies. It cannot be said that the summons, which had to be taken out because the execution creditor opposed the claim, was the instituting of the proceedings. For these reasons it seems to me the county court judge should have made the order for costs out of the lady's separate estate, as asked for, and this appeal must therefore be allowed.

BIGHAM, J.—I am of the same opinion. The sole question is whether a married woman who made a claim to goods seized under an execution against her husband instituted a proceeding within the meaning of section 2 of the Act of 1893. I think it is only necessary to state the facts to demonstrate that she did. The lady could only make her claim to the goods in one way—namely, by taking proceedings under the county court rule, which prescribes that a written notice of the claim must be given to the officer in whose custody the goods are. The claimant gave such a notice; with what object did she give it? Clearly, that she might be able, in case of need, to proceed to establish her claim, which, when established, would enable her to get goods then in the custody of the law officer to answer her husband's debts. To get the goods for herself was the object she had in view. Matters, however, did not stop there. An interpleader summons was issued by the high bailiff and served upon the execution creditors for the purpose of enabling them to contest the interpleader issue in which the claimant was to be the plaintiff. Then, before the trial, the claimant served particulars of her claim, as required under ord. 27, r. 4 (a). If the claimant had succeeded at the trial of the issue, could anyone have said that she had not instituted the proceedings? No such suggestion could be made. It makes no difference that she failed at the hearing to establish her title, for she failed in a proceeding instituted by her in order to get relief in the county court. I am therefore clearly of opinion that the case falls within the section.

The authorities that were cited to us have really no application to the case. In Hood Barrs v. Heriot a married woman had brought an unsuccessful appeal in an action not instituted by her, and it could not be contended with success that she had instituted a proceeding within the meaning of the section, although Lord Herschell, in his judgment, regretted that the section was so framed that it was not possible to give the respondent the costs of the unsuccessful appeal. I think we should be putting too narrow a construction on the section if we were to hold in the present case that no proceeding had been instituted by the claimant.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellants, E. W. Reeves, for Pickin & Sedgwick, Berkhampstead.

Solicitors for the respondent, Philpot & Morrell, for Morrell & Son, Oxford.

Court of Appeal.

From Chan. Div. (Rigby, Collins, and Romer, L.JJ.) — July 8, 22, 1901.

In re NEW'S SETTLEMENT.
LANGHAM v. LANGHAM. (a.)

Trustee—Shares in company—Proposed reconstruction of company—Exchange of shares in old company for shares in proposed company—Unauthorized investment—Jurisdiction of court to authorize trustees to hold unauthorized investment.

Although as a rule the court has no jurisdiction to sanction the performance by trustees of acts not expressly authorized by the terms of the trust instrument, yet if it is desirable or essential to the interests of all parties that the trustees, in the case of an emergency which may reasonably be supposed not to have been foreseen or anticipated by the author of the trust, should do some act not ordinarily within their powers, then (especially where the trust estate consists of a business or shares in a mercantile company) the court has jurisdiction in a proper case to sanction such acts on behalf of all concerned.

Appeal from Cozens-Hardy, J., in chambers.

David New, under the terms of a settlement dated the 21st of October, 1875, and a deed-poll dated the 31st of August, 1877, transferred into the names of John Langham and Henry Edward Hunt one hundred and ten shares of the nominal value of £100 each, fully paid, in the Wollaton Colliery Co. (Limited) upon trust either to permit the whole or any of the said shares to remain in their actual state of investment, or at any time or times at the discretion of the trustees or trustee for the time being to sell the same or any of them and invest the moneys produced thereby in or upon any of the public stocks or funds or Government securities of the United Kingdom or India, or any colony or dependency of the United Kingdom, or in stocks of the Bank of England, or upon the debentures or debenture or guaranteed or preference stocks or mortgages of any company in the United Kingdom paying dividends on its ordinary shares or stocks at the time of investment or on freehold, copyhold, or leasehold securities in England, with power to vary the same, and to pay the income of one equal share to Martha Ann Langham for life with remainder to her children, and to pay the income of the other equal share to Alice Flude Stafford for life with remainder to her children, with certain remainders over.

(a.) Reported by H. CLAUGHTON SCOTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The settlor died in the year 1878, and the said H. E. Hunt died on the 24th of July, 1900, leaving the said John Langham, the plaintiff in this action, sole surviving trustee.

Martha Ann Langham and Alice Flude Stafford both survive; six of the children of the said Alice Flude Stafford were infants.

The said shares remained standing in the names of both trustees, together with a sum in cash representing some debentures in the said company which were allotted in 1892 by way of bonus and which were paid off in the year 1901.

The said Wollaton Colliery Co. had been incorporated in the year 1875 with a capital of £105,000 divided into 1,050 shares of £100 each.

By the articles of association a restriction was placed upon the sale of the shares to persons other than existing shareholders.

The company proved most successful. From 1896 to 1898 (inclusive) the company paid interest upon the shares at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum; in 1899 12½ per cent., and in 1900 25 per cent. and bonuses amounting to 25 per cent. From time to time large sums had been expended out of profits in the improvement and development of the property of the company.

It was therefore deemed desirable in the interests of the shareholders to reconstruct the company and recapitalize it at a higher figure, at the same time enabling it to raise a further sum by debentures. Under the proposed scheme the shareholders would be entitled to ten £10 preference shares fully paid, ten £10 ordinary shares fully paid, and a £100 debenture in exchange for each £100 share in the old company. The agreement to carry the reconstruction into effect was made conditional on the concurrence of all the shareholders of the old company. No restriction was placed by the articles of association of the proposed company on the sale of its shares.

The summons asked that the plaintiff as holder of such shares might be authorized to ratify the reconstruction agreement and hold the shares in the new company. It also asked whether the plaintiff as such trustee might retain the said shares and debentures in the proposed company permanently, and if not, for what period he might hold them.

On hearing the summons Cozens-Hardy, J., considering himself bound by the authorities, refused to make any order except as to costs.

Haldane, K.C., and Peterson, for the plaintiff.—It is essential to the interests of the beneficiaries that the trustee should be allowed to sanction the reconstruction. The shares are of a large denomination, and owing to that fact, the high rate of interest paid upon them, and the restriction upon their sale, they fetch a lower price than they are really worth. The other shareholders have it in their power to wind up the company compulsorily, and buy up the shares subject to this trust. Such a sale would entail a heavy loss. The trustees are empowered under the terms of the settlement to sell the shares. By sanctioning the reconstruction the trustees will be put in a position to sell and get the best price for the trust property. The evidence is clear that the scheme would be beneficial for the cestuis qui trustent.

They cited In re Morrison, 49 W. R. 441, [1901] 1 Ch. 701; In re Crawshay, 33 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL 126, 60 L. T. Rep. 357; Brook v. Mostyn, 13 W. R. 115, 2 De G. J. & S. 373; West of England Bank v. Murch, 31 W. R. 467, 23 Ch. D. 138; Palmer's Company Precedents, Part I. (7th ed.), 606.

R. J. Parker, for every beneficiary sui juris.

Manning, for every beneficiary not sui juris.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 22.—The judgment of the Court (RIGBY, COLLINS, and ROMER, L.JJ.) was delivered by

ROMER, L.J.—As a rule the court has no jurisdiction to give, and will not give, its sanction to the performance by trustees of acts with reference to the trust estate which are not on the face of the instrument creating the trust authorized by its terms. The cases of In re Crawshay, decided by North, J., and In re Morrison, decided by Buckley, J., are instances where the court was asked to sanction steps to be taken by trustees which it thought unjustifiable, and which it declared it had no jurisdiction to authorize. But in the management of a trust estate, and especially where that estate consists of a business, or shares in a mercantile company, it not infrequently happens that some peculiar state of circumstance arises for which provision is not expressly made by the trust instrument, and which renders it most desirable, and it may be essential, for the benefit of the estate and in the interest of all the beneficiaries, that certain acts should be done by the trustees which in ordinary cases they would have no power to do. In a case of this kind which may reasonably be supposed to be one not foreseen or anticipated by the author of the trust, where the trustees are embarrassed by the emergency that has arisen and the duty cast upon them to do what is best for the estate, and the consent of all the beneficiaries cannot be obtained by reason of some of them not being sui juris or in existence, then it may be right for the court, and the court, in a proper case, would have jurisdiction, to sanction on behalf of all concerned such acts on the part of the trustees as we have above referred to. By way merely of illustration we may take the case when a testator has declared that some property of his shall be sold at a particular time after his death, and then, owing to unforeseen change of circumstances since the testator's death, when the time for sale arrives it is found that to sell at that precise time would be ruinous to the estate, and that it is necessary or right to postpone the sale for a short time in order to effect a proper sale, in such a case the court would have jurisdiction to authorize, and would authorize, the trustees to postpone the sale for a reasonable time. It is of common knowledge that the jurisdiction we have been referring to, which is only part of the general administrative jurisdiction of the court, has been constantly exercised, chiefly in chambers. Of course the jurisdiction is one to be exercised with great caution, and the court will take care not to strain its powers. It is impossible, and no attempt ought to be made to state or define all the circumstances under which, or the extent to which, the court will exercise the jurisdiction, but it need scarcely be said that the court will not be justified in sanctioning every act desired by the trustees and the beneficiaries because it may appear beneficial to the estate, and certainly the court will not be disposed to sanction transactions of a speculative or risky character. But each case brought before the court must be considered and dealt with according to its special circumstances. As a rule these circumstances are better investigated and dealt with in chambers. Very often they involve matters of a delicate and private nature, the publication of which is not requisite on any good ground and might cause great injury to the trust estate.

With these general observations we pass to the cases now before us. The circumstances and the evidence have been considered by us; we do not think it is necessary to refer to them in detail. We need only say that they relate to a prosperous limited company whose shares are fully paid up, and to a condition of affairs that have arisen which makes it desirable in the interests of all shareholders that by their consent the company should be reconstituted by the company being wound up and a new company formed to take over its assets. The new company is to be like the old company except that the capital is larger and that the new company will have power to issue debentures. The shares in the old company will be represented by fully paid up shares and debentures in the new company. Every shareholder who is sui juris agrees to the scheme. But some shares are held by trustees who wish the sanction of the court to their assenting on behalf of beneficiaries not sui juris or not in existence, the other beneficiaries agreeing. We understand that Cozens-Hardy, J., was himself satisfied that the course proposed to be adopted by the trustees was one which, if it could be, should be sanctioned by the court. We think, under the circumstances of the case, that the court has jurisdiction to sanction, and ought to sanction, the proposed acts of the trustees.

But the evidence should be supplemented so as to make clearer the points urged in the course of the argument before us as to the importance of further capital being provided by the proposed reconstruction of the company, the issue of debentures by the new company and the difficulties that will arise if the trustees are obliged to stand aloof and to take no part in any reconstruction. Then in the cases where the trustees are not by the terms of the trust instrument authorized to invest in the shares or debentures of such a company as the proposed new company, they must undertake to apply to the court for leave to further retain the shares and debentures they will obtain under the scheme of reconstruction, if they desire to retain them beyond one year from the time the reconstruction is carried out.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Taylor, Hoare & Pilcher, for Hart & Dickens, and for Parr & Butlin, Nottingham.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. Kekewich, J. — June 14, 19, 1901.

In re REDMAN.
WARTON v. REDMAN. (a.)

Friendly society—Policy assignable only by way of nomination—Friendly Societies Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 60), s. 15—Friendly Societies Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 25), ss. 56, 57.

A policy issued by a society constituted under the Friendly Societies Acts, 1875 to 1896, cannot be assigned except by nominating some person to receive the moneys payable under it as provided by the Acts.

Caddick v. Highton, 47 W. R. 668, followed.

(a.) Reported by J. F. ISELIN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Adjourned summons.

At the date of the death of the testator, J. H. Redman, he was the holder of two policies of assurance on his life issued by the Brighton and Sussex Mutual Provident Society in 1876 and 1881 respectively, the amount of each policy being £100.

The insurance was expressed in each policy to be subject to the rules of the society, which provided, inter alia, that any member thereof not under the age of sixteen might by writing under his or her hand, delivered at or sent to the registered office of the society, nominate any person (with certain exceptions) to receive any moneys payable by the society on the death of such member not exceeding £100.

In July, 1900, the testator deposited the policies, together with certain title deeds, with the solicitors of Mrs. E. B. Frost as security for a loan from her of £100.

The present summons was brought in an action by a creditor, in which judgment for administration was given on the 19th of November, 1900.

The summons asked for a declaration that the moneys representing the proceeds of the two policies, which had been paid into court, formed part of the testator's personal estate.

Mrs. Frost claimed that the debt due to her from the testator was payable in priority out of the proceeds of the policies, but it appeared that no nomination of her by the testator as the person to receive these moneys as required by the rules of the society had ever been executed.

G. B. Freeman, for the executrix.—The policy has not been validly assigned to Mrs. Frost, because the only mode in which this can be done is by nomination as provided by the Friendly Societies Acts, 1875 (ss. 15, 27), and 1896 (ss. 41, 56, 101). This is shown by the decisions in Bennett v. Slater, 47 W. R. 82, [1899] 1 Q. B. 45, and Caddick v. Highton, 47 W. R. 668.

Eastwick, for Mrs. Frost.—Nomination is but one among several modes of assigning such policies as are in question in the present case. This is shown by the whole current of legislation: see Friendly Societies Act, 1875, ss. 8 (1), 15, 18, 28 (1). The policies were not intended to be only for the benefit of the widow and children of the assured, but to form part of his property. Caddick v. Highton does not support the proposition for which it is cited. Therefore it is submitted that the assignment is valid.

G. B. Rooke, for general creditors, adopted the argument put forward on behalf of the executrix.

G. B. Freeman replied.

KEKEWICH, J.—Seldom, if ever, do I venture to express an opinion that a case which does not appear in the Law Reports ought to have been reported, but in this case I am compelled to do so with respect to the case of Caddick v. Highton. If that case had been a decision of my own I should not have ventured to say that it ought to have been reported. It was heard by Phillimore, J., in the year 1899. It appears to have been fully argued by eminent counsel on both sides, and the judgment, which was apparently not written, but delivered at the close of the arguments, bears upon the face of it evidence that full consideration was given to the arguments addressed to the court. The case is reported in 68 L. J. Q. B. 281 and in 80 L. T. Rep. 527. Both reports are full; they are almost, though not entirely, on the same lines, and it is mainly on account of the discrepancy between them that I regret that the case has not found its way into the Law Reports.

The point for which the case had been cited is that Phillimore, J., is said to have held that policies created under the Friendly Societies Acts of 1875 and 1896 are not assignable otherwise than by nomination as provided by the Acts. The point, which was distinctly raised in argument, was not a bye-point, and what was said by the learned judge cannot possibly be treated as obiter dictum, or as not necessary for the purposes of the case. Mr. Lush, for the plaintiff, is reported in the Law Times (and the report in the Law Journal is to the same effect) to have contended that "policies under the Friendly Societies Acts come under the general law, and are assignable by deed under the Policies of Assurance Act, 1867; the plaintiff is therefore entitled as executor of the assignee." In answer to that Mr. Asquith is reported as saying that "under the Friendly Societies Acts, 1875, s. 15, and 1896, ss. 56 and 57, policies are not assignable otherwise than by nomination as provided by the Acts." The point, therefore, was distinctly before the learned judge, and according to the two reports to which I have referred he decided it quite plainly and without hesitation or qualification. The reason why I am dwelling upon this is that Mr. Eastwick has pointed out that the learned judge referred to the bargain between the parties, and about that, there is a question upon the language of the reports which have been referred to. In the Law Times the learned judge is made to say this: "I am of opinion that such a policy cannot be assigned, and that the agreement between the society and the person assuring is the bargain which is set out in rule 17 of the society's rules." The rule is set out in the report, as also in the report in the Law Journal, but in that report the learned judge is made to express himself somewhat differently: "The first point is an extremely difficult one, and upon it my opinion is in favour of the defendants, the society. I do not think that policies can be assigned. I think that the bargain is the bargain expressed in rule 17." According to the report in the Law Journal, though he notices the bargain in the rules, he does not connect it so immediately with the point of law as to make the point of law depend on the bargain. In the report in the Law Times he connects them as though the two depended upon each other, and this is important because I have here no similar rule. I have studied the reports, and I do not think that Phillimore, J., meant that the rule affected the conclusion at which he had arrived. I regard him as deciding the neat point that a policy effected under the Friendly Societies Acts is not assignable otherwise than by nomination under those Acts.*

I observe, however, that the case is reported also in 15 Times L. R. 182. The report is shorter than the other two, and the rule of the society is not set out, but the reporter has neatly and usefully expressed the conclusion of the judge in these words: "Phillimore, J., held that the intention of the Legislature to be gathered from the above sections was that these policies should not be assignable except in the manner laid down in the statutes, and that from motives of public policy they should not be otherwise alienable." That is no doubt a mere paraphrase of what the learned judge said, the other reporters having given his words more fully; but it seems to me to express exactly what Phillimore, J., intended to decide. He did, no doubt, refer to Bennett v. Slater, not on this particular point, but on another with which I am not now concerned. I think I am right in saying that the point was a new one when it first came before Phillimore, J. He decided it conclusively nearly two and a-half years ago. What is my duty? The matter is of great importance to friendly societies and their members, and to others who may have dealings with them. I think on the whole it is better for me not to go further and not to say that I agree or disagree with the decision in Caddick v. Highton. I must not be understood in any way to express an opinion of my own. I find here an express decision on the point before me, and I think it is my duty simply to follow that decision.

Declaration asked for granted with costs; leave to appeal given.

Solicitors, Keith & Humphries; Black & Moss, for Nevinson & Barlow, Malvern; Rooke & Sons; Champion, Sons, & Hart, Brighton.

* The report of Caddick v. Highton in the WEEKLY REPORTER (47 W. R. 668) does not appear to have been brought to the attention of the learned judge; but that report confirms the view which the learned judge takes of the decision in Caddick v. Highton, and clearly shows that Phillimore, J., decided that case expressly on the ground that by reason of the statutory provisions of the Friendly Societies Acts, a policy effected under them was not assignable otherwise than by nomination in the manner laid down by those Acts; and that he did not base his decision on the fact of there being any special bargain created by the terms of rule 17 in that case.

Chan. Div. } July 16, 17; Aug. 10, 1901.
Byrne, J. }

In re HAEDICKE AND LIPSKI'S CONTRACT. (a.)

Vendor and purchaser—Stipulation that "the vendor's title is accepted by purchaser"—Leaseholds—Onerous and unusual covenants and provisos—Rescission—Return of deposit with interest.

The fact that a contract for sale contains a clause, "the vendor's title is accepted by the purchaser," does not exempt the vendor from disclosing matters which it is his duty to disclose, and the purchaser will in such case, in the event of non-disclosure, be entitled to rescission and a return of his deposit with interest.

On a sale of leaseholds it is the duty of the vendor to disclose onerous and unusual covenants in the leases under which the property is held.

Summons.

This was a purchaser summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, asking for a declaration that two leases, under which the premises agreed to be purchased were held, contained unusual and onerous obligations, covenants, and conditions of which the applicants had no notice at the time of entering into the said contract; for a rescission of the contract and a return of the deposit with interest thereon, and the costs of investigating the title.

The facts of the case were as follows: By an agreement bearing date the 12th of December, 1900, and made between Jenny Haedicke of one part and E. Lipski and N. Brill of the other part, Lipski and Brill agreed to purchase ten leasehold houses in St. Leonard-street, Bromley-le-Bow, for the sum of £1,475. The vendor thereby acknowledged the receipt of the deposit and agreed to leave part of the purchase-money on mortgage on the terms therein mentioned, and the agreement contained the following clauses:

"The vendor's title is accepted by the purchasers, who agree to pay all costs of the transaction.

"The purchase is to be completed on or before the

(a.) Reported by J. ARTHUR PRICE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

24th of January, 1901, when the purchasers will be let into possession of the rents, all outgoings to be apportioned on the date of completion."

The leases under which the property was held were not produced to the purchasers before the signing of the contract, nor was any information given to them as to their contents.

In addition to the usual covenants the leases under which the premises were held contained covenants on the part of the lessee:

Not without the lessor's licence to erect fresh buildings on the land demised, nor to make any alteration in the structural plan or elevation of the messuages and buildings thereby demised or in any of the party walls or in the principal or bearing walls and timbers.

Not to carry on or permit upon said premises, or any part thereof, any trade or business, but to use the said messuages and all buildings for the time being standing on the said demised ground strictly as private dwelling-houses or for private use and occupation only, and not to do or permit on the premises any spoil, waste, or destruction, or any act or thing which might be or become a nuisance or annoyance to lessor or neighbourhood; to deliver to lessor or his solicitor an extract of all assignments of the property containing dates, description of premises, term of years, and names and addresses and description of parties, specifying parties in whom the legal estate was vested, and to produce every assignment for registry within twenty-one days, and pay a fee of 10s. 6d. in respect of every such assignment.

The leases contained a proviso for re-entry on non-payment of rent for twenty-one days or on breach of covenant.

By the first of their requisitions the purchasers objected to the vendor's title on the ground that the abstracted leases contained various unusual covenants and onerous obligations of which no notice was given to them when the contract was entered into, and the purchasers claimed the right to rescind the contract, to a return of the deposit with interest, and the payment of their costs relating to the investigation of title.

The vendor replied to the objection: "The contract provides as follows: The vendor's title is accepted by the purchasers."

Stewart Smith, for the purchasers.—The purchasers had no opportunity of ascertaining the nature of the covenants in the leases before entering into the contract. These covenants are of an unusual character, and it was the duty of the vendor to disclose them. A purchaser has a right to be informed of the state of his vendor's title: Reeve v. Berridge, 36 W. R. 517, 20 Q. B. D. 523; In re White and Smith's Contract, 44 W. R. 424, [1896] 1 Ch. 637.

Alexander K.C., and E. Ford, for the vendor.—The mere fact that covenants are onerous or unusual is not of itself an objection to the title: In re Davis and Cavey, 37 W. R. 217, 40 Ch. D. 601; In re Higgins and Hitchman's Contract, 30 W. R. 706, 21 Ch. D. 95. The contract provided that the vendor's title should be accepted by the purchasers, and the fact that the purchasers signed this contract is a bar to the relief claimed.

Stewart Smith replied.

Certain points were raised in argument which his lordship thought could not properly be decided on a vendor and purchaser summons.

Cur. adv. vult.

BYRNE, J.—The substantial point raised by the applicant is that the property, which consists of ten leasehold houses, is subject to onerous and unusual covenants contained in the leases under which they are held, and to provisos for re-entry on breach of any of the covenants. I am of opinion that the leases do contain covenants which, in the absence of special stipulation or condition in the contract would entitle a purchaser to say that a good title has not been shown, inasmuch as the applicants were not informed and did not know that the leases contained any unusual covenants, nor was there afforded to them any opportunity of seeing the leases prior to signing the contract. It is, I think, now well established that whether the sale be by private contract or public auction, it is the duty of the vendor to disclose the existence of onerous and unusual covenants contained in the leases of leasehold property sold, or at least to afford the purchaser an opportunity of inspecting the leases: Reeve v. Berridge; In re White and Smith's Contract. Undoubtedly, also, a purchaser may bind himself by a contract to accept a bad title, as, for example, if he chooses to contract to take such title "as the vendor has." In the present case the contract, which is very short, runs as follows, omitting the more formal points; it refers to the ten leasehold houses with sixty years unexpired let to weekly tenants at sums therein mentioned, and after providing for the purchase-money, and acknowledging the receipt of a deposit of £75, proceeds: "The vendor's title is accepted by the purchasers who undertake to pay all the costs of this transaction. The purchase to be completed on or before the 24th day of January, 1901, when the purchasers will be let into possession of the rents, all outgoings to be apportioned on the day of completion." The point is whether the stipulation "The vendor's title is accepted by the purchasers," precludes them under the circumstances from insisting that a good title has not been shown. I am not aware that the effect of the precise words used in the present case has ever been the subject of decision, although there have been cases where the effect of somewhat similar words has been discussed. It appears to me that, starting with the proposition that the vendor is bound to disclose the existence of such onerous covenants as exist in the present case, or at least to afford the purchaser an opportunity of examining the lease for himself, it requires more than a condition couched in such terms, as in the present case, to bind the purchaser to take the title. As was said in Bousfield v. Hodges, 33 Beav. 90, at p. 94: "A purchaser is only bound by his acceptance of the title, so far as he is made cognizant of it, and if anything is kept back by the vendor, he is not as to that bound by his acceptance"; and in the case of Jenkins v. Hiles, 6 Ves. 646, which was referred to in Bousfield v. Hodges, Lord Eldon says, at p. 655: "Where the vendor is plaintiff, if the rule is founded on a principle of conscience, and requiring all possible security to be given to the purchaser, the court will at least take care that when it is contended that the defendant has waived his right to a reference, it shall be clear that there was no surprise upon him, and that there has been a full and fair representation as to the title upon the part of the plaintiff, not merely that representation which a conscientious man would make after due diligence, but that which a conscientiously diligent man would make. But when from fraud or surprise on the part of the plaintiff there has been deficient information, the court will take care that a defendant shall never be surprised by the effect of a submission made upon want of a full information." Lord Eldon was dealing there with a case for specific performance, but the same principles as to the necessity for full disclosure apply here. I think that the purchaser has a right to assume that where a condition in the terms of that under discussion is inserted, the vendor has disclosed what it is his duty to disclose, and that the condition must be read as precluding objections only on that footing. It appears to me that in this case the purchasers are entitled to succeed, and although not without some hesitation, I think I may also, as in In re Hargreaves and Thompson's Contract, 34 W. R. 708, 32 Ch. D. 454, order the return of the deposit with interest, and the costs of investigation of title.

Judgment for the applicant.

Solicitors, J. Howard Smith; Emanuel & Simmonds.

Chan. Div. Buckley, J. July 23, 24, 25, 1901.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. THE ESHER LINOLEUM CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Highway—Public footpath—Land appropriated as a private carriage-way—Extent of dedication—Presumption.

Where there is a public right of footway across land, and a certain amount of the surface of the land lying alongside the course of the public footpath has been devoted to traffic, although only private traffic, then primâ facie the owner of the soil must be taken to have dedicated to the public so much of the surface as he has in point of fact devoted to traffic, even although only to private traffic.

The owners of a rectangular piece of land ending at the River Mole, along which there ran a public footway, entering at the south-east corner and leading out at the north-west corner to a footbridge over the river, had appropriated the land for a private carriage-way. They took no steps to prevent the public who were using the footway going over any part of the land they pleased, although they (the owners) subsequently exercised certain acts of ownership over it.

Held, that it would be presumed that the whole of the land had been dedicated to the public for the purposes of the footway, and that the subsequent acts of ownership were not sufficient to rebut that presumption.

Action.

The question in this case was whether the defendants as owners of the soil of a piece of land at Esher were entitled to inclose part of it, or whether there was a public right of footway over it.

The land in question was a rectangular piece of land some 200 yards in length, and varying in width from about fifty-five feet at one end to forty feet at the other, bounded on the south by the London and South-Western Railway, on the north by a wall upon the the south side of linoleum mills and premises belonging to the defendants for part, and by other buildings and premises for the rest of its length, and on the west by the River Mole.

About 100 feet from the river there was a gate in the wall leading to the mill.

In coming to the land from Esher you passed under the line of railway by a road which ran from south to north, and directly you emerged from the archway the roadway turned to the left towards the west, and thus came to the land in question.

This land, as has been mentioned, extended to the river, and was used as a carriage-way to the defendant's mill, and at the river the road as a carriage-way came to an end.

Across the Mole there was a footbridge leading from the north-west corner of the land, and there was a public footpath over this bridge.

(a.) Reported by NEVILLE TEBBUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The rest of this end of the land was fenced off from the river.

In order, therefore, to enter the land from Esher, and leave it by the footbridge, you had to enter it at the south-east corner and leave it by the north-west corner.

The railway was made in or about 1835 and the railway company had put up a hedge and post and rail fence and made a ditch along the railway. It was not disputed that there existed an ancient public right of footway through the archway under the line and over the rectangular piece of land and across the bridge, and that it existed at any rate before the carriage-way was made.

On the title deeds of the defendants the rectangular piece of land was called a "roadway," at any rate from as early as 1873.

Coming from the archway there was a made footway over the land—made in comparatively recent times—and in former years a track on the south side. The defendants alleged that the public footway—coming from the east—was along the southern side of the land by the side of the railway until nearly opposite the gate to the mill, and that then it crossed over the land in a slanting direction towards the gate, and ran along the northern side by the south wall of the premises of the defendants up to the bridge. This would leave a piece of land more or less triangular, bounded on the south by the railway, on the west by the river, and on the north and east by the alleged line of footway.

This alleged line of footway had, however, never been fenced in, and the public had not been obliged to keep to it by the owners of the land.

At the beginning of 1900 the defendants enclosed this triangular piece of land by erecting an iron railing around it.

Upon their refusing to remove the railing the Attorney-General, at the relation of the Urban District Council of Esher and the Dittons, brought this action for an injunction to restrain the defendant company from interfering with the use of the public highway, alleging that the public had a right of footway over every part of the rectangular piece of land including the enclosed triangular piece.

In proof of their right to enclose, the defendants alleged various acts of ownership done upon the inclosed land by themselves and by their predecessors which will be found referred to in the judgment.

Macmorran, K.C., H. Terrell, K.C., and E. S. Ford, for the plaintiffs.

Astbury, K.C., and George Henderson, for the defendants.

The cases of Reg. v. United Kingdom Electric Telegraph Co. (Limited), 3 F. & F. 73; Brownlow v. Tomlinson, 1 Man. & Gr. 484; and Grand Surrey Canal v. Hall, 1 Man. & Gr. 392, were cited in the arguments.

BUCKLEY, J.—The question I have to decide is, I think, a pure question of fact; but in determining the question of fact I am bound to proceed upon certain legal presumptions. In the first place I presume that the public right of footway existed before the private right of carriage-way existed. In the second place it seems to me that where you have a public right of footway across land, and you find a certain amount of surface of land lying along the course of the public footpath devoted to the traffic, even if it be private traffic, then primâ facie the owner of the soil must be taken to have dedicated to the public so much of the surface as he has in point of fact devoted to traffic, even if it be private traffic.

In all these cases of right of way it is necessary to remember that the thing to be established always is dedication, not user. A highway is not acquired by user. You cannot acquire a right of public way under the Prescription Acts. If you want to acquire a right by prescription you must go back to the time of Richard I.—to a time before legal memory. What you have got to find is dedication. In most of these cases dedication is proved by user. But user, is the evidence, to prove dedication; it is not user, but dedication, which constitutes the highway. Therefore what you always have to investigate is, whether the owner of the soil did or did not dedicate certain land to the use of the public. Where you find a certain amount of land laid out for the purposes of traffic, even though it be private traffic, and there be along the same line a right of public footway, it seems to me that in the absence of evidence to the contrary I ought to presume that the landowner dedicated, for the purpose of all traffic, and not private traffic only, so much of it as he devoted to traffic in fact. I have asked, and I am told that really there is little or no authority upon the question; it seems to be new; except that in Surrey Canal Co. v. Hall, 1 Man. & Gr. 392, I find Maule, J., stating this (p. 406): "It seems to me that the circumstance of the bridge being originally erected as a carriage-way for the accommodation of a considerable number of individuals, inasmuch as the company must either have permitted the bridge to be used indiscriminately, or have put themselves to great expense in employing some person to see that those passing had a right to do so, furnishes a strong reason why they should have intended to dedicate the bridge to the public." The facts in that case were that the bridge was built to accommodate a private right of carriage-way. Over the same line of country there existed a public right of footway. After the bridge was erected the public did come there with carriages, and the owners did not raise any objection. What was the proper inference from that state of facts? The owner of the soil might of course have posted someone there to see that no one with a carriage passed unless he was entitled to a private right of carriage-way. He did not do so. Why did not he do so? Because it was not worth his while to discriminate between one and the other. And you have the animus dedicandi that he meant the public to come there if they liked. So here it appears to me that I ought to apply the same principle. When the owner of the soil devoted the rectangular strip to traffic of some kind, and there was the public right to pass along the same line of country he might, if he had been so minded, have kept the public to a particular line. He might have enclosed the footway between hurdles if he could have done so consistently with the carriage-way, or he might have paved part of the way and said, "You must walk upon that part and not depart from it," and he might have put a servant there, and made everybody who was on foot go on that particular line. If he does nothing of the sort, if in point of fact he devotes that surface to traffic of some kind, then I think that the proper presumption is that he intended the public, who are entitled to access to some part of that piece of ground, to have a right to go all over that piece of ground. Primâ facie that is a dedication to the public as a footway of all the surface which he devoted to traffic going to the cottages. If that be right, the next question to ascertain is, Did the owner of the soil devote the whole of this rectangular strip, including the triangular piece, to the purposes of a roadway? The defendants say, No. I think the answer is short. It rests upon the documents. Now in all the documents, beginning with the agreement of 1873, you find this piece of land, including the triangular piece, described as a "road." The agreement of 1873 has a plan, and the plan shows the site of the land in question coloured green as extending up to and over the River Mole. The schedule describes it as "Part of roadway No. 46 containing," and then the acreage is left blank. No. 46 included the triangular piece in question. This plan is found repeated in the deed of the 14th of September, 1880, and the description of No. 46 as part of the roadway is found there again. The deed of the 15th of September, 1880, the day after that conveyance, reproduces the same plan, colouring No. 46 in the same way, and treating it exactly as it was treated in the previous deeds. So that there can be no question looking at those documents but that the defendants did appropriate as a road the triangular piece in question. That triangular piece, therefore, was devoted to purposes of traffic. If I am right in what I have said it follows that, as from the moment that the owners of the soil devoted it to purposes of traffic, and thereafter never interfered with the public going over the bridge and going where they pleased over the land so appropriated to traffic, I ought to presume that the owners of the soil intended to dedicate the same soil to the persons who used the public footway. So far, therefore, it seems to me that the plaintiffs have made out their case, that over this piece now enclosed there was a right in the public on foot to pass and repass.

But then upon the facts the defendants will say that something has been established to the contrary. In the first place they have sought to show that there was more or less—I think it is rather less than more—a formed footpath which after you crossed the bridge kept to the mill wall till it reached the mill gate, then went to the south over to the railway, and then continued on the south till you reached the archway, and that that is the way. It appears to me that that evidence is of very little weight. A great number of persons who use this way would be the defendants' workmen, and that accounts for a well-worn way from a point nearly opposite the mill gate on the south to the mill gate on the north. But such repairs as were done by the defendants—and perhaps they were the only persons who did repairs—such repairs were not confined to that footpath. As holes were worn in the triangular piece of land the defendants filled them up from time to time in the same way. It seems to me that that accounts for very little indeed.

Then certain acts of ownership are relied upon by the defendants (who certainly were the owners of the soil), such as that they went there and cut turf to repair a lawn which there was inside the mill yard. That seems to me to have been a very trivial matter, some ten or twelve turfs taken; but whether less or more, if they did not interfere with the public passing and repassing, that was an act which the defendants as owners of the soil had a right to do. They had a right to go there. They had a right to the turf. Then it was said that they warned off some gipsies who came and wished to camp there; that they told a local preacher who came and preached there one day that he must not come again, and he did not. Those were all acts perfectly competent to them to do as owners of the soil, and were not inconsistent with the existence of a public right of way over this land. Then there are two things which are a little more definite, and they are these. One is that when the South-Western Railway Co. were repairing their bridge over the river, they brought some heavy timbers and put them on this land, and they left some three or four large baulks of timber there for some time—for some weeks, I believe. Well, the evidence is that the defendants' manager at that time gave the company leave to put timber there imagining that it was going to stay there for a short time, but that it did stay much longer than he expected. They did put some timber there for some time, and of course that formed an obstruction to the highway during such time as it was there, and it is sought to say that the defendants exercised an act of ownership on the soil claiming it as their's against any right of the public by giving leave to the company to do that. [His lordship next referred to the erection of posts for drying linen on the ground some twenty years before the trial, and continued:] As a result of the evidence I do not doubt that somebody dried linen there for a short time, and that there was some sockets at one time put there for the posts. Those acts really come to very little indeed. If there was a public right of highway once established, any obstruction of that by the owner of the soil would not destroy the right of highway. Once a highway always a highway. Acts done at the time when this roadway was made might be used to negative dedication, but when once you get dedication, a subsequent act by the owner of the soil in breach of the rights of the public comes to nothing; and these acts are subsequent to 1880 or thereabouts. Now the documents show a road at any rate as early as 1873, and I should infer from the facts that it was probably formed about 1835, when the railway was made or shortly afterwards. These acts of ownership of the soil therefore seem to me quite insufficient to displace the conclusions of fact at which I have arrived.

I think, therefore, that I ought to infer as a fact that the owners of the soil appropriated this piece of ground for purposes of traffic at the latest in 1873, and probably many years before that, and that from the time when it was appropriated for the purposes of traffic, although it was private traffic, the public were allowed in the exercise of the public right of footway to use such part of that surface as they thought proper; and if so, that is dedication to the public. I hold, therefore, that the plaintiffs have a right of footway over the triangular enclosed piece, and that they are entitled to succeed in the action.

Injunction granted.

Solicitor for the plaintiffs, C. M. Barker.

Solicitors for the defendants, Wilson & Sons.

Chan. Div. } July 31, 1901.
Joyce, J. }

AFLALO AND COOK v. LAWRENCE & BULLEN (LIMITED). (a.)

Copyright—Encyclopædia—Contributor and publisher—Copyright Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 45), s. 18.

The copyright in articles contributed to an encyclopædia and paid for by the publisher, where there is no special agreement as to the copyright between contributor and publisher, and no special circumstances in the nature of the work or in the terms of the employment, is in the author and not in the publisher.

In the year 1896 the plaintiff Frederick George Aflalo conceived a scheme for the compilation of a work to be called "The Encyclopædia of Sport," and submitted the same to the defendants, a firm of publishers, with a view to their undertaking the publication of it.

The work was to consist of articles, arranged alphabetically, relating to various branches of sport, contributed and signed by persons well known in connection with the various subjects.

The defendants agreed to adopt the scheme, and on the 10th of July, 1896, an agreement in writing was entered into between the plaintiff F. G. Aflalo and the directors of the defendant company, which provided:

(1) That the said directors should publish and bear all costs of publishing a work to be entitled "The Encyclopædia of Sport."

(2) That in the preface to the said work a statement should be made to the effect that the scheme of the book had been suggested by the plaintiff F. G. Aflalo.

(3) That the directors should pay the plaintiff F. G. Aflalo a fee of £500 for his editorial services, to be paid as therein mentioned.

(4) That the directors should reimburse the plaintiff F. G. Aflalo for expenses incurred by him for postage, such expenses not to exceed the sum therein mentioned.

(5) That the plaintiff F. G. Aflalo should write without further fee 7,000 words of the special articles, and contribute all the unsigned articles that might be required.

(6) That the directors should supply an assistant to the plaintiff F. G. Aflalo throughout the progress of the work.

(7) That the plaintiff F. G. Aflalo should be entitled to pursue his other literary work in so far as it should not interfere with the due performance of his editorial duties; and

(8) That should the directors consider it advisable to discontinue publishing the encyclopædia before Part X. had been completed they would pay to the plaintiff F. G. Aflalo the sum of £250 in all, subject to the condition that the stoppage of the work was not caused by his own action.

The encyclopædia was published in parts, and was ultimately completed in the year 1899 under the part editorship of the plaintiff F. G. Aflalo, who in accordance with the terms of the agreement contributed to the Encyclopædia a signed article entitled "Sea Fishing."

Shortly before the date of the above-mentioned agreement the plaintiff F. G. Aflalo arranged with the plaintiff Charles Henry Cook (well known to anglers under the name of "John Bickerdyke") for the latter to contribute signed articles for the encyclopædia on the subject of angling. Under this arrangement the plaintiff C. H. Cook contributed three articles which were published in the encyclopædia, entitled respectively "Coarse Fish," "Pike," and "Trout."

The defendants paid the plaintiff C. H. Cook for the said articles at a certain rate per thousand words.

The plaintiffs F. G. Aflalo and C. H. Cook were severally registered as proprietors of the copyright of the articles so contributed by them.

In the year 1900 the defendants, without the consent of either of the plaintiffs, published an abridged edition of the Encyclopædia of Sport which they entitled "The Young Sportsman." This publication consisted mainly of such articles from the "Encyclopædia of Sport" as were of interest to youthful sportsmen, but it also contained a small amount of fresh matter. Amongst the articles taken from the "Encyclopædia of Sport" were the above-mentioned articles contributed by the two plaintiffs.

The plaintiffs thereupon commenced this action, and asked for an injunction to restrain the defendants from publishing or selling "The Young Sportsman," and for damages.

The defendants' contention was that inasmuch as they were the registered proprietors of the copyright in the "Encyclopædia of Sport," the plaintiffs had no copyright in the said articles, and they counterclaimed for a declaration to that effect and for an order to expunge the plaintiffs' entries of copyright in the Book of Registry, and also for damages.

(a.) Reported by H. CLAUGHTON SCOTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Hughes, K.C., and R. J. Parker, for the plaintiffs.—Under the Copyright Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 45), s. 3, the copyright in any book is primâ facie the property of the author. The word "book" is defined by section 2 of the Act as "Every volume, part, or division of a volume." Special provision, however, is made for the case of an encyclopædia by section 18 of the Act. That section provides as follows: "Where any publisher or other person shall . . . project, conduct, and carry on, or be the proprietor of any encyclopædia, review, magazine, periodical work, or work published in a series of books or parts, or any book whatsoever, and . . . shall employ any persons to compose the same, or any volumes, parts, essays, articles, or portions thereof for publication in or as part of the same, and such work, volumes, parts, essays, articles, or portions shall . . . be composed under such employment, on the terms that the copyright therein shall belong to such proprietor, projector, publisher, or conductor, and paid for by such proprietor, &c., . . . the copyright in every such encyclopædia, &c., . . . and in every volume, part, essay, article, and portion so composed and paid for shall be the property of such proprietor, &c., . . . who shall enjoy the same rights as if he were the actual author thereof, and shall have such term of copyright therein as is given to the authors of books by this Act. . . ." The only reported case on an encyclopædia is that of the Bishop of Hereford v. Griffin, 16 Sim. 190, in which an injunction was granted against the separate republication by the publisher of an article written for the Encyclopædia Metropolitana. There is an essential difference between considerations applicable to an encyclopædia and those applicable to a catalogue. In the former each article has a separate value of its own, quite apart from the other portions of the book. Where the articles have no separate value, the necessary implication arises that the copyright is intended to be in the publisher: Sweet v. Benning, 3 W. R. 519, 16 C. B. 459. No harm is done to an encyclopædia by the separate publication of isolated articles. If it is not unreasonable to suppose that the author intended to retain the copyright, and there being no express agreement as to the matter, he must be held to have retained it.

They also cited Walter v. Howe, 29 W. R. 776, 17 Ch. D. 708; and Lamb v. Evans, 41 W. R. 405, [1893] 1 Ch. 218.

Younger, K.C., and T. L. Gilmour, for the defendants.—We submit that the effect of the agreement of the 10th of July, 1896, was to make the plaintiff F. G. Aflalo the servant of the defendants for the purpose of editing the work, and contributing signed articles to the extent therein provided and all the unsigned articles: see Lamb v. Evans, [1893] 1 Ch., at 233. Short of express agreement everything is in favour of the inference that the publishers intended to acquire the copyright. There is nothing to show that the contributors had any intention of making any reservation to themselves. Further, "The Young Sportsman" consists, with three exceptions, exclusively of matter contained in the encyclopædia. The articles that so appear are in no way abridged. It amounts, therefore, to no more than a new edition of the encyclopædia, which the publishers had a perfect right to produce.

JOYCE, J., after reading section 18 of the Act, said: I have here to apply to the facts before me the provisions of an Act which are perfectly clear. It is true that the courts in considering cases where the publication was of a peculiar nature or where there were special terms in the employment of the person contributing the articles, have determined that it is not necessary to the acquisition of the copyright by the publisher that it should be so stipulated specifically and in terms. Here, seemingly, there is an encyclopædia of the nature mentioned in the Act of Parliament. Nor, as to Cook, is there any term or circumstance in the mode of his employment by which the court can infer anything to alter the ordinary circumstances applicable to such a case. That is to say, there is nothing to lead the court to infer that it was the intention of the parties that the copyright should be in the publisher.

As regards Aflalo, the circumstances are, if anything, rather in his favour. In addition to editing the work, he agreed to write signed articles to the extent of 7,000 words without extra fee, and all the unsigned articles that might be required. I therefore decide the case on the short ground that there is no special circumstance in the nature of the work or in the terms of his employment that leads one to infer that the copyright was intended to be in the publisher. But it is not for me to determine whether Aflalo and Cook can in any way republish the articles contributed by them to the encyclopædia.

His lordship granted the injunction asked for, and ordered an inquiry as to damages.

Solicitors, Field, Roscoe, & Co.; Dixon, Elkin, & Dixon.

K. B. Div. (Bigham, J.) — May 9; June 15, 1901.

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE CORPORATION v. SJOFORSAKRINGS AKTIE-BOLAGET VEGA. (a.)

Insurance (Marine)—Time policy—Continuation clause—"Should the vessel be at sea or abroad on the expiration of this policy"—Policy for time exceeding twelve months—Invalidity—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), ss. 92, 93.

A policy of marine insurance on a ship expressed to be for and during a period of twelve months contained a clause which provided that if the ship was at sea or abroad at the expiration of the policy, it was agreed to hold the vessel covered by the policy until arrival at the port of final destination. A loss occurred upon a homeward voyage after the expiration of the twelve months. In an action on the policy,

Held, that the policy was one for time exceeding twelve months, and therefore invalid under section 93 of the Stamp Act, 1891.

Semble, if a loss had occurred before the expiration of the twelve months, it could have been recovered under the policy.

The rule that the law applicable to the construction of a contract is the law of the country where the contract was made, is based on the intention of the parties; where, therefore, the circumstances of the case clearly show that the parties intended otherwise, the courts of this country will not apply the law of the country where the contract was made in construing the contract.

Action in the Commercial Court tried without a jury.

The plaintiffs' claim was for a total loss under a policy of reinsurance.

By a policy dated the 20th of October, 1898, and subscribed by Gray, Dawes, & Co., underwriters, the steamship Merrimac was insured for £4,200 "for and during the space of twelve calendar months commencing at noon on the 18th of October, 1898, and ending at noon on the 18th of October, 1899." The policy contained at the foot the words: "Including printed clauses as attached." Attached to the policy was a printed slip headed, "Elder, Dempster, & Co. Time Clauses," and containing several clauses, one of which was as follows: "Should the vessel be at sea or abroad on the expiration of this policy, it is agreed to hold her covered until arrival at her port of final destination in the United Kingdom or on the Continent of Europe at a pro rata daily premium to the within."

(a.) Reported by F. O. ROBINSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

By a policy dated the 24th of October, 1898, Gray, Dawes, & Co. reinsured £1,050 of the risk underwritten by them with the plaintiffs for the same period as the original policy against total and constructive total loss only. The policy was expressed to be "a reinsurance of Gray, Dawes, & Co.'s, underwriters, subject to terms, pro rata returns, continuation, valuation, clauses, and conditions of the original policy or policies, and to pay as may be paid thereon."

The plaintiffs reinsured with the defendants, a Swedish company, £750 of the £1,050 reinsured by them. The policy was expressed to be "a reinsurance to the Royal Exchange Assurance Corporation," and contained the following clause impressed from a rubber stamp: "Subject to the same clauses, terms, conditions, continuations, &c., that do or shall attach to the original policy and/or policies, and to pay and/or receive as may be paid and/or received thereon, anything herein to the contrary notwithstanding. All claims and/or losses payable in London. In the event of claim the Vega Co. agree and undertake to pay upon the claim note of the Royal Exchange Assurance Corporation stating such claim to have already been settled by same. In case of any dispute under this policy the Vega Co. agree to be bound in all things by the jurisdiction and decision of the English Law Courts." Written in the margin were the words: "Continuation clause as per original policy." The policy was for the same period as the original policy and was against total loss and/or constructive total loss only.

During the currency of the policies The Merrimac sustained heavy damage and put into Quebec for temporary repairs, the intention being to bring the vessel home to be permanently repaired. She sailed from Quebec on the 25th of October, 1899, and in the course of the voyage home was totally lost.

The policy sued upon was not stamped, but the plaintiffs were prepared to pay the necessary penalty if the policy was one which could legally be stamped after execution.

The Stamp Act, 1891, s. 92 (1): For the purposes of this Act the expression "policy of sea insurance" means any insurance (including reinsurance) made upon any ship or vessel. . . .

Section 93 (1): A contract for sea insurance . . . shall not be valid unless the same is expressed in a policy of sea insurance; (2) No policy of sea insurance made for time shall be made for any time exceeding twelve months; (3) A policy of sea insurance shall not be valid unless it specifies the particular risk or adventure, the names of the subscribers or underwriters, and the sum or sums insured, and is made for a period not exceeding twelve months.

Section 94: Where any sea insurance is made for a voyage and also for time . . . the policy is to be charged with duty as a policy for a voyage, and also with duty as a policy for time.

Joseph Walton, K.C., and A. H. Chaytor, for the plaintiffs.—There are two questions to be considered. First, whether the provisions of the Stamp Act apply to the policy sued on, it being a contract made in Sweden. Secondly, assuming that the Stamp Act does apply, is the policy one which can be stamped after execution upon payment of the penalty provided by the Act? With regard to the first question, it is submitted that so far as relates to the mere form of the contract, as distinguished from its construction, it must be governed by the law of Sweden; and if it is valid in form according to Swedish law, which it is, it can be enforced in this country although the requirements of the Stamp Act as to contracts of sea insurance may not have been complied with. The Stamp Act, unlike the Statute of Frauds, which is a statute of procedure (see Leroux v. Brown, 1 W. R. 22, 12 C. B. 801), by section 93, affects in terms the validity of the contract. That section cannot apply to a Swedish contract: Bristow v. Sequeville, 5 Exch. 275; Gueprate v. Young, 4 De G. & Sm. 217; Branley v. South-Eastern Railway Co., 12 C. B. N. S. 63, 10 W. R. C. L. Dig. 75. The next question is whether the policy is one which can be stamped or whether the effect of the continuation clause in the original policy, which is incorporated into the policy sued on, is to render the policy invalid on the ground that it is a time policy for a period exceeding twelve months. The policy may be regarded as both a policy for time, i.e., twelve months, and a policy for voyage, the termini of the voyage being the place where the ship is at noon on the 18th of October, 1899, and the port of final destination. So regarded the policy comes within section 94. Or the document may be treated as containing two separate policies for time. The law does not prohibit the making of several contracts for sea insurance together covering more than twelve months. It only says that each contract must be "expressed in a policy." The continuation clause itself constitutes a contract, and it is expressed in a "policy." It is immaterial that there is another contract written on the same piece of paper.

Scrutton, K.C., and T. Mathew, for the defendants, took no part in the argument.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 15.—BIGHAM, J.—The only question which I have to deal with in this case is as to the admissibility in evidence of the policy sued on. The facts so far as material to this question are that by a policy effected on the 20th of October, 1898, and subscribed by Gray, Dawes, & Co., underwriters, a ship called The Merrimac was insured for the space of twelve calendar months, commencing at noon, the 18th of October, 1898, and ending at noon, the 18th of October, 1899. The policy was on an ordinary Lloyd's form, and it contains at the bottom in writing the words "including printed clauses as attached." Attached to the policy was a printed slip headed "Elder, Dempster, & Co. Time Clauses." One of those clauses, number 7, is as follows: "Should the vessel be at sea or abroad on the expiration of this policy, it is agreed to hold her covered until arrival at her port of final destination in the United Kingdom or on the Continent of Europe at a pro rata daily premium to the within." The amount of the policy was £4,200. That is a policy which is clearly an English contract and one governed exclusively by English law. Subsequently the plaintiffs reinsured for Gray, Dawes, & Co. a part of that risk—namely, £1,050. That reinsurance purported on the face of policy to be "a reinsurance of Gray, Dawes, & Co.'s, underwriters, subject to terms, continuation, valuation, clauses, and conditions of the original policy or policies and to pay as may be paid thereon." That policy was also on an ordinary Lloyd's form, and is an English contract governed exclusively by English law. These two policies being in existence, the plaintiffs effected a third policy reinsuring with the defendants a part of the risk, £750, which they had already reinsured. The defendants are a foreign company with a head office in Sweden, and are a corporation constituted according to Swedish law. Their business is to insure marine risks. They have an agent in London who solicits business, and who, having obtained offers of business, submits them to the defendants in Stockholm, and the defendants accept or reject the business as they think fit. In the former case they issue a policy. In the present case the agent in London submitted to the defendants the reinsurance of the plaintiffs. The defendants accepted it, and issued the policy now sued on. This policy was also on a form which, for all practical purposes, is the same as a Lloyd's policy. The reinsurance was for the same period as the original policy, and in the margin there were written the words, "Continuation clause as per original policy." The policy also contains the following memorandum which is not to be found in the other policies. [His lordship read the clause set out above.] The document was executed according to the law of Sweden by the defendants. When the twelve months expired The Merrimac was in Quebec. She was said to have been seriously damaged. Her owner decided to have her brought home under temporary repairs. She sailed from Quebec after the twelve months had expired, and was lost on the voyage. The defendants were of opinion that they were not bound by their policy to undertake the risk involved in bringing the ship home in that condition, and therefore they defended this action.

The plaintiffs at the trial tendered in evidence the policy effected with the defendants. It is not stamped, and the question to be decided is whether it ought to be admitted in evidence, and, if so, on what terms as to penalty or otherwise. The Stamp Act, 1891, by section 14, provides that a judge shall take note of any omission or insufficiency of the stamp on any instrument chargeable with duty, if produced as evidence; and if the instrument is one which may be legally stamped after execution, then, on payment of the duty and of the penalty, it can be received in evidence. Sub-section 4 of that section provides that, save as aforesaid, an instrument executed in the United Kingdom, or relating, wheresoever executed, to any matter or thing done or to be done in the United Kingdom, shall not be given in evidence, except in criminal cases. Those provisions are general provisions, applicable to all documents. Then there are certain provisions relating exclusively to documents of sea insurance. By section 92 the expression "policy of sea insurance," for the purposes of the Act, means, inter alia, "any insurance (including reinsurance) upon any ship or vessel." Section 93 is as follows: "(1) A contract for sea insurance shall not be valid unless the same is expressed in a policy of sea insurance. (2) No policy of sea insurance made for time shall be made for any time exceeding twelve months. (3) A policy of sea insurance shall not be valid unless it specifies the particular risk or adventure, the names of the subscribers or underwriters, and the sum or sums insured, and is made for a period not exceeding twelve months." The words "if it be a time policy" must be read into the section before the words "is made for a period, &c." It is, therefore, perfectly clear that a policy made for more than twelve months is not valid.

The first question is whether the policy sued upon is a policy for more than twelve months. I am of opinion that it is a policy for more than twelve months. It is true that the risk might possibly not continue beyond the twelve months, because the vessel might be in a home port at the expiration of that period. But the mere fact that the risk would only extend beyond the twelve months in certain events does not prevent the policy from being one for more than twelve months. It was suggested that the document might be regarded as a contract for two insurances, one for twelve months and one for a voyage, and that on payment of the penalty mentioned in section 95 of the Act the document was admissible in evidence to prove an insurance of the vessel on a voyage from Quebec to the United Kingdom. In my opinion that contention is not sound, for if it were there would be in the same policy two contracts—one, a time policy, to which no implied warranty of seaworthiness attaches; the other, a voyage policy, to which such a warranty does attach. Moreover, the voyage is not specified; its termini are not mentioned. There is, therefore, no specification of the risk insured within the meaning of section 93, sub-section 3. It is clear that a voyage policy which does not specify the termini of the voyage is not a valid policy. The risk must be defined in the policy. If it is a voyage policy, the commencement and end of the voyage must be stated, though it is not necessary to specify the particular route to be taken, nor the ports of call. So in the case of a time policy the date of the commencement and of the end of the risk must be given. For these reasons I am of opinion that the document cannot be regarded as containing two insurances, one for time and one for a voyage. Nor can it be regarded as two separate policies for time—that is to say, one for twelve months and another for an indeterminate time commencing at the end of the twelve months and finishing no one knows when. It is one contract for more than twelve months, and, therefore, invalid within the meaning of the statute. I do not decide that it is not a good policy for twelve months. If a loss had occurred within the twelve months the policy could probably, on payment of the penalty, have been given in evidence against the defendants. It would in such a case have been competent for the court to reject the continuation clause altogether, as being a separate part of the contract which was not good in law. I agree with what was said by Willes, J., in Pickering v. Ilfracombe Railway Co., 16 W. R. 458, L. R. 3 C. P. 235, at p. 250: "Where you cannot sever the illegal from the legal part of a covenant the contract is altogether void; but where you can sever them, whether the illegality be created by statute or by the common law, you may reject the bad part and retain the good." It is not necessary to decide the point in this case, but I think that this policy was a good policy for twelve months, though not for longer.

Then it was said that, even if the policy is invalid according to the English law, it is nevertheless admissible in evidence because it ought to be construed by Swedish law. No doubt the rule is that the law applicable to the construction of a contract is the law of the country where the contract was made, but that is only because in the absence of anything to the contrary the court assumes that such was the intention of the parties. If it clearly appears from other circumstances that the parties intended otherwise, the courts of this country do not apply the law of the country where the contract was made. The law on this point was fully dealt with in In re Missouri Steamship Co., 37 W. R. 696, 42 Ch. D. 321, which is an authority for the proposition which I have just laid down. Here the circumstances show an intention that the contract shall be governed by English, not Swedish, law. It is a reinsurance of a reinsurance of an original insurance effected in England, and although executed in Sweden it was in every business sense made in London. It is drawn up on a form similar to Lloyd's form, and it contains a clause that all claims and losses are payable in London, showing that the contract is to be performed in this country, and the defendants agree to be bound in all things by the jurisdiction and decision of the English courts. In the face of these facts there can be no doubt that the parties intended that the contract should be construed and dealt with as an English contract. But, even assuming that the contract ought to be interpreted with reference to the law of Sweden, in my opinion it cannot be admitted in evidence. The statute makes the contract invalid. That does not mean that it is illegal or immoral. It means no more than that it cannot be put in suit. The document is shut out because it would be contrary to our procedure to admit it: see Leroux v. Brown. The policy cannot be stamped at all, and cannot be admitted in evidence. The plaintiffs, therefore, cannot make out their case. It is only right to mention that the point was not taken by the defendants; they did not desire to take it, nor did they argue it.

Judgment for the defendants.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Hollams, Sons, Coward, & Hawksley.

Solicitors for the defendants, Waltons, Johnson Bubb, & Whatton.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Lawrance and Phillimore, JJ.) } May 14; June 13, 1901.

POLL (Appellant) v. DAMBE (Respondent). (a.)

Ship—Seaman—Merchant Shipping Acts—Offences—Persuading seaman to desert from foreign ship—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 236, sub-section 1.

By section 236, sub-section 1, of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, it is provided that "if a person by any means whatsoever persuades, or attempts to persuade, a seaman or apprentice to neglect or refuse to join or proceed to sea in or to desert from his ship or otherwise to absent himself from his duty, he shall for each offence in respect of each seaman or apprentice be liable to a fine not exceeding ten pounds."

Held, that the above sub-section applies only to British ships, and does not make it an offence to persuade a seaman to desert from a foreign ship.

This was a case stated by the stipendiary magistrate for the county borough of Cardiff.

At a petty sessions at Cardiff an information was preferred by Auguste Dambe, the respondent, under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), against George Poll, the appellant, for that he on the 25th of December, 1900, did unlawfully persuade a seaman, named Johannes Pilder, to desert from his ship, called The Lennox.

The information was heard on the 4th of January, 1901, when the magistrate convicted the appellant.

Upon the hearing of the information the following facts were proved:

The respondent was the master of the Russian ship Lennox, which at the time alleged in the information was lying at the West Dock at Cardiff. The said ship was not registered or owned in the United Kingdom, and was not a British ship, but a foreign ship.

On the 25th of December, 1900, Johannes Pilder, who was then a foreign seaman lawfully engaged on The Lennox, met the appellant Poll, a boarding master living at Cardiff. At this interview the appellant persuaded Pilder to desert from The Lennox and to join another ship, where he would receive better wages.

Pilder did then desert from The Lennox, and on the following day was taken to the railway station at Cardiff by the appellant, who, after providing him with a ticket, saw him leave the station in a train for Bristol in the company of five other sailors and an agent of the appellant.

Pilder was subsequently, on the 1st of January, 1901, arrested on a warrant as a deserter from The Lennox.

On the part of the appellant it was contended that the learned magistrate had no jurisdiction to hear and determine the case, the offence being charged in respect of a foreign seaman engaged on a foreign ship, and by sections 260 and 261 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, Part II. of the Act (under which head the section creating the offence is classed) is restricted in its application to those ships mentioned therein—viz., sea-going ships registered in the United Kingdom, and sea-going British ships registered out of the United Kingdom. That the words "his ship" contained in section 236 are not general so as to make the section applicable to a foreign ship, and for this reason the case was not governed by Reg. v. Stewart, 47 W. R. 445, [1899] 1 Q. B. 964, which was decided on section 111, a section prohibiting crimping. That in order to make section 236 applicable to the ship Lennox the Russian Government should have availed itself of the provisions of section 734 of the Act.

On the part of the respondent it was contended that section 236 applies to foreign ships, that the words "his ship" in that section are as the words "any ship in the United Kingdom" in section 111, and that as both sections are classified under Part II. of the Act the case was governed by Reg. v. Stewart.

The learned magistrate was of opinion that the contention of the respondent was right, and convicted the appellant.

The question for the opinion of the court was whether upon the above statement of facts the magistrate came to a correct determination and decision in point of law.

Bailhache, for the appellant.

H. Sutton, for the respondent.

The arguments fully appear in the written judgment of the court.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 13.—The judgment of the court was read by PHILLIMORE, J.—This is a case stated by the stipendiary magistrate for Cardiff, and upon it we have to determine whether it is an offence under the Merchant Shipping Act of 1894 to persuade in England a foreign seaman to desert from a foreign ship while such ship is lying in an English port. The language of section 236, sub-section 1, is as follows: "If a person by any means whatever persuades or attempts to persuade a seaman or apprentice to neglect or refuse to join or proceed to sea in or to desert from his ship, or otherwise to absent himself from his duty, he shall for each offence in respect of each seaman or apprentice be liable to a fine not exceeding £10." By section 742 "seaman" includes every person (except masters, pilots, and apprentices, duly indentured and registered) employed or engaged in any capacity on board any ship. The language of the Act is thus wide enough to cover this case; but it is contended on behalf of the appellant that Part II. of the Merchant Shipping Act, in which this section is found, applies only (except in certain specified places) to British ships, and the word "ship" in section 236 must be read as meaning British ship. Section 236, making it criminal to persuade desertion, may be looked upon as supplementary to the earlier sections, which make desertion itself punishable. They are sections 221 to 224, both inclusive, and section 238. Sections 221 to 224 are in equally general terms, and they follow upon section 220, which contains express words limiting its own application to the crews of British ships; there is, therefore, some ground for supposing that sections 221 to 224 were not intended to be so limited. The sections as to the application of Part II. are sections 260 to 266, both inclusive. By section 260 this part "shall, unless the context or subject-matter requires a different application, apply to all sea-going ships registered in the United Kingdom, and to the owners, masters, and crews of such ships," with certain qualifications as to lighthouse vessels, yachts, and fishing boats, which are dealt with in sections 262 and 263. By section 261 this part shall, unless as aforesaid, apply to all sea-going British ships registered out of the United Kingdom, and their owners, masters, and crews in respect of certain specified matters, one of which is discipline. It will be important to note that this specification of details occurs only in the sections which deal with British ships registered out of the United Kingdom, and that there is the same arrangement in section 109 of the Act of 1854, which in substance corresponds with the two sections 260 and 261 of the Act of 1894. This is not unimportant in view of some observations of Blackburn, J., in the case of Leary v. Lloyd, 3 E. & E. 178, 9 W. R. C. L. Dig. 82. Section 264 enables colonial Legislatures to adopt any provisions of this part which do not otherwise apply, and section 265 provides for the case of an apparent conflict of laws "in any matter relating to a ship or to a person belonging to a ship." This section would meet the case of a conflict between the laws of different parts of his Majesty's dominions; but it might have a wider application in the case of any sections of Part II. of the Act which apply to foreign ships. Section 266 is not material to this case. It is clear, therefore, that as a general rule this part of the Act is not to apply to foreign ships—that is to say, it is not to be enforced against foreign ships, or owners of foreign ships, or persons on board foreign ships, or as to matters done or to be done on foreign ships. But it does not, therefore, necessarily follow that it does not apply to persons who have deserted from foreign ships or to English subjects who in England have abetted such desertion. A formidable argument, however, against the application of the section as to desertion to deserters from foreign ships is derived from section 238. By this section, where it appears to the Crown "that due facilities are or will be given by the Government of any foreign country for recovering and apprehending seamen who desert from British merchant ships in that country," the Crown may by Order in Council direct that this section shall apply, and where it applies and a seaman deserts when within any of the King's dominions from a merchant ship belonging to a subject of that country, "any court, justice, or officer that would have had cognizance of the matter if the seaman had deserted from a British ship shall, on application of a consular officer of a foreign country, aid in apprehending the deserter," and may "order him to be conveyed on board his ship or delivered to the master. . . ." It is said that it is only under this section that deserters from foreign ships can be dealt with by an English court, and also that this section would be unnecessary if the general provisions of sections 221 to 224 applied to foreign as well as British ships. The third sub-section of section 238 inflicts a penalty for harbouring or secreting a deserter who is liable to be apprehended under this section. This is said to overlap the second sub-section of section 236. There is no sub-section in section 238 corresponding with sub-section 1 of section 236, under which the information in the present case was laid. The weight of this argument is to a certain extent lessened by the consideration that the Act of 1894 is a consolidating Act and includes, not only the Act of 1854, but several other Acts. Section 238 is a re-enactment of the Foreign Desertion Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 26), an earlier Act than the Act of 1854. It may well be that the Act of 1854 did make that of general application which had only limited application by the Act of 1852; and in some respects the special provisions of the Act of 1852, as reproduced in section 238, are different from the general provisions in the Act of 1894. Still, in our opinion, having regard to terms of section 221, the general sections as to deserters, 221 to 224, do not apply to cases which come, or may come by the operation of an Order in Council, under section 238. The procedure is different; the seaman to whom section 222 applies is to be conveyed on board his ship, not by warrant of the court, but by the master or certain other persons, with or without the assistance of a police-constable, and may require to be taken before a court to be dealt with according to law. More complicated provisions are applied to cases under section 223. But under section 238 there is to be a warrant under which the man is to be conveyed on board his ship and when the warrant has been issued the seaman apparently has no direct right to have recourse to the court which issued it. The penalty for harbouring is different, and in section 238 there is a significant proviso to which we have not yet referred excepting the case of a seaman who is a slave. There is no such proviso in sections 221 to 224. We therefore come to the conclusion that sections 221 to 224 apply only to British ships, and that the offence of desertion from a foreign ship is punishable only under section 238 and when that section has been applied by Order in Council. Similarly, we must hold that the offence of harbouring a deserter from a foreign ship comes, if at all, under sub-section 2 of section 238, and does not come under sub-section 2 of section 236. Holding this, can we hold that sub-section 1 of 236 applies in respect of foreign ships? We think it is impossible so to hold. The words "seaman" and "ship" in sub-section 1 must have the same limited meaning as the same words in sub-section 2. This view is in accordance with the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench in the year 1860 in the case of Leary v. Lloyd, 3 E. & E. 178, upon the parallel section (257) of the Act of 1854. We have, however, not held ourselves concluded by that decision, but have reconsidered the matter upon the following grounds: First, that case was only argued on one side; secondly, Blackburn, J., who delivered the judgment of the court, seems to have thought that there was something special in the section about discipline limiting this application, though possibly not the application of the other section in the other part of that Act, to British ships, and we think this is not so; thirdly, we think the case of The Milford, 6 W. R. 554, Swa. 362, was not brought to the notice of the court. Now the case of The Milford is certainly an authority for not restricting Part III. of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, to British ships. Dr. Lushington, in dealing with the argument that the 109th section of the Act of 1854 restrained the application of section 191, says: "The language then used, however, is affirmative, stating the cases to which the third part of the Act shall extend; there are no negative words which extend to show that the court should not apply section 191 to foreign masters and seamen." This observation is perfectly general, and the authority of Dr. Lushington on shipping Acts was so high that it is unfortunate that The Milford case was not brought before the Court of Queen's Bench before it decided Leary v. Lloyd. It should be added that the law as decided in the Milford case has been accepted ever since, and that the remedies given were, and those of the corresponding section (section 167, sub-section 1) of the Act of 1894, always are afforded in proper cases to masters of foreign ships. On the other hand it may be said that Dr. Lushington's judgment may well be supported on other grounds, and that he relied upon other grounds as well. The decision may rest upon the ordinary rule as to the application of the lex fori. Again, the effect of section 191 was to enable the master to sue in the Admiralty Court and thereby to obtain process in rem against the ship. By the ordinary maritime law as administered in other countries he had this right always, just as a seaman had. The English law had been exceptional in denying him this remedy and in denying it to him because of a point of internal jurisdiction. When section 191 brought the maritime law of this country into line with that of other countries it would have been absurd that the anomaly thus removed for municipal cases should have been left for foreign ones. These considerations certainly effect the weight of The Milford as an authority in the present case. On the other hand, the cases of Cope v. Doherty, 6 W. R. 695, 2 De G. & J. 614, and the class of cases represented by The Zolverein, 4 W. R. 555, Swa. 96, show that there were other parts of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, which our courts have declined to hold to be applicable to foreign ships. We do not, however, decide this case upon the ground that no sections in Part II. of the Act of 1894 apply to foreign ships. We agree with our brethren Darling and Channell in the case of Reg. v. Stewart that there may be acts done in relation to foreign ships which when done by English subjects in England come as much under the penal provision of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, as if they were done in relation to English ships. We think that the case they had to deal with was one of such cases. We ground our decision upon the fact that this part of the Act (Part II.) contains a special provision for the case of desertion from foreign ships, and has thus shown that its general provisions are limited to desertion from British ships. We hold, therefore, the appellant was not liable to conviction under section 236 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and that the appeal must be allowed with costs.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Riddell & Co., for J. H. Jones, Cardiff.

Solicitor for the respondent, Hier Jacob, for H. M. Rees, Cardiff.

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. Admiralty. } July 29, 1901.

"THE VERITAS." (a.)

Admiralty—Salvage—Subsequent damage—Maritime liens—Priority of claims.

Maritime liens are either liens arising ex delicto or liens arising ex contractu or quasi ex contractu. Liens arising ex delicto take precedence over prior liens arising ex contractu. Liens arising ex contractu must, in general, rank in the inverse order of the attachment of the res. The right of salvage may, but does not necessarily, arise out of contract. Salvors, from the time of rendering salvage services, are practically in the same relative position as a creditor who has obtained a lien strictly ex contractu, but while taking precedence over prior claims ex contractu and prior salvages, yet their claims ought to be postponed to subsequent damage claims, and even if the damage may not have given rise to a maritime lien, but only to a right to proceed in rem, nevertheless that right is enforceable in priority to salvage claims and for all practical purposes in cases where damage comes last the position of the injured party, so far as regards claims arising prior to the damage, is much the same whether one has a lien or only a right of process. Moreover, the right to arrest a ship to obtain reparation for damage done by her is not affected by prior claims against her from hypothecation which create interests in her along with those of her owners. A salvage claim is but, as it were, a hypothecation to secure the reward to the salvors for services rendered, and that reward ought not to be recovered against the res to the detriment of a claimant in respect of subsequent damage.

The facts and arguments arising in this case sufficiently appear from the judgment set out herewith.

Carver, K.C., and Batten appeared for the owners, master, and crew of the steam tugs Prairie Cock and Sea Cock.

Aspinall, K.C., and Maurice Hill, for the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board.

Bailhache and W. S. Glynn, for the owners, master, and crew of The Caledonian.

BARNES, J., in delivering a considered judgment, said: There are three motions in this case for payment out of court of certain sums out of the proceeds of the Norwegian steamship Veritas, which amount to £927 5s. 2d., now in court. The motions are made in these circumstances. In October last year The Veritas, laden with a cargo of ice for Liverpool, was in distress outside the Mersey, and salvage services were rendered to her by the steamship Caledonian by which she was brought into and anchored in the Mersey. The services of the tug Prairie Cock were then engaged, and while that tug was being made fast to The Veritas a collision occurred between The Veritas and the steamship Devonian, in consequence of which The Veritas began to fill, and salvage services were rendered to her by the tugs Prairie Cock and Sea Cock, with the result that she was brought to a place alongside the dock wall to the south of the Liverpool landing-stage. From this place she drifted against the said stage, doing damage to the boom and other connections of the stage, and sank, and her cargo of ice perished. She was removed by the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board under the powers conferred upon them by the 11th section of their Act of 1874. The board had also the right to detain her in respect of the said damage under the 94th section of their Act of 1858. On the 15th of October an action was instituted in this court by the owners, masters, and crews of the said tugs against The Veritas in respect of the salvage services rendered by them, and on the same day she was arrested in the said suit. The board intervened in that suit, and on the 19th of October an order was made by consent for the release of The Veritas, the interveners undertaking to furnish the plaintiffs with an account of receipts and expenditure in dealing with the wreck under their statutory powers and to lodge the overplus in court to the credit of the action, to abide further order, without prejudice to liens, rights, or priorities of any claimants on The Veritas or proceeds of sale. The vessel was accordingly released, and afterwards sold on the 23rd of October by the board, and, after deducting the expenses of the board, the net proceeds amounted to the sum of £927 5s. 2d., which was brought into court to the credit of the said action. On the 23rd of November an action was instituted in this court against the proceeds of The Veritas by the owners, master, and crew of The Caledonian in respect of the salvage services rendered by them, and on the 7th of December a caveat against the payment out of court of the said proceeds was entered in the first action on behalf of the last plaintiffs, who afterwards intervened in the first action, though not until after judgment was obtained in it. On the 14th of January, 1901, judgment was obtained by the plaintiffs in the action in respect of the salvage by The Prairie Cock and Sea Cock in the sum of £320 and costs, without prejudice to claims on the fund in court, and reserving all questions of priorities. On the 29th of April, 1901, judgment was given for the plaintiffs in the action in respect of the salvage by The Caledonian for £400 and costs, all questions of priorities being reserved. On the 8th of February, 1901, an action was instituted in this court by the said board against the said proceeds in respect of the damage done to the said stage, in which the plaintiffs in the two salvage actions intervened, and on the 1st of July, 1901, judgment was given for the plaintiffs for £600 and costs, all questions of priorities being reserved. The owners of The Prairie Cock and Sea Cock appeared at the hearing. By their defence as interveners they had raised, inter alia, the question of whether or not the damage sustained by the board was due to the negligence of those on board The Veritas, and the judgment appears to have proceeded on the ground of such negligence being found by the court, and no point was raised before me that this was not so. [His lordship then read the terms of the formal judgment in the board's action, and proceeded:] It is to be observed that all these judgments were conditional, and as the funds are still in court the claims have to be dealt with on their respective rights to priority: see The Africano, 42 W. R. 413, [1894] P. 141. A collision action was also tried between The Devonian and The Veritas, in which The Devonian was, on the 7th of February, 1901, held to blame for a bad lookout, and The Veritas also to blame on the ground that the tug Prairie Cock, while alongside of her, was exhibiting only underway lights and had not a second masthead light for towing: see the report of the case, 49 W. R. 665, [1901] P. 221. The board claims to have a maritime lien on the said proceeds for their damage and to take priority over the salvors. This claim is disputed by both of the salvors. The Prairie Cock and Sea Cock claim to have priority over the damage claim and over the claim of the prior salvors. The first salvors claim to have precedence over the second, and dispute the right of the second to claim salvage in the circumstances. These rival claims give rise to some questions of general importance and considerable difficulty, which were very well argued by counsel before me. The first question to determine is with regard to the claim of the board. It was first urged by the salvors that the board had waived any right against The Veritas and the proceeds by selling The Veritas under the powers conferred by the said Acts. This point was principally made by The Prairie Cock and Sea Cock, who were parties to the said consent order, though the owners of The Veritas and The Caledonian were not. The answer to the point appears to be that the board have recovered judgment against the said proceeds in their action to which both sets of salvors had become parties by intervening, and that the judgment is binding and conclusive, at any rate so far as it establishes a right on the part of the board to proceed for their damage against the said proceeds: see Ballantine v. Mackinnon, [1896] 2 Q. B. 455, as to the effect of such a judgment. Every possible point appears to have been raised in the defence put in on behalf of the tugs, but in their rejoinder these interveners withdrew their defence except as to the question of priorities, and stated that they were willing that the board should have judgment for £600 against the said proceeds. The judgment reserved the question of priorities. Further, as showing that the board had not waived any right it may have to proceed against the fund, it is to be observed that in selling under the powers aforesaid the board do not extinguish the claimants' claims altogether against the proceeds, but hold the same subject to such rights as could be enforced against the res. By the said 11th section of the Act of 1874 they are to render the overplus (if any) to the person or persons entitled to the same. This sale would not affect such rights as the salvors have against the proceeds, and there seems to me to be nothing inconsistent in the board also being allowed to enforce by proceedings against the proceeds any rights which they may have in respect of damage done by The Veritas to their property, and, although they had an option to detain the wreck until their damage was paid or a deposit made for the same, that appears to be only an additional right, and if not exercised that does not prevent the board from enforcing by action any claim they may have to recover for the damage done to the stage and its connections. The case of Barraclough v. Brown, 8 Asp. M. L. Cas. 290, 46 W. R. Dig. 64, which was cited, does not apply in my opinion. That case was dealing with a liability only imposed by the Act referred to in the case. The second point raised by the salvors was that the board had not a maritime lien for their damage. That the board had a right to proceed in rem under the 7th section of the Admiralty Court Act, 1861, is clear, and the judgment in favour of the board was no doubt under this section: see The Beta, 6 Moore P. C. N. S. 56; The Uhla, L. R. 2 A. & E. 29*n*; The Sylph, L. R. 2 A. & E., p. 24, 16 W. R. Adm. Dig. 17; The Malvina, Lush. 493, 10 W. R. Adm. Dig. 28; The Merle, 2 Asp. M. L. Cas. 402, 23 W. R. Dig. 216, so far as it deals with the said section and the judgments in The Zeta, [1893] A. C., p. 485. The judgment in favour of the board must at least have proceeded on this ground, though it would not necessarily proceed on the ground that there was a maritime lien for damage. It was argued by counsel for the salvors that although the board might have a right to proceed in rem, yet they had no maritime lien for the damage. As the damage came last in this case, it is very questionable if it matters whether the board had a maritime lien or not, because, the board having a right to proceed in rem for their damage, the question rather is whether the salvors' claims are to have precedence of the right of the board to enforce payment of the damage done by The Veritas. I deal with the salvors' rights later on. However that may be, in my opinion if it be material to decide the point (the case was argued as if it were), as the law now stands the board had a maritime lien for the damage. The question is one upon which a great deal of argument may be expended, but the ground is now mostly covered by authority. Is was decided in The Bold Buccleugh, 7 Moore P. C. 267, that a maritime lien arises in the case of damage done by one ship to another in favour of the injured party. [His lordship then read passages from the judgment delivered by Sir John Jervis in that case, and continued:] That the reasoning in that case is not strictly correct is shown by more recent decisions where it has been held that there may be rights to proceed in rem without a maritime lien—e.g., The Heinrich Bjorn, 11 App. Cas. 270, 34 W. R. Dig. 179, where it was held that there is no lien on a foreign ship under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 6, for necessaries; The Two Ellens, 20 W. R. 592, L. R. 4 P. C. 161, no lien for necessaries under section 5 of the Act of 1861; Westrup v. Great Yarmouth Steam Carrying Co. (Limited), 38 W. R. 505, 61 L. T. Rep. 714, no lien for towage. In all these cases a proceeding in rem lies. [His lordship then read a passage from p. 143 of Dr. Brown's work on Civil Law, published in 1802, and continued:] I do not know of any English case earlier than The Bold Buccleugh, in which the doctrine that collision gives rise to a lien is to be found: see the notes collected by Mr. Marsden at p. 187 of the fourth edition of his work on Collisions at Sea. The growth of the idea of maritime lien is also referred to in the President's judgment in The Dictator, [1892] P. 304, 41 W. R. Dig. 4. The decision in The Bold Buccleugh has, however, whether righty founded or not, been now acted on for fifty years, and in the case of Currie v. McKnight, [1897] A. C. 97, at p. 105, 45 W. R. Dig. 153, Lord Watson made the following remarks. [His lordship then read the passage from Lord Watson's judgment, and continued:] So far these observations relate to damage in collisions between ships, but the principle seems to be substantially the same so far as regards damage done by a ship which if done on the high seas would formerly have been within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty Court—see The Sara, 14 App. Cas. 209, 37 W. R. Dig. 167, and Lord Herschell's judgment in The Zeta, where after examining the cases he came to the conclusion that it is impossible to maintain the proposition that the word "damage" was, according to the well-understood meaning of the phrase in the Admiralty Court, confined to damage due to collision between two ships. Under the 7th section of the Act of 1861 the court has jurisdiction over any claim for damage done by any ship, and therefore, has jurisdiction over this claim by the board, even if it be said that the damage in question was not done on the high seas. Some of the cases I have already referred to above are in point. In my opinion, it follows from the decision in The Bold Buccleugh that there is a maritime lien for this kind of damage if it had occurred on the high seas, and it seems to follow that it was intended the law should be the same as to damage done by a ship elsewhere, and, therefore, whether the damage in question was done in the body of a county or not is immaterial, and I need not enter into that question. This is the manner in which the 6th section of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, has been regarded so far as damage received by a ship in the body of a county is concerned: see The Bold Buccleugh, where the collision occurred in the River Humber; the judgment of Lord Bramwell in The Heinrich Bjorn, 11 App. Cas., at p. 282; and the judgment of Lord Halsbury in The Sara, 14 App. Cas., at p. 216. It is not, in my opinion, inconsistent with these views that, while there is a lien on a ship for the damage done by her, there may be no lien in favour of an injured ship in cases like The Zeta, where the reasons which have led to the recognition of a lien on a ship are not applicable. The next and, in my opinion, the real question in the case is whether the claim of the board has precedence over the prior lien of the salvors. That salvors have a lien was not disputed. In the cases for a very long time past when a lien for salvage is spoken of it is always treated as if there was no question but that there is a maritime lien for salvage. It is probably natural that the idea of this lien should have developed more readily than that of a lien for damage. There is no reported case so far as I am aware in which the question has been raised and considered whether a lien for damage takes precedence of a prior lien for salvage or not. There is, however, the passage from Lord Watson's judgment in Currie v. McKnight which I have quoted above. It is possible that Lord Watson had not fully considered this point, but his judgments are always so full of learning and care that I do not think he would have expressed himself in these terms if he had felt any doubt about the matter. All the text writers to whose works I have been referred give the precedence to the claim for damage: see Williams and Bruce (2nd ed.), p. 80; Maude and Pollock's Merchant Shipping, by Baron Pollock and Bruce, J., (4th ed.), p. 619; Maclachlan on Merchant Shipping (6th ed.), pp. 740, 741; Coote's Admiralty Practice, 1868, p. 138; Abbott on Shipping (13th ed.), p. 871, by Bucknill, J., and Mr. Langley; and Admiralty Jurisdiction and Practice in County Courts, by Dr. Raikes and Mr. Kilburn, p. 123. I have referred to several American text-books, but cannot find any discussion of the point in them. In some of the works I have mentioned the following cases are cited: The Aline, 1 W. Rob. 111; The Benares, 7 Notes of Cases Supplement, 50; Cargo ex Galam, B. & L. 181; Attorney-General v. Norstedt, 3 Price 137, but none of these cases appear to me to be in point on the proposition in question for which they are cited. There is therefore this consensus of English text writers, and no case to be found in which damage has ever been postponed to prior salvage. It would seem clear that maritime liens may be divided into two classes—first, liens arising ex delicto, and, secondly, liens arising ex contractu or quasi ex contractu. It is almost obvious that liens of the latter class must in general rank against the fund in the inverse order of their attachment on the res. They are liens in respect of claims for services rendered, and it is reasonable that services which operate for the protection of prior interests should be privileged above those interests. Thus in the present case (subject to a point which will be dealt with hereafter) the second set of salvors are preferred to the first because the first share in the later benefit conferred on the common subject of the liens. It is also clear that liens arising ex delicto take precedence over prior liens arising ex contractu. The reasons for this are pointed out by Dr. Lushington in The Aline, 1 W. Rob. 111, at p. 118. The principal one appears to be that the person having a right of lien ex contractu becomes, so to speak, a part owner in interest with the owners of the vessel. He has chosen to enter into relationship with the vessel for his own interests, whereas a person suffering damage by the negligent navigation of a ship has no option. Reparation for wrongs done should come first; otherwise the injured party might be unable to satisfy his claim out of the res without paying off prior claims which arise in such circumstances that the claimants may be considered to have chosen to run the risk of subsequent events affecting their claims. It has even been held that the maritime lien for damage takes precedence of the lien of the seamen for wages earned by them since a collision: The Elin, 31 W. R. 736, 8 P. D. 129. It was argued before me that salvage claims were not on the footing of claims arising ex contractu, and that on grounds of public policy they should have precedence over subsequent damage claims. The right to salvage may, but does not necessarily, arise out of contract. As the late Lord Hannen said: "It is a legal liability arising out of the fact that property has been saved that the owner of the property, who has had the benefit of it, should make remuneration to those who have conferred the benefit upon him, notwithstanding that he has not entered nto any contract on the subject": The Five Steel Barges, 15 P. D. 142, at p. 146, 38 W. R. Dig. 192. To this may be added that salvage is not governed merely by a regard to benefit received, but also on grounds of public policy by a due regard to the interests of commerce and humanity. At the same time the right to proceed against the res is to obtain payment of the reward given for services rendered, and the salvors have had the option of rendering their services, and in deciding to render them are in a position to consider the risks they may run in recovering their reward, and whether or not it is advisable to render the services. From the time of rendering the services they are practically in the same relative position as a creditor who has obtained a lien strictly ex contractu, and, while taking precedence over prior claims ex contractu and prior salvages, in my opinion the considerations I have referred to show that their claims should be postponed to subsequent damage claims, and in my judgment it is in the best interests of careful navigation that this should be so. I can see no satisfactory ground on which the claims of an injured party should be postponed to the claim of one who seeks to obtain a benefit for prior services rendered to what is in this court commonly spoken of as the "wrongdoing vessel." Such principle as can be applied and general considerations are in my judgment the other way, and even if the damage in this case did not give rise to a maritime lien but only to a right to proceed in rem, it seems to me that the latter right should be enforceable in priority to the salvage claims. For all practical purposes in a case where the damage comes last the position of the injured party so far as regards claims arising prior to the damage is much the same whether he has a lien or only a right of process. I may sum up these remarks thus: There is a right to arrest a ship to obtain reparation for damage done by her which is not affected by prior claims against her arising from hypothecations, which create interests in her along with those of her owners. The right was no doubt enforced by the High Court of Admiralty before the doctrine was entertained in the case of The Bold Buccleugh that there was a maritime lien for damage, and as regards such prior claims the right aforesaid would not seem to depend on the existence of a maritime lien for damage. A salvage claim may be regarded as if there had been a hypothecation to secure the reward to the salvors for services rendered, and that reward ought not to be recovered against the res to the detriment of a claimant in respect of subsequent damage. The matter is of importance when it is not possible or convenient to proceed against the owners personally, and it would be unreasonable and inequitable to satisfy out of the res a claim for a reward for prior salvage services which the salvors elected to render in preference to a claim in respect of damage done. The last point to deal with is that relating to the claims of the salvors inter se. Unless there is something to prevent the principles aforesaid from applying the claim of the tugs is to be preferred to that of The Caledonian. But counsel for the latter vessel contended that in consequence of the decision in the case of The Devonian the claim of The Prairie Cock could not have precedence over that of The Caledonian, and that as The Sea Cock belongs to the same owners as The Prairie Cock the claims of The Sea Cock so far as her owners are concerned also could not have precedence. To succeed in this contention it was practically admitted that it must be shown that the owners of The Prairie Cock and The Sea Cock and the master and crew of the former could not recover salvage against The Veritas. But the tugs have recovered judgment for their services in their suit, the question of priorities only being reserved, and the owners, master, and crew of The Caledonian did not raise any objection in that suit to the plaintiffs therein recovering judgment. They did not intervene until after judgment, although they had previously entered a caveat against payment out of the proceeds. The judgment appears to conclude them now. The ground upon which it was sought to make out the point for The Caledonian was by applying the decision of the court in the case of the collision between The Devonian and The Veritas that The Veritas was to blame by reason of the wrong exhibition of lights on her tug, The Prairie Cock. I do not consider it necessary to examine the said decision at any length. It is sufficient to notice that there was no finding that the absence of the second masthead light in fact contributed to the collision, and unless it did the fact that The Veritas was held to blame under section 419, sub-section 4, of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, does not appear in the circumstances to make the tug guilty of negligence which caused the collision so as to deprive the tug of the right to salvage for subsequent services when the vessel was being moved with the object of beaching her. As the control rested with the pilot of The Veritas, whatever were the strict statutory obligations, it would have been rather hard, in the circumstances, to hold the tug responsible to the tow for negligence as between the tug and tow. I need not, however, go into this question any further, owing to the finding of the court being as above stated, and the fact that the judgment was recovered by the tugs without any objection by The Caledonian. The result is that, in my judgment, the claim of the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board comes first; then the claim of the tugs; and lastly that of The Caledonian; and payment out must be made accordingly.

(a.) Reported by GWYNNE HALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Solicitors, Thompson & McMaster, Liverpool, for the tugs; Rowcliffes, Rawle, & Co., for W. C. Thorne, Liverpool, for the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board; Hill, Dickinson, & Co., for The Caledonian.

Court of Appeal.

From Chan. Div.
Vaughan Williams, Romer, and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) Nov. 5.

PEPIN v. BRUYÈRE. (a.)

Conflict of laws—Domiciled foreigner—Unattested will — Leaseholds — Administration with will annexed —Lex rei sitæ—Wills Act, 1837 (1 Vict. c. 26), s. 9.

The will of a foreigner domiciled abroad, though valid according to the lex domicilii, and though admitted to probate in England, will not pass the beneficial interest of leaseholds in England unless executed in accordance with the formalities required by the Wills Act.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (48 W. R. 671, [1900] 2 Ch. 504), affirmed.

This was an appeal from a decision of Kekewich, J. (reported 48 W. R. 671, [1900] 2 Ch. 504).

The action was set down for argument on the following question of law: Whether the beneficial interest of Charles Villette, a domiciled French subject, in a leasehold house in England passed by virtue of his unattested will to the defendant Charles Larnaude, the specific legatee thereof, or whether the testator died intestate as to his beneficial interest in the said house.

For the purpose of this question the facts were agreed as follows:

Charles Villette was a French subject having his domicil of origin in France, and at the respective dates of his will and death he was domiciled in France. At those dates he was beneficially entitled to four-fifteenths of a leasehold house in Bond-street, the said four-fifteenths having been demised for a term of forty years (perpetually renewable upon the payment of a fine) to F. B. Garnett, by whom they were held in trust for Villette.

On the 15th of May, 1890, Villette made in France a holograph will in the French form and language whereby he appointed the defendant E. P. Bruyère his universal legatee upon condition that he satisfied certain legacies therein mentioned and paid the testator's debts, and among the legacies comprised in the will was a specific bequest to the defendant Lanaude of the four-fifteenths of the house in question.

The will was not attested but it was valid by the law of France. The testator died in Paris on the 24th of September, 1895.

On the 5th of February, 1897, letters of administration with the will or a translation thereof annexed of the personal estate of the testator were granted out of the Principal Registry of the Probate Division in England, to the defendant Bruyère.

The plaintiffs represented the next-of-kin.

Kekewich, J., held that the leaseholds being part of the soil of England, and therefore as much an interest in land as if they were freehold, were not disposed of by a will which did not comply with the formalities prescribed by the Wills Act, and this notwithstanding the will had been admitted to probate in England.

The specific legatee appealed.

Mackay (Warrington, K.C., with him), for the specific legatee.

P. O. Lawrence, K.C., and Jason Smith, for the next-of-kin.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., said: The question raised in this case is whether leasehold property can be treated as personalty so that the domicil of the testator will govern the disposition of the beneficial interest in such leaseholds. In my opinion the judgment of Kekewich, J., was right. Speaking for myself it does not seem to me to be necessary to go further than the case of Freke v. Lord Carbery, 21 W. R. 835, L. R. 16 Eq. 461, the head-note of which is as follows: "The validity of a testamentary disposition of an English leasehold is governed by the law of England and not by the law of the testator's domicil." The whole basis of the judgment of Lord Selborne in that case is that although a leasehold is a chattel interest for testamentary purposes it must for the purpose of disposition be treated as land and be governed by the lex loci. As I have already said I do not think it necessary to go farther than the case of Freke v. Lord Carbery, but I will call attention to the case of Duncan v. Lawson, 37 W. R. 524, 41 Ch. D. 394, which seems to cover the present case. In that case Kay, J., said: "But the lex loci governs the devolution of immobilia in case of intestacy, just as it does of freehold property . . . The executor is merely the hand to effect the distribution of personal estate. As to the persons entitled under the distribution to succeed to the undisposed-of leaseholds, the lex loci must govern or it would practically have no effect at all. The matter is more clear if you take the case of an absolute intestacy, where no executor has been appointed. As to English leaseholds the Probate Court in England would in that case be called in to appoint an administrator. No doubt such administrator would be chosen from the next-of-kin according to English law, and it would be his duty, subject to the satisfaction of the testator's debts, probate duty, and the like, to distribute the leaseholds among the persons entitled. At this stage of the proceeding the lex loci must determine, independently of the testator's domicil, to whom such distribution must be made." It is quite plain that Kay, J., in that case assumed everything that is necessary to decide the present case. The case of De Fogassieras v. Duport, 11 L. R. Ir. 123, is also almost identical with the present case. See what a strong case that was. There the will of a domiciled Frenchman was held bad because it did not follow French law, but although bad as to personalty it was held to be good as to leaseholds, because it complied with the lex loci rei sitæ. Nothing could be stronger to show that a lease is immovable property, and subject to the lex loci. Warren, J., in that case said: "How does the law stand as regards the leaseholds, the immovable personal estate in Ireland? Mr. Jarman's opinion was that this species of property was governed by the lex loci in the same manner as lands held for a freehold tenure. It appears from the note to Jarman that later text writers did not concur with Mr. Jarman. But the matter does not depend on the views of text writers, for in Freke v. Lord Carbery, Lord Selborne decided that testamentary dispositions of an English leasehold are governed by the law of England—i.e., the lex loci rei sitæ, and not by the law of the testator's domicil. In re Gentili, Ir. Rep. 9 Eq. 541, this court acted on the same principle." The decree in that case which is set out in the report, makes the point even still more clear. The appeal, therefore, fails.

ROMER and COZENS-HARDY, L.JJ., agreed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Baker & Nairne; Herbelet.

(a.) Reported by S. E. WILLIAMS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

From K. B. Div.
(A. L. Smith, M.R., and Vaughan Williams and Stirling, L.JJ.) Aug. 9, 1901.

STEAMSHIP BALMORAL CO. (LIMITED) v. MARTEN. (a.)

Insurance, Marine—General average—Policy on ship valued at £33,000—Ship found of the value of £40,000—Liability of underwriters.

The plaintiffs insured their ship Balmoral with the defendant and other underwriters, the value of the ship by agreement being put at £33,000.

During the currency of the policy The Balmoral received certain salvage services in respect of which a salvage award was made in the Admiralty Court against the ship, freight, and cargo, and certain general average expenses were also incurred.

In a salvage action the value of the ship was proved by her owners to be £40,000, and the average adjusters accepted that figure as the contributory value of the ship for the purpose also of the general average. The shipowners sought to recover from the underwriters the whole of the ship's proportion of the salvage and of the general average contribution.

Held, on appeal, affirming the decision of Bigham, J., 49 W. R. 137, [1900] 2 Q. B. 748, that the underwriters were liable only to pay thirty-three-fortieths of the £40,000, the proportion which the value in the policy bore to the actual value on which the statement had been made.

Appeal by the plaintiffs from a judgment of Bigham, J., in an action to recover a loss under a policy on the plaintiffs' ship Balmoral subscribed by the defendant and others, underwriters at Lloyd's.

The facts and arguments sufficiently appear from the considered judgments of the court.

Joseph Walton, K.C., and D. C. Leck, for the plaintiffs.

Pickford, K.C., and Scrutton, K.C., for the defendant.

The judgment of the Master of the Rolls was read by STIRLING, L.J.—In this case the plaintiffs insured their ship with the defendant for the sum of £33,000, the ship in the policy being valued at the agreed sum of £33,000. During the time covered by the policy an average loss was sustained which, taking the ship at its real value of £40,000, and not at its agreed value of £33,000, amounted to the sum of £56, and a salvage award had also to be paid by the plaintiffs, which amounted to the sum of £472, taking the ship at its real value of £40,000, and not at its agreed value of £33,000. The question is whether the plaintiffs can recover from the defendant upon this policy the whole of either of these two amounts. Bigham, J., has held that they cannot, and I think for the reason hereafter given that Bigham, J., is right. It is not denied that his judgment is in accordance with the practice in vogue in this country, when a ship is valued in a policy by agreement of the parties at less than its real value. I am aware that, if it be shown that a practice is erroneous, it is not binding upon me (Atwood v. Sellar, 27 W. R. 726, 28 W. R. 604, 4 Q. B. D. 342, 5 Q. B. D. 286, and Svendsen v. Wallace, 10 App. Cas. 404, 33 W. R. Dig. 200); and I also know that the practice in America is not the same as here. But what is it that the plaintiffs are seeking to do? They are carrying in upon a valued policy claims based not upon the agreed value between the parties of the thing insured—namely, upon a value of £33,000, but upon a value of £40,000. In my judgment, the agreed value, apart from fraud, is binding between the assured and the underwriter whenever a claim is made by the one against the other upon a valued policy, and it is not competent for the assured any more than for the underwriter to open the value agreed to in the policy. The underwriter's answer to the claim now made by the plaintiffs is this: My liability to you, by agreement between you and me, was to be based upon the ship insured being of the value of £33,000, no more and no less, and I am, therefore, not liable to pay claims based upon a value of £40,000. I think this is a good answer, and for these reasons I think the practice in existence in this country is correct, and that the judgment of Bigham, J., is right, and that this appeal should be dismissed, with costs.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—In this case the ship Balmoral was insured for £33,000, and was valued in the policy at the same sum. During the currency of the policy a general average loss was sustained, and the salvage claim had to be paid by the owners under a salvage award for salvage services to the ship. The real value of the ship for the purpose of the salvage award and at the time of making up the average statement was taken to be £40,000. This value of £40,000 was agreed upon as the value of the ship between the owners and the salvors, the amount being a compromise to save the expense of a valuation. In adjusting the general average and salvage charges the adjusters took the contributory value of the ship at £40,000, but treated the general average and the salvage charge differently. They charged the whole of the salvage charges to the ship, but made the insurance for £33,000 pay only 33-40ths of the total share of the general average falling on the ship. The underwriters contended that they were only liable to pay salvage charges to the extent of 33-40ths, as the ship was valued in the policy at £33,000 and not at £40,000, and this action was brought to determine the extent of the liability of the underwriters. Mr. Danson, an average adjuster, gave evidence that there was a well-known practice amongst English underwriters that when a vessel was insured for a sum less than the contributory value upon which general average was adjusted or less than the amount at which the vessel was valued in a salvage action, the underwriters were only liable to pay in the proportion of the insured value to the contributory value or salvage value. The case is not free from difficulty. The policy is a valued policy on the ship. Both sides are agreed that as between the underwriters and the shipowners, the parties to the policy, the policy value cannot be opened, but each side says that the other is making a claim inconsistent with the valued policy. The shipowners say that according to the terms of the policy the ship is between themselves and the underwriters a fully-insured ship, and that the underwriters cannot consistently with the policy maintain that the ship is only insured to the extent of 33-40ths, or that the shipowners are their own insurers to the extent of 7-40ths. On the other hand, the underwriters say that they insured the ship on the basis of the ship being worth £33,000, and that the shipowners have no right to ask them to pay on the footing of the ship being worth £40,000. Bigham, J., decided in favour of the contention of the underwriters, chiefly on the ground, I think, of Mr. Danson's evidence, which proved undoubtedly that there was a well-known practice in England amongst underwriters and average adjusters whereby, if the policy value of the ship is less than her contributory value adopted in the average adjustment, or less than the amount at which the ship was valued in a salvage action, the same proportionate rebate is made upon the average assessment against the ship when indemnity is sought against the underwriters, unless otherwise provided in the policy. In my judgment it is necessary, in order to arrive at a decision between these respective contentions, to ascertain the nature of the claim of the insured owner in cases where there has been either a general average sacrifice or payment of general average contribution, or payment of the whole or a contributory share under a salvage award. In each of these cases the claim of the insured owner is a claim for a loss by perils of the sea; either something has been sacrificed to avert a peril for the benefit of all or salvage has been paid for the benefit of all. But there is an obvious difference in the links of the chain of cause and effect between a case where masts have been sacrificed or cargo jettisoned to avert a peril of the sea, and a case where the loss consists of the sum which has to be contributed, so as to distribute the burden of the general average sacrifice or the burden of the salvage award. In the former case a part of the ship or cargo has been lost by voluntary sacrifice necessitated by perils of the sea, whereas in the latter case it is impossible to say what loss there has been until the general average contribution has been adjusted or until the salvage award has been made and the burden of it distributed. It is argued that this difference affects the nature and measure of the loss as between the underwriters and the insured owner, and also affects the right of the insured owner to recover from the underwriters the whole of the loss by perils of the sea without reference to contribution from other owners who have had the benefit of the sacrifice, leaving the underwriters to get a contribution from such owners by virtue of subrogation. To a certain extent this is, I think, plainly true. Losses for which underwriters are liable without any adjustment and losses for which underwriters are liable only after adjustment differ in two respects. The former can be recovered as particular average losses, which the latter generally cannot. The former losses fall within the rule in Dickenson v. Jardine, 16 W. R. 1169, L. R. 3 C. P. 639, in which it was decided that, in a case of jettison of goods entitling the cargo-owners to general average contribution from the owners of the ship, the insured cargo-owner is entitled to recover from the underwriters the whole amount insured without having first collected the contribution to which he was entitled from the ship and other owners of cargo, and that the underwriters, having paid the cargo-owner, would be entitled to stand in his place with respect to general average contribution, whereas losses for which the underwriters are only liable after adjustment clearly cannot be sued for until after adjustment, and then only to the extent of the insured owners' share of liability according to the statement of the average adjusters. The decision of Barnes, J., and of the Court of Appeal in The Mary Thomas, [1894] P. 108, seems to make it clear that underwriters are only liable for general average expenditure after adjustment, and to the extent of the contribution due according to the average statement from the insured owner of ship, cargo, or freight, as the case may be, and The Mary Thomas seems also to establish that Dickenson v. Jardine has no application to such a case. The Mary Thomas, however, is not conclusive as to the case of salvage in the strict sense of the word. It is not conclusive as to salvage by a volunteer independent of agreement, for it will be seen that in The Mary Thomas the operations after the stranding were done under the orders of the master, just as in the present case the work by The Gamecock was done under the master's orders. In all these cases the liability of the underwriters is simply to recoup the insured owner his share of expenditure incurred by the master for the benefit of all. I think, however, that even in the case of salvage proper the liability of the underwriter is only to pay the share of the salvors' remuneration awarded against the owner whom he has insured from loss by perils of the sea. The outcome of all this is that neither in a case of general average contribution nor in the case of salvage proper is the underwriter a guarantor of the contributions due under the average statement, or the salvage award, from the other owners interested, but still the loss by ship in having to pay salvage is not a loss dependent on the salvage being for the benefit of owners other than the shipowner: see Arnould on Marine Insurance (3rd ed.), pp. 728-9. It is a direct loss by the peril of the sea, which the salvors are entitled to recover from each owner to the extent that their volunteer services have benefited him. The liability does not seem to me to arise out of the equities of the owners inter se or out of the Rhodian Law. To that extent the liability of the shipowner or the cargo-owner or other owner, as the case may be, to pay his share of salvage remuneration differs from his liability to pay his share of general average loss, and resembles a loss by jettison. Salvage, however, is generally not expressly named in marine policies, but it is to be remembered that the liability of the underwriters does not depend on the words of the policy, but upon salvage being made by the law of the land or the general law maritime a direct and immediate consequence of perils of the sea. Assuming that salvage is a partial loss of a ship by perils of the sea, which can only be recovered after the liability of the ship has been determined by the award of the court fixing the share of liability, and that the underwriters can in no case be subrogated to the rights of the insured owner, and that therefore so much of the judgment in Dickenson v. Jardine has no application, yet there remains the question how far the underwriters can resist payment of the share of salvage which the ship has had to pay. It is a loss by the perils of the sea. The ship had had to pay that amount. Primâ facie the underwriters are bound to indemnify the shipowner against this loss. What is it that gets rid of this primâ facie obligation? The suggestion is that it is got rid of by the fact that the full value of the ship has been agreed in the policy at £33,000, and the salvage award has been based on a value of £40,000. It is said that this agreement estops the owner as a party to the policy from enforcing against the underwriters any indemnity against a loss based on a value inconsistent with that value. Secondly, it is said that the rule in cases of partial loss is to ascertain the proportion of the contribution of the ship to the total salvage expenditure according to the values and amounts on which the liability of the ship has been fixed by the court which disposed of the salvage action, and that then the liability of the underwriters will be the same proportion of the policy value. It may be that this is a convenient rule of thumb, but it is not the logical outcome holding the parties to the policy to be bound by the figure of policy value; and it is to be recollected that the salvage valuation is based on the value of the damaged ship as salved, and the policy value is the value of the sound ship. In the case of Irving v. Manning, 1 H. L. Cas. 287, it appears by the opinion of the judges, delivered by Patteson, J., that the meaning of a valued policy is not that as between the parties to the policy the policy value shall for all purposes be taken to be the value of the ship, but only that for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of compensation to be paid to the assured when the loss has happened the value shall be taken to be the sum fixed. The judges, having arrived at that conclusion, go on to approve the doctrine established by Lewis v. Rucker, 2 Burr. 1167, that on a valued policy of goods the amount to which the underwriters ought to be held liable for a partial loss is to be ascertained by computing such a proportion of the value in the policy as the difference between the price for which sound goods would have sold at the port of delivery and that for which the damaged goods actually sold bore to the price for which sound goods would have sold; and then Patteson, J., goes on to say: "But the extent and nature of the loss being ascertained by this comparison, the underwriter was held liable to pay the proportion so ascertained of the value in the policy" (see pp. 305, 306). This is not the way in which losses by actual damage to the ship are measured for the purpose of ascertaining the quantum of the liability of the underwriters. The underwriter has to pay the whole expense of repairs whether the policy value be high or low, less one-third for new work substituted for old, provided only such expenses do not exceed the total sum insured. Now ought salvage expenses to be measured against the underwriters on the basis of a partial loss of goods or on the basis of repairs? Apart from the established practice spoken to by Mr. Danson, I should have thought that the measure of the loss against which the underwriters had to indemnify the shipowner was the actual sum which the shipowner had to pay for salvage, and that this was so whether the valuation in the policy was above or below the actual value. Salvage expenditure is the sum which the shipowner had to pay to save the underwriters from a total loss. I does not seem to me to matter how that sum is arrived at. It is not in its origin a computation of the quantum of compensation which the underwriters have to pay the shipowner. It is a computation of the sum which the shipowner has to pay to save the underwriters from a total loss—i.e., of the sum which the shipowner has to pay to save the ship from perils of the sea—and this is clearly a direct loss by perils of the sea. But the evidence seems to show that in the case of salvage claims covered by a policy of insurance the Lewis v. Rucker measure has been applied for a very long time, and with much hesitation I am concurring in affirming the decision of Bigham, J.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

STIRLING, L.J., read a judgment arriving at the same conclusion.

The appeal was accordingly dismissed with costs.

Solicitors, Lowless & Co.; Waltons, Johnson, Bubb, & Whatton.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div.)
Cozens-Hardy, J.) Aug. 8, 1901.

LOWE v. ADAMS. (a.)

Landlord and tenant—Sporting rights—Licence—Notice of determination—Reasonable notice.

A landlord, by an agreement not under seal, dated the 14th of May, 1895, let sporting rights for a certain rent over his lands to two tenants, A. and B., for the term of one year, and by a subsequent letter, dated the 31st of December, 1895, agreed to a reduction of the "annual" rent. A. and B. continued to enjoy the shooting rights for six years, paying the rent agreed upon. Shortly before the sixth year was up A. and B. were, first verbally and subsequently by written notice, informed that the arrangement would be revoked as from the end of the sixth year. The landlord then let the shooting rights as from the latter date to C. exclusively. A. and B. however, insisted on exercising sporting rights over the lands, alleging that they should have had six months' notice of the determination of the tenancy. In an action brought by C. for an injunction to restrain A. and B. from shooting over the lands,

Held, that the rules, as to notice, applicable to a tenancy of corporeal hereditaments do not necessarily apply to incorporeal hereditaments, and that reasonable notice had been given.

On the 14th of May, 1895, B. J. H. Beridge agreed to let the shooting in White Ash Wood, Bocking, to Percy Adams and Thomas W. King for the term of one year from the 25th of March then last past to the 25th of March next following at a rent of £23 per annum.

The agreement was apparently not under seal, though there was a wafer opposite Beridge's signature.

On the 31st of December, 1895, Beridge consented by letter to the reduction of the rent from £23 to £21 per annum.

The defendants Adams and King exercised their rights under the agreement and paid the rent up to March, 1901.

On the 23rd of March, 1901, Beridge's solicitor wrote to the defendants informing them that Beridge intended "to revoke the licence you have for some time exercised in respect of the shooting. . . . Will you be good enough to understand that the said licence will be and is revoked as from the 25th day of March instant."

On the 23rd of May, 1901, Beridge demised the exclusive shooting rights over the White Ash Wood and other properties to E. A. C. Lowe from the 25th of March, 1901, at a yearly rent of £50, the lessee covenanting to keep at least one gamekeeper to preserve the game on the said lands.

Percy Adams and Thomas W. King continued to traverse the land and to employ a gamekeeper at their own cost to preserve the game. It was alleged that their gamekeeper interfered with Lowe and his gamekeeper, and the present action was brought for an injunction to restrain Adams and King, their servants and agents, from entering upon the lands and interfering with the exclusive shooting rights of Lowe. The question to be decided was whether sufficient notice had been given to Adams and King so as to determine their sporting rights.

Vernon Smith, K.C., and Herbert Jacobs, for plaintiff, argued that defendants held only a parol licence to shoot over the lands, and that such licence was revocable at any moment: Rex v. Inhabitants of Hornden-on-the-Hill, 4 M. & Sel. 562; Wood v. Leadbitter, 13 M. & W. 838; Fitzgerald v. Firbank, [1897] 2 Ch. 96, 45 W. R. Dig. 57; Wilson v. Tavener, [1901] 1 Ch. 578, 49 W. R. Dig. 89.

Eve, K.C., and Martelli, for the defendants, argued that there was a tenancy from year to year which could only be terminated by six months' notice in writing, in the absence of any agreement to the contrary. The letter of the 31st of December, 1895, was the equivalent of an agreement of which there had been part performance by the payment of the rent. The decision in Wood v. Leadbitter was upset by the case of Walsh v. Lonsdale, 31 W. R. 109, 21 Ch. D. 9.

(a.) Reported by J. H. DAVIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

COZENS-HARDY, J., stated the facts, and proceeded: Now various points have been raised in argument upon which I do not think it necessary to express a decided opinion. Whether Wood v. Leadbitter is still good law, having regard to Walsh v. Lonsdale, is very doubtful. But the agreement of the 14th of May, 1895, was something more than a mere licence. It conferred a right to shoot and to carry away the game shot (Fitzgerald v. Firbank), and it was revocable at will. Assuming then that the defendants could not have been lawfully deprived of the enjoyment of their shooting rights before the 25th of March, 1896, what was their position after that day? The defendants contend that by payment of rent they became tenants from year to year, and were entitled to a six months' notice ending on the 26th of March, 1902. Now a general occupation of land was, so long ago as the Year Books, held to be an occupation from year to year, and the tenant could not be turned out without "reasonable notice" (Doe d. Martin v. Watts, 7 T. R. 83), and "reasonable notice" has been settled to be half a year's notice ending with the period at which the tenancy commenced. This whole doctrine seems to have owed its origin to the prevalence of a strong and natural feeling of the justice and good policy of allowing a tenant who has sowed to reap: Smith's Leading Cases (10th ed.), vol. 2, p. 126. But I am not satisfied that the rigid rules applicable to a tenant of corporeal hereditaments ought to be applied to the enjoyment of an incorporeal hereditament such as I have to deal with.

I assume in favour of the defendants that they are entitled to "reasonable notice," expiring on the 25th of March. If so, I think the verbal notice given in February, or, at the latest in the early part of March, at the end of the shooting season, was reasonable and sufficient. I do not feel bound to hold that in a case of this kind six months' notice must be given. It is not necessary to say whether the written notice of the 23rd of March was sufficient, or, indeed, whether any notice was required. It may well be that the proper inference to be drawn is that the landowner granted successive rights each year for a period of one year, ending on the 25th of March, and that no notice was necessary. The result is that, in my opinion, the plaintiff is entitled to the relief claimed in the action. The defendants must pay the costs of the action.

Solicitors for plaintiffs, Griffinhoofe & Brewster, for E. D. Surridge, Coggeshall.

Solicitors for defendants, Morris & Bristow, for Harris, Morton, & Harris, Halstead.

Chan. Div. } July 11, 24, 1901.
Cozens-Hardy, J. }

In re GUYTON AND ROSENBERG'S CONTRACT. (a.)

Will—Construction—Devise of "all my real estate"—Outstanding interests—Wills Act, 1837 (1 Vict. c. 26), s. 26.

A. was owner in fee, subject to a lease of ninety-nine years, of certain property. A. also held a sub-lease of the same property for a term less by two days than the original lease. By his will he devised his real estate to B. and his leasehold estate to his executors.

Held, that the devise by A. of "all his real estate" passed all A.'s interest in the property which was his freehold, including his interest in the sub-lease.

(a.) Reported by J. H. DAVIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

This was a vendor and purchaser summons taken out by the purchaser on the ground that one of the requisitions of title was not properly answered.

By an indenture of lease dated the 16th of November, 1820, certain freehold property in Ellen-street, in the parish of St. George-in-the-East, was demised to John Saunders for a term of ninety-nine years at a rent of £12 12s. annually.

In December, 1823, the leasehold interest in the said property was mortgaged to John Gibbins for the whole term less two days.

By indenture dated the 13th of May, 1842, Gibbins sold his interest in the leasehold premises to Matthew Rippingham free from all equity of redemption.

By indenture dated the 25th of August, 1848, the fee simple in the premises subject to the lease of November, 1820, was conveyed to M. Rippingham.

Under the will dated the 23rd of February, 1865, of M. Rippingham the fee simple and the interest created by the sub-lease of December, 1825, were devised and given to William Robert Roberts.

W. R. Roberts died in March, 1872, having by his will devised all his real estate to William Guyton, in fee simple, and his leasehold estate (with the exception of one house) to his executors.

By his will dated the 2nd February, 1881, William Guyton devised all his freehold estate to his trustees on trusts for sale, and also directed his said trustees to realize his residuary personal estate.

On the 29th of August, 1900, the trustee of the will of W. Guyton entered into an agreement for the sale to Michael Rosenberg of the interest of W. Guyton in the Ellen-street property.

It was objected by the purchaser that no title was shown in the vendors to the interest created by the sub-lease of the 9th of December, 1823.

J. M. Stone, for the purchaser.—From the will of W. R. Roberts it is clear that the leasehold property passes under the devise of leasehold estate and not under that of real estate, therefore the interest created by the sub-lease of December, 1823, did not pass with the real estate. Section 26 of the Wills Act, 1837, does not apply, and even if it did there is in this will a contrary intention. If this leasehold interest is touched all the other leasehold interests will be affected.

Counsel referred to the cases of Wilson v. Eden, 11 Beav. 237; Butler v. Butler, 33 W. R. 192, 28 Ch. D. 66; In re Davison, Greenwell v. Davison, 58 L. T. Rep. 304, 36 W. R. Dig. 228.

Peterson, for the vendors, referred to Vallance v. Vallance, 2 N. R. 229, 11 W. R. Ch. Dig. 117; Matthews v. Matthews, 15 W. R. 761, L. R. 4 Eq. 278; and Moase v. White, 24 W. R. 1038, 3 Ch. D. 763.

Stone replied.

COZENS-HARDY, J., stated the facts, and then continued: Now I think it is clear that section 26 of the Wills Act, 1837, does not help the vendors. I cannot hold that under the devise of "all my real estate" leaseholds are included when I find in the same will an express bequest of "all my leasehold estate." This is a "contrary intention" appearing by the will. It remains, however, to consider whether, under the language of this will, and having regard to all the surrounding circumstances, the devise to Guyton, which must be read as a devise of all his freehold property, did not include all the testator's interest in this property which was his freehold. Upon the whole I think this is the true view. It seems to me consistent with the judgment of Wood, V.C., in Matthews v. Matthews. The testator cannot have intended to split up this property into two parts when it had for many years been enjoyed and dealt with as a freehold estate in possession. The devise passed all his interest in this property, which was his freehold, and not merely his freehold interest in this property subject to his leasehold interest therein. The result is that I must declare that the purchaser's objection is not well founded, and the purchaser must pay the costs of the summons.

Solicitors for the purchaser, Stones, Morris, & Stone.

Solicitors for the vendors, Storey, Cowland, & Hill.

Chan. Div. Buckley, J. — Oct. 29.

DAVENPORT v. MARSHALL. (a.)

Married woman — Marriage settlement — Covenant to settle after-acquired property—Judicial separation— "During the marriage"—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), s. 25—Infant—Repudiation.

Property acquired by a wife after a decree of judicial separation does not fall within a covenant in a marriage settlement to settle property acquired "during the said intended marriage."

An infant who has executed a marriage settlement will not be allowed to repudiate it thirty years later upon the ground that she only became aware of its contents shortly before repudiation.

Special case.

By a marriage settlement in 1868, executed by the defendant, the intended wife, then R. L. Davenport, while still an infant, she and her intended husband covenanted with the trustees of the settlement that all real and personal property, if any, to which the defendant or her intended husband in her right "shall at any time during the said intended marriage become beneficially entitled in possession or reversion" (except certain articles mentioned and property under £100) should be transferred to the trustees of the settlement upon certain trusts.

The marriage took place the same day. There were three children, who were all of age and living at the date of the trial.

At the date of the settlement the lady was entitled to a reversionary interest in or a share of the estate of her maternal grandfather, which was held in trust for her upon the death of her mother, Mrs. Davenport.

In 1875 the defendant obtained a decree of judicial separation between herself and her husband.

In 1884 a new trustee of the settlement was appointed by a deed to which the defendant was a party.

In 1900 her mother, Mrs. Davenport, died, devising and bequeathing a moiety of the residue of her real and personal property to her daughter, the defendant, for her separate use.

Until the death of her mother the defendant did not elect to disaffirm the settlement, the contents of which (the special case stated) she had not at any time previously been informed or was aware of. She subsequently expressly repudiated it; and the said covenant in it.

The trustees of the settlement brought this action against the defendant claiming the funds to which the defendant had so become entitled, and a special case was presented to the court asking whether the settlement and the covenant were binding upon the defendant, and if so, whether the trustees were entitled, in the events that had happened, (a) to her share in the residuary estate of her grandfather, and (b) to the share bequeathed to her by her mother.

H. Terrell, K.C., and S. Dickinson, for the trustees.—It was manifestly too late, after thirty years, for the lady to repudiate the settlement: Edwards v. Carter [1893] A. C. 360. The property coming from the grandfather must fall within the covenant, as the lady was entitled to it at the date of the judicial separation, and section 25 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, does not apply: Waite v. Morland, 36 W. R. 484, 38 Ch. D. 135. The covenant operated as a conveyance for valuable consideration of the after-acquired property from its date. The covenant should have given it its natural and ordinary meaning, and not be restricted as suggested. The parties may choose to live together again, which shows that the marriage is still subsisting. In Dawes v. Creyke, 33 W. R. 869, 30 Ch. D. 500, the words "during coverture" are not the same as "during marriage" here.

Ingpen, K.C., and J. K. Darley, for the defendant.—The lady has repudiated the settlement almost immediately upon becoming aware of its contents, and that would be sufficient according to the decision of Chitty, J., in In re Hodson, 42 W. R. 531, [1894] 2 Ch. 421; but as Chitty, J., had not the decision in Edwards v. Carter before him, we cannot rely upon that decision. The covenant must be construed with reference to its objects, and be considered as only operating during coverture, and not after the husband is separated from the wife: Dawes v. Creyke; Carter v. Carter, L. R. 8 Eq. 551, 18 W. R. Dig. 124; In re Edwards, 22 W. R. 144, L. R. 9 Ch. App. 97.

They also referred to In re Insole, 14 W. R. 160, L. R. 1 Eq. 470.

BUCKLEY, J.—Two questions arise in the case—first,—whether the lady is bound by the settlement; and secondly, whether, if she is bound, certain funds are included in the covenant. The first question is entirely covered by the case of Edwards v. Carter. The defendant attained her majority thirty years ago. In 1884 she concurred in a deed appointing a new trustee of the settlement. After what was said by the learned lords in Edwards v. Carter she cannot now be heard to say that she was not aware of the contents of the settlement, and executed it without consenting to its provisions. In considering the second question, the facts are that at the date of the settlement, and therefore also at that of the judicial separation, she was entitled in reversion upon the death of her mother to a share in the estate of her grandfather. She was therefore "beneficially entitled in reversion" to this share, and it comes plainly within the covenant. She also became entitled under the will of her mother, who died in 1900, to one half of her mother's residuary estate. She was not entitled to this property until after the judicial separation. The question is whether that is property to which she became entitled "during the said intended marriage." In one sense it is such property since the marriage has not come to an end, as the parties may come together again. But is the marriage still existing within the meaning of the covenant. As to this the case of In re Edwards is a guide to us. There the Court of Appeal held that a covenant to settle after-acquired property only applied during coverture in the absence of expressions to the contrary. James, L.J., says: "The primary object of a covenant to settle after-acquired property of a wife is to prevent it falling under the sole control of the husband." In Dawes v. Creyke Bacon, V.C., held, to put it shortly, that from the time of judicial separation the wife was, under the Divorce and Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, a feme sole as regards property coming to her, and that it was not included in a covenant to settle property acquired "during the coverture," as the period of separation was not part of the coverture. The intention of the covenant is to exclude the husband. If he is already excluded the reason for the covenant does not exist, and the covenant does not apply. I think, then, that the words "during the said intended marriage" mean during a coverture when there are existing the usual marital rights of the husband. I hold, therefore, that the property which devolved upon the defendant in 1900 does not fall within the covenant.

(a.) Reported by NEVILLE TEBBUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Solicitors, Coleman & Knight.

Chan. Div. } Oct. 26, 29.
Buckley, J. }

ANDERSON v. MIDLAND RAILWAY CO. AND HENRY WIGGIN & CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Railway—Undue preference—Ultra vires—Rights of shareholder — Injunction — Jurisdiction — Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 Vict. c. 20), s. 90 —Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 31), s. 2.

A shareholder of a railway company cannot have an injunction to prevent the company carrying goods for a customer at a lower rate than the ordinary scale, upon the ground that it is ultra vires, and enables other customers to claim reductions, and thus diminishes the profits of the company.

Semble, such an act, even if an undue preference, is not ultra vires the railway company.

Whatever rights a railway company may have against a customer who has delivered goods to them for consignment under an alleged erroneous description bearing a lower rate of charge than the proper description, a shareholder in the railway company has none against the customer.

In this action the plaintiff was a shareholder of the defendant Midland Railway Co., and the second defendants, Henry Wiggin & Co. (Limited), were merchants at Birmingham, and customers of the railway company; and the action was brought by the plaintiff suing on behalf of himself and the other shareholders in respect of an alleged undue preference shown to the defendants Henry Wiggin & Co. (Limited).

The statement of claim alleged that goods carried by the Midland Railway which came under the class or description of "nickel" were subject to a higher rate of charge than goods which came under the class or description of "metal"; that the defendants Wiggin & Co. (Limited) had sent consignments of goods for carriage by the railway company which though properly coming under the class of "nickel" had been wrongly declared under the class of "metal," and that the lower rate of charge applicable to "metal" had alone been paid for the same; and that upon such erroneous declarations being notified to the railway company they took no steps to enforce payment of the proper rate of charge, but had permitted the defendants Wiggin & Co. (Limited) to continue to send goods by such incorrect descriptions, and to pay the lower rate of charge, thus giving them an undue preference; that the railway company's secretary had alleged that this was done under some special authority or arrangement, of the particulars of which the plaintiff had no knowledge.

(a.) Reported by NEVILLE TEBBUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Paragraph 10 was: "By reason of such preference other consignors are entitled to claim reductions of the charges to them, and the company and its shareholders are deprived of their legitimate profits. Such preference is ultra vires the railway company."

The plaintiff claimed on account of the transactions between the defendant companies, and of the charges made, an inquiry as to the amounts of the deficiency of payments, and payment to the railway company of these amounts, and an injunction to restrain the continuance of the transactions.

By their defences both defendants denied that any erroneous declarations had been made on goods carried at lower rates than their proper class. The defendant railway company also submitted that the statement of claim did not disclose any cause of action, and the defendants Wiggin & Co. submitted that it did not, as against them, disclose any cause of action, even if (which was not admitted) it did disclose one against the railway company.

Orders having been made under ord. 25, r. 2, that the points of law thus raised should be set down for hearing, these questions now came on before the court.

R. J. Parker, for the defendants Henry Wiggin & Co. (Limited).—If there is any illegality in the alleged conduct of the railway company, it is not in their carrying goods at the lower rate for this customer, but in charging a higher rate to others, who may recover back the excess: Great Western Railway Co. v. Sutton, L. R. 4 H. L. 226, 17 W. R. H. L. Dig. 13; Evershed v. London and North-Western Railway Co., 25 W. R. 411, 2 Q. B. D. 254; Denaby Main Colliery Co. v. Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Co., 11 App. Cas. 97, 34 W. R. Dig. 159; and Phipps v. London and North-Western Railway Co., [1892] 2 Q. B. 229, 40 W. R. Dig. 213. And the remedy of these other customers is in the Railway and Canal Commission Court and not here, and is against the railway company. There is not such right of action against against the customer charged at the lower rate. And even if the shareholder has any rights against the railway company he has none against us.

Ingpen, K.C., and Sargant, for the Midland Railway Co.—The railway company are common carriers, who may charge what they like so long as they do not exceed the maximum allowed; hence, if the railway company had acted as alleged, their conduct would not be ultra vires.

Gatey and Compston, for the plaintiff.—The railway company is bound to treat all its customers alike both by section 90 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and by section 2 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854. In charging one customer less than the proper scale they have acted unlawfully, and their conduct is ultra vires, and to the injury of its shareholders, who may have an injunction to prevent its continuance: Maunsell v. Midland and Great Western (Ireland) Railway Co., 11 W. R. 768, 1 H. & M. 130; Russell v. Wakefield Waterworks Co., 23 W. R. 887, L. R. 20 Eq. 474; Ransome v. Eastern Counties Railway Co., 26 L. J. C. P. 91, 5 W. R. C. L. Dig. 230.

BUCKLEY, J.—For the purposes of the present question I must assume that the allegations of the statement of claim are true. With reference to the statements of paragraph 10, if other consignors are entitled by the acts of the company complained of to claim reductions, then those acts conferred rights on these other persons, and cannot be ultra vires. The pleader has pleaded himself out of court. Paragraph 12 says that Wiggin & Co. (Limited) are liable to account to the railway company for, and make good to them, the proper charges for all such consignments in respect of which such false declarations as aforesaid have been made. That means either that when Wiggin & Co. (Limited) consigned the goods they entered into an implied contract to pay the proper charges, and that they are liable to pay them, or that they are liable to an action for damages for deceit. In either of these cases the right of action belongs to the railway company. Mr. Gatey admits that the plaintiff's only right of action is upon the ground that the act of the railway company is ultra vires. He says that under section 90 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and under section 2 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854, the railway company must treat all customers alike. The former Act only applies where goods are carried between the same points of arrival and departure, but the operation of the later Act is wider, and any undue and unreasonable preference is a breach of it, for which the person aggrieved may go to the Railway and Canal Commission Court. But what is there in it which enables a shareholder of the company which is alleged to have committed a breach of it to ask to have the act of the company declared ultra vires. The breach (if any) gives no right to a member against the corporation; it is an act of which another customer of the railway company may complain before another court, and the relief which he can claim is not an injunction, but to recover back what he has paid more than the amount he ought to have been charged. This action could only have been properly brought (if at all) by the railway company; no cause of action is shown in the plaintiff.

Action dismissed.

Solicitors for the Midland Railway Co., Beale & Co.

Solicitors for Henry Wiggin & Co. (Limited), Sharpe, Parker, Pritchards, Barham, & Lawford, for Mathews, James, & Crosskey, Birmingham.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Hamlin, Grammer, & Hamlin, for C. Dunn, Leeds.

Chan. Div. } June 20, 1901.
Joyce, J. }

In re WALKER AND OAKSHOTT'S CONTRACT. (a.)

Vendor and purchaser—Title—Trust for sale—Leaseholds—Trustees assignees—Sale by sub-demise—Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 78), s. 9.

It is not a proper exercise of their powers for trustees who hold leasehold property on trust for sale to sell it by way of sub-demise, as by so doing they do not get rid of the liability attaching to the lease.

Vendor summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874.

The vendors were trustees of a settlement dated the 14th of September, 1883, under which deed they were given powers of sale and of granting leases of the freehold and leasehold land for any term not exceeding twenty-one years, or for the purpose of a building or repairing lease, ninety-nine years, or for a mining lease, sixty years.

The property which was the subject of these proceedings was leasehold, held under a lease dated the 26th of December, 1866, granted to Murray Gladstone for a term of ninety-five years from the 1st of December, 1866.

The trustees were assignees of this lease.

(a.) Reported by C. W. MEAD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

On the 13th of August, 1900, this property was put up for sale by auction in three lots numbered 11, 12, and 13.

The material conditions of sale were as follows: The third provided that the title of these lots was to commence with the lease of the 26th of December, 1866. The ninth provided that if these lots were sold to the same purchaser the sale should be carried out by an assignment of the lease, but if all the lots were not so sold the sale of each one of such lots (or of any two of them if two were sold to the same purchaser) should be carried out by the vendors granting to each purchaser an underlease of such one or two of the three lots as might be purchased by him for the residue of the term granted by the said lease except the last day thereof, at the apportioned rents stated in the particulars of sale for each such lot.

The conditions of sale did not disclose the fact that the vendors were trustees.

The respondent purchased Lots 12 and 13, and paid a deposit on purchasing. In his requisitions he objected that the proposed underlease was not a proper exercise of the power of sale and that the sale should be by way of assignment of the whole residue of the term at an apportioned rent with cross covenants and cross powers of distress. The vendors would not consent to this, but offered to assign the three lots to him subject to an underlease to the purchaser of the the third lot. This the respondent refused to accede to, and this summons was accordingly taken out by the vendors.

Warrington, K.C., and C. G. Church, for the vendors.—The transaction is in effect a sale and not a lease. This is a common conveyancer's device when leasehold property comprised in one lease is sold in lots so as to avoid an apportionment of the rent: In re Webb, Still v. Webb, 45 W. R. 170, [1897] 1 Ch. 144. Evans v. Jackson, 8 Sim. 217, is distinguishable, as in that case the trustees were not purporting to sell at all, but merely granting an underlease.

P. O. Lawrence, K.C., and S. O. Buckmaster, for the purchaser.—This is an underlease and not a sale, and the trustees have no power to grant an underlease: Evans v. Jackson. The distinction is one of substance as the trustees, being assignees of the lease, would get rid of the liability attached to it when they in turn assign it; but retain the liability, and so commit a breach of trust if they grant an underlease. This is a blot on the title. We ask for a rescission of the contract and for a return of the deposit with interest at 4 per cent.: In re Higgins and Percival, 57 L. J. Ch. 807, 37 W. R. Dig. 194.

Warrington, K.C., replied.

KEKEWICH, J.—The vendors are trustees selling leasehold property comprised in one lease under an ordinary power of sale, and they have adopted a device which has been found by conveyancers to be the best means of selling in lots leaseholds under those circumstances. As the counsel for the vendors pointed out, there is another mode of selling such property in lots—which is not so simple and has some inconvenience about it—viz., by means of the assignment of the lease to one of the purchasers subject to an agreement that he should grant underleases to the other purchasers at apportioned rents. The trustees have, however, adopted the alternative plan of retaining the term themselves and granting underleases to the several purchasers, a device which the industry of conveyancers has introduced, and which has been found to work well in practice. The objection has been taken, however, that here there is a power of sale only, and not one of granting long underleases like this. The counsel for the purchaser has called to my attention that in this marriage settlement there is both a power of sale and a power of granting leases, but this power is limited to leases for twenty-one years only; and it has been argued that this transaction cannot come within the power of leasing, and I am asked to infer from that that it does not come within the power of sale. I am not impressed by that argument. It is my duty to examine the transaction and see whether it is a sale or not. In my opinion it is a sale for many purposes. The point was dealt with by Stirling, J., in In re Webb, Still v. Webb, which was a case of taxation of a bill of costs, and the learned judge had to consider whether costs could be charged according to the scale which applies to conveyances. He says: "Now the first question is, 'Can this transaction be treated as a conveyance within the meaning of Part II., Schedule I?' I answer, 'No; because it is not a conveyance in fee or for any other freehold estate.' Then is it a lease? In a sense, no doubt, it is a lease, but in effect it is a sale. It is described as a sale in the conditions of sale, and it is so described in the plaintiffs' bill of costs. It is a sale carried out by an underlease, which is a well-known conveyancer's expedient, where the property sold is held with other property under one lease, to avoid an apportionment of rent, about which there might be a difficulty with the superior landlord." This is a sale and not a lease in the sense in which those terms are distinguished one against the other. Nevertheless it is a lease in form, and unfortunately in one respect it is a lease in substance. The head lease was not granted to the vendors, and the result, therefore, is that they will be able to get rid of their liability if they assign the lease. If they do not do that they will remain liable. Here they will subdemise to each purchaser; they will take from each purchaser a covenant to observe the covenants in the head lease as regards the particular property which has been purchased by him, and they will also take a covenant to pay an apportioned rent, but they will remain liable as trustees and assignees for the payment of those rents and the performance of those covenants contained in the head lease by virtue of their privity of estate with the lessor under the lease. That seems to me to be an objection to the sale in this manner. I hold the transaction to be in fact a sale by way of sub-lease, but I cannot hold it to be a sale within their ordinary power of sale. It does not get rid of the liability which attaches to those trustees as assigns of the lease, and I do not think that they ought to keep themselves liable to the rents and covenants under the head lease, as regards which they have, of course, a right of indemnity against the estate. On that ground I regret to have to uphold the objection of the purchaser. From that point of view Evans v. Jackson has no application. What the Vice-Chancellor there held was that an express trust that executors should sell a house was inconsistent with a grant by them of a lease of the house. That case does not touch the point in this case. Now what is the relief which must be given? The purchaser has succeeded, and he asks for an order rescinding the contract and for a return of the deposit with interest at 4 per cent. from the time of payment, with the costs of the summons, including the costs of investigating the title. Counsel for the vendors took exception to that on the ground that it could not be done on a vendor summons. The purchaser's counsel referred me to a case of In re Higgins and Percival, in which Kay, J., considered this question on a vendor summons, and the vendor was held accountable for the return of the deposit together with interest and costs. Kay, J., went into the matter referred to the authorities and came to the conclusion that he had jurisdiction under the Vendor and Purchaser Act under the general words which enable the court to make whatever order it considers just. I shall follow that decision and make the same order.

Solicitors, Walker & Pettitt; Hugh C. Godfray, for Oakshott, Baxter, & Chevalier, Liverpool.

K. B. Div. (Mathew, J.) — Aug. 6, 7, 1901.

STEAMSHIP CARISBROOK CO. (LIMITED) v. LONDON AND PROVINCIAL MARINE AND GENERAL INSURANCE CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Insurance (Marine)—General average—Charter-party—Voyage out and home—General average sacrifice on outward voyage—Liability of homeward freight to contribute.

A ship was chartered to proceed to Savannah and there load a cargo of cotton for carriage to the United Kingdom or Continent, freight being payable on the delivery of the cargo. The ship sailed for Savannah in ballast, and before arriving at that port a general average sacrifice of ship's materials was made. After being repaired a cargo was loaded at Savannah and delivered under the charter-party, freight being paid thereon.

Held, that the freight was liable to contribute in general average.

Williams v. London Assurance, 1 M. & Sel. 318, followed.

Action in the commercial list tried by Mathew, J., without a jury.

By a charter-party dated the 11th of September, 1900, the plaintiffs' steamship Yestor was chartered to proceed from this country to Savannah, where, having discharged her outward cargo, if any, she was to load from the charterers a cargo of cotton and to proceed therewith to a port in the United Kingdom or on the Continent where the cargo was to be delivered on the payment of freight.

On the 13th of September The Yestor sailed for Savannah in ballast as under the terms of the charter-party the vessel was entitled to do.

On the voyage a general average sacrifice of ship's materials was made.

The necessary repairs were executed at Savannah and the vessel subsequently loaded a cargo of cotton at Savannah as provided by the charter-party and then proceeded on her homeward voyage.

The cargo was duly delivered and freight paid in respect thereof.

The plaintiffs claimed in this action to recover the cost of the repairs as a loss by perils insured against under a policy of insurance on the ship made by the defendants.

The defence was that the loss was a general average sacrifice to which the plaintiffs were liable to make contribution in respect of the freight payable under the charter-party, and the defendants claimed to set off or deduct the amount of such contribution from the sum claimed in the action.

On behalf of the defendants evidence was given by certain average adjusters, that when a vessel sails in ballast under a charter-party to bring home a cargo it is the uniform practice of average adjusters to make the chartered freight contribute in general average.

(a.) Reported by F. O. ROBINSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Carver, K.C., and D. Stephens, for the plaintiffs.—Where a general average sacrifice is made on the outward voyage of a ship in ballast, the shipowner is not liable to contribute in general average in respect of the chartered freight payable on the cargo carried on the homeward voyage. The homeward freight was not being earned and was not at risk at the time of the sacrifice, the only object of which was to enable the ship to perform the outward voyage. Williams v. London Assurance, 1 M. & Sel. 318, which will be relied on by the defendants, is not really an authority in support of this view, for in that case the charter-party was for one entire voyage out and home, whereas here there are two voyages. The principle laid down in Williams v. London Assurance is disapproved of by Benecke in Principles of Indemnity in Marine Insurance, at p. 315; by Arnould on Marine Insurance (2nd ed.), at p. 956; Phillips on Insurance (3rd ed.), s. 1387. In Potter v. Rankin, 16 W. R. 1049, L. R. 3 C. P. 562, at p. 567, Willes, J., laid it down that under a charter-party for a round voyage the homeward freight is not earned during the outward voyage and consequently is not liable to contribute to a general average loss occurring on the outward voyage.

Joseph Walton, K.C., and Mackinnon, for the defendants.—From the time of the decision of Williams v. London Assurance the whole current of authority on this question, with the exception of the dicta of Willes, J., in Potter v. Rankin, is in favour of the defendants' contention: see Baily on General Average (1851 ed.), p. 99; Moran v. Jones, 5 W. R. 503, 7 E. & B. 523; the American case of The Brig Mary, 1 Sprague Adm. Cas. (Mass.) 17; Lowndes on General Average (4th ed.), p. 310. No question of general average was raised or argued in Potter v. Rankin, and the observations of Willes, J., on this point were merely obiter. Williams v. London Assurance is undistinguishable from this case and is decisive of it. Under the charter-party the chartered voyage began when the vessel sailed from this country, and the homeward freight then began to be earned and was therefore at risk when the sacrifice was made: see Barber v. Fleming, 18 W. R. 254, L. R. 5 Q. B. 59.

Carver replied.

MATHEW, J.—The question in this case is whether homeward freight under a charter-party ought to contribute to a general average sacrifice made on a outward voyage. I am of the opinion that under the circumstances the homeward freight must contribute. By the charter-party in question this vessel was chartered to go out to Savannah and bring home a cargo of cotton, and the freight was to be payable on the delivery of that cargo at the port or ports of destination.

The ship sailed on the voyage in question in ballast, and in the course of the voyage to Savannah she stranded and a general average sacrifice was made, to which, it is said, the homeward freight must contribute. Now there cannot be a question, to my mind, that the vessel while on the outward voyage was earning the homeward freight. The charter-party obliged her to go to Savannah and to bring the cargo home, and she was discharging that obligation when the disaster occurred. It happened, therefore, in the course of the voyage contemplated by the charter-party. The vessel eventually reached Savannah, took the cargo on board, brought it home, and became entitled to the freight. In that state of things it appears to me, both on principle and according to reason, that the homeward freight should contribute in general average, because everything points to the freight as the object for which the sacrifice was made. It was the owners' interest to secure the arrival of the ship at her port of loading to take her cargo on board, deliver the cargo, and receive the freight in consideration of the services rendered by the ship in going out and bringing the cargo home.

In the way of the plaintiffs' contention there is the case which has been so much discussed of Williams v. London Assurance. In that case there was a charter-party for a round voyage, out and home, the freight to be paid on the right delivery of the cargo at the homeward port. A disaster occurred in the course of the outward voyage, and the question was whether that freight should contribute to the general average sacrifice made in the course of the outward voyage on the same principle as is sought to be applied in this case. The contract was a contract under which the ship began to earn her homeward freight from the time that she sailed from the homeward port. The court held that the homeward freight ought to contribute in general average to the sacrifice which had been made in the course of the outward voyage. The principle of that case appears to me to be applicable to this one, but a distinction was sought to be drawn, and reference was made to certain comments by learned writers upon Williams v. London Assurance. The first writer to which I was referred was Benecke, who thought—he said no more than that—he thought, in discussing the case, that the distribution ought to be in respect of so much of the freight as was being earned in the course of the outward voyage. In other words that somebody should divide the single freight into two, and that one portion should be allocated to the homeward voyage, and the other portion to the outward voyage, and that the contribution should be in respect of the freight presumably being earned on the outward voyage—a highly inconvenient rule, it seems to me, to adopt; but that was his view. Arnould, following Benecke, suggests some difficulty about the case of Williams v. London Assurance. Phillips goes further than either, and advances a theory of his own as to how such a claim should be dealt with. It is noticeable, notwithstanding the high authority of Phillips, that in the case of The Brig Mary the American court followed Williams v. London Assurance.

Mr. Carver further relied upon a passage in the judgment of Willes, J., in Potter v. Rankin as a statement of the law, but I do not suppose that that learned judge intended by anything he said in that case to differ from, or to overrule, the authority of Williams v. London Assurance. The statement that he made with reference to the law on that occasion had no direct bearing on the question in controversy in the case; this point had not been raised, had not been discussed, and was not intended to be dealt with, and, therefore, I cannot accept that part of his judgment as a statement of the law which placed him in controversy with Williams v. London Assurance. If his judgment was to be accepted as a condemnation of that authority, it would certainly place any judge who had to elect between Lord Ellenborough and Willes, J., in considerable difficulty; but if that difficult position was reserved for me, I should come to the conclusion that the authority of Williams v. London Assurance remained unaffected by anything that may have been said in the later case.

On the other hand, Mr. Walton cited passages from the works of Baily and Lowndes, and he also relied on the case of Moran v. Jones, where the court recognized that the right way of dealing with a case of this sort is to make the freight to be earned under the charter-party contribute to a general average sacrifice though the goods were not in any peril. That appears to me to be a recognition of Williams v.

London Assurance, and a strong authority in favour of the defendants.

I do not comment upon the passages cited from Baily and Lowndes, because their evidence is of the same character as that which has been submitted to me by the various gentlemen familiar with, and of high authority on, this subject who have been called before me. They all speak of the course of business in dealing with cases of this sort. They do not seek to set up their course of dealing as average adjusters against the law, but the defendants are quite entitled to say that these gentlemen have for many years been acting upon this view of the law, and that their conclusions have never been questioned. The position of the regulations laid down by average adjusters among themselves is now clearly ascertained: see Atwood v. Sellar, 28 W. R. 604, 5 Q. B. D. 286. They endeavour to follow the law, and when the law decides that a regulation of theirs is not in accordance with authority, the regulation is accordingly altered, but, so long as the law has not spoken and has not decided, their customs are valuable as indicating the conditions upon which the particular contract was entered into.

I think that in this case it has been satisfactorily made out that the homeward freight ought to contribute, and therefore my judgment must be for the defendants.

Judgment for the defendants.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Holman, Birdwood, & Co.

Solicitors for the defendants, Waltons, Johnson, Bubb, & Whatton.

House of Lords.

From C. A. (England). July 22, 1901.

TAFF VALE RAILWAY CO. v. AMALGAMATED SOCIETY OF RAILWAY SERVANTS. (a.)

Trade union—Action against trade union in registered name—Injunction—Picketing—Trade Union Acts 1871 and 1876 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 31; 39 & 40 Vict c. 22).

An action will lie against a trade union in its registered name.

Decision of the Court of Appeal, 49 W. R. 101, [1901] 1 K. B. 170, reversed.

Observations as to the legal position of trade unions and the liability of their funds.

Appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal (A. L. Smith, M.R., and Collins and Stirling, L.JJ.), 49 W. R. 101, [1901] 1 K. B. 170, reversing that of Farwell, J.

The action was brought against the Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, Richard Bell, the general secretary, and James Holmes, the local secretary of the society, for an injunction to restrain them from watching or besetting, or causing to be watched or beset, the Great Western Railway Station at Cardiff, or the works of the plaintiffs, &c.

An application was made to strike out the name of the respondent society.

The whole question will be found dealt with in the judgment of Farwell, J., given below.

FARWELL, J.—The defendant society has taken out a summons to strike out their name as defendants, on the ground that they are neither a corporation nor an individual, and cannot be sued in a quasi-corporate or any other capacity. Failing this they contend that no injunction ought to be granted against them. I reserved judgment last week on these two points, because the first is of very great importance, and counsel were unable to assist me by citing any reported case in which the question had been argued and decided. Now it is undoubtedly true that a trade union is neither a corporation nor an individual, nor a partnership between a number of individuals; but this does not by any means conclude the case. A trade union, as defined by section 16 of the Trade Union Act, 1876, "means any combination, whether temporary or permanent, for regulating the relations between workmen and masters, or between workmen and workmen, or between masters and masters, or for imposing restrictive conditions on the conduct of any trade or business, whether such combination would or would not, if the principal Act had not been passed, have been deemed to have been an unlawful combination by reason of some one or more of its purposes being in restraint of trade." It is an association of men which almost invariably owes its legal validity to the Trade Union Acts, 1871 and 1876. In the present case the foundation of the argument that I have heard on behalf of the society is that it is an illegal association—an argument that would have more weight if the action related to the enforcement of any contract, and were not an action in tort. The question that I have to consider is what, according to the true construction of the Trade Union Acts, has the Legislature enabled the trade unions to do? and what, if any, liability does a trade union incur for wrongs done to others in the exercise of its authorized powers? The Acts commence by legalizing the usual trade union contracts, and proceed to establish a registry of trade unions, to give to each trade union an exclusive right to the name in which it is registered, to authorize it through the medium of trustees to own a limited amount of real estate, and unlimited personal estate "for the use and benefit of such trade union and the members thereof"; to provide that it shall have officers and treasurers, and to render them liable to account; to require that annual returns be made to the registry of the assets and liabilities and receipts and expenditures of the society; to provide that it shall have rules and a registered office, imposing a penalty on the trade union for non-compliance; and to permit it to amalgamate with other trade unions, and to be wound up. The funds of the society are appropriated to the purposes of the society, and their misappropriation can be restrained by injunction: Wolfe v. Matthews, 30 W. R. 838, 21 Ch. D. 194. And on winding up such funds are distributed amongst the members in accordance with the rules of the society: Strick v. Swansea Tinplate Co., 35 W. R. 831, 36 Ch. D. 558. Further, the Act of 1871 contains a schedule of matters which must be provided for by the rules. The object and the limitations of that Act are stated by Sir George Jessel in Rigby v. Connol, 28 W. R. 650, 14 Ch. D. 482, as follows: "That Act, no doubt, was passed primarily with a view to preventing the treasurers and secretaries and officers of these societies from robbing them; that was the chief object. It was discovered that some of these men, abusing the confidence reposed in them, took advantage of the law which made these societies illegal, by appropriating their funds and property to their own use. That, no doubt, was one of the principal objects, and therefore the Act was passed to get at these men. Another object was this: there was a great difficulty in suing and getting their property from third persons, and one object of the Act was to enable these societies to sue in respect of their property, and also to enable them to hold property, such as a house or office, but it was not intended that the contracts entered into by the members of the society should be made legal contracts inter se, so that courts of justice should interfere to enforce them. If that had been intended the result would have been this, that an agreement between a number of workmen once entered into, compelling them to work in a particular manner, or to abstain from working in a particular manner, would have been enforceable according to law, and to a certain extent would have reduced some portion of the workmen to a condition of something like serfdom and slavery. Of course the Legislature, by interfering, had no idea of doing anything of that sort."

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

But these limitations merely restrict the actual enforcement of trade union contracts by action or suit, and do not affect the question of the status of the association to which such members belong. Now although a corporation and an individual or individuals may be the only entity known to the common law who can sue or be sued, it is competent to the Legislature to give to an association of individuals which is neither a corporation nor a partnership nor an individual a capacity for owning property and acting by agents, and such capacity in the absence of express enactment to the contrary involves the necessary correlative of liability to the extent of such property for the acts and defaults of such agents. It is beside the mark to say of such an association that it is unknown to the common law. The Legislature has legalized it, and it must be dealt with by the courts according to the intention of the Legislature. For instance, a lease in perpetuity is unknown at common law, but such a lease granted by one railway company to another when confirmed by the Legislature becomes valid and binding —see Sir George Jessel's judgment in the Sevenoaks, &c., Railway Co. v. London, Chatham and Dover Railway Co., 27 W. R. 672, 11 Ch. D. 625—nor can it be said for this purpose that the association is illegal, for the Legislature by sections 2 and 3 of the Act of 1871 has rendered legal the usual purposes of a trade union, and has further enabled the trade union to carry into effect those purposes by the provisions to which I have already referred. This is not a case of suing in contract to which the provisions of section 4 of the Act would apply; it is an action in tort, and the real question is whether on the true construction of the Trade Union Acts the Legislature has legalized an association which can own property and can act by agents by intervening in labour disputes between employers and employed, but which cannot be sued in tort in respect of such acts.

Now the Legislature in giving a trade union the capacity to own property and the capacity to act by agents has, without incorporating it, given it two of the essential qualities of a corporation—essential, I mean, in respect of liability for tort, for a corporation can only act by its agents, and can only be made to pay by means of its property. The principle on which corporations have been held liable in respect of wrongs committed by its servants or agents in the course of their service and for the benefit of the employer—qui sentit commodum sentire debet et onus (see Mersey Docks Trustees v. Gibbs, 14 W. R. 872, L. R. 1 H. L. 93)—is as applicable to the case of a trade union as to that of a corporation. If the contention of the defendant society were well founded the Legislature has authorized the creation of numerous bodies of men capable of owning great wealth and of acting by agents, with absolutely no responsibility for the wrongs that they may do to other persons by the use of that wealth and the employment of those agents. They would be at liberty (I do not at all suggest that the defendant society would so act) to disseminate libels broadcast, or to hire men to reproduce the rattening methods that disgraced Sheffield thirty or forty years ago, and their victims would have nothing to look to for damages but the pockets of the individuals—usually men of small means—who acted as their agents. That this is a consideration that may fairly be taken into account appears from the opinion of the judges given to the House of Lords in the Mersey Docks case, "and we cannot think that it was the intention of the Legislature to deprive a shipowner who pays dues to a wealthy trading company, such as the St. Katharine's Dock Co. for instance, of all recourse against it, and to substitute the personal liability of a harbour-master, no doubt a respectable person in his way, but whose whole means, generally speaking, would not be equal to more than a very small percentage of the damages, when there are any." The proper rule of construction of statutes such as these is that in the absence of express contrary intention the Legislature intends that the creature of the statute shall have the same duties and that its funds shall be subject to the same liabilities as the general law would impose on a private individual doing the same thing. It would require very clear and express words of enactment to induce me to hold that the Legislature had in fact legalized the existence of such irresponsible bodies with such wide capacity for evil. Not only is there nothing in the Acts to lead me to such a conclusion, but sections 15 and 16 of the Act of 1871, imposing penalties on the trade union, and sections 8 and 15 of the Act of 1876 point to a contrary intention; nor do I see any reason for saying that the society cannot be sued in tort in their registered name. Sections 8 and 9 of the Act of 1871 expressly provide for actions in respect of property being brought by and against the trustees, and this express intention impliedly excludes such trustees from being sued in tort. If, therefore, I am right in concluding that the society are liable in tort the action must be against them in their registered name. The acts complained of are the acts of the association. They are acts done by their agents in the course of the management and direction of a strike; the undertaking such management and direction is one of the main objects of the defendant society, and is perfectly lawful; but the society, in undertaking such management and direction, undertook also the responsibility for the manner in which the strike is carried out. The fact that no action could be brought at law or in equity to compel the society to interfere or refrain from interfering in the strike is immaterial; it is not a question of the rights of members of the society, but of the wrong done to persons outside the society. For such wrongs, arising as they do from the wrongful conduct of the agents of the society in the course of managing a strike which is a lawful object of the society, the defendant society is, in my opinion, liable.

I have come to this conclusion on principle, and on the construction of the Acts, and there is nothing to the contrary in any of the cases cited by the defendants' counsel. They were all cases relating to the limitation of the right of enforcing contracts to which I have already referred. It is true that in Lyons & Sons v. Wilkins, 47 W. R. 291, [1899] 1 Ch. 255, the name of the trade union was struck out as a defendant by Byrne, J.; but I have been supplied with a copy of the shorthand notes of this case, and I find that the point was not argued, the plaintiff's counsel not thinking it worth while to contest it; and, on the other hand, although the Court of Appeal in Trollope's case, [1895] 72 L. T. Rep. 342, 43 W. R. Dig. 95, affirmed an injunction restraining libel by a trade union, I find that the trade union entered no appearance, and that the injunction went against them before Kekewich, J., in default of appearance, and his order was affirmed, nothing having been said about the society. The cases having the nearest analogy to the present are those like Ruck v. Williams, 6 W. R. 622, 3 H & N. 308, and Whitehouse v. Fellows, 9 W. R. 557, 10 C. B. N. S. 765, where unincorporated improvement commissioners and the trustees of a turnpike road respectively, sued under their respective Acts in the name of their clerk, were held liable in tort. I accordingly dismiss the society's summons with costs.

I have now to consider the question whether an injunction should be granted against the society in addition to that granted last week against Messrs. Bell and Holmes, and I am of opinion that it should. The objects of the society comprise promoting the settlement of disputes between masters and men by arbitration, or, failing that, by other lawful means, and of course a strike is perfectly lawful; the general management of the society is vested in an executive committee with power to represent the members in disputes about hours and wages; a protection fund is set apart out of the funds of the society for the more effectual protection of the labour and rights of members and for the better carrying on of any movement having that end in view, and in pursuance of its objects and powers. The society by their letter of the 20th of August signed by the defendant Bell informed the plaintiffs that they had decided to support the men in their action, and had instructed Bell to take charge of the movement with a view of bringing it to a conclusion, and that all further negotiations were to be dealt with through him. The defendant Bell was the general secretary and the defendant Holmes was the local organizing secretary of the society; they, as agents for the society, and on their instructions and for their benefit, put themselves in charge of the strike, and on the evidence that was read last week illegally watched and beset men to prevent them from working for the company, and illegally ordered men to break their contracts. I have already held that the society are liable for the acts of their agents to the same extent that they would be if they were a corporation, and it is abundantly clear that a corporation under the circumstances of this case would be liable—see, for example, Ranger v. Great Western Railway, 5 H. L. Cas. 72, at p. 86, where Lord Cranworth points out that, although a corporation cannot in strictness be guilty of fraud, there can be no doubt that if its agents act fraudulently, so that if they had been acting for private employers the persons for whom they were acting would have been affected by their fraud, the same principle must prevail when the principal under whom the agent acts is a corporation. It is not a question of acting ultra vires, as in Chapleo v. Brunswick Permanent Building Society, 29 W. R. 529, 6 Q. B. D. 696, but of improper acts in the carrying out of the lawful purposes of the society. In such cases the principal, whether an individual or a corporation, or a body like turnpike trustees, is answerable for every such wrong of the servant or agent as is committed in the course of the service and for the master's benefit, though no express command or privity of the master be proved. Granted that the principal has not authorized the particular act, but he has put the agent in his place to do that class of acts, and he is answerable for the manner in which the agent has conducted himself in doing the business with which the principal has entrusted him: see Barwick v. English Joint Stock Bank, in the Exchequer Chamber, 15 W. R. 877, L. R. 2 Ex. 259. Therefore, if it is any longer necessary to grant an injunction, I grant an injunction against the defendant society in the same form as that granted last week against the other defendants.

The Court of Appeal, however, held that a trade union could not be sued as such, in its registered name (see 49 W. R. 101); and accordingly reversed the judgment of Farwell, J.

The plaintiffs appealed to the House of Lords.

Sir E. Clarke, K.C., and Swinfen Eady, K.C. (Francis Williams, K.C., and H. H. Gregory with them), for the appellants.

Haldane, K.C., and S. T. Evans, K.C. (T. B. Napier and Clement Edwards with them), for the respondents.

THE HOUSE took time for consideration.

Earl of HALSBURY, L.C.—In this case I am content to adopt the judgment of Farwell, J., with which I entirely concur; and I cannot find any satisfactory answer to that judgment in the judgment of the Court of Appeal which overruled it. If the Legislature has created a thing which can own property, which can employ servants, which can inflict injury, it must be taken, I think, to have impliedly given the power to make it suable in a court of law for injuries purposely done by its authority and procurement. I move your lordships that the judgment of the Court of Appeal be reversed, and that of Farwell, J., restored.

Lord MACNAGHTEN.—I am of the same opinion. Although I should be well content to adopt the judgment of Farwell, J., and the reasons he has given, I will venture to add a few words of my own, partly out of respect for the Master of the Rolls, from whose opinion I never dissent without the greatest hesitation, and partly in deference to the arguments of counsel, which before your lordships have ranged over a wide field, and, on the part of the respondents, have, I think, assumed a somewhat bolder tone than in the court below.

The case divides itself into two questions. One may be described as a question of substance; the other is rather a question of form.

Parliament has legalized trade unions whether registered or not. If registered, they enjoy certain advantages. The respondent society is a registered trade union. Subject to such control as an annual general meeting can exercise, the government of the society is in the hands of its executive committee, a small body with vast powers, including an unlimited power of disposition over the funds of the union, except so far as it may be interfered with by the annual general meeting or restricted by the operation of the society's rules, of which in case of doubt the executive committee is the sole authorized interpreter. Mr. Haldane pointed out, what is true enough, that the funds of the society were contributed for benefit purposes as well as for trade purposes, and warned your lordships that, if those funds were made answerable for the consequences of such acts as those complained of in the present case, the widow and the orphan might suffer in consequence of the ill-advised or illegal action of the executive of the union. At first sight that seems a plausible argument. But the truth is that all the funds of the society, for whatever purpose they may be collected, form a common fund. That, I believe, is the case with most, if not all, trade unions. If you take up the report of the Royal Commission on Trade Unions and turn to the statement accompanying the minority report, you will see that there was nothing on which the advocates of trade unions insisted more strongly or more firmly than on the right of unions to employ the whole of their funds, if they chose, for the purpose of strikes and in connection therewith. "At present," say the authors of that statement, "the strength of the union and the confidence of its members simply consists in this, that it can, if so disposed, employ the whole of its funds in the support of the trade ends." An enforced separation of the funds of the union would be, they say, "arbitrary interference with the liberty of association," it would "paralyze the efficiency of the institution." The suggestion of such a proposal is "tantamount to a proposal to suppress unionism by statute."

The substantial question, therefore, as Farwell, J., put it, is this: Has the Legislature authorized the creation of numerous bodies of men capable of owning wealth and of acting by agents with absolutely no responsibility for the wrongs they may do to other persons by the use of that wealth and the employment of those agents? In my opinion Parliament has done nothing of the kind. I can find nothing in the Acts of 1871 and 1876, or either of them, from beginning to end to warrant such a notion. Nor, indeed, was anything of the kind contemplated by the minority of the members of the Royal Commission on Trade Unions, whose views found acceptance with the Legislature. In paragraph 4 of the minorty report they say: "It should be specially provided that, except so far as combinations are thereby exempted from criminal prosecutions, nothing should affect the liability of every person to be sued at law or in equity in respect of any damage which may have been occasioned to any other person through the act or default of the person so sued." Now, if the liability of every person in this respect was to be preserved, it would seem to follow that it was intended by the strongest advocates of trade unionism that persons should be liable for concerted as well as for individual action. And for this purpose it seems to me that it cannot matter in the least whether persons acting in concert be combined together in a trade union, or collected or united in any other form of association.

Then, if trade unions are not above the law, the only remaining question, as it seems to me, is one of form—how are these bodies to be sued? I have no doubt whatever that a trade union, whether registered or unregistered, may be sued in a representative action if the persons selected as defendants be persons who, from their position, may be taken fairly to represent the body. As regards this point, Mr. Haldane relied on the case of Temperton v. Russell, 41 W. R. 565, [1893] 1 Q. B. 715; but Temperton v. Russell, as I have said before, was an absurd case. The persons there selected as representatives of the various unions intended to be sued were selected in defiance of all rule and principle. They were not the managers of the union, they had no control over it or over its funds. Their names seem to have been taken at random for the purpose, I suppose, of spreading a general sense of insecurity among the unions which ought to have been sued, if sued at all, either in their registered name, if that be permissible, or by their proper officers—the members of their executive committees and their trustees.

Mr. Haldane, indeed, was bold enough to say that if a wrong was committed by a body of persons acting in concert, who were too numerous to be made defendants in an action, the person injured would be without remedy unless he could fasten upon the individuals who actually did or were actually doing the wrong. Then he was asked what would he say to such a case as this: Suppose there were a manufactory belonging to a co-operative society unregistered and composed of a great number of persons (as there well might be but for the provision in the Companies Act making illegal an unregistered trading society consisting of more than twenty members), and suppose such a manufactory were poisoning a stream or fouling the atmosphere to the injury of its neighbours, might it do so with impunity? Mr. Haldane said, "Yes, unless you could pounce upon the individual offenders." It seems to me that this is a reductio ad absurdum. I should be sorry to think that the law was so powerless, and therefore it seems to me that there would be no difficulty in suing a trade union in such a case, if it be sued in a representative action by persons who would fairly and properly represent it.

The further question remains, May a registered trade union be sued in and by its registered name? For my part I cannot see any difficulty in the way of such a suit. It is quite true that a registered trade union is not a corporation, but it has a registered name and a registered office. The registered name is nothing more than a collective name for all the members. The registered office is the place where it carries on business. A partnership firm which is not a corporation, nor, I suppose, a legal entity, may now be sued in the firm's name. And so, when I find that the Act of Parliament actually provides for a registered trade union being sued in certain cases by its registered name as a trade union, and does not say that the cases specified are the only cases in which it may so sued, I can see nothing contrary to principle or contrary to the provisions of the Trade Union Acts in holding that a trade union may be sued by its registered name.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the appeal should be allowed, and the judgment of Farwell, J., restored, with costs here and below.

Lord SHAND, whose judgment was read by Lord Macnaghten, said: I am also of opinion that the judgment of the Court of Appeal should be reversed, and the judgment of Farwell, J., restored, and an injunction granted against the respondents in the terms settled by his lordship.

The admirable judgment of Farwell, J., in whose reasoning I entirely agree, makes it unnecessary again to go over the provisions of the statutes of 1871 and 1876, particularly after what has been said by your lordships. I shall only add a few words in regard to the judgment of the Court of Appeal. It is true, as repeatedly stated, both by Farwell, J., and by the Master of the Rolls, that by neither of the statutes are trade unions, although registered, declared to be incorporations, which would as a consequence give them a right to sue and render them liable to be sued in the society's name. It is equally true, as the Master of the Rolls observes, that the right to sue and liability to be sued may be conferred by statute, either expressly or by implication. In the words of the learned Master of the Rolls, enactments "must be found either express or implied enabling this to be done." I agree in thinking there is no express enactment to that effect, but, with great deference, in my opinion the power of suing and liability to be sued in the society's name is clearly and necessarily implied by the provisions of the statutes. If Farwell, J., had not carefully gone over and pointed out these provisions in his judgment, I should have thought it right now to do so, but I content myself with referring to what he has so well said. A registered trade union has an exclusive right to the name in which it is registered, a right to hold a limited amount of real estate and unlimited personal estate for its own use and benefit and the benefit of its members, the power of acting by its agents and trustees, and is liable to be sued for penalties, as it appears to me, in the society's name. I am clearly of opinion that these and the provisions generally of the statutes imply a liability of the society to be sued in its trade union name, and a privilege of thus suing.

I am further of opinion that as the society by its agents is alleged to have been violating the law as stated by the appellants and sworn in their affidavits, the appellants are entitled to an injunction, not only against the agents but against the society itself for whom their servants and agents were acting.

Lord BRAMPTON.—I shall trouble your lordships with but a few words, for I entirely concur in the judgment and words of the Lord Chancellor in adopting the judgment of Farwell, J. I do not think this House is called upon to do more to-day than determine whether a primâ facie case has been disclosed by the Taff Vale Railway Co. entitling them to the injunction they claimed, and whether the trade union society can be sued for such an injunction in its registered name. I think both these questions ought to be answered in the affirmative.

The lawless acts alleged to have been committed, and the continuance of which was more than probable, were clearly wrongful acts, which justified the Taff Vale Railway Co. in seeking to have them restrained by those who caused them to be committed; and inasmuch as they were done by men acting as agents of the society in furtherance of a strike, sanctioned and directed by its authorized officers, the society is responsible for them. Whether it is so responsible in and by its registered name is the only remaining question.

I see no reason why this question should not also be answered in the affirmative. I think that a legal entity was created under the Trade Union Act, 1871, by the registration of the society in its present name, in the manner prescribed, and that a legal entity so created, though not perhaps in the strict sense a corporation, is nevertheless a newly created corporate body, created by statute distinct from the unincorporated trade union, consisting of many thousands of separate individuals, which no longer exists under any other name. The very omission from the statute of any provision authorizing and directing that it shall sue and be sued in any other name than that given to it by its registration appears to me to lead to no other reasonable conclusion than that in so creating it, it was intended by the Legislature that by that name and by no other it should be known, and that for all purposes that name should be used and applied to it in all legal proceedings, unless there was any other provision which militated against such a construction, as, for instance, in the case of trustees, by section 9 of the same Act, who hold real and personal property of the society. I may refer also to the effect of the rules with regard to the present registration. I find that rule 7 (3) provides that the funds of every branch shall be the common property of the society. That being so, I do not see how it would be possible for these funds to be made applicable for remuneration or recompense or redress for any wrongful act done by a body of men like the society, unless the society can be sued in the way in which it is proposed to sue them, and as I think it may be.

For the reasons I have very shortly given, I am of opinion that the judgment of the Court of Appeal should be reversed, and the judgment of Farwell, J., restored.

Lord LINDLEY.—The problem how to adapt legal proceedings to unincorporated societies consisting of many members is by no means new. The rules as to parties to common law actions were too rigid for practical purposes when those rules had to be applied to such societies; but the rules as to parties to suits in equity were not the same as those which governed courts of common law, and were long since adapted to meet the difficulties presented by a multiplicity of persons interested in the subject-matter of litigation. Some of such persons were allowed to sue and be sued on behalf of themselves and all others having the same interest. This was done avowedly to prevent failure of justice: see Meux v. Maltby, 2 Swans. 277, and the observations of Sir George Jessel, M.R., in Commissioners of Sewers v. Gellatly, 24 W. R. 1059, 3 Ch. D. 610.

The principle on which the rule is based forbids its restriction to cases for which an exact precedent can be found in the reports. The principle is as applicable to new cases as to old, and ought to be applied to the exigencies of modern life as occasion requires. The rule itself has been embodied and made applicable to the various divisions of the High Court by the Judicature Act of 1873, and by ord. 16, r. 9, and the unfortunate observations made on that rule in Temperton v. Russell have been happily corrected in this House in the case of Bedford (Duke of) v. Ellis, [1901] A. C. 1, 49 W. R. Dig. 145, and in the course of the argument in the present case.

I have myself no doubt whatever that if the trade union could not be sued in this case in its registered name some of its members—namely, its executive committee—could be sued on behalf of themselves and other members of the society, and an injunction and judgment for damages could be obtained in a proper case in an action so framed. Further, it is, in my opinion, equally plain that if the trustees in whom the property of the society is legally vested were added as parties, an order could be made in the same action for the payment by them out of the funds of the society of all damages and costs for which the plaintiff might obtain judgment against the trade union.

I entirely repudiate the notion that the effect of the Trade Union Act of 1871 is to legalize trade unions and confer on them rights to acquire and hold property, and at the same time to protect the union from legal proceedings if their managers or agents acting for the whole body violate the rights of other people. For such violation the property of a trade union can unquestionably, in my opinion, be reached by legal proceedings properly framed. The Court of Appeal has not denied this, but it has held that the trade union cannot be sued in its registered name; and in strictness the only question for determination by your lordships now is whether the Court of Appeal was right in holding that the name of the trade union ought to be struck out of the writ and that the injunction granted against the trade union in that name ought to be discharged.

If I am right in what I have already said, this question is of comparatively small importance. It is not a question of substance, but of mere form, and turns on the Trade Union Act of 1871 and on the amending Act of 1876. The principal Act does not in express terms say what use is to be made of the name under which the trade union is registered and by which it is known; but a trade union which is registered under the Act must have a name—sections 14 and 16, and Schedule I. It may acquire property, but, not being incorporated, recourse is had to the old well-known machinery of trustees for acquiring and holding such property and for suing and being sued in respect of it. Sections 7, 8, and 9 show this. The property so held, however, is the property of the union. The union is the beneficial owner. Section 12 provides summary remedies for misapplications of trade unions' property, but there is nothing here to oust the jurisdiction of the superior courts; and, there being nothing in the Act to prevent it, I cannot conceive why an action in the name of the trade union against its trustees to restrain a breach of trust or to make them account for a breach of trust already committed, should be held unmaintainable or wrong in point of form. Further, sections 15 and 16 of the Act of 1871 and section 16 of the Act of 1876 impose duties on registered trade unions, and penalties on them (and not only on their officials) for breach of those duties. The mode of enforcing these penalties is pointed out in section 19 of the Act of 1871, but there is nothing there to show that the trade union on which the duty is cast, and which has to pay the penalty, could not be proceeded against in its registered name. Again, I apprehend that a mandamus could go against a trade union to compel it to perform the duties cast upon it by statute; and here, again, the obvious course would be to proceed against the union by its registered name, unless there is something in the statute to prevent it. A careful study of the Act leads me to the conclusion that the Court of Appeal held, and rightly held, that trade unions are not corporations; but the Court held, further, that, not being corporations, power to sue and be sued in their registered name must be conferred upon them, and that the language of the statutes was not sufficient for the purpose. Upon this last point I differ from them. The Act appears to me to indicate with sufficient clearness that the registered name is one which may be used to denote the union as an unincorporated society in legal proceedings, as well as for business and other purposes. The use of the name in legal proceedings imposes no duties and alters no rights; it is only a more convenient mode of proceeding than that which would have to be adopted if the name could not be used. I do not say that the use of the name is compulsory, but it is, at least, permissive.

Your lordships have not now to consider how a judgment or order against a trade union in its registered name can be enforced. I see no difficulty about this, but to avoid misconception I will add that if a judgment or order in that form is for the payment of money, it can, in my opinion, only be enforced against the property of the trade union, and that to reach such property it may be found necessary to sue the trustees.

I am of opinion that the orders of Farwell, J., were right and should be restored.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for appellants, Williamson, Hill, & Co., for Ingledew & Sons, Cardiff.

Solicitors for respondents, Riddell & Co., for Meyrick, Davies, & Forsdike, Cardiff.

From C. A. (England). July 23, 1901.

JACOBS v. BOOTH'S DISTILLERY. (a.)

Practice—R. S. C. ord. 14—Leave to defend.

Unless the court is satisfied that the defendant has no defence, the plaintiff is not entitled to judgment under order 14. The merits of the case are not to be gone into upon an application under this order, and a defence is not to be shut out where on the disclosed facts a triable issue arises.

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Appeal from order of Court of Appeal affirming that of the master and judge.

The respondents brought an action against the appellant and another person for £3,000 odd, claimed under the following circumstances:

To secure an advance and further sums by the respondents, the appellant had signed a memorandum of charge and promissory notes, together with the other defendant, who did not contest his liability.

The appellant received an indemnity from this co-defendant, and said he was informed that he incurred no liability by signing, and that he had done so relying on this statement.

On a summons under order 14 the master ordered the amount to be paid into court by the defendants within seven days, with judgment if the sum was not so paid.

This order was affirmed by the judge and by the Court of Appeal.

The defendant Jacobs appealed to the House of Lords.

R. A. McCall, K.C., and F. Low, for the appellant.

Joseph Walton, K.C., and Herbert, for the respondent company.

Earl of HALSBURY, L.C.—I am of opinion that this judgment ought to be reversed. I am surprised at the decision which has been arrived at by the tribunals before whom this question has come. I think that if this is an example of the mode in which order 14 is administered, it would be desirable for the Legislature to consider whether that order should continue to be put in force. People do not seem to understand that the effect of order 14 is not that upon the allegation of the one side or the other a man is not to be permitted to defend himself in a court.

Order 14 was intended to prevent sham defences from defeating the rights of the parties by delay, and at the same time causing great loss to plaintiffs who were endeavouring to enforce their rights. I do not propose to deal with the facts or the merits of the case, which will have to be dealt with when the cause is tried, as it ought to be tried. But I am bound to say that it startles me to think that in a case of this sort an order should be made, the effect of which is that the defendant is not to be heard to make his defence. It appears to me that order 14 is quite inappropriate to the facts of this case, so far as they are intelligible.

Lord MACNAGHTEN.—I agree.

Lord JAMES OF HEREFORD.—The view which I think ought to be taken of order 14 is that the tribunal to which the application is made should simply determine "Is there a triable issue to go before a jury or court?" It ought not to enter into the merits of the case at all, and should make the order only when it can say to the person who opposes the order, "You have no defence; you could not by general demurrer, if it were a point of law, raise a defence here. We think it impossible for you to go before any tribunal to determine the question of fact." I think there is here a plain issue to be tried.

Lord BRAMPTON.—I entirely agree.

Lord LINDLEY.—I agree. I think the case ought to be tried.

Order appealed from reversed. Respondent company to pay to the appellant the costs both here and below.

Solicitor for appellant, Shirley Woolmer.

Solicitors for respondents, Foster, Spicer, & Foster.

From C. A. (England). July 22, 1901.

GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY v. LONDON AND COUNTY BANKING CO. (a.)

Banker—Bill of exchange—Crossed cheque—"Not negotiable"—Receipt of payment for customer—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), ss. 81 and 82.

A rate collector who is well known and accustomed to get cheques cashed at a bank, but having no account of his own there, is not a "customer" within the meaning of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, s. 82. Should a bank cash for such a person a cheque drawn upon another bank in favour of such a person as payee, but marked "not negotiable," and afterwards receive payment of the amount from the bank on which the cheque is drawn; if the cheque had been obtained by such payee by false pretences, the first-mentioned bank is not protected from liability to the drawer by the above section.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (48 W. R. 662, [1900] 2 Q. B. 464) reversed.

This was an appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal (A. L. Smith, Vaughan Williams, and Romer, L.JJ.), reported 48 W. R. 662, [1900] 2 Q. B. 464.

The action was brought to recover £142 10s., money had and received by the respondents to the use of the appellants, or in the alternative to recover damages to a like amount for the conversion of a cheque.

One Huggins had been for many years a rate collector in the employment of the Wantage District Council and for many years had been in the habit of receiving from the respondents' branch bank at Wantage cash for cheques. He was well known at the bank, but had no account there. By falsely pretending that a poor rate had been made he obtained from the appellants a cheque of the value of £142 10s.

Huggins was subsequently tried and convicted of obtaining the cheque by false pretences.

The cheque was drawn in favour of Huggins or order on the London Joint Stock Bank, and was crossed "and Co.," and marked "not negotiable." Huggins, in accordance with his usual practice, took the cheque to the branch bank of the respondent company at Wantage, who gave him the sum of £117 10s. in notes and gold, and carried the balance, £25, to the credit of the Wantage Rural District Council, at the request of Huggins, in discharge of his liability to the council. The cheque was presented by the respondents the next day at the London Joint Stock Bank and payment was made on behalf of the appellants.

At the trial Bigham, J., found as a fact that the respondents received payment of the cheque in good faith and without negligence, and that they so received payment for Huggins, and that as Huggins was a customer of the bank within the meaning of section 82 of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, the respondents were protected from liability.

The Court of Appeal (Vaughan Williams, L.J., doubting as to bank receiving payment of the cheque for Huggins) affirmed the judgment of Bigham, J.

H. D. Greene, K.C. (Asquith, K.C., and Park Goff with him), for the appellants.

A. T. Lawrence, K.C., and Guy Lushington, for the respondents.

THE HOUSE took time for consideration.

Earl of HALSBURY, L.C.—The importance of this case depends upon the true construction of sections 81 and 82 of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882. I think there are more reasons than one for the opinion I entertain. But the sections are of such wide and general importance that I prefer to rest my judgment upon that.

I think it is very important that everyone should know that people who take a cheque which is marked "not negotiable" and treat it as a negotiable security must recognize the fact that if they do so they take the risk of the person for whom they negotiate it having no title to it. In this case it cannot be pretended that Huggins had any title to do it at all. I do not understand what additional security is supposed to be given to a cheque by putting the words "not negotiable" upon it, if the fact of its being negotiated can give a title to anyone. The supposed distinction between the title to the cheque itself and the title to the money obtained by it seems to me to be absolutely illusory. The language of the statute, which seems to be clear enough, would be absolutely defeated by holding that a fraudulent holder of the cheque could give a title either to the cheque or to the money. Section 82, which contemplates the receipt of such cheque in the ordinary course of business for the customer of a bank, seems to me to contemplate a totally different class of transaction from what is disclosed in this case. The bank thought proper to take this cheque as representing its face value; and if the holder of it had no title, as he certainly had not, there is nothing in section 82 which will entitle them to treat it as a receiving payment for a customer.

It is not true to say that the banker is here sought to be made liable by reason of his having received payment for a customer. I do not think that Huggins was a customer of the bank at all within the meaning of the sections, but what the bank are really insisting upon here is the valid negotiability of a cheque which was fraudulently obtained, and which, by the form of it, it is enacted by the statute, shall give no better title to the cheque than that which the person from whom it was taken had, shall nevertheless give a title to them which shall enable them to sue.

As I have said, I do not think Huggins was a customer at all. I do not think the transaction was a banking transaction; and although I think there is another and a distinct ground which would defeat the bank's claim, I am content to rest my judgment upon the true construction of the statute.

I therefore move your lordships that the judgment of the Court of Appeal be reversed, and that judgment be entered for the appellant with costs.

Lord SHAND (whose judgment was read by Lord Davey) said: I have found the decision of this case to be attended with much difficulty, but have come to be of opinion with your lordships that the judgment of Bigham, J., and the Court of Appeal should be reversed. Having had an opportunity of considering the judgment about to be delivered by my noble and learned friend Lord Lindley, I concur in that judgment and in his lordship's views of the provisions of the Bills of Exchange Act, and in the reasons which his lordship has given for the reversal of the decision of the Court of Appeal.

Lord DAVEY.—The first point raised by counsel for the appellants was that Huggins, in the circumstances which are stated in the case, had a property in the cheque which was indeed voidable by the appellants, who had been defrauded, but that the money having been received by the respondents in good faith and without notice of the fraud, before the appellants had disaffirmed the transaction, it could not be recovered back from them, the respondents. Horwood v. Smith, 2 T. R. 750, and the Sale of Goods

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Act, 1893, s. 24, were cited in support of this proposition. I am of opinion that Huggins never had any property in the cheque, which was handed to him only as the collector and agent of the overseers in payment of a debt alleged to be due to them. The appellants never intended to vest any property in him for his own benefit, but the property in the cheque was intended to be passed to his employers, the overseers, notwithstanding that it was made payable to Huggins's order. Huggins, therefore, had no real title to the cheque, and, it being marked "not negotiable," the respondents never acquired title to it as against the appellants. I think that this is shown by the cases of Higgons v. Burton, 5 W. R. 683, 26 L. J. Ex. 342, and Cundy v. Lindsay, 26 W. R. 406, 3 App. Cas. 459. In the former case one Dix, pretending to be agent for one Fitzgibbon, obtained goods from the plaintiff and pledged them to the defendant. It was held that the plaintiff could recover the goods from the defendant before any notice of the fraud or disaffirmance of the transaction. And in Cundy v. Lindsay the same principle was affirmed in this House. Bigham, J., and the Court of Appeal, however, decided in favour of the respondents on the ground that Huggins was a customer of the respondents, who received the cheque for collection on his behalf within the meaning of section 82 of the Bills of Exchange Act. The facts upon which they came to that conclusion are that Huggins had for about twenty years been in the habit of cashing cheques received by him as collector of rates on the respondents' bank. His employers, the overseers, kept their account at another bank in Newbury, and it was primâ facie his duty to pay cheques received by him for rates into their banking account. It does not appear whether Huggins cashed cheques at the respondents' bank in any cases except those in which he had to make payments out of the rate collected as poor rate to the credit of the waywarden or rural district council, who kept their accounts with the respondents. In all the instances which were put in evidence from the books of the respondents the transaction was similar to the one in question—namely, a payment to the credit of a customer of the respondents by means of a large cheque, out of which Huggins received the change. He was asked the question in cross-examination whether he ever cashed cheques with the respondents except when he had to make a payment out of the rate to the credit of one of their customers. Unfortunately a discussion arose and the question was never answered. It is not shown that he did so, and I doubt whether he ever did. But, be this as it may, I do not think that the relation of customer and banker was ever established between him and the respondents. It is true that there is no definition of customer in the Act, but it is a well-known expression and I think that there must be some sort of account—either a deposit or a current account, or some similar relation—to make a man a customer of a banker. On the facts proved in this case I do not think the respondents undertook any duty towards Huggins. They took the cheque he offered in payment of a sum to be placed to the credit of their customers and gave him the change, or in some cases (though it is not proved) they may have bought his cheque, possibly for their own convenience in remitting to the head office. But this will not in my opinion prove that Huggins was a customer, or that they undertook to collect the cheque on his behalf so as to bring them within the protection of section 82. I therefore agree that the appeal should be allowed.

Lord BRAMPTON.—Although I am of opinion that the evidence in this case would have justified the conviction of Huggins for larceny under section 88 of the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), still, as the jury by their verdict in fact found him guilty of obtaining the cheque by false pretences—that is, of a misdemeanour and not of a felony—and as throughout the trial of this action the case was so treated, both by the appellants and the respondents, I have thought it right so to treat it in considering the question of the respondents' liability now before your lordships.

I do not, however, look upon this distinction as at all material, for the question before this House is not whether the respondents, when they received the cheque from Huggins, became the holders in due course in the sense that they were bonâ fide holders for value without notice of the fraud, nor whether they continued to be so until after the cheque was honoured by the appellants' bankers, upon whom it was drawn—for nobody impeaches the absolute integrity of the respondents, their officers, and clerks—but whether, in taking this cheque with the words "not negotiable," added to the general crossing "—— & Co.," written upon the face of it by the secretary of the appellants before it was sent to Huggins, the respondents' right to receive payment of it was affected by section 81 of the Bill of Exchange Act, 1882, and was not within the protection of section 82.

I deal first with section 81, which enacts, "Where a person takes a crossed cheque which bears on it the words "not negotiable,' he shall not have, and shall not be capable of giving a better title to the cheque than that which the person from whom he took it had." The object of this section is obvious. It is to afford to the drawer or the holder (section 77) of a cheque who is desirous of transmitting it to another person as much protection as can reasonably be afforded to it against dishonesty or accidental miscarriage in the course of its transit, if he will only take the precaution to cross it, with the addition of the words "not negotiable," so as to make it difficult to get such cheque so crossed cashed until it reaches its destination.

To apply that section to the present case, I cannot imagine that anybody would entertain a doubt that a person who obtains from another, by a fraudulently false pretence, a cheque so crossed with the intent to appropriate the proceeds to his own use, as Huggins did, could make any real title to such cheque; practically it would be the same as if he had stolen it. Having no title himself, he had none to give to anybody else; and if this had been the case of an obliging tradesman cashing the cheque for a friend, it would have been unarguable.

But it is said the respondents, being bankers, are protected from liability to pay over to the appellants the moneys they have received by the honouring of the cheque, by section 82, which enacts that "where a banker in good faith and without negligence receives payment for a customer of a cheque crossed generally, or specially to himself, and the customer has no title, or a defective title thereto, the banker shall not incur any liability to the true owner of the cheque by reason only of having received such payment."

That the respondents in good faith received payment for the cheque is beyond question. I am not, however, quite so sure that it was altogether without negligence, for I must assume the manager at Wantage knew the meaning and legal effect of the crossing, with the words "not negotiable." This point, however, does not appear to have been raised, and certainly there was no finding upon it at the trial. I will reject it, therefore, for present purposes.

The only remaining question is whether the money received by the respondents' bank, when the cheque was honoured, was so received for any customer of the bank. I cannot come to the conclusion that it was. Nor do I think the evidence would justify such a finding. Huggins had no banking account at all anywhere. It is not necessary to say that the keeping of an ordinary banking account is essential to constitute a person a customer of a bank, for if it were shown that cheques were habitually lodged with a bank for presentation on behalf of the persons lodging them, and that when honoured the amount was credited and paid out to such person, whether with or without any profit to the bank for so presenting them, I would not say that such transactions might not constitute such person a customer within the meaning of section 82; indeed, I think they would. But as between Huggins and the Wantage branch of the respondents' bank the transaction amounted to nothing of the sort.

It is true that for many years the branch bank manager had been in the habit of accommodating Huggins by cashing cheques made payable to him, some crossed and some not crossed; but none marked "not negotiable." All the cheques were cashed across the counter before presentation. Sometimes a portion of the amount was paid by Huggins's direction in to the credit of the account kept with the bank by the Wantage Rural District Council, but there was never a cheque so changed without Huggins getting some cash out of it, and upon no occasion was a cheque paid in to the credit of the Wantage account above mentioned for presentation on their account; and I can well understand why it was so, because once paid in it could not have been got out without a cheque of the Wantage Rural District Council. I should further observe that the language of section 82 is where a banker "receives payment for a customer." In the case before your lordships on every occasion of cheques so cashed the money had already been given to Huggins in exchange for the cheque; the money paid to the respondents has been received on their own account to reimburse them, and not on account of Huggins at all.

For these reasons I think the transaction between Huggins and the respondents is not within the protection of section 82, and that as Huggins could give the respondents no better title than he had himself the appellants are entitled to your lordships' judgment, and that this appeal should be allowed with costs.

Lord LINDLEY.—In the view I take of this case it is unnecessary to determine whether Huggins was guilty of larceny in stealing the cheque, or whether he only obtained it by false pretences, which is the crime of which he was convicted. Whether the cheque was void or only voidable, as contended by Mr. Lawrence, appears to me really immaterial.

Be it void or be it voidable, it was not negotiable, and by section 81 of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, Huggins was not capable of giving a better title to the cheque than he had himself. But it is said that, although the bank had a defective title to the cheque, they have a good title to the money paid to them as holders of it. So to construe the section would destroy more than half its utility; a cheque marked "not negotiable" would be no safer than any other cheque if once cashed—that is, unless payment of it was stopped before it was presented.

I cannot think this an admissible construction; it has never yet been judicially adopted, and I advise your lordships to reject it. Everyone who takes a cheque marked "not negotiable" takes it at his own risk, and his title to the money got by its means is as defective as his title to the cheque itself. Fisher v. Roberts, 3 Times L. R. 354, is an authority to this effect, and section 82 seems to me framed on the assumpton that this view is correct. The section would not otherwise be wanted.

Upon the other point, it is plain to me that the bank obtained payment of the cheque for themselves and not for Huggins. Whether the bank is to be regarded as having purchased the cheque, or as having advanced him its amount on the security of it, seems to me immaterial. The bank wanted the money for themselves, and not for him. They were entitled to hold the money as against him, and were under no obligation to remit it to him. In no ordinary sense of the expression can the bank be regarded as collecting the money for him, although, no doubt, if the bank could keep the money all liability on his part would be at an end, and in that way he would be benefited by the receipt of the money. Section 82 of the Act is a mere reproduction of the previous Act of 1876, and the construction put upon that Act in the case of Mathiessen v. London and County Bank, 27 W. R. 838, 5 C. P. D. 7, was, in my opinion, correct. In Clarke v. London and County Banking Co., 45 W. R. 383, [1897] 1 Q. B. 552, the cheque was paid in for collection, and this was the ratio decidendi.

Further, I cannot think that Huggins was in any sense a customer of the bank; no doubt he was known at the bank as a person accustomed to come and get cheques cashed, but he had no account of any sort with the bank. Nothing was put to his debit or credit in any book or paper kept by the bank. The entry in the waste-book, p. 20, is only a memorandum of the transaction. Romer, L.J., thought he was a customer because the bank had for years collected money for him; but, in my view, the bank collected money for themselves, not for him, in this particular transaction, and the evidence only shows that previous transactions were similar to this.

The case suggested by Romer L.J., of a customer paying in a non-negotiable cheque to his own credit when his account is overdrawn appears to me very different from that which is before your lordships for decision. The reasoning of Vaughan Williams L.J., commends itself to my mind, and, although out of deference to his colleagues he accepted a view which he would not otherwise have entertained, I am clearly of opinion that the judgments appealed from should be reversed, and that judgment should be entered for the plaintiffs with costs, and that they should have the costs of this appeal.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitor for appellants, R. R. Nelson.

Solicitors for respondents, Harries, Wilkinson, & Raikes.

Court of Appeal.

From K. B. Div. (Collins, M.R., and Stirling and Mathew, L.JJ.) — Oct. 30.

JENNINGS v. MATHER.

GRAY (Claimant). (a.)

Bankruptcy — Interpleader — Property divisible among creditors—Property held on trust—Assignee for benefit of creditors—Right of indemnity over assets—Lien passing to trustee in bankruptcy—Execution creditor—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 44.

The assignee of a business under a deed of assignment for the benefit of creditors who incurs debts in carrying on the business has a right of indemnity or lien over the assets of the business which on his bankruptcy passes to his trustee.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RÜCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The assignee of a business under such a deed incurred a debt in carrying it on, for which judgment was signed against him, and the judgment creditor seized some of the assets of the business in execution. The assignee then became bankrupt.

Held, that, although the assets of the business were properly held by the assignee on trust, and so, by virtue of section 44 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, were not divisible among his creditors, yet the trustee in bankruptcy had such an interest in them as to entitle him to succeed in an interpleader issue against the execution creditor.

Decision of the Divisional Court (49 W. R. 495, [1901] 1 Q. B. 108) affirmed.

Appeal from the judgment of a Divisional Court (Lawrance and Kennedy, JJ.) on the hearing of an appeal from the Bradford County Court: 49 W. R. 495, [1901] 1 Q. B. 108.

In June, 1898, Messrs. Smales Brothers & Co., who were carrying on business at Bradford, executed a deed of assignment for the benefit of their creditors, by which they transferred all their trade assets to one Mather as trustee in trust to carry on the business and apply the profits in paying the creditors fifteen shillings in the pound, and subject to this in trust for Smales Brothers.

Mather carried on the business in accordance with the trust, and in so doing incurred debts, among others, to one Jennings.

Jennings being unable to obtain payment of his debt sued Mather as trustee of Smales Brothers and obtained judgment, on which execution was issued, and the sheriff seized under the execution certain of the trade assets.

Before they were sold Mather absconded and was adjudicated a bankrupt, one Gray being appointed his trustee in bankruptcy. Gray then claimed the goods seized by the sheriff, and the sheriff interpleaded.

The goods were sold by consent, and the proceeds, amounting to £120, were paid into court, and an issue was directed to be tried in the county court to determine whether the proceeds of the goods sold were the property of Gray, Mather's trustee in bankruptcy, or of Jennings, the execution creditor.

The county court judge gave judgment for the execution creditor, holding that the goods in question, being trust property, by virtue of section 44 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, did not pass to the trustee in bankruptcy.

The Divisional Court reversed the decision of the county court judge and gave judgment for the claimant, holding that though the assets of the business were property held by the bankrupt on trust, and so, by virtue of section 44 of the Bankruptcy Act, were not divisible among his creditors, yet he had a right of indemnity or lien over them which passed to his trustee in bankruptcy, and that therefore the trustee in bankruptcy was entitled to succeed as against the execution creditor.

The execution creditor appealed.

Muir Mackenzie, for the execution creditor.—The execution creditor is primâ facie entitled to the proceeds of the sale of the goods, and the burden is on the claimant to show that he has a superior title. The claimant here does not satisfy that burden, because he does not show that Mather was in fact in a position to avail himself of the lien which is relied on. If Mather's liabilities incurred in the execution of the trust were less than what he received on account of the trust—if, in other words, he had made any default in carrying out the trust, then he would not be in a position to avail himself of the lien.

J. G. Wood (Carrington with him), for the claimant.—It is too late to take the point that there was no evidence that Mather was in a position to avail himself of the lien. If that point had been taken at the hearing in the county court, it might have been met by evidence.

COLLINS, M.R.—I am of opinion that this appeal must be dismissed. The question arises on an interpleader issue directed to be tried between Gray, the trustee in bankruptcy of Mather, and Jennings, an execution creditor. Mather was the assignee of the trade assets of the firm of Messrs. Smales Brothers & Co. under a trust deed by which he was to carry on the business as trustee for the creditors of the firm. In dealing with the trust estate Mather became liable to creditors, and among others to Jennings, for various debts. Those debts, though Mather was personally liable for them, were incurred by him in his capacity as trustee, and he had a right to resort against the trust estate for indemnity against that personal liability.

But the goods of the estate were not the goods of Mather and were not liable to execution for his debts. Jennings obtained judgment against Mather, and also obtained leave to issue execution. But he was only entitled to take in execution the goods of the debtor. The goods which he did in fact take were not the goods of the debtor. Mather having become bankrupt, the trustee in bankruptcy says that though he has no claim on the trust estate he has a right to stand in Mather's shoes, and he says that Mather had a lien on the trust goods to indemnify him against any liability incurred by him in carrying out the trust, and that as against an execution creditor the goods ought to be allowed to remain where they are to satisfy that lien. I do not think the execution creditor had any right to take the goods at all. And apart from that, in my opinion, the right of the trustee in bankruptcy has not been displaced. It is said by the execution creditor that Mather could not avail himself of the lien if he had made defaults in carrying out the trust which outweighed the liabilities which he had incurred, and that the burden of proof was on the trustee in bankruptcy to show that no such defaults had been made. I do not think the trustee in bankruptcy ought to be called upon to prove that negative. In my opinion the decision of the Divisional Court is right, and the judgment of Kennedy, J., is admirable.

STIRLING, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I think that Kennedy, J., accurately stated the legal position of the parties in this case. He held that Mather, as a trustee, had an equitable right to indemnfy himself against all liabilities incurred by him in performing the trust out of the trust property, which right was available to the trustee in bankruptcy and ought to be enforced in his favour as against an execution creditor who has seized the trust goods. I think he was right in so holding. Every trustee has for his protection the right to have all costs and expenses properly incurred by him in carrying out the trust paid out of the estate, and such costs and expenses form a first charge on the trust property. And the trustee has a right to resort to that property without the assistance of the court for indemnity against all liabilities incurred by him in the administration of the trust. It is said that there is no evidence that this right is available to the trustee in the present case. But it is clear that the trustee has incurred personal liability to the execution creditor and other creditors, and the primâ facie right to indemnity out of the trust estate exists. If this is to be rebutted by showing that he has committed any default, I think the onus is on those who assert the existence of such a default. In my opinion, therefore, the appeal fails.

MATHEW, L.J., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the execution creditor, G. J. R. Stubbs, for Gaunt, Hines, & Bottomley, Bradford.

Solicitors for the claimant, Wrensted & Hind, for Scott & Holmes, Bradford.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. Kekewich, J. } June 5, 1901.

In re MADDOCK.

LLEWELYN v. WASHINGTON. (a.)

Administration—Order of administration of assets—Insufficiency of personalty—Will—Secret trust of residue — Specific bequest — Power of appointment exercised by will—Incidence of estate duty.

A testatrix by her will gave her residuary estate to A., and by a memorandum subsequent to the date of the will, and which was acknowledged by A. to be binding upon her, gave a specific portion of the residue in trust for certain other persons therein specified. The residuary estate, after deducting therefrom the portion bound by the memorandum, proved insufficient to pay the debts and testamentary expenses of the testatrix.

Held, that the trust constituted by the memorandum, though specific, did not amount to a specific bequest, and that the debts and testamentary expenses were consequently payable out of the whole of the residuary estate rateably between the portion bound by the memorandum and the portion not so bound.

The testatrix having by her will appointed a fund over which she had a testamentary power of appointment,

Held, following In re Treasure, 48 W. R. 696, [1900] 2 Ch. 648, that the estate duty payable in respect of the fund so appointed was payable out of the appointed fund.

In re Moore, 49 W. R. 373, [1901] 1 Ch. 691, not followed.

Sarah B. Maddock by her will dated the 11th of January, 1897, after appointing the plaintiff F. W. Llewelyn and the defendants S. A. Washington and J. F. Maddock to be trustees and executors of her will, appointed and bequeathed to them one-third share of a sum of £18,000 over which she had a testamentary power of appointment under the will of her father, upon trust to pay the income to S. A. Washington for her own use during her life, and after her death to divide the principal of such share amongst certain specified charities; and she devised and bequeathed all her real estate and the residue of her personal estate to S. A Washington absolutely.

On the 17th of January, 1897, subsequent to the date of the will, the testatrix signed a memorandum requesting that the interest arising from all the money she had saved should be paid to certain persons therein specified, and it was admitted that a valid trust was thereby created in favour of those persons.

The testatrix died on the 14th of December, 1898, possessed of both realty and personalty.

(a.) Reported by H. CLAUGHTON SCOTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The residuary estate after deducting the portion bound by the memorandum proved insufficient to pay the testatrix's debts, and testamentary expenses.

The questions as raised by the summons were—(1) Whether or not, having regard to the fact that the residuary personal estate of the testatrix was insufficient for the payment of debts, estate duty, and costs, the deficiency was payable out of the funds passing under the memorandum made by the testatrix and the real estate of the testatrix rateably, or, how such deficiency should be borne; and (2) whether the estate duty payable in respect of the sum of £6,000 appointed by the will was payable out of the appointed fund, or out of what other funds.

E. Ford, for the summons.

Warrington, K.C., and T. H. Carson, K.C., for S. A. Washington.—The trust arising under the memorandum does not amount to a testamentary bequest at all. The title of the persons claiming is not derived under the will, but only under the memorandum, which is binding on the conscience of the legatee. Therefore the estate must be administered as though the memorandum had not existed. There is no case exactly in point. However, in the case of Cullen v. The Attorney-General for Ireland, 14 W. R 869, L. R. 1 H. L. 190, at p. 198, Lord Westbury lays it down that the title of a cestui que trust under a secret trust or a trust affecting the conscience of the legatee is not testamentary.

They also cited Wallgrave v. Tebbs, 4 W. R. 194, 2 K. & J. 313, and Rowbotham v. Dunnett, 26 W. R. 529, 8 Ch. D. 430.

Renshaw, K.C., and Vaughan Hawkins, for the cestuis que trustent under the memorandum.—The case of Cullen v. The Attorney-General for Ireland is not in point; it was a decision upon the Irish Stamp Acts. In this case the testatrix drew the memorandum with the express purpose of binding S. A. Washington, her executrix; it was merely another means of drawing up a codicil. So the beneficiaries take the property as a specific bequest, and the deficiency must be borne rateably between the property subject to this trust and the real estate of the testatrix.

P. S. Stokes, for the charities, on the question of the estate duty in respect of the appointed fund, cited: In re Treasure, 48 W. R. 696, [1900] 2 Ch. 648, and In re Moore, 49 W. R. 373, [1901] 1 Ch. 691.

KEKEWICH, J.—Nobody pretends that the point is covered by any decision. Counsel on the one side has cited to me a dictum of Lord Westbury in the case of Cullen v. The Attorney-General for Ireland, and counsel on the other side has truly said that that case does not touch the point in hand. There the question turned and was decided upon the construction of certain Acts of Parliament, and the remark of Lord Westbury was merely obiter, and though entitled to all respect it must not be treated as a decision. The principle there laid down by Lord Westbury is as follows: "Where there is a secret trust, or where there is a right created by a personal confidence reposed by a testator in any individual, the breach of which confidence would amount to a fraud, the title of the party claiming under the secret trust, or claiming by virtue of that personal confidence, is a title dehors the will, and which cannot be correctly termed testamentary." That carries me some part of the way. The fallacy of the argument on behalf of those who, claiming under the memorandum, say that this is a "specific bequest," seems to me lie in the use of those two words together. That the gift is "specific" there can be no doubt. The memorandum speaks of "all the money I have saved"; and that is a specific description. But it is not a "bequest," for the gift is not contained in any will or in any testamentary instrument which could be proved with the will. If the gift of all the money which she had saved had been to Miss Washington it would have operated as a specific bequest. But the testatrix has not done that. What she gave to Miss Washington was the residue, and she has proceeded to declare this trust of a particular part of the residue. The title of those claiming under the memorandum is, as Lord Westbury has said, dehors the will; and the cestuis que trustent can only make Miss Washington accountable for that part of the testatrix's property which comes to her as residue, and which, on taking the accounts, is found to represent the money she has saved. The answer, therefore, to the first question raised will be that the payment of the debts of the testatrix, the estate duty on her personal estate and the costs of administration, must be made rateably out of funds comprising her residuary estate passing under the memorandum, and the funds not so passing.

As to the second question raised, his lordship decided to abide by his former decision in In re Treasure, without further comment, leaving the conflict which had arisen between that case and the judgment of Buckley, J., in In re Moore, to be determined by the Court of Appeal when occasion arose. The answer, therefore, that his lordship gave to the second question was that the estate duty payable in respect of the £6,000 appointed by the will was payable out of the appointed fund.

Solicitors, Ridsdale & Son, for Heaton & Son, Burslem.

Chan. Div. Cozens-Hardy, J. } July 17, 19; Aug. 6, 1901.

FLEMING v. LOE. (a.)

Contract—Assignment of contract—Specific performance—Failure of consideration—Money had and received.

On the 16th of July B. entered into an agreement to buy certain mining claims from A., the purchase to be completed on or before the 8th of November, subject to the payment by B. of instalments of £400 per month. On the 18th of July B. sold the same property to C., on condition that C. paid a deposit and a sum of £230 per month up to the 1st of November. On the 18th of July B. assigned the benefit of his contract with C. to D. The deposit and the monthly contributions were paid by C. to D. for four months. In an action brought by D. against B. and C. for specific performance, C. counterclaimed the return of the deposit and the four instalments.

Held, that, on total failure of consideration, C. could recover his payments from D.

On the 16th of July, 1896, an agreement was made between J. Neill and Loe, by which Neill agreed to sell certain mining claims and mining leases in Australia to the defendant Loe for the sum of £42,500, to be paid partly in cash and partly in shares in a company to be formed.

It was also arranged by this agreement that Neill was to continue to work and develop the property up to the 1st of November, 1896, and Loe was to pay him £400 a month towards the expenses of such working, the first payment to be made on the date of the agreement. The purchase was to be completed on or before the 8th of November, 1896, and in the event of Neill being unable to produce a title to the property Loe was to be at liberty to rescind the agreement and recover the moneys paid by him to the vendor.

On the 18th of July, 1896, Loe entered into an agreement with Mackusick for the sale of the same property to him for £65,000, payable partly in cash and partly in shares.

It was also agreed that Mackusick was to pay £230 a month up to the 1st of November, 1896, towards the cost of working and developing the property.

Before signing the agreement Mackusick received a written guarantee, dated the 18th of July, 1896, from Fleming, by which the latter guaranteed "the performance by Mr. Loe of the obligations undertaken by him to you under such contract." In consideration of the guarantee given by Fleming, Loe (without Mackusick's knowledge) assigned to Fleming "the contract made by me for purchase of such mines, which contract I now deposit with you, and also to assign to you the contract between Mr. Mackusick and myself, which I also deposit with you."

On this Fleming claimed that he stood in the shoes of Loe, and that therefore Mackusick was liable to pay him the £230 per month, as arranged under the agreement of the 18th of July.

Subsequently Mackusick paid the deposit on the purchase and the sum of £920, being the amount due for four months, and Fleming paid Neill the sum of £400 per month, according to the agreement of the 16th of July.

In July, 1897, Fleming, as assignee of the contract, brought an action against Loe and Mackusick for specific performance of the agreement of the 18th of July and damages.

Loe did not defend the action.

Mackusick counterclaimed against Loe and Fleming for repayment of the deposit of £500 and the sum of £920.

The case came on before Cozens-Hardy, J., in October, 1899, and judgment was given for specific performance, the judge ordering the counterclaim to stand over.

On appeal this order was reversed.

The counterclaim and defence were then amended, and the case now came on for trial.

Loe had died in the meantime, and no personal representative had been appointed.

Mackusick sought to recover from Fleming the various sums paid by him under the contract.

Fleming repudiated all liability on the ground that he was not a party to the contract with Mackusick, and that Mackusick's only remedy was against Loe's representatives when constituted.

Upjohn, K.C., and D. D. Robertson, for Mackusick, said that the assignee of a contract took subject to all the burdens: Werderman v. Société Général d'Electricité, 30 W. R. 33, 19 Ch. D. 246; Aspden v. Seddon, 25 W. R. 277, 1 Ex. D. 496. The case of Aberaman Ironworks v. Wickens, 17 W. R. 211, L. R. 4 Ch. App. 101, was decided in the old Court of Chancery and merely meant that there was no equity.

Eve, K.C., and Martelli, for plaintiff, referred to the cases of Aberaman Ironworks v. Wickens and Tasker v. Small, 3 Myl. & Cr. 63.

Upjohn, K.C., replied.

COZENS-HARDY, J.—It is reasonably clear that Mackusick cannot claim anything under Fleming's guarantee. Nothing is due from Loe in respect of any obligation undertaken by him under the contract. Mackusick is not suing for breach of the contract. But Mackusick alleges that the deposit and the several sums of £230 were paid by him to Fleming as assignee of the contract, and not as agent for and on behalf of Loe, and that although there was no contract of sale between him and Fleming, yet he is entitled to recover the money so paid on the ground of a total failure of consideration.

(a.) Reported by J. H. DAVIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The facts are not really in dispute, although the inferences to be drawn from the facts are disputed. Now it is plain that Mackusick only signed the agreement with Loe upon having Fleming's letter of guarantee, and that Mackusick was anxious that not a penny of his money should reach Loe's hands.

It is urged on the part of Fleming that the case of Aberaman Ironworks v. Wickens is decisive in his favour, because it was there held that, although the purchaser was entitled to relief against Wickens, his vendor, no relief could be given against Wilkinson, Sudlow, and Sarl, into whose hands part of the purchase-money had come. I do not agree with this contention. Malins, V.C., dismissed the bill against all the defendants without prejudice to the rights of the plaintiff at law. On appeal Lord Cairns reversed the decision so far as Wickens was concerned, but gave no relief against the other defendants in the shape of repayment, the money not having been obtained by fraud or impressed with any trust. In other words, the Court of Chancery had no jurisdiction to deal with a simple money demand of that nature, and the parties were left to assert such rights, if any, as they might have by an action at law. That case did not decide the question which now arises for my decision. Mackusick must succeed, if at all, on the footing that this is a claim for money had and received on a total failure of consideration. The circumstances are peculiar, but I think Fleming, having regard to his conduct, including his proceedings in the present action, cannot successfully contend that this money was not received by him for the use of Mackusick. I must therefore give judgment for Mackusick for the several sums paid by him to Fleming; and Fleming must pay the costs of the counterclaim.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Last & Sons.

Solicitors for the defendants, Morten, Cutler, & Co.

Chan. Div.
Cozens-Hardy, J. } July 11, 19, 1901.

HARTLEY v. PENDARVES. (a.)

Administration—Settled land—Sale of timber—Conversion.

By an order of the court timber growing on land settled upon A. for life, with remainder in fee to B., was sold, and the proceeds invested in Consols in court.

Held, that as between the heir-at-law of B. and the personal representative of B. the proceeds of the sale were personalty, and an order was made (after the deaths of A. and B.) directing the transfer of the sum to the legal personal representative of B.

Henry Harris, who died in 1830, by his will settled two estates in Cornwall called Rosteague and Tregassa upon his niece Mary Hartley (the wife of William Henry Hartley) and her issue. She had issue an only son, William Henry Harris Hartley.

In the year 1860 Mary Hartley was equitable tenant for life, subject to impeachment for waste, of the two estates. She and her son W. H. H. Hartley were both lunatics.

(a.) Reported by J. H. DAVIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The Lords Justices in Lunacy and in Chancery made an order on the 20th of July, 1860, in the administration suit of Hartley v. Pendarves by which they referred to the Master in Lunacy for inquiry the question whether there was any timber on the two estates proper to be cut, and if so that the same should be felled and sold, the proceeds to be paid into the bank to the credit of the case of Hartley v. Pendarves—"The Timber Account." The money thus obtained was to be invested in Bank 3 per cent. Annuities.

On the 15th of April, 1864, the master made his certificate, which stated that the timber had been felled and sold, and the proceeds placed to the credit of the cause of Hartley v. Pendarves. Afterwards the sum was invested in 3 per cent. Annuities as directed by the order.

Mary Hartley died in October, 1868, and W. H. H. Hartley died intestate in June, 1894. The question was now raised by adjourned summons as to whether the sum realized by the sale of the timber was to be regarded as real or personal estate, and therefore whether the heir-at-law or the legal personal representative of W. H. H. Hartley was entitled to it.

Boome, for the heir-at-law of W. H. H. Hartley, cited the case of Field v. Brown, 27 Beav. 90, 8 W. R. Ch. Dig. 23, and contended there had been no conversion.

He also referred to the cases of Attorney-General v. Marquis of Ailesbury, 36 W. R. 737, 12 App. Cas. 672, and Awdley v. Awdley, 2 Vern. 192.

Dickinson, for the legal personal representative, argued that conversion had taken place: Ex parte Bromfield, 1 Ves. jun. 453; Oxenden v. Lord Compton, 2 Ves. jun. 69; Ex parte Phillips, 19 Ves. 118; Phillips v. Daycock, [1867] W. N. 54; Steed v. Preece 22 W. R. 432, L. R. 18 Eq. 192.

Boome replied.

COZENS-HARDY, J., stated the facts, and proceeded: The order directing the sale of the timber was made under the general jurisdiction of the court, and was not in any way dependent upon the circumstance that both the tenant for life and the tenant in fee were lunatics. The jurisdiction of the court to order the sale of timber on a settled estate, when it is for the benefit of all parties interested in the settled estate, is well established, and in such a case the tenant for life, though impeachable for waste, is entitled to the income produced by the proceeds of sale of the timber: Tooker v. Annesley, 5 Sim. 235. It was on this footing that the committee of Mary Hartley received the dividends of the Consols during her life. This being so, I think, on principle, that where timber has been rightfully sold under an order of court all the consequences of conversion must follow, and that there is no equity as between the heir and the legal personal representative of the owner in fee. This is the view taken by Sir George Jessel in Steed v. Preece, and by Kay, J., in Hyett v. Mekin, 32 W. R. 513, 25 Ch. D. 735. It is contended, however, that the point was decided in the opposite sense by Sir John Romilly in Field v. Brown. I cannot regard that case as a satisfactory authority. It seems to me difficult to reconcile it with the decision of the same learned judge in Dyer v. Dyer, 13 W. R. 732, 34 Beav. 504. It was apparently based on Cooke v. Dearley, 22 Beav. 196, a case which was disapproved by Sir George Jessel in Steed v. Preece. Under these circumstances I feel at liberty to follow my own view, and to hold that the Consols in court form part of the personal estate of the late owner in fee. The order must, subject to the payment of costs, direct the transfer of the Consols to the legal personal representatives of W. H. H. Hartley.

Solicitors for the heir-at-law, Collyer-Bristow, Hill, Curtis, & Dods.

Solicitor for the legal personal representative, F. C. Lingard.

Chan. Div. Cozens-Hardy, J. July 2, 1901.

In re RICHARDS.
LAWSON v. HARVEY. (a.)

Administration—Grant to manager of bank—Debt due to bank—Retainer.

Where the manager of a bank had been granted administration of the estate of an intestate who was a debtor to the bank,

Held, that after an order for the administration of the estate had been made, the manager could not, as administrator, retain the debt due to the bank.

Letters of administration of the personal estate of an intestate were granted to the defendant on the 10th of April, 1896, in which he was described as "John Francis Harvey, manager of Trades Commercial Bank (Limited), creditors of the estate." The Trades Commercial Bank (Limited) were the bankers and creditors of deceased, and it was for this reason that the manager of that bank was granted administration.

An administration order was made on the 7th of February, 1898. The administrator had not at that date paid any of the funds which came into his hands as administrator to the bank on account of their debt.

The master found by his certificate dated the 31st of July, 1899, that the defendant had a balance of £1,011 14s. 6d. to his credit for which he was accountable, but he did not decide whether the defendant had power to retain the amount of £242 10s. 6d. due to the bank. The question now came before the court on further consideration whether the defendant, as administrator, could retain the debt due to the bank.

Rowland Rowlands, for the plaintiff.

Dunham, for the defendant, contended that Harvey was made administrator as an official of the bank and for its benefit. His position was analogous to that of an administrator durante minoritate: Franks v. Cooper, 4 Ves. 763; Talbot v. Frere, 27 W. R. 148, 9 Ch. D. 568.

A. J. Chitty, for a creditor.

COZENS-HARDY, J.—This claim cannot be maintained. It is a peculiar case because administration was granted to the manager of the bank, and although he was described as manager of the bank in the grant of administration, and it was, no doubt, made to him because he was manager, nevertheless it was made to him as an individual and not to the use of the bank. Had he ceased being manager he would still have retained the position of administrator. In the case of a grant made durante minoritate or to the use of a lunatic, there is a right of retainer, but here the manager would have to prefer the bank to the other creditors if he were to pay out the sum owing to them. The right to prefer was destroyed by the administration order, though the decree did not prevent the administrator from retaining his own debt. The claim will be disallowed.

Solicitors for creditors, Spencer, Chapman, & Co., for J. R. Richards, Swansea.

Solicitor for plaintiff, J. T. Lewis, for Aeron Thomas & Co., Swansea.

(a.) Reported by J. H. DAVIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Chan. Div. Farwell, J. July 30, 1901.

DODSON v. DOWNEY. (a.)

Partnership—Vendor's right to indemnity on sale of share—Partnership Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 39), s. 31.

The purchaser of a share in a partnership business must indemnify the vendor against the liabilities of the business.

This was an action by D. C. Dodson for specific performance of a contract for the sale of his share in a partnership business.

Upjohn, K.C., and R. B. Yardley, for the vendor.—The purchaser of a share in a partnership must indemnify his vendor.

They referred to Kelly v. Hutton, 16 W. R. 1182, L. R. 3 Ch. App. 703, at p. 709; Whetham v. Davey, 33 W. R. 925, 30 Ch. D. 574, at p. 580; Waring v. Ward, 7 Ves. 332, at p. 337.

Phipson Beale, K.C., and S. R. Earle, for the purchaser.

They referred to the Partnership Act, 1890, s. 31.

[FARWELL, J., referred to Rose v. Watson, 12 W. R. 585, 10 H. L. Cas. 672.]

The Partnership Act, 1890, provides, section 31: (1) An assignment by any partner of his share in the partnership, either absolute or by way of mortgage or redeemable charge, does not as against the other partners entitle the assignee, during the continuance of the partnership, to interfere in the management or administration of the partnership business or affairs, or to require any accounts of the partnership transactions, or to inspect the partnership books, but entitles the assignee only to receive the share of profits to which the assigning partner would otherwise be entitled, and the assignee must accept the account of profits agreed to by the partners. (2) In case of a dissolution of the partnership, whether as respects all the partners or as respects the assigning partner, the assignee is entitled to receive the share of the partnership assets to which the assigning partner is entitled as between himself and the other partners, and, for the purpose of ascertaining that share, to an account as from the date of the dissolution.

FARWELL, J., in giving judgment, said: The question is raised as to what is the position of a purchaser of a share in a partnership business. Assuming, as stated in the pleadings and correspondence, that the vendor had severed his connection with the business, and had made this arrangement for leaving his money dormant for three years, he still had certain rights as a partner, or a late partner, including the right to have his capital repaid, subject to that arrangement. I cannot follow the purchaser's argument on section 31 of the Partnership Act, 1890. That section, in my opinion, is primarily intended for the protection of the vendor's partners. It is also intended to declare that a partner may sell or mortgage his share in a partnership, provided that he does not interfere with his partners' rights. They are not bound to accept or acknowledge the purchaser at all; but the vendor, as between himself and his partners, may sell everything he has to sell. The purchaser of a share in such a business differs in no way that I can see from the purchaser of any other property. As from the date of the contract he becomes the owner of the property, subject only to the liability to pay the purchase-money, and the vendor becomes a trustee with certain qualifications, as is correctly stated in Dart on Vendors and Purchasers (6th ed.), p. 283: "The vendor is not a mere dormant trustee, he is a trustee having a personal and substantial interest in the property, a right to protect that interest, and an active right to assert that interest if anything should be done in derogation of it. The relation, therefore, of trustee and cestui que trust subsists, but subject to the paramount right of the vendor to protect his own interest as vendor of the property. When the title has been accepted and the purchase-money paid, this paramount right of the vendor ceases, and the trusteeship subsists without any qualification, but as from the date of the contract the relationship is throughout that of trustee and cestui que trust." It appears to me to follow from that statement that the purchaser as cestui que trust is personally bound to indemnify the vendor as trustee from the liabilities of the trust property: Hardoon v. Belilios, 49 W. R. 209, [1901] A. C. 118. He buys the share and steps into the position of the vendor. The purchaser contends that he takes the benefits and not the liabilities. Suppose a man buys a share in a partnership, and it goes on for six years, during which time the vendor remains as the nominal partner. The first four years are successful, and the purchaser takes all the profits. At the end of that time there are two disastrous years in which the liabilities exceed the assets. The purchaser contends that the vendor must bear the loss; such a proposition is, in my opinion, absolutely untenable.

(a.) Reported by PAUL STRICKLAND, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Applying the principle which seems to me to be correctly stated in the passage I have read from Dart, as soon as the relation of trustee and cestui que trust is established all the incidents follow, including the vendor's right to a personal indemnity.

The result is I make a decree for specific performance, and the purchaser must pay the costs of the action. By analogy to the case of Bridgman v. Daw, 40 W. R. 253, the assignment will contain an express covenant by the purchaser to indemnify the vendor against the liabilities of the business.

Solicitors, Alexander Neale, for Bennett & Marsh, Worthing; Edward Betteley.

Chan. Div. } Buckley, J. } Oct. 31.

In re CLIFFORD.
SCOTT v. CLIFFORD. (a.)

Settled land—Power of tenant for life to mortgage—Costs of consolidating mortgage—"Where money is required"—Settled Land Act, 1890, s. 11.

Section 11 of the Settled Land Act, 1890, must be read as if it meant "where money is reasonably required having regard to the circumstances of the settled land."

Where land was settled subject to several mortgages, all bearing interest at 4 per cent., and the tenant for life had a right under the settlement to resort to capital in the event of the income payable to her falling below a certain figure, and one of the mortgages was called in, and it was found that that mortgage could not be readily transferred, but that a consolidating mortgage for the whole amount due under all the mortgages could be got at 3½ per cent. interest,

Held, that the tenant for life was empowered by the 11*th section of the Act of* 1890 and was justified in raising the amount by which the costs of the consolidating mortgage exceeded the costs of the transfer of the mortgage called in by a mortgage of the settled land for that amount.

Under a deed of settlement a mother and her son were respectively tenant for life and remainderman of the settled property. The property was settled subject to a mortgage for £15,500 and several other mortgages all bearing interest at 4 per cent.

Under the settlement, if the net income of the settled property fell below £1,000 per annum, the tenant for life might have recourse to capital to make up the deficiency. The mortgagees of the £15,500 mortgage called in their mortgage debt. A transferee was found who would be willing to take a transfer of the mortgage at the same rate of interest, provided certain additional security was given—the money to be advanced being trust money. It was admitted that it was undesirable to encumber the only property which was then available as additional security.

The tenant for life found that a consolidating mortgage could be obtained bearing interest at 3½ per cent. per annum if the sum to be advanced was sufficiently large, and she therefore gave notice to pay off all the other mortgages with a view to having them all consolidated with the £15,500 mortgage.

This transaction was carried out and the tenant for life sought to charge the settled estates with the costs of the whole transaction.

Buckmaster, for the tenant for life.—The whole transaction has been done in good faith and for the benefit of all concerned. The tenant for life can charge these costs under section 11 of the Settled Land Act, 1890. Here the money is "required," at all events it is reasonably required, and the section must be read as if it said "reasonably required." Not only is the tenant for life benefited by increase of income, but the remainderman is benefited also, for he will receive a larger income on the death of the tenant for life, and the fact that there is now more income available for the tenant for life lessens the risk of the tenant for life having recourse to capital to make up her income to £1,000 a year. To consolidate all the mortgages at once is much cheaper in the long run than to get transfers piecemeal. The tenant for life could have achieved her object in any case by getting the several mortgagees to call in their mortgages.

Dunham, for the remainderman.—The limitations here are legal, therefore the court cannot be called upon to execute any trusts. The power, therefore, sought by the tenant for life must be got only under the Act of 1890. The only money required was so much as was needed to effect a transfer of the £15,500 mortgage. The whole object of the transaction has been to provide the present tenant for life with a larger income, and the costs of such a proceeding ought not to be charged against the remainderman. The income from the estate is ample, and there is practically no risk of recourse being made to capital.

H. Fellows, for the trustees.

BUCKLEY, J.—Under the Settled Land Act, 1882, a tenant for life had no power to mortgage the settled land except in the cases mentioned in section 18 of that Act where money was required for enfranchisement or equality of exchange or partition. There was power to sell the land, but not to mortgage it. In 1890 there was passed section 11 of the Settled Land Act of that year, which for the first time gave power to mortgage for other purposes. The dominant words of that section are "where money is required for the purpose of discharging an incumbrance on the settled land or part thereof." And the question I have to consider here is what is the meaning of the word "required"? Where the mortgagee gives notice to call in his money the word is clearly satisfied; the money is required for the purpose of discharging an incumbrance on the settled land or part thereof. But is the section confined to that? I think that it is not. The section must be read as if it meant "where money is reasonably required having regard to the circumstances of the settled land"; and, in fact, Mr. Dunham, who has argued this case on behalf of the remainderman, did not contend to the contrary. The facts with which I have to deal here are that there were on the settled estate, of which the applicant is tenant for life, several mortgages, the largest for £15,500 and several others, at the date of the settlement making up £22,000, and there were later incumbrances bringing the total to £26,043. That being so, the mortgagee for £15,500 gave notice calling in his money. That money was certainly "required," and the tenant for life would certainly have been entitled to mortgage the settled land in order to raise the costs of obtaining a transfer of that mortgage. When she went into the matter she found that the £15,500 could not be readily transferred, but that if she were able to consolidate all the mortgages she could get £26,043 at 3½ per cent. interest instead of 4 per cent. Accordingly, notice to call in having been given to her by the mortgagee of the £15,500, she gave notice to the other mortgagees of her intention to pay them off, and she effected a mortgage for £26.043 at 3½ per cent.. If she had raised the £15,500 it would have been within her right to charge the costs of doing so on the settled estate, and those costs are said to amount to £480. The costs of the whole transaction amounted to a larger sum, and the difference is said to be £180 or £200. The only question is whether she is entitled to charge that difference on the settled land. If I am right in my view of the section I have to consider whether the money was "reasonably required" for the benefit of the estate, and whether the tenant for life has acted properly, and how does it affect the remainderman? Under the settlement the tenant for life had the income with a right to resort to capital if the income fell below £1,000. If she saves ½ per cent. interest on the mortgages the income will be larger by £129 a year, and the probabilility of resorting to capital will be less, and that will be a benefit to the remainderman. Again, when he comes into the property he will succeed to a larger income. Was it reasonable on her part to replace 4 per cent. mortgages by 3½ per cent. mortgages; and were the costs of doing so reasonably incurred? I answer that they were. If I am right in my construction of the section, she was justified in acting as she did and the costs ought to be raised by mortgage of the estate. I may say that in arriving at the conclusion I have come to I am fortified by the judgment of Kekewich, J., in the case of In re Parc's Settled Estate, with a copy of which I have been furnished by Mr. H. Fellows (as amicus curiæ). The judgment was delivered on the 21st of December, 1897, in chambers, but it appears to have been a written judgment and initialled by the learned judge, and in it he held that it would be a narrow construction of the section to hold that "required" met only the case of a calling in of a mortgage by the mortgagee, and that it extended to all cases in which the economical administration of the settled estate reasonably demanded that a mortgage should be paid off whether for the purpose of transfer or otherwise. Mrs. Scott is therefore entitled to raise these costs by mortgage of the settled estate.

(a.) Reported by R. LEIGH RAMSBOTHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Solicitors for the applicant, Clayton, Sons, & Fargus.

Solicitors for the trustees, Taylor, Hoare, & Pilcher, for Russell & Musgrove, Birmingham.

Solicitors for the remainderman, Pritchard & Sons.

K. B. Div.
(Kennedy and Phillimore, JJ.) } May 10, 1901.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. MAYOR, ALDERMEN, AND BURGESSES OF THE BOROUGH OF EASTBOURNE. (a.)

Inland Revenue—Stamp duty on sale of chattels—Property vested by Act or purchased under statutory power—Finance Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 16), s. 12.

The Corporation of Eastbourne purchased by agreement from the Eastbourne Electric Light Co. the whole of the undertaking of the company, with the full benefit of all pending contracts and engagements.

Held, that ad valorem duty was payable on the conveyance of the whole property, including so much of the consideration as represented goods, wares, and merchandize.

Special case stated by consent pursuant to ord. 68, r. 2, and ord. 34, r. 1.

1. This is an information on behalf of the Crown to recover £443 15*s.* and interest for duty claimed under section 12 of the Finance Act, 1895, in respect of a purchase of property by the defendants under statutory powers as hereinafter mentioned.

2. On the 19th of April, 1899, an agreement was entered into between the Eastbourne Electric Light Co. (Limited) (thereinafter and hereinafter called the company) and the defendants (thereinafter called the corporation).

3. It was recited in the said agreement that the company under the Eastbourne Electric Supply Order, 1890, confirmed by the Electric Lighting Order Confirmation (No. 8) Act, 1890, had acquired land and erected electric lighting works, and provided plant, machinery, mains, and other appliances, and had been supplying electrical energy within the area specified in the said order.

4. Clause 1 of the said agreement was as follows: "Subject to the provisions hereinafter contained the company will sell and the corporation will buy the whole of the undertaking of the company under the said order, and all the powers, rights, and privileges thereby conferred on the company; together with the full benefit of all pending contracts and engagements to which the company are or may be entitled in connection with the said undertaking; together with the freehold piece of land and the building erected thereon situate in Junction-road, Eastbourne, aforesaid, with all the works, engines, and fixed and movable plant and machinery, wires, cables, pipes, instruments, utensils, tools, and all other goods, chattels, and effects belonging to the said company which now are or shall at the time of completion of the said purchase be used and provided by the company for the purposes of the said undertaking save and except all depreciation and other reserve funds, cash balances, book and other debts, earnings, rights and credits belonging or due to the company at the time of such completion, and the company's books and papers and the furniture of the board-room."

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

5. By clause 2 it was agreed that the consideration for the purchase should be the sum of £82,135 in addition to the sums thereinafter and hereinafter mentioned, provided always that if the corporation agreed to take into their employment either the manager or secretary of the company upon such terms as should be agreed upon between the corporation and the said manager and secretary respectively, then the corporation should be entitled to deduct from the said purchase-money the sum of £2,000 in the proportion of two-thirds thereof in respect to the manager, and one-third thereof in respect to the secretary so agreed to be taken into the employment of the corporation for the loss of office. The corporation did not take either the said manager or the said secretary into their employment, and no part of the said £2,000 became deductible.

6. By clause 3 it was provided that the purchase should be completed and the purchase-money paid on the 1st of January, 1900, on which day the company would convey their freehold premises to the defendants, and also assign or deliver over to them all the remainder of the premises agreed to be sold.

7. By clause 4 the company were to carry on the undertaking as a going concern until the day of completion, and by clause 5 the defendants were to pay for all new plant and machinery provided since the 31st of December, 1898, and for certain additional capital outlay which might be incurred by the company before completion; the amount which became payable under this provision was £6,614 2s. 9d.

8. Of the two sums of £82,135 and £6,614 2s. 9d., together making £88,749 2s. 9d., the consideration for the sale as aforesaid, £37,929 was in respect of goods, wares, and merchandize.

9. By section 3 of a provisional order subsequently granted by the Board of Trade under the Electric Lighting Acts, 1882 and 1888, to the defendants it was provided as follows:

"3. (1) This order shall not, except as provided by this section, come into force or have effect notwithstanding the confirmation thereof by Parliament until such date as the Board of Trade fix in accordance with this section, and the date so fixed is in this order referred to as 'the commencement of this order.'

"(2) The Board of Trade shall fix a date for the commencement of this order when they are satisfied that the undertakers have completed the purchase of the undertaking of the Eastbourne Electric Light Co. (Limited), under the Eastbourne Electric Supply Order, 1890, in accordance with the agreement made between that company of the one part and the undertakers of the other part, dated the 19th day of April, 1899, or any further agreement made between the company and the undertakers necessary or expedient for enabling the original agreement to be carried into effect.

"(3) As from the commencement of this order the Eastbourne Electric Supply Order (1890) confirmed by the Electric Lighting Order Confirmation (No. 8) Act, 1890, shall be revoked without prejudice to anything done or suffered, or any liability to a penalty or otherwise incurred, or to the prosecution of any legal proceedings thereunder.

"(4) The undertakers shall have power to buy, and the Eastbourne Electric Light Co. (Limited) shall have power to sell the undertaking of the company in conformity with this section, and for that purpose this order shall come into force and have effect on the day when the Act confirming this order is passed."

10. By section 4 it was provided that the undertakers for the purposes of the order should be the defendants.

11. By section 2 of the Electric Lighting Orders Confirmation (No. 19) Act, 1899, passed the 13th of July, 1899, the above-mentioned provisional order was confirmed, and it was enacted that all the provisions thereof should from and after the passing of the Act have full validity and effect.

12. The purchase provided for by the said agreement of the 19th of April, 1899, was duly completed on the 1st of January, 1900, payment of the purchase-money being made as to £88,135 on that day, and as to the balance, £614 2s. 9d., on the 27th of February following. It is to be taken that the defendants have been always ready and willing to produce to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue an instrument of conveyance stamped with ad valorem duty upon the consideration, excluding the £2,000 in paragraph 5 hereof mentioned, and excluding the £37,929 in respect of goods, wares, and merchandize in paragraph 8 hereof mentioned, and that if the production of such a conveyance so stamped would have been a compliance with the requirements of section 12 of the Finance Act, 1895, the defendants have committed no default. Save as aforesaid no conveyance has been produced under the said section.

13. The said agreement and the provisional orders and Acts hereinbefore referred to, and the above referred to conveyance and the correspondence between the Commissioners of Inland Revenue and the defendants, copy of which is annexed hereto, may be referred to as part of this case.

14. The Attorney-General contends that by virtue of the Electric Lighting Orders Confirmation (No. 19) Act, 1899, confirming the provisional order granted to the defendants as hereinbefore mentioned, the defendants were authorized to purchase the property comprised in the said agreement of the 19th of April, 1899, and were therefore bound within three months of the completion of the said purchase, that is to say, on the 1st of January, 1900, to produce an instrument of conveyance of the whole of the said property, including chattels, duly stamped with the ad valorem duty payable upon a conveyance on sale of such property, that is to say, with a duty of £443 15s., or 5s. for every £50 of the sum of £88,749 2s. 8d., such sum being arrived at by adding together the sum of £82,135 mentioned in paragraph 5 hereof, and the sum of £6,614 2s. 9d. mentioned in paragraph 7 hereof, the whole of which sum of £88,749 2s. 9d. the Attorney-General contends to be consideration for such sale. The Attorney-General further contends that under the circumstances a default has been made within the meaning of section 12 of the said Act, and that the duty claimed, with interest at 5 per cent. from the date of completion, is a debt due to his Majesty from the defendants.

15. The defendants contend—(1) That no duty is payable on the sum of £37,929 mentioned in paragraph 8 hereof; (2) that no duty is payable on the sum of £2,000 mentioned in paragraph 5 hereof.

The question for the court is whether ad valorem duty on so much of the consideration as represented goods, wares, and merchandize, viz., £37,929, and on the sum of £2,000 referred to in paragraph 5 hereof is recoverable or not. If the decision is in the affirmative on either or both points judgment is to be entered for the Crown for the amount recoverable with interest. If the decision is in the negative on either or both points judgment is to be entered for the defendants upon that point or points. The costs to be in the discretion of the court.

Sir E. Carson, S.G. (Rowlatt with him), for the Crown.—The question in this case arises under section 12 of the Finance Act, 1895. "Property" in that section means all kinds of property. The purchaser is required to produce the instrument of conveyance of all the property for the purposes of stamp duty, even though some of the property would pass by delivery.

J. R. Macoun (Beaufoi Moore with him), for the defendants.—The object of section 12 of the Finance Act, 1895, is not to impose a new tax where one was not previously payable, but to facilitate the collection of an existing tax. The expression "any property vested" does not apply to personalty. The property referred to in section 12 is property that requires a deed of conveyance to pass it, and does not refer to chattels. There has been a sufficient compliance by the corporation with section 12 by the production of the agreement which should then have been stamped with ad valorem duty on the consideration after deducting that part thereof as related to goods, wares, and merchandize.

KENNEDY, J.—It appears to me that the contention of the Crown is right. The Eastbourne Electric Lighting Co. (Limited), in April, 1899, agreed to sell their undertaking to the corporation of Eastbourne. And by an agreement, after reciting that the company had acquired land and erected electric lighting works, and provided plant, machinery, mains, and other appliances, it was provided that the corporation should buy the whole of the undertaking of the company with the full benefit of all pending contracts and engagements. It must be taken that in apportioning the contract price of £82,135 and £6,614 2s. 9d. that £37,929 was the amount attributable to goods, wares, and merchandize. Afterwards an Act was obtained confirming a provisional order under which the agreement was confirmed, and a conveyance is executed to carry out the agreement. Under section 12 of the Finance Act, 1895, "where any person is authorized to purchase property, such person shall . . . after the completion of the purchase . . . produce to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue a copy of the Act printed by the Queen's printer . . . and an instrument of conveyance of the property . . . duly stamped with the ad valorem duty payable upon a conveyance or sale of property." That clearly means that the conveyance is to be duly stamped as a conveyance of the property authorized to be conveyed by Act of Parliament. I do not see how you can take out the £37,929 paid for goods which are in fact conveyed by the conveyance. It has been suggested that all that is meant is a conveyance of so much of the property as usually requires a conveyance to pass it, and that as goods need not be included in a conveyance they are not to be treated as the subject of a conveyance for the purpose of stamp duty. A second point is raised as to £2,000, a sum by which the consideration money might have been reduced if the corporation had taken over the manager and secretary of the company. But they did not do so.

PHILLIMORE, J.—I am of the same opinion. The Finance Act, 1895, requires a conveyance of the property authorized to be purchased. Here the corporation are authorized to purchase the property of the company. They were therefore required to produce an instrument of conveyance of all the property. Personal chattels may as a rule pass by delivery, but if they are passed by an instrument of conveyance ad valorem stamp duty must be paid.

Judgment for the Crown.

Solicitor for the Crown, Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

Solicitors for the defendants, Sharpe, Parker, & Co., for Fovargue, Eastbourne.

K. B. Div. (Bigham, J.) — May 13, 17; June 26, 1901.

SCOTT & HORTON v. GODFREY. (a.)

Stock Exchange—Principal and agent—Broker including several orders in one contract—Privity of contract between jobber and broker's customer—Custom.

A broker and member of the Stock Exchange was instructed by the defendant to purchase for him 225 shares in a certain undertaking for the next account. The broker having orders from other customers also to purchase similar shares entered into one contract with the plaintiffs, jobbers on the Stock Exchange, for the purchase of the whole number of shares, 925 in all, and appropriated them in his books to the orders of his various customers. Before the account day the broker was declared a defaulter. The defendant having repudiated the transaction as regards the plaintiffs, they sold 225 of the shares, and, the price having fallen, claimed the difference in an action for breach of contract to buy 225 shares.

Held, that apart from any custom or usage of the Stock Exchange, privity of contract had been created between the plaintiffs and the defendant, and that the defendant was liable to the plaintiffs in damages.

Action in the commercial list tried by Bigham, J., with a special jury.

The plaintiffs were a firm carrying on business on the London Stock Exchange as jobbers.

The defendant resided and carried on business in Belgium.

Previously to the 12th of December, 1899, he had been engaged in dealings in Randfontein shares through one Hemmerde, a stockbroker and member of the Stock Exchange.

On that date the defendant gave instructions to Hemmerde to carry over 225 of these shares to the end of December account. Hemmerde also had orders from other clients to carry over Randfontein shares, and was himself dealing in the shares on a joint account with another person, which shares were also to be carried over to the end of December account.

For the purpose of effecting the carry over of these various lots of shares, which amounted in all to 925 shares, Hemmerde on the 12th of December sold to the plaintiffs and bought from them again one block of 925 shares for the end of December account.

These 925 shares were appropriated by Hemmerde in his books in the following manner: 125 to Hemmerde's joint account, 225 to the defendant, and the remainder to Hemmerde's other clients.

On the 14th of December, 1899, Hemmerde was declared a defaulter on the Stock Exchange. His clerk wrote to the defendant informing him of this, and asking whether he wished to have another broker instructed to act for him. The defendant wrote in reply that the effect of his broker's failure was to close the transaction at the hammer price. The clerk showed this letter to the plaintiffs, who had ascertained that 225 of the 925 shares had been carried over for the defendant. The plaintiffs treated the letter as a repudiation by the defendant of his contract, and thereupon sold the 225 shares. The price had fallen, and the plaintiffs claimed to recover in this action the difference between the contract price and the price at the date. The plaintiffs alleged that by a custom of the Stock Exchange privity of contract had, in the circumstances, been created between them and the defendant.

Dr. Richardson, the official assignee of the Stock Exchange, gave evidence on behalf of the plaintiffs that if a broker was instructed by several clients to buy for them shares in the same company, the practice of the Stock Exchange was for the broker to enter into one contract with a jobber for the total amount of the shares, and the jobber was by the custom or practice of the Stock Exchange bound to recognize the fact that the contract was, or might be, made by the broker for separate clients, and the jobber was bound to carry out his contract with each of the broker's clients. If only one of the clients required delivery of the shares and the others did not desire to complete, the jobber was bound by custom to carry out his bargain so far as that one client was concerned. The custom applied to cases of carrying over, as well as to completing. If a broker was declared a defaulter it was the custom for his clients to complete their transactions with the jobber, although the broker might have lumped together in one contract with the jobber the orders of several clients.

(a.) Reported by F. O. ROBINSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The witness's evidence applied to every case, whether the transaction was partly for the broker and partly for the client or wholly for the client. The custom or practice only came into operation when a broker became a defaulter. If at the date of the broker's default the client was himself in default to the broker, the jobber had the right to close the client's shares.

The chairman and the deputy-chairman of the Stock Exchange gave evidence to the same effect.

The learned judge left the following questions to the jury:

1. Is there a custom or practice of the Stock Exchange by which a broker lumps together the orders of different clients and executes them by means of one contract with a jobber? Answer.—Yes.

2. Did the defendant give his order on the terms that it might be executed in that way? Answer.—Yes.

3. Is there a further custom or practice by which the jobber and each client become bound to each other to carry out that part of the contract applicable to the particular client's order? Answer.—Yes.

4. In the present case did the addition to the order of the broker's own bargain in any way affect the price. Answer.—No.

5. Was this case within the custom? Answer.—Yes, but that it was not expedient for a broker to include his own bargains in an order executed for his clients.

Rufus Isaacs, K.C., J. R. Atkin, and G. A. H. Branson, for the plaintiffs.—On the findings of the jury privity of contract was established between the plaintiffs and the defendant. The defendant will rely on Robinson v. Mollett, L. R. 7 H. L. 802, 24 W. R. Dig. 222; but that case is not really an authority against the plaintiffs. The House of Lords in that case only decided that evidence of a custom by which an agent might contract as principal with his principal was inadmissible, the reason being that such a custom would be in contradiction of the duty of the agent towards his principal, which is to create privity between the principal and a third person. But in the present case the custom does not contradict the contract; on the contrary it is the means by which it is carried out. [BIGHAM, J.—If apart from custom the defendant is not liable to the plaintiffs, can liability be imposed upon him by custom?] Yes. In Hutchinson v. Tatham, 22 W. R. 18, L. R. 8 C. P. 482, evidence was admitted to prove a trade usage by which in certain events an agent was liable as principal on a contract made by him as agent. Secondly, apart from any evidence of custom, privity of contract was established between the plaintiffs and the defendant. The broker was authorized by the defendant to contract according to the rules and regulations of the Stock Exchange, and it was the intention of the plaintiffs and the broker that the contract should be one which should bind each of the clients to the extent of their respective orders. The dictum of Cleasby, B., in Mollett v. Robinson in the Exchequer Chamber, 20 W. R. 544, L. R. 7 C. P. 84, supports this contention.

Herbert Reed, K.C. (Boydell Houghton and A. H. Chaytor with him), for the defendant.—Apart from the alleged custom it is clear that privity of contract was not created between the plaintiffs and the defendant, for in Beckhusen v. Hamblet, 49 W. R. 481, [1901] 2 K. B. 73, the Court of Appeal dismissed the appeal on the ground that the custom had not been proved. As to the custom there was no such evidence of it as should have been left to the jury. It may be the practice on the Stock Exchange for a broker to include the orders of several clients in one contract with a jobber, but that does not make each of the clients liable to the jobber to the extent of his particular order. If a broker is instructed to sell 225 shares he does not comply with the order by entering into a contract for 925 shares, and it is immaterial that the broker subsequently appropriates in his books a part of the 925 shares to the fulfilment of the order to sell 225. In any case the custom does not apply to a case such as this where the broker's own dealings were included in the contract. Further, the defendant, being a foreign principal, cannot be taken to have notice of the custom relied on, and for the same reason there is no presumption that credit was given to him. Lastly, it is submitted that the evidence shows that there was no repudiation of the contract by the defendant communicated by him to the plaintiffs at the time they closed the shares.

Isaacs, K.C., in reply, cited Pike v. Ongley, 35 W. R. 534, 18 Q. B. D. 708.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 26.—BIGHAM, J.—The facts in this case were as follows: The plaintiffs are members of the Stock Exchange, and they are jobbers. On the 12th of December, 1899, the defendant instructed his broker, a Mr. Charles Hemmerde, to carry over, subject to the rules, regulations, and usages of the Stock Exchange, 225 Randfontein shares to the end of December account, and accordingly on the 12th of December his broker carried over with the plaintiffs that number of shares to the end of December account. The broker, in accordance with the ordinary usage of the Stock Exchange, carried the shares over together with a number of other shares of the same kind which he had to carry over for other clients; in fact, the broker carried over with the plaintiffs in all 925 Randfontein shares by one transaction. The broker intimated to the plaintiffs that he required to carry over for the end of December account—that is to say, from the middle to the end of December account, in all 925 shares. He did not specify the names of his various clients for whom he was transacting the business, nor did he mention the different numbers of shares which he desired to have carried over for each particular client; but the plaintiffs knew well that the transaction which the broker was carrying through with them was one which might be, and probably was, carried out for many different clients. On the 14th of December the broker was declared a defaulter on the Stock Exchange. Thereupon the plaintiffs asked the broker for the names of his principals for whom he had carried over the 925 shares, and the broker gave to the plaintiffs the names of the principals, and amongst those names was the name of the defendant in respect of 225 shares, part of the 925. It appears that, as soon as the defendant heard that his broker had failed, he intimated to the broker through one of the broker's clerks that he considered himself no longer bound by the contract, and he claimed, as I understand, to settle the bargain at the price of the day when the broker stopped payment. The fact that he declined to be further bound by the transaction was communicated by the broker's clerk to the plaintiffs in the ordinary course of business, and the plaintiffs thereupon closed the transaction, as in my opinion they were entitled to do, supposing that there was in existence in point of law a contract between them and the defendant. The defendant had intimated that he would no longer be bound by the contract, that is to say, that he would not take up the shares at the end of December, when the time for delivery would come, and he had intimated that intention in a way which amounted, in my opinion, to notice to the plaintiffs, or to anybody concerned in the contract, that he would not perform his obligations under it. In those circumstances I think the plaintiffs, assuming always that they had a contract with the defendant, were entitled to end the contract and to sue for the damages. Accordingly they sold out the 225 Randfontein shares, and what they now seek for is the difference between the price at which they had carried over those shares on the 12th of December and the price at which they sold them, a sum of £136. The defendant says he is not bound to pay this money because he has made no contract with the plaintiffs and the plaintiffs have made no contract with him. His contention is, as I understand, that having given a mandate to his broker to carry over 225 shares, that mandate was in fact never carried out, that the contract entered into with the jobbers on the 12th of December, which related to 925 shares, could in no sense be regarded as a carrying out of his mandate, and that, therefore, his agent not having carried out the transaction, and the only transaction, which he was authorized to enter into, there is no contract between him, the defendant, and the plaintiffs. Now, what really happened was this, on the 12th of December the broker, having authority to carry over 225 shares on behalf of the defendant, and having authority also to carry over a number of other blocks of the same shares, added all the number of shares together, and, acting for all his various clients, carried over with the plaintiffs the whole lot of 925 in one transaction. No writing of any kind passed between the jobber and the broker. It is not usual that any writing should pass. The practice is for each party to make some sort of a note of the transaction in his own books; beyond that there is no record of the transaction. The broker having entered into this transaction with the plaintiffs, returned to his office and made an entry in one of his own books, a book kept for such purpose, recording the fact on one side of the page that he had carried over 925 Randfonteins with the plaintiffs, and recording the fact on the other side of the page that these 925 shares had been carried over for the particular clients there named, and he placed opposite the name of each client the number of shares in respect of which each client was concerned. Thus the defendant's name appears in that book as being a person for whom he had carried over 225 shares with the plaintiffs, being part of the 925 shares. The defendant was then advised by the usual continuation contract, or carrying over contract, by the broker that the transaction had taken place. The question that I have to determine is whether privity of contract was established by this transaction between the plaintiffs and the defendant, because if no privity of contract was established, the plaintiffs cannot sue in this action; they sue in contract, and they must make out a contract with the defendant. Whether there was a contract or not is, in my opinion, a question of intention. When the broker went to the plaintiffs and carried over the 925 shares he, in my opinion, intended that as to 225 there should be a contract on behalf of his principal, the defendant, with the plaintiffs. He intended to do that which his principal, the defendant, had directed him to do. On the other hand, in my opinion, the plaintiffs intended to make with the broker any number of different contracts that the broker might be engaged to make. It is true they did not ask the broker how many clients he was dealing for when he entered into the one transaction, nor was it necessary that they should. They neither asked him for the name or names nor the number of the shares, but they knew perfectly well that when the broker was entering into this transaction he was probably doing it for more than one client, and therefore, in my opinion, there was an intention on the part of the plaintiffs to make such number of contracts for such people as the broker might have instructions from, and there was an intention on the part of the broker that privity should be created between the plaintiffs' and his, the broker's, respective clients. I should have thought myself that that was of itself sufficient to establish the necessary privity. The case was tried before a jury, and the jury found, in answer to some questions put by me, that there was a usage on the Stock Exchange, which was in fact admitted by the defendant, by which brokers lump together the orders of their clients and execute them by means of one transaction with the jobber and that the defendant gave his order on the terms that it might be so executed. The jury found further that there is a custom or practice by which the jobber and each client—that is, each client of the broker—become bound to each other to carry out that part of the contract applicable to the particular client's order.

Now, it is said that the privity of contract was not established, and the case of Robinson v. Mollett is relied on as an authority for the contention. I have said that, in my opinion, privity of contract was clearly established by what happened in this case. Authority was given to the broker to create privity; he intended to create it; and the person with whom he was making the bargain intended that it should be created; and that, in my opinion, forms the contract. But I should like to refer to Robinson v. Mollett in order to see whether it really applies to this case at all. It is very difficult to discover from the conflicting judgments in Robinson v. Mollett what the true grounds were upon which the decision was ultimately based. For my own part I prefer the view taken by Blackburn, J., that the brokers in that case had not been employed to establish privity of contract, but had been employed merely to buy tallow for the defendants, and that having bought the tallow for the defendants, though they bought it in their own names, and by means of a contract which established no privity of contract between their client and the vendor, yet they carried out his instructions and were entitled to be indemnified for the consequences. But it is too late in the day to take that view of the case, and I can only refer to the opinion in the House of Lords in order to see what the grounds were upon which that case was decided. The judgment was delivered by Lord Chelmsford, and it proceeded upon a particular view taken upon the particular facts of the case. After setting out the facts, Lord Chelmsford said (L. R. 7 H. L., at p. 835): "In the arguments and in the judgments in this case it seems to have been taken for granted that the custom applies in the case of a single transaction of a broker buying in the market upon the order of a principal. But upon a careful examination of the terms of the custom as stated it appears to me that it merely regulates the dealings of brokers amongst themselves, in buying and selling as principals, and the mode of adjusting and settling accounts with each other, and that no part of it is applicable to the ordinary employment of a broker engaged to buy for a real principal." He was apparently of opinion that the so-called "custom" in that case had no application at all to the transaction between the plaintiff and the defendant, but that it was a custom only as to the dealings between the brokers themselves in the market. Then he goes on to say: "Assuming, however, that the custom would have applied in the present case, if it had been known to the appellant at time of employing the respondents as his brokers, the question arises whether it is of such a nature as to be binding on a person who is ignorant of its existence, by merely employing a broker to buy for him in the market where the custom prevails." He says, as I understand, that inasmuch as it is a custom by which a broker becomes entitled as between himself and his client to convert the mandate which he has received to make a contract with a third party into a mandate between himself and his client to convert the mandate which he has received to make a contract with a third party into a mandate between himself and his clients, it is not a custom which in the absence of express knowledge can bind the client. That is all that the case lays down; and Lord Chelmsford says that on the facts of that case no contract was made between the client and the vendor. In Robinson v. Mollett there had been apparently some vague intention on the part of the plaintiff, the broker, to appropriate to the defendant some part of the tallow which he, the broker, had purchased in supposed execution of his clients', the defendants, order; and as to that intention to appropriate Lord Chelmsford said: "Now the mere intention to appropriate a portion of the tallow agreed to be purchased from Simpson & Co. and Rayner & Co., respectively, could not possibly establish a privity between them and the appellant, even if the delivery of a smaller quantity than that which they had agreed to sell could have been enforced against them." But I do not read this passage as meaning that if there had been an effective appropriation privity might not have resulted. In the present case there was not only an intention on both sides to create a contract which should bind the plaintiffs on the one side and the defendants on the other, but there was an actual appropriation of part of the 925 shares in the books of the broker to the fulfilment of this contract, and the present case appears to be like the case, imagined for the purpose of argument by Cleasby, B., in Mollett v. Robinson, L. R. 7 C. P., at p. 94, when it was before the Exchequer Chamber. Cleasby, B., in his judgment, says this: "If the plaintiffs, as soon as the contract with Simpson & Co. was made, had (as it is said they intended to do) really appropriated fifty tons of it to the defendant, and that contract had continued in force until the time for performance, the defendant would have been entitled to the benefit of that appropriation, and would have been entitled (supposing the usage did not make it a distributable contract among the purchasers, so as to entitle each to sue in his own name) to sue in the name of the plaintiffs and recover damages." I think there arose in this case the state of facts contemplated by Cleasby, B., in that part of his judgment, and I, therefore, think that the privity was established.

Now, there are two cases to which I should like to refer, as they illustrate the point before me. In the case of Beckhusen v. Hamblet, [1900] 2 Q. B. 18, 48 W. R. Dig. 185, the circumstances were very like the circumstances of the present case, and Kennedy, J., in the course of his judgment, said ([1900] 2 Q. B, at p. 26): "Let it be assumed that there is a usage on the Stock Exchange, legally valid and known to and binding upon a client such as the defendant, that a stockbroker employed in the purchase of shares for a client properly may, if he thinks it convenient, fulfil his duty to his client although, instead of creating, as it is ordinarily a broker's duty to create, a contractual relation between his client and the seller, he lumps the client's order with other orders, and in his own name contracts in a single transaction with the selling jobber for the purchase of a larger number of shares than the client has instructed him or authorized him to buy. What follows from this assumption? This only, as it appears to me that, as the broker will have fulfilled his duty according to usage, the client cannot complain, and is bound to pay the broker his commission and indemnify him against such liabilities as the broker may necessarily or properly incur in the course and for the purpose of his employment. Surely the usage in no way assists the plaintiff's case here." In Beckhusen v. Hamblet the action was brought, as it is here, by a jobber upon a contract supposed to exist between the broker's client and the jobber. "The plaintiff's case," said Kennedy, J., "is not a case of a broker suing his client for indemnity in respect of shares bought for the client in a way which is sanctioned by the rules and usages of the Stock Exchange, but it is the case of a seller seeking to have recourse against the principal of a broker who has contracted with the seller in his own name by a contract for the purchase of a larger number of shares than that which the client authorized, and which included a number which were being obtained by the broker for a different client. The usage cannot operate, in my judgment, so as to make a man liable upon a contract which is not, in point of law, his contract; it cannot create contractual rights between parties where none exist according to legal principle." With most of that I entirely agree, but I disagree in this—that there is no contract already created. In my opinion, there was a contract created in the case of Beckhusen v. Hamblet. If there is no contract created of course nobody is liable; but it is a mistake to suppose that, because the broker has carried over the shares of a number of his clients in one transaction, he has therefore not created privity of contract between each one of his clients and the jobber with whom the transaction is carried through. In my opinion privity of contract is established by the intention of all the parties.

Beckhusen v. Hamblet went to the Court of Appeal, and the Court of Appeal dismissed the appeal on the ground that the existence of usage had not been established; but the Court stated that the dismissal must not be taken in any way to prejudice the plaintiffs' right to raise the question as to the existence and validity of such a usage in any subsequent action in respect of the said transaction.

There is one other case to which I desire to refer, the case of Levitt v. Hamblet, [1901] 2 K. B. 53. I refer to it because the Master of the Rolls, Collins and Romer, L.JJ., referred to Robinson v. Mollett, and pointed out the distinction, which I have endeavoured to point out, between Robinson v. Mollett and the case then before the court. I think it is only necessary that I should read the following passage from the judgment of Romer, L.J.: "With reference to the meaning imputed to Lord Chelmsford in his judgment in Robinson v. Mollett, that a mere intention to appropriate is not enough to make an appropriation,

I think for the reasons pointed out during the argument that meaning cannot fairly be ascribed to the words used. The question whether a person does or does not buy shares for an undisclosed principal is a question of fact and may depend upon his intention; but, though difficult to prove, it may be proved. It does not follow that because the intention is hard to prove the law will not allow it to be proved at all. In many cases it is essential to prove a person's intention as a question of fact, and then it must be proved on such evidence as is available. When once the position is reached that a person's intention is a question of fact, it is illogical to say that it cannot be proved because it is a mere question of intention."

Now, in this case the broker was instructed by the defendant to make the contract for him with the jobber on the Stock Exchange. He went with that mandate in his hand to the plaintiffs and he made a contract. He made it, it is true, as part and parcel of a larger transaction which included other contracts; but he made the contract that he was instructed to make, and in my opinion, as I have said before, that is of itself sufficient. But there is in this case a further fact, for, having made the contract, the broker forthwith appropriated to each one of his clients the number of shares necessary for carrying through each client's instructions, and he accordingly appropriated to the defendant in this case 225 shares, parcel of the 925 shares. I am absolutely satisfied that if, instead of the jobber having to sue the broker's customer, the broker's customer had had to sue the jobber, the jobber would have had no answer at all to the action; and, if that be so, then it follows that the co-relative right exists by which the jobber is entitled to sue the broker's customer.

There was one other matter to which I have to refer. When the broker carried over the 925 shares for the plaintiffs there were a number—I think 125 of them—in which he had himself some sort of personal interest. He was interested with somebody else in 125 of the shares, and there was a suggestion that in some way or another that invalidated the transaction. In my opinion it has nothing whatever to do with it. It is just as if the broker had bought or carried over 125 shares for himself—a separate transaction. The jury have found in point of fact that the inclusion of the shares belonging to the broker made no difference whatever in the price; that the other clients of the broker did not in any way suffer, nor do they. If I am right in supposing that the transaction in connection with the 925 shares can be resolved into the component transactions which go to make it up, then each transaction becomes a separate transaction independently of the others, and the one transaction of 125 shares in which the broker was interested is an absolutely independent matter which does not affect the rights of the plaintiffs or the defendant in any way whatever.

There is another question, which was not left to the jury but with which I have to deal—namely, whether there was evidence of any repudiation of the contract by the defendant? It was said that, inasmuch as he had only communicated his intention no longer to be bound by the contract, by letter written to the clerk of the broker, he had not communicated his intention to the plaintiffs not to carry out the contract. I do not think there is anything in that contention. When the defendant communicated to his broker's clerk his intention to be no longer bound by the contract he must be taken, in my opinion, to have intended that that communication should be forwarded to all persons who were interested in the transaction, and it was in fact forwarded to the plaintiffs, and the plaintiffs, as I have said, before they were entitled to do, acted upon it.

In these circumstances I think there must be judgment for the plaintiffs.

Judgment for the plaintiffs.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Spyer & Sons.

Solicitors for the defendant, Webbers & Duncan.

House of Lords.

From C. A. (England). Nov. 29, 30; Dec. 7, 10, 11, 1900; Aug. 1, 1901.

DOVEY AND OTHERS v. CORY. (a.)

Company—Director—Dividends—Loss of capital—Misfeasance—Reliance of director on officers of company—Director's responsibilities—Statements honestly made—Damage—Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 63), s. 10.

A director of a company, in the absence of reasonable ground for suspicion, is entitled to rely upon the judgment information and advice of the officials of a large company. Where the necessary course of business necessitates delegation to others, and there is no moral fraud on his part, the management of the affairs of the company in a reasonable manner is a sufficient discharge of his duties.

What constitutes reasonable care must be dealt with in each particular case.

Remarks as to payment of dividends out of capital (floating and fixed), and some observations of the Court of Appeal thereon not approved of.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (sub. nom. In re National Bank of Wales, 48 W. R. 99, [1899] 2 Ch. 629), affirmed.

This was an appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal (Lindley, M.R., Jeune, P., and Romer, L.J.), 48 W. R. 99, [1899] 2 Ch. 627, which reversed that of Wright, J.

The facts are set out very fully in the report below. It will be sufficient to give the following:

The National Bank of Wales was incorporated as a limited company in 1879 with its head office at Cardiff.

The course of business pursued is given in the judgments.

The respondent, John Cory, was for some years a director of the bank, but resigned in 1890.

In 1893 the Metropolitan Bank of England and Wales agreed to take over all the assets of the National Bank (except uncalled capital) on certain terms.

The agreement was approved and resolutions passed for the voluntary winding-up of the National Bank. There proved to be a large deficiency which the National Bank had to make good.

In the liquidation a summons was taken out to render the respondent liable—in respect of alleged misfeasance—first, in paying dividends out of capital; secondly, in making or sanctioning improper advances to directors; and thirdly, in making improper advances to customers who were, or were reputed to be, insolvent; and that he might be ordered to pay to the liquidator the full amount of such losses.

The creditors of the bank had been paid, and Wright, J., ordered the respondent to pay £37,000, the amount of dividends paid to the shareholders in 1887, 1888, 1889, 1890, and interest at 5 per cent.,

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

but without prejudice as to the question of repayment by shareholders.

The Court of Appeal reversed this order.

The liquidator appealed.

Sir R. T. Reid, Q.C., and Ingpen, Q.C. (S. T. Evans with them), for the appellant Dovey.—Though no moral fraud is imputed, the respondent was guilty of culpable negligence. Should a director pay dividends out of capital, the onus is on him to show there was no neglect of duty, otherwise he is liable. Bad debts were treated as good assets. The circulating capital should have been kept intact, and loss incurred in a previous year provided for. The respondent Cory was guilty of misfeasance, for he took no reasonable care, and as a director it is for him to make out that he did.

They referred to Overend, Gurney, & Co. v. Gibb, L. R. 5 H. L. 460; Rance's case, 19 W. R. 291, L. R. 6 Ch. App. 104; Flitcroft's case, 31 W. R. 174, 21 Ch. D. 519; In re Oxford Benefit Building and Investment Society, 35 W. R. 116, 35 Ch. D. 502; Leeds Estate Building and Investment Co. v. Shepherd, 36 W. R. 322; Verner v. General and Commercial Investment Trust, [1894] 2 Ch. 239; Wilmer v. M'Namara & Co., 43 W. R. 519, [1895] 2 Ch. 245; In re Denham & Co., 32 W. R. 487, 25 Ch. D. 752; In re Lands Allotment Co., 42 W. R. 404, [1894] 1 Ch. 616; Lee v. Neuchatel Asphalte Co., 37 W. R. 321, 41 Ch. D. 1; and Lagunas Nitrate Co. v. Lagunas Syndicate, 48 W. R. 74, [1899] 2 Ch. 392.

Sheldon, for the appellants, the Metropolitan Bank of England and Wales.

Swinfen Eady, Q.C., Rufus Isaacs, Q.C. (G. F. Hart and Nepean with them), for the respondents, as to the question of the alleged payment of dividends out of capital.—Dividends were paid out of the profits of each year: In re Barrow Hæmatite Steel Co., 37 W. R. 249, 39 Ch. D. 382. The respondent, who always acted honestly and reasonably, was entitled to rely on his colleagues and the officers of the bank. There is no question of creditors, who have all been paid.

They referred to Trevor v. Whitworth, 36 W. R. 145, 12 App. Cas. 409.

Ingpen, Q.C., replied.

THE HOUSE took time for consideration.

Aug. 1.—Earl of HALSBURY, L.C.—In this case the liquidator of the National Bank of Wales appeals against a judgment of the Court of Appeal, whereby Mr. John Cory, the respondent, was discharged from the liability which Wright, J.'s, judgment had imposed upon him to pay £37,000 for the benefit of the shareholders of the company, in respect of dividends already distributed, and a further sum for interest.

Mr. John Cory was a director of the company, and it is for his supposed misconduct in the management of the affairs of the company that this liability was imposed upon him. It is alleged and proved that certain losses have been sustained by the company, and the ground upon which Mr. John Cory is sought to be made liable is the very short and intelligible ground that he was a party to false and fraudulent statements as to the position of the company, and had had a share in causing these losses. The Court of Appeal have acquitted him of any knowledge of what was falsely stated, and counsel for the appellant Dovey, in opening this appeal, stated that he did not intend, in arguing for Mr. John Cory's liability, to impute to him any moral obliquity. Now, there is no doubt that there were balance-sheets laid before meetings of shareholders which, to use the language of the articles of association, were not proper and which did not truly report as to the state and condition of the company, and did not comply with the requirements of the articles in question in respect of the particular sum which the directors recommended as dividend, that it should be paid out of the profits, but a greater sum was paid out as dividend than would have been paid if certain things had been taken into consideration, and therefore larger than should have been paid.

A great part of the judgment, both of Wright, J., and of the Court of Appeal, is occupied by discussing matters which are not now before your lordships as matters in debate. It is now admitted that Mr. John Cory ceased to be a director in December, 1890.

I am very clearly of opinion that the judgment of the Court of Appeal is right and ought to be affirmed; but my opinion is entirely based upon the question of fact that he was guilty of no breach of duty whatever, and for reasons which I will refer to hereafter I am very anxious not to deal with some reasons given for their judgment by the Court of Appeal, which, in the view of the facts that I take, do not arise here; and in what I say I desire to be understood as only dealing with the facts of this particular case.

Now, in the first instance. I will assume that the company has sustained loss by the issue of fraudulent balance-sheets, by the improper advance of money to the customers of the bank, and that it has also sustained loss by the lending of money to directors without security. With respect to the default involving liability, if Mr. John Cory was conscious of the falsehood it is not necessary to go any further. Like anyone else who is a party to a false statement acted upon to the prejudice of the person to whom it is made, he would be liable to the extent to which his falsehood has inflicted loss on his victims, but after the admission that has been made it is unnecessary to pursue this head of inquiry; he certainly could not be acquitted of moral obliquity if party to a fraudulent statement. But it is said he has so grossly neglected his duty as a director that, though he may not have known the true state of the facts, he ought to have known them, and his breach of duty in that respect renders him liable. In order to see how far this obligation is made out it is necessary to consider what the business of the company was, and what was the position of Mr. John Cory in relation to it.

I think it is idle to talk in general terms of the duty of a director to look after the concerns of the company of which he is one of the managers without seeing what in the ordinary course of business he ought to do or to have done. Now there are some things which, of course, must be, or at all events ought to be, apparent to anyone responsible for the conduct of a commercial business, and to apply that observation to the business of which we are speaking—namely, a banking business—but I do not understand that anyone has suggested that there was neglect or default by reason of the absence of some system under which, if honestly carried out, the interests of the bank would have been in that respect secured.

It is admitted that the company's principal bank and its head office were at Cardiff, where the directors met and the general manager was in daily attendance. The company had also many branch banks, each with its own manager. The course of business was this: Each branch manager sent weekly to the head office what is called a weekly state—that is, an account showing how the assets and liabilities of the branch stood, what advances or overdrafts had been made or allowed, and to whom, what securities the bank held, and other matters. Every quarter each branch manager made a more formal return to the head office showing the position of the branch and the business done during the past quarter. It was the duty of the general manager to examine these documents, and to report to the board anything disclosed by them which required their attention. The weekly states or quarterly returns were in the board room for reference in case of need, but unless attention was called to them the directors did not think it necessary to examine them. The chairman of the directors was Mr. Thomas Cory, a brother of Mr. John Cory. The chairman and the general manager (Mr. Collins) visited each branch bank every year; and in addition, two skilled inspectors frequently went round and inspected the accounts and reported to the general manager. The accounts of the branch banks appear, however, not to have been separately audited by professional accountants. The auditors employed to examine the company's accounts, and to certify the annual balance-sheets and accounts laid before the shareholders only saw the head office books and the returns from the branch offices certified by their respective managers to the head office. These certified returns formed part of the weekly states, but omitted much that they contained. The minutes of the directors' meetings show that, speaking generally, they attended with reasonable regularity and transacted a large amount of business. No director, unless it was the chairman, attended to any details not brought before the board either by the chairman or by the general manager. Mr. John Cory stated in his affidavit the general course of business at board meetings, and his cross-examination does not substantially differ from the account he there gives. But it is suggested that Mr. Cory is responsible because this and other portions of the system were not faithfully adhered to. And, indeed, what is really made the test of his repsonsibility is that he did not find out what was fraudulently withheld from his knowledge. So the warning letters of the auditor, which were never suffered to reach him, are suggested as warnings to him which he ought not to have neglected. Again, the insufficient striking out of bad and doubtful debts by which it is alleged that the amounts paid in dividends to himself and other directors, as well as shareholders, are by a process of reasoning and calculation assumed to be payments out of capital. These things are all assumed to have been done as though done with knowledge and intention, while at the same time the admission is made that there was no evil mind or conscious fraud.

Now I think such things, if done with evil mind and intention, would be fraud, and it comes back again to the proposition that the responsibility must be based upon the assumption that Mr. Cory is responsible because he did not find out the fraudulent knaves by whom he was surrounded. One was his own brother, another was the general manager; and once I arrive at the conclusion that there were those about him whose interest and object was to deceive him, I certainly do not think that the things which were designedly concealed from him are things which ought to be relied upon as matters for which he was responsible. In the view I take, the whole of the evidence which is relevant and important to question, did Mr. Cory knowingly permit the things to be done which were done, becomes to my mind entirely immaterial if one is to start with the assumption that he knew nothing about them.

Dealing with the several heads of charge as they have been formulated in the judgment of Wright, J., —namely, negligence, breaches of trust in respect of advances made contrary to said articles of association, and payments of dividends and of capital—I think each and all of them may be disposed of by the proposition that Mr. Cory was not himself conscious of any one of these things being done, and that unless he can be made responsible for not knowing these things—as Wright, J., put it, unless he is shown to have exhibited a complete neglect of the duties he had undertaken, the charges are not made out. The charge of neglect appears to rest on the assertion that Mr. Cory, like the other directors, did not attend to any details of business not brought before them by the general manager or the chairman, and the argument raises a serious question as to the responsibility of all persons holding positions like that of directors, as to how far they are called upon to distrust and be on their guard against the possibility of fraud being committed by their subordinates of every degree. It is obvious if there is such a duty it must render anything like an intelligent devolution of labour impossible. Was Mr. Cory to turn himself into an auditor, a managing director, a chairman, and find out whether auditors, managing directors, and chairmen were all alike deceiving him? That the letters of the auditors were kept from him is clear. That he was assured that provision had been made for bad debts, and that he believed such assurances, is involved in the admission that he was guilty of no moral fraud; so that it comes to this—that he ought to have discovered a network of conspiracy and fraud by which he was surrounded, and found out that his own brother and the managing director (who have since been made criminally responsible for frauds connected with their respective offices) were inducing him to make representations as to the prospects of the concern and the dividends properly payable which have turned out to be improper and false. I cannot think it can be expected of a director that he should be watching either the inferior officers of the bank or verifying the calculations of the auditors himself. The business of life could not go on if people could not trust those who are put into a position of trust for the express purpose of attending to details of management. If Mr. Cory was deceived by his own officers—and the theory of his being free from moral fraud assumes under the circumstances that he was—there appears to me to be no case against him at all. The provision made for bad debts, it is well said, was inadequate, but those who assured him that it was adequate were the very persons who were to attend to that part of the business —and so of the rest. If the state and condition of the bank were what was represented, then no one will say that the sum paid in dividends was excessive. If I assume, as I do, that Mr. Cory acted upon representations made to him which he believed, and which as coming from the officers of the bank to whom he was, in my judgment, justified in giving credit, the discussion of whether the dividends actually paid were or were not properly divisible has no bearing on Mr. Cory's liability, and I am very reluctant to give any opinion upon it, inasmuch as the question may arise when it may be necessary to decide it. I deprecate any premature judgment.

I am, as I have said, very reluctant to enter into a question which for the reasons I have given does not arise here, and into which the Court of Appeal has entered at some length. The only reason why I refer to it at all is lest by silence I should be supposed to adopt a course of reasoning as to which I am not satisfied that it is correct. I doubt very much whether such questions can ever be treated in the abstract at all. The mode and manner in which a business is carried on, and what is usual or the reverse, may have a considerable influence in determining the question what may be treated as profits, and what is capital. Even the distinction between fixed and floating capital which in an abstract treatise like Adam Smith's Wealth of Nations is appropriate enough, may with reference to a concrete case be quite inappropriate. It is easy to lay down as an abstract proposition that you must not pay dividends out of capital, but the application of that very plain proposition may raise questions of the utmost difficulty in their solution. I desire, as I have said, not to express any opinion, but, as an illustration of what difficulties may arise the example given by counsel of one ship being lost out of a considerable number, and the question whether all dividends must be stopped until the value of that lost ship is made good out of the further earnings of the company or partnership, is one which one would have to deal with. On the one hand, people put their money into a trading concern to give them an income, and the sudden stoppage of all dividends would send down the value of their shares to zero and possibly involve its ruin. On the other hand, companies cannot at their will and without the precautions enforced by the statute reduce their capital; but what are profits and what is capital may be a difficult and sometimes an almost impossible problem to solve. When the time comes that these questions come before us in a concrete case we must deal with them, but until they do I for one decline to express an opinion not called for by the particular facts before us, and I am the more averse to doing so because I foresee that many matters will have to be considered by men of business which are not altogether familiar to a court of law.

I move that this judgment be affirmed, and the appeal dismissed with costs.

Lord MACNAGHTEN.—I have had an opportunity of reading the judgment of the Lord Chancellor, and I desire to express my concurrence in it, and at the same time to guard myself from being understood to assent to all the propositions supposed to have been laid down by the Court of Appeal in this case. I say no more, because it seems to me that when counsel for the appellant Dovey withdrew all charges involving moral obliquity against Mr. Cory, the case was at an end. And I do not think it desirable for any tribunal to do that which Parliament has abstained from doing—that is, to formulate precise rules for the guidance or embarrassment of business men in the conduct of business affairs. There never has been, and I think there never will be, much difficulty in dealing with any particular case on its own facts and circumstances; and, speaking for myself, I rather doubt the wisdom of attempting to do more. I understand from Lord Shand that he also takes this view.

Lord DAVEY.—I agree in thinking that the appellant has not succeeded in making out a case for the relief which he asks against the respondent.

The appellant seeks to make the respondent liable under three heads—first, in respect of losses incurred by advances of money which he alleges that the respondent and the other directors of the bank negligently made to irresponsible persons, and without sufficient security; secondly, in respect of advances to the directors themselves, which he alleges were made contrary to the express provisions of the articles of association; and thirdly, in respect of sums paid to the shareholders (including the respondent himself) by way of dividend on their shares, which he alleges were paid out of the capital of the bank, and not out of profits. In fact, he alleges that there were no profits out of which such dividends could properly be paid, and that an apparent profit was created only by including as assets debts known to be bad and irrecoverable.

As regards the first two heads of claim, Wright, J., as well as the Court of Appeal, has held that the claims cannot be sustained; and as I agree with the reasons which have been assigned for so holding, I need not repeat them. As regards the third head of claim, the case as presented at the bar has been very much narrowed by the admission of the appellant's counsel that the respondent ceased to be a director in December, 1890, and his acceptance of the decision of the Court of Appeal that the Statute of Limitations applies so as to bar the recovery of any sums paid away prior to six years before the commencement of the proceedings. The claim is thus confined to the three dividends paid in July, 1889, December, 1889, and July, 1890.

I think it appears from the evidence that in the balance-sheets upon which these dividends were recommended by the directors, bad and irrecoverable debts were in fact included amongst the assets of the company, and that if those debts had been written off (as they ought to have been) the balance-sheets would not have shown any profit out of which the dividends could have been paid. But before proceeding to discuss the evidence upon which it is sought to fix the respondent with responsibility, I will say a few words with regard to the law upon the subject with a view to ascertain exactly what it is the appellant must establish.

I need only refer to three cases which seem to me to contain the whole law upon the subject. In In re Mercantile Trading Co., Stringer's case, 17 W. R. 694, L. R. 4 Ch. App. 475, the business of the company in question was of an extremely speculative and hazardous character, and the directors had paid a dividend on their estimated value of assets which were afterwards totally lost. It was held that the estimate, having been made bonâ fide, and without any intention to defraud anybody, a director could not be made liable, when the company was wound up, to replace the money. In Rance's case Lord Romilly laid down the principle which he thought governed cases of this description thus: "When an improper payment has been made, if it be a mere error of judgment it cannot be recovered; if it be a fraudulent payment, then it can." The learned judge explained what he meant by a fraudulent payment: "I mean one where the person who makes it, or is concerned in making it, is at the time aware of the impropriety of making it, but does so in order to obtain a benefit for himself"; and he adds, "The director may be ignorant of this fact, but if his ignorance arises from his wilfully shutting his eyes to the facts which are before him, he is equally guilty." I think that this statement of the law is very nearly but not quite accurate. In my opinion it is not necessary that the motive of improper payment should be to obtain a benefit for the director himself. I also understand Lord Romilly to include in the expression "wilfully shutting his eyes," culpable negligence or reckless indifference by the director in the performance of his duties. Lord Romilly decided that case in favour of the director. The Court of Appeal took a different view of the facts from that taken by Lord Romilly, and held that the directors in the preparation of the so-called balance-sheet had not followed the directions in their articles of association, and the balance-sheet did not in fact purport to show a profit out of which a dividend could be paid. In such a case there can be no doubt of the liability of the director who took part in the payment of the dividend. The case of the Leeds Estate, &c., Co. v. Shepherd, 36 W. R. 322, 36 Ch. D. 787, before Stirling, J., was a case of the same description. The directors had not followed the directions contained in the articles of association. The learned judge, in the course of his judgment, states the law thus: "It seems to me that the views expressed by the learned judges who decided Rance's case are consistent with the proposition that directors who are proved to have in fact paid a dividend out of capital fail to excuse themselves if they have not taken reasonable care to secure the preparation of estimates and statements of account such as it was their duty to prepare and submit to the shareholders, and have declared the dividends complained of without having exercised thereon their judgment as mercantile men on the estimates and statements submitted to them." I agree in this statement of the law, and I do not think it inconsistent with that of Lord Romilly, properly understood, and subject to the observation which I have already made upon it. It is by this standard that the conduct of the respondent must be judged in this case.

The respondent, in his affidavit, states generally that he was, from first to last, under the honest and genuine belief that the affairs of the company were in a sound and solvent condition, and that its business was being carried on at a profit, and that its net profits for the time being were amply sufficient to justify the dividends which were from time to time, during his directorship, paid to the shareholders. And he adds that the general manager and branch managers were, so far as he knew, men of unquestioned competence and integrity, and that he and his co-directors were compelled by the magnitude of the business and the exigencies of the case generally, to rely upon (and he did rely upon) these officials in all ordinary matters relating to the accounts of customers and other questions of detail. And he deals specifically with the various matters alleged in the liquidator's evidence on the same lines. The respondent was cross-examined on his affidavit at great, but not unnecessary, length. I am not, I think, doing injustice to the appellant's case when I say that reliance was chiefly placed on the "weekly states" and "quarterly returns" made by the branch managers; or that if he cannot succeed in fixing the respondent with liability on these documents his case fails. These returns were laid on the table in the board room at each meeting of the directors. The comparative analysis of them, made by the skilled accountant who advises the appellant, does, I think, show that certain accounts which were treated as good by the general manager in the preparation of the balance-sheets submitted by him to the directors were in fact irretrievably bad, and it is difficult to acquit the general manager of improper conduct in including them as assets. The respondent says, in his affidavit, that the "weekly states" consisted each week of a very large and voluminous pile of sheets, which it would have taken the directors a couple of days to go through, and that it was the duty of the general manager to go through the weekly states, with the letters of the branch managers accompanying them, and to place upon the agenda any points arising upon them which he considered ought to be brought to the attention of the directors—and upon the discussion of such points the documents were, when necessary, referred to; but, except in such cases, the weekly states were not consulted by the directors, but they relied on the general manager going carefully through them and drawing their attention to any matter requiring their consideration. On cross-examination he adhered to this statement. He added that the chairman also went through them often individually, and he did so for the board. He admitted that, before recommending a dividend, he did not look at all the accounts or look at the books themselves, but he said that the directors looked at the documents which were put before them by the manager—the amount which he considered was doubtful and bad—and they made a reserve for it. He also said that it was never brought before him that amounts due from bankrupt debtors were included in the balance-sheet of each year, and he never heard of any single case of that kind. It further appeared, from the evidence of other witnesses, that the branches of the bank were regularly visited and their books examined by the chairman and two inspectors.

In this state of the evidence, I ask whether the course of business at the board meetings, as described by the respondent, was a reasonable course to be pursued by the respondent and other directors, or whether the knowledge which might have been derived from a careful and comparative examination of the weekly states and quarterly returns from the different branches of the bank ought to be imputed to the respondent? or (alternatively) whether he was guilty of such neglect of his duty as a director as would render him liable to damages? I do not think that it is made out that either of the two latter questions should be answered in the affirmative. I think the respondent was bound to give his attention to and exercise his judgment as a man of business on the matters which were brought before the board at the meetings which he attended, and it is not proved that he did not do so. But I think he was entitled to rely upon the judgment, information, and advice of the chairman and general manager as to whose integrity, skill, and competence he had no reason for suspicion. I agree with what was said by Jessel, M.R., in In re Wincham Shipbuilding, Boiler, and Salt Co., Hallmark's case, 26 W. R. 529, 824, 9 Ch. D. 329, and by Chitty, J., in In re Denham & Co., that directors are not bound to examine entries in the company's books. It was the duty of the general manager and (possibly) the chairman to go carefully through the returns from the branches, and to bring before the board any matter requiring their consideration, but the respondent was not, in my opinion, guilty of negligence in not examining them for himself, notwithstanding that they were laid on the table of the board for reference. The case is no doubt one of some difficulty, but the appellant has not made out to my own satisfaction that the respondent wilfully, as that term is explained in the cases I have referred to, misappropriated the company's funds in payment of dividends.

What I have said is sufficient for the decision of this appeal. But I desire to express my dissent from some propositions of law which were laid down in the Court of Appeal, and upon which this House thought it right to hear the respondent's counsel. The learned judges seem to have thought that a joint-stock company, incorporated under the Companies Acts, may write off to capital losses incurred in previous years, and may in any subsequent year, if the receipts for that year exceed the outgoings, pay dividends out of such excess without making up the capital account. If this proposition be well founded, it appears to me a company whose capital is not represented by available assets need never trouble itself to reduce its capital, with the leave of the court and subject to the other conditions imposed by the Act of 1877, in order to enable itself to pay dividends out of current receipts.

It may be that I have misapprehended the statement of law intended to be made by learned judges in the Court of Appeal. I think that is possible, because I find that in Verner v. General and Commercial Investment Trust, [1894] 2 Ch. 239, Lord Lindley says: "Perhaps the shortest way of expressing the distinction which I am endeavouring to explain is to say that fixed capital may be sunk or lost, and yet that the excess of current receipts over current payments may be divided, but that floating or circulating capital must be kept up, as otherwise it will enter into and form part of such excess, in which case to divide such excess without deducting the capital which forms part of it will be contrary to law."

I reserve my opinion as to the effect of an actual and ascertained loss of part of the company's fixed capital, as in the case put by counsel for the respondent of a loss of a ship uninsured. But, subject to this observation, I think that the statement of law in the passage I have quoted is not open to objection, and it is only because the learned judge appears to me to have departed from it in his judgment in the present case that I have troubled your lordships with these remarks.

I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

Lord BRAMPTON concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Riddell & Co., for Thomas Williams, Neath; Burton, Yeates, & Hart, for Johnsons, Barclay, & Rogers, Birmingham.

Solicitors for the respondent, Michael Abrahams, Sons, & Co.

Court of Appeal.

From Chan. Div.
Vaughan Williams, Romer, and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) Nov. 5.

In re WILLIS.
WILLIS v. WILLIS. (a.)

Settlement—House—Repairs—Salvage—Jurisdiction to sanction expenditure out of capital.

The jurisdiction of the court to sanction expenditure in the repair of settled property out of capital is to be exercised, if at all, only where a case of salvage is clearly made out.

Observations of Chitty, J., in In re De Teissier's Settled Estates, 41 W. R. 186, [1893] 1 Ch. 165, approved.

This was an appeal from the decision of Kekewich, J.

By his will dated the 18th of December, 1895, the testator in this case, who died in the year 1899, appointed executors and trustees of that his will, and after bequeathing certain legacies, devised his freehold mansion-house at Richmond and all other his real property at Richmond to and to the use of his said trustees in fee simple upon trust for his sister so long as she should remain a spinster and unmarried, subject nevertheless to a condition that she should keep the said house and premises at Richmond substantially in the same state of repair in which she found them at the time of his death, and from and after the death or marriage of his said sister the testator directed his trustees to stand possessed of the said house and premises upon trust for his nephew for and during his life, he keeping the said premises in such state of repair as aforesaid, with remainder in trust for the first and other sons of such nephew successively in tail, with remainders over in default of such issue. And after devising certain freehold houses at Twickenham to his said trustees in trust for sale, the said testator bequeathed the sum of £80 000 to his said trustees upon trust to invest the same as therein mentioned, and to hold the said sum when so invested and also the proceeds of the sale of the houses at Twickenham upon trusts corresponding to those declared concerning the house at Richmond, and he directed his trustees to hold his residuary personal estate upon similar trusts.

The will contained powers for the trustees to manage let and repair the houses at Twickenham, but contained no similar powers with respect to the house at Richmond.

On the death of the testator in the year 1899 the sister as first tenant for life entered into possession of the house at Richmond, and has ever since resided there.

At that time the house was in a general state of disrepair, and there was some evidence that there had been a subsidence causing cracks in the walls, and rendering the house unsafe, or at least unfit for letting purposes.

The question now arose whether the money required for the repairs could be provided by the trustees out of the capital of the said legacy of £80,000, the proceeds of the sale of the houses at Twickenham and the residuary personal estate of the testator, or whether the cost of such repairs should be borne by the tenant for life in possession.

The question was raised by originating summons taken out by the trustees.

Kekewich, J., held that any expenditure by the trustees out of capital must be restricted to "salvage," that is, to preservation of the property, and could not be extended to repairs which were not necessary for preservation; that the evidence showed that the works contemplated were for the most part repairs in the ordinary sense of the word, and therefore the application must be refused.

The trustees appealed.

Renshaw, K.C., and Methold, for the trustees.

Warrington, K.C., and E. S. Ford, for the tenant for life.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., said the decision of Kekewich, J., must be affirmed. It was conceded that the application could not be justified under the Settled Land Acts. Where, then, was the jurisdiction to grant it to be found? This was a case where the trustees were the persons legally entitled to the property, but they had only a bare legal estate with no active duties to perform, and no powers to manage or repair the trust property. The court had no general jurisdiction to order the costs of repairs to be paid out of capital and therefore none to make the order asked for. But it was said that the court had a general jurisdiction to authorize expenditure out of capital where it was necessary for the purpose of salving the property. The answer to that was that their lordships were not satisfied on the evidence that this was a case of salvage. By the terms of the will there was an obligation cast upon each tenant for life in turn to keep the property in repair. It was difficult, therefore, to see how any case of salvage could arise if the tenants for life one by one did their duty. His lordship wished to call attention to some observations of Chitty, J., in In re De Teissier's Settled Estates, 41 W. R. 186, at p. 188, [1893] 1 Ch. 153, at p. 165, where the learned judge said: "If I were to accede to this application I foresee in all cases where a testator leaves a dilapidated mansion that there would be first an application by the tenant for life to see what he could get under the Settled Land Acts, and then failing to obtain all he wished for under that jurisdiction, he would apply in this ingenious manner to what is called the general jurisdiction of the court. The Settled Land Acts, whether they do or do not exclude the application of any of the doctrines of this general jurisdiction, at any rate afford a guide to the court and are of assistance to the court in arriving at a proper conclusion. Confessedly the things asked for on this summons cannot be done under the Settled Land Acts, and unless the court is firm in a matter such as this is the court will be flooded with similar applications." That, in his lordship's opinion, was a most useful rule, and ought to be applied to the present case. The appeal would therefore be dismissed.

(a.) Reported by S. E. WILLIAMS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

ROMER, L.J., agreed, and said in a case like the present, where the trustees had a bare legal estate, with no powers of management and no active duties to perform, the case was to be treated in the same way as the case of a legal tenant for life and legal remainders, as to which the Settled Land Acts formed a code under which applications of this sort ought to be dealt with. In his opinion the court had no wider general jurisdiction to sanction the expenditure of capital for the benefit of the estate at the expense of the remaindermen.

COZENS-HARDY, L.J., agreed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Crossman, Prichard, Crossman, & Block.

From Chan. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Vaughan Williams and Romer, L.JJ.) } Nov. 1.

In re BARROW HÆMATITE STEEL CO. (a.)

Company — Reduction of capital — Available assets — Reserve fund — Unappropriated profits — Preference shares.

The court will not confirm a reduction of capital where it would work unjustly or inequitably. The court therefore refused to confirm a reduction which would benefit the ordinary shareholders at the expense of the preference shareholders.

In ascertaining the available assets of a company for the purpose of a reduction of capital, the amounts of reserve and unappropriated profit, and the value of the goodwill, are to be taken into account.

Decision of Cozens-Hardy, J. ([1900] 2 Ch. 846), affirmed (49 W. R. Dig. 24).

This was an appeal from the decision of Cozens-Hardy, J. (reported [1900] 2 Ch. 846, 49 W. R. Dig. 24).

A petition was presented by the company for the confirmation by the court of resolutions for the reduction of the capital of the company by one half.

In the early part of 1888, besides capital borrowed on the security of debentures, the nominal capital of the company consisted of £1,500,000 in £10 ordinary shares, £37,700 in £100 eight per cent. preference shares, and £500,000 in £10 six per cent. preference shares, making a total of £2,037,700.

The preference shareholders had no voice in the management; they had a cumulative preference as to dividend, but no preference as to capital.

In 1888 resolutions were passed to reduce the capital by one quarter, reducing the shares proportionately all round, reducing the £100 preference shares, to £75 eight per cent. preference shares; the preference £10 shares to £7 10s. six per cent. preference shares; and the ordinary shares to £7 10s. shares.

The confirmation of these resolutions was opposed by preference shareholders, but in the result they were confirmed by North, J., who held that there was nothing in the bargains between the preference shareholders and the company which prevented the reduction of their shares, and that, under the circumstances then before the court, the proposed reduction was fair.

In 1899 the ordinary shareholders passed resolutions to reduce the shares all round by one half, bringing them down to three-eighths of their original denominations, and the petition asked for the confirmation of the resolutions.

The petition was opposed by a majority of the preference shareholders, who alleged that the scheme was so unfair that the court in its discretion would not sanction it.

It was alleged by the company that the 50 per cent. of capital which it was proposed to cancel was, within the words of section 3 of the Companies Act, 1877, "lost or unrepresented by available assets."

The petitioners alleged that their iron ore mines stood in the balance-sheet at twice their value, and they proposed to reduce it by, roughly, £177,000. They said their works, which stood at upwards of £2,000,000, were over-estimated by £486,000, and that their freehold land and house property, which stood at £200,000, was over-estimated by £100,000. These three items made up the £764,000 which they proposed to write off. The preference shareholders challenged these figures, and the learned judge said that upon the evidence he thought he might dispose of the petition on the short ground that the company had not satisfied him that the first two items had been proved. He was not satisfied that the colliery was not worth much more than £175,000, though he did not base his judgment upon that. He could see no answer to the argument that the £40,000 reserve fund ought to have been treated as an available asset, and he thought that similar observations applied to the £90,000 to the credit of profit and loss. In his opinion goodwill must also be regarded as an "available asset" for the purpose of a reduction petition. For all these reasons he thought that the company had not proved that £764,000 was capital "lost or unrepresented by available assets," and therefore he could not confirm the reduction. But even if the loss of the £764,000 had been established his lordship would not have thought it right to confirm the proposed reduction. What was the necessity for it? The company had paid, and, having regard to decisions which were binding upon every court short of the House of Lords, had properly paid, dividends out of its profits, notwithstanding the loss of capital. Why should any change be made? The earning capacity of the company would not be in any way increased by the reduction of the capital, and his lordship did not think that in dealing with two classes of shareholders he ought to make an unnecessary reduction for the avowed purpose of relieving the ordinary shareholders from the payment of preferential interest. The annual preferential charge was, in round figures, £24,000, subject to which all the profits went to the ordinary shareholders. The proposal was that the ordinary shareholders should in future take all the profits, subject to a preferential charge of £12,000 only. In substance it was a proposal by the ordinary shareholders to deprive the preferential shareholders of £12,000 a year for the benefit of the ordinary shareholders, without any necessity for so doing, and without any advantage to the company as a whole. This did not strike his lordship as fair and equitable. The result was that he dismissed the petition, with costs.

The company appealed.

By clause 106 of the company's articles of association the directors had power (inter alia) "to set out of the profits of the company, before recommending any dividend, such sums as they think proper as a reserve fund to meet contingencies, or for equalizing dividends, or for repairing, renewing, improving, and maintaining any of the property of the company, and for other purposes as the directors shall in their discretion think conducive to the interests of the company."

(a.) Reported by S. E. WILLIAMS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Swinfen Eady, K.C., and Cassel, for the company.

Eve, K.C., and Kirby, for preference shareholders.

Hon. E. C. Macnaghten, K.C., and Simey, for shareholders holding both ordinary and preference shares.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J., said: I am sorry that I cannot give more assistance to Mr. Eady's clients. I do not understand Cozens-Hardy, J., as not having given a decision on the facts. The learned judge said that, as to the greater part of the proposed reduction, the company had not satisfied him that there had been the alleged loss of capital. Looking at the affidavits as a judge of first instance, I should have felt some difficulty in coming to a conclusion as to the loss of capital to the extent alleged. It is by no means clear to me that the valuers had valued either the works or the colliery or the business of the company on the right basis. With regard to the reserve fund and the balance to the credit of profit and loss, I will not express any final opinion how those sums ought to be dealt with, but having regard to clause 106 of the articles of association, it seems to me impossible to say that the alleged loss of £764,000 has been established without knowing how those sums are going to be dealt with. Therefore the only ground upon which I can decide this case is that I am not satisfied that Cozens-Hardy, J., came to a wrong conclusion in holding that the loss of £764,000 capital had not been established. There I will stop, so far as the decision of this case is concerned. But I will make this observation on the judgment of Cozens-Hardy, J.: I do not think that the learned judge decided anything adverse to a pro rata reduction of capital in a proper case. Nor do I understand him as deciding that simply because a company is at the time paying dividends there can be no reduction of capital. It seems to me that in considering whether the proposed reduction of capital would work unjustly, the learned judge was of opinion that the financial position of the company as a going concern ought not to be lost sight of. I do not understand Cozens-Hardy, J., as deciding that upon different materials a reduction of the capital of this company would not be justified. Upon the facts as they stand, I am of opinion that this court ought not to differ from Cozens-Hardy, J., and that we should not be justified in hearing an argument upon points of law which do not really arise for decision.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS and ROMER, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Currey, Holland, & Currey; Walker & Pettitt.

From Q. B. Div. (Collins, M.R., and Stirling and Mathew, L.JJ.) (And Q. B. Div. (Wright, J.)) — Nov. 12, 1900; Oct. 29, 1901.

WARD v. FRY. (a.)

Bankruptcy—Property of bankrupt—Relation back of trustee's title—Money paid for bets—Protected transaction—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 49.

Money paid away by a debtor after an act of bankruptcy committed within three months before the presentation of a bankruptcy petition against him, upon which he is adjudicated bankrupt, can be recovered by his trustee in bankruptcy in like manner as goods transferred by him or their proceeds can be recovered.

A debtor, after he had committed an act of bankruptcy, paid to the defendant a sum of money in respect of a bet which he had lost to the defendant, and he also deposited with the defendant a sum of money as security for bets which he had made with him. The defendant won the bets and retained the money. Subsequently a receiving order was made against the debtor, founded on the act of bankruptcy, and he was adjudicated bankrupt.

Held, that the transactions were not protected by section 49 (c) (d) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, as the money was paid without valuable consideration, and that the trustee was entitled to recover the money.

Action to recover two sums of £200 and £300.

The plaintiff was the trustee in bankruptcy of one Barratt, and the defendant was a betting man.

On the 26th of July, 1899, Barratt paid the defendant £200, being the amount of a bet which he (Barratt) had lost to him, and on the 27th of July, 1899, he deposited with the defendant £300 as security for certain other bets made between them, on the terms that if Barratt lost the bets the defendant was to retain the money.

Barratt lost the bets, and the defendant retained the money.

On the 6th of July, 1899, Barratt had committed an act of bankruptcy, on which a petition in bankruptcy was presented against him on the 29th of July, 1899.

On the 1st of August, 1899, a receiving order was made on the petition, and on the 30th of November he was adjudicated bankrupt.

The plaintiff claimed a declaration that the two sums of £200 and £300, which had been paid by the bankrupt to the defendant, subsequent to the act of bankruptcy on which the petition was founded, formed part of the property of the bankrupt divisible among his creditors, and an order for payment of these sums.

The defendant contended that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover these sums, on the grounds (1) that, though goods of the bankrupt alienated by him after the act of bankruptcy or their proceeds could be recovered by the trustee in bankruptcy, moneys paid away by the bankrupt during the same period could not be recovered unless the circumstances were such that the bankrupt or the trustee could have maintained an ordinary action for the money as received to his use apart from relation back under the bankruptcy law; and (2) that the transactions were protected by section 49 (c) (d) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, as being a conveyance or assignment by the bankrupt, or a contract, dealing, or transaction by or with the bankrupt, for valuable consideration, the defendant at the time when the transactions were completed having no notice of an available act of bankruptcy committed by the bankrupt.

Robert Wallace, K.C., Hansell, and Œneas Mackintosh, for the plaintiff.

Rufus Isaacs, K.C., and Muir Mackenzie, for the defendant.

The authorities referred to are stated in the judgment of Wright, J.

Nov. 12, 1900.—WRIGHT, J., delivered the following written judgment: The point most strenuously argued for the defendant was that, although goods of the bankrupt alienated by him after act of bankruptcy committed within the three months can be followed by the trustee when the property has vested in the trustee by relation back, or the proceeds of them, if sold, recovered as money received to his use, yet that moneys which the bankrupt has paid away during the same period cannot be recovered unless the circumstances are such that the bankrupt or the trustee could have maintained an ordinary action for the money as received to his use apart from any special bankruptcy law. It seems, however, to have been settled for a good number of years that there is no distinction in this respect between goods transferred by the bankrupt and money paid away by him, and that, subject to the protection given by the Bankruptcy Acts to certain bonâ fide transactions, the trustee can sue the person to whom the bankrupt has paid moneys which, by virtue of the bankruptcy, have become the property of the trustee by relation back, without showing wrongfulness or fraud or other ground of general equity against the recipient. The ancient rule is so stated in Cooke's Bankrupt Laws (8th ed.), pp. 585, 586 (where exceptions introduced by some of the Bankruptcy Acts are enumerated), on the express authority of Lord Hardwicke in Billon v. Hyde, 1 Ves. sen. 326. To the same effect are the decisions or dicta in Hitchin v. Campbell, 2 W. Bl. 827; Vernon v. Hall, 2 T. R. 648; Bradley v. Clark, 5 T. R. 197; Allanson v. Atkinson, 1 M. & Sel. 583; and Harwood v. Lomas, 11 East. 127. No case has been cited to show that any different general rule has been established in more modern times, and there seems to be no reason why any different rule should be established, and the continued existence of the doctrine as above stated seems to be implied in Ex parte Wolverhampton, &c., Banking Co., 33 W. R. 642, 14 Q. B. D. 32. Then the question is whether the defendant is protected by section 49 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883. He is so protected if, and only if, the transaction ought to be regarded as covered by one or other of the descriptions (c) and (d) in that section, which are as follows: "(c) Any conveyance or assignment by the bankrupt for valuable consideration"; "(d) any contract, dealing, or transaction by or with the bankrupt for valuable consideration." I will take first the deposit of the £300. When this money was paid by the bankrupt it was paid, as it seems to me, by way of deposit or security, and not by way of conveyance or assignment. No doubt the particular coins, notes, or cheque must be supposed to have been intended to become the property of the defendant, but in substance there was a deposit of a fund to be retained or returned according to the event, and not a conveyance or assignment of the fund, and (d) seems to apply rather than (c). Then was there a "contract, dealing, or transaction"? That, I think, must mean a contract, dealing, or transaction, which has contractual force, and which involves a legal obligation. But here the contract is a contract by way of gaming or wagering, and as such null and void as a contract under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18. And if so, then, even if the defendant's consent to undertake a risk which he would not otherwise have undertaken was a valuable consideration, (d) did not apply so long as the transaction was incomplete. Then does it make any difference that before the receiving order was made the transaction had been concluded, the event determined, and the defendant's title to the money perfected, as between him and the bankrupt, so that the defendant's right no longer depended on an unexecuted contract, and the depositor if he had not been bankrupt could not have recovered the deposit? This seems to depend on whether there was any valuable consideration for the change by which the fund, instead of being a mere deposit or security, became transferred to the defendant as his property. I think not. This part of the transaction seems to me to differ in no substantial respect from any ordinary payment of a bet, and to be in effect a voluntary payment: see Manning v. Purcell, 3 W. R. 273, 7 De G. M. & G. 55; In re Deerhurst, Ex parte Seaton, 60 L. J. Q. B. 411, 39 W. R. Dig. 24. The payment of the £200 stands on the same footing. It was paid for a debt, not recoverable at law, and was therefore as against the trustee in bankruptcy paid without consideration. It follows that the plaintiff is entitled to judgment.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The defendant appealed.

Oct. 29, 1901.—Rufus Isaacs, K.C., and Muir Mackenzie, for the defendant.

McCall, K.C., and Œneas Mackintosh, for the plaintiff, were not called upon.

COLLINS, M.R.—I do not think that I need say more than this, that I entirely agree with the judgment of my brother Wright.

STIRLING and MATHEW, L JJ., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Venn & Woodcock.

Solicitors for the defendant, Beyfus & Beyfus.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. Byrne, J. — Oct. 29.

PHILLIPS v. HOWELL. (a.)

Practice—Set off—Equitable deduction—Vendor and purchaser—Specific performance—Costs—Debt en autre droit.

A purchaser obtained judgment for specific performance of a contract of sale against his vendor with costs. The vendor could only make title as administratrix of an intestate. The vendor was entitled beneficially as next-of-kin of the intestate to a portion of the proceeds of sale.

Held, on motion to retain the costs of the action out of the vendor's beneficial interest in the purchase-money, that the court having no power in this case to administer the estate of the intestate, the plaintiff purchaser could not bring into account all or any part of an unascertained sum to which the defendant might be beneficially entitled in the administration of her intestate's estate as against the purchase-money which was due to the defendant in her representative capacity.

In this case the plaintiff, purchaser from the defendant of certain leasehold property, brought an action for specific performance.

The defendant sold, and could make title only as administratrix of an intestate.

She had also a beneficial interest as one of the next-of-kin and as assignee of another of the next-of-kin of the intestate to the extent in all of one-fourth of the intestate's estate.

The defendant resisted specific performance and counterclaimed seeking to set aside the contract on the ground of fraud, undue influence, and surprise.

The plaintiff succeeded in his action, and obtained judgment for specific performance with costs, the counterclaim being dismissed with costs.

When judgment was pronounced, counsel for the plaintiff made some application as to setting off or deducting the costs he was entitled to from the purchase-money; but, on its being pointed out that there was a difficulty, stated that he did not press his application.

(a.) Reported by R. LEIGH RAMSBOTHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Having subsequently ascertained that the defendant had, after action, purported to charge her beneficial interest in the property, the subject of the contract, in favour of her solicitor, the plaintiff now applied (the judgment not having been passed or entered) to add a direction enabling the plaintiff to retain so much of the balance of purchase-money as represented or was properly applicable as the defendant's beneficial share of the intestate's estate or so much thereof as might be necessary in or towards satisfaction of the costs ordered to be paid by the defendant.

Rowden, K.C., and Hon. F. Russell, for the plaintiff. —The purchase-money being due to the defendant in her capacity of administratrix, and the costs being against her personally, the plaintiff may not be strictly entitled to set off, but we submit he is entitled to charge his costs on the beneficial interest of the defendant by way of equitable deduction: Green v. Sevin, 13 Ch. D. 589, 28 W. R. Dig. 172.

Levett, K.C., and T. L. Wilkinson, for the defendant. —The court has no power here to administer the intestate's estate. The motion is misconceived: Medlicott v. Bowes, 1 Ves. sen. 207; Bishop v. Church, 3 Atk. 691; Middleton v. Pollock, 23 W. R. 766, L. R. 20 Eq. 29; Freeman v. Lomas, 9 Hare 109.

Byrne, J., after stating the facts as above set out, said: It is said that it was proved by the defendant in the course of the trial that except a mortgage for £500 there are no unpaid debts of the intestate, and that the purchase-money represents the whole of the intestate's estate, and consequently the plaintiff ought to be allowed to retain the whole, or so much as may be necessary to answer costs, of one-fourth of the balance of the purchase-money after discharging the mortgage debt. It is conceded that the plaintiff could not ask to retain his costs out of the purchase-money generally, that being payable to the defendant in her capacity of administratrix and the costs being due from her personally; but it is said that the defendant having proved in the course of the case that one-fourth of the purchase-money belongs to her absolutely, subject to discharge of a mortgage and to a charge created by her subsequently to the contract, the plaintiff is entitled to have provision made for the application of what would otherwise have been payable in administration of her intestate's estate in respect of her beneficial interest or so much thereof as is necessary in or towards satisfaction of the costs ordered to be paid by her. I may point out that without some form of administration order, which I have no power to a make in this action, it would be impossible to ascertain what the amount representing the beneficial interest of the defendant is, so as to bind other persons interested in the intestate's estate. No authority was produced for such an order as is asked, but Green v. Sevin was relied on as justifying it. In that case a successful purchaser plaintiff was allowed to deduct the costs of action and counterclaim from the purchase-money, notwithstanding a charge created on the property agreed to be sold subsequently to the date of the contract. In my judgment that case is no authority for the order now asked. It does seem to be an authority for the proposition that, where judgment for specific performance is granted in favour of a purchaser, there is jurisdiction to direct that, in adjusting the accounts as between vendor and purchaser the purchaser is entitled to bring into the account the amount of the costs which the vendor has been ordered to pay against the purchase-money—that is, in a case where the debt due to and the debt due from the defendant are so due to and from the defendant in the same capacity. I do not think that the jurisdiction extends to allowing the plaintiff to bring into account all or any part of an unascertained sum to which the defendant may be beneficially entitled in the administration of her intestate's estate as against the purchase-money which is due to the defendant in her representative capacity. I think that if any right is to be established against the beneficial share of the defendant in the estate it must be by due process of execution; the two debts, the costs, and the purchase-money not being capable of being set off or brought into account against one another. It appears to me that the motion is misconceived, and must be dismissed with costs, which may be set off against the costs already ordered to be paid to the defendant.

Solicitors, Beaumont, Son, & Rigden, for Phillips, Newport; C. A. Elgood, for Gardner & Herbert, Newport.

Chan. Div. Farwell, J. } July 15, 1901.

Société Anonyme des Anciens Etablissements Panhard et Levassor v. Panhard Levassor Motor Co. (Limited). (a.)

Trade name—Name of company—Foreign firm—Market in United Kingdom—Registration—Imitation—Signatories to memorandum—Liability—Injunction

A foreign trader whose goods are in fact imported into England, although he has no English agency, has a sufficient English market to entitle him to an injunction restraining the piracy of his trade name and reputation.

The signatories of a company formed for a fraudulent purpose and duly registered are guilty of a fraudulent conspiracy to effect that purpose, and together with their company can be restrained by injunction.

Witness action.

The plaintiff company was constituted under French law in 1897 in succession to a former firm of "Panhard et Levassor," and had since then carried on business in Paris as engineers and manufacturers of motors, motor-cars, and parts thereof. They had no agency in England at the time when the action was brought, but their motors had been frequently imported into England either by the British Motor Co. (Limited), who held patents covering inventions embodied in many of the plaintiffs' motors, or by private purchasers, who usually obtained licences from the patentees. It appeared from the evidence that the words "Panhard" or "Panhard Levassor" exclusively denoted in the English market motors of the plaintiffs' manufacture. They therefore claimed the exclusive right to the use of those names in such connection.

The defendants were the Panhard Levassor Motor Co. (Limited), and the seven signatories to the memorandum of association of that company, who each held one share and were the only shareholders and directors. None of the signatories bore the name of Panhard or Levassor. The defendant company was registered the 29th of March, 1900, its principal object being the manufacture and sale of motor-cars.

The plaintiffs alleged that the signatories had wrongfully and fraudulently conspired to form and register the defendant company with the intent to injure the plaintiffs' business; that the English public would be led to believe that the defendant company were selling the plaintiffs' goods; and that the plaintiffs would be prevented from registering themselves or their agents as a company in England under their own name or a name similar thereto. They accordingly claimed an injunction to restrain the defendant company and the signatories from using the names of Panhard and Levassor or either of them, or any title or description including those names or either of them, or otherwise colourably resembling the name of the plaintiffs, in connection with the manufacture or sale of motor-cars, an injunction to restrain the signatories from allowing the defendant company to remain registered under its present name or any such title or description as aforesaid, and damages.

(a.) Reported by Warwick H. Draper, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Fletcher Moulton, K.C., A. J. Walter, J. F. Iselin, and H. F. Moulton, for the plaintiff company.—The company is entitled to restrain the piracy of its trade name and reputation, although it does not itself carry on business in England: Collins Co. v. Brown, 3 K. & J. 423.

Upjohn, K.C., and Stewart Smith, for the defendants. Here there was no interference with the actual market of the plaintiff company, who have none in England: Jamieson v. Jamieson, 15 Rep. Pat. Cas. 169. The defendants were not guilty of any fraud in choosing the name of their company so as to prevent any risk of the plaintiffs registering in England a company in their own name which, on obtaining a licence from the patentees, might seriously interfere in the English market with the trade of the Motor Manufacturing Co. (Limited). Indeed, they offer to adopt effectual means of distinguishing the two companies in their advertisements and otherwise. At any rate no relief can be granted against the signatories, who have merely signed the memorandum and have no power to remove their company's name from the register.

FARWELL, J.—This appears to me to be a plain case. The plaintiffs are a well-known firm of motor-car manufacturers in Paris. Their reputation has extended to England for several years. Although prior to this action they had no agency and did not sell directly in England, they sold indirectly in the sense that their cars were bought and imported into England, both by the British Motor Co. (Limited), and by private individuals, so that England was one of their markets. The difficulty about England was that there were certain English patents, and the great majority of the cars formerly made by the plaintiffs could not be imported into England without the licence of the patentees. In many cases those licences were obtained, and the plaintiffs got the benefit of the English market, although they only got it indirectly in the way I have mentioned.

The defendants have registered a company in England under the name of the Panhard Levassor Motor Co. (Limited). The seven signatories are joined as defendants. There is absolutely no sort of excuse or justification for taking the name "Panhard Levassor." It is said that their object is not so much to annex the benefit of the plaintiffs' reputation as to shut out the plaintiffs from England and prevent them interfering with some other company which is not a party to this action. With that I have nothing to do. I judge the case as I have it before me, and I find seven persons signing the memorandum of a company with a capital of £100 divided into 100 shares of £1 each, with seven signatories with one share apiece, and therefore an actual paid or possibly unpaid capital of £7, for I do not know whether it has been paid or not. The question of the plaintiffs' right to an injunction is covered by Collins Co. v. Brown, but apart from that authority I should have thought it was plain that in a case such as I have stated, this court would certainly interfere to protect a foreign trader who has a market in England, in the way I have specified, from having the benefit of his name annexed by a trader in England who assumes that name without any sort of justification.

The only part of the case which has caused me a little difficulty is the claim against the seven signatories to the memorandum, who are the directors and sole shareholders of the company. The allegation is that they have fraudulently and wrongfully, and with intent to injure the plaintiffs in their said business, conspired together to form, and have formed, and procured the defendant company to be registered. Now, as I hold that the defendant company has the fraudulent intention of annexing the benefit of the plaintiffs' name, it follows that the persons who have formed that company and caused it to be registered are guilty in the eye of this court of a fraudulent conspiracy to carry into effect that which the company, an entity without body or soul, has attempted to do, and are liable in damages accordingly. It would certainly be exceedingly unfortunate if the court were to hold that a limited company with a very small nominal capital can be formed for the purpose of trying to do unlawful, fraudulent, and illegal acts, and that no one except the incorporated body is liable.

In my opinion, the injunction which I grant against the company involves a similar injunction against the signatories who have caused the company to be registered, and who remain the only directors and members of the company. No damages have been proved, and I do not think any have been suffered, because the defendant company has not carried on business; but as the signatories are the directors, and the sole shareholders in the company, I see no reason why I should not also grant the second injunction asked against them by the statement of claim. There will, therefore, be judgment for the plaintiffs for the two injunctions as asked, and the costs of the action, and the defendants must either get the approval of the Board of Trade to a change of the company's name, or they must wind up the company.

Solicitors, John B. & F. Purchase; Vallance, Birkbeck, & Barnard.

Chan. Div. } Oct. 25, 29.
Buckley, J. }

In re JOPLIN'S BREWERY CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Practice—Company—Debentures—Registration—Extension of time—Form of order—Saving of prior rights—Companies Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 48), s. 15.

Direction given by the judge for the insertion in orders for the extension of time for registration of debentures of a company of words saving the rights of parties acquired prior to registration.

Motion.

This was an application on the part of the company, under section 15 of the Companies Act, 1900, for an extension of the time for registration of certain second and third mortgage debentures which had been issued by the company on the 2nd of September, 1901, and the twenty-one days for registration of which allowed by section 14 had elapsed.

(a.) Reported by NEVILLE TEBBUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

A. L. Ellis, for the company.

BUCKLEY, J.—Section 14 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, enables a judge on being satisfied that the omission to register a bill of sale was due to inadvertence to extend the time for registration on such terms and conditions as he thinks fit. It has been the practice at Judges' Chambers for years in making orders under this section to introduce the words "but this order is to be without prejudice to the rights of parties acquired prior to the time when the bill of sale is actually registered," and these orders are made as of course, for the reason that by the insertion of these words the rights of absent parties are not affected. The application before me on Friday last was made under section 15 of the Companies Act, 1900, which is a provision of similar effect to section 14 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878. The language of the former section is somewhat wider than that of the latter, but the variation makes no difference with regard to the point with which I am dealing. Under section 15 of the Companies Act, 1900, a security if not registered within a certain time is void as against the creditors of the company. These applications for an extension of time for registration are made without serving the creditors, and the order ought to be drawn up so as to save the rights of persons who have become creditors of the company before registration is effected, just as is done under section 14 of the Bills of Sale Act. I therefore direct that there shall be added to this order the words "but this order is to be without prejudice to the rights of parties acquired prior to the time when the security in question shall be actually registered." In my opinion these words should be inserted in all orders of this kind, except where there is good ground to the contrary, as where the circumstances are such that the creditors cannot be prejudiced.

Application granted.

Solicitors, L. W. Byrne, for G. N. Joplin, Liverpool.

K. B. Div. (Kennedy and Phillimore, JJ.) May 17; June 5, 1901.

DULIEU v. R. WHITE & SONS. (a.)

Negligence—Injury—Nervous shock resulting from fright—Damages—Remoteness.

Damages for injuries which result from a nervous shock occasioned by fright, although unaccompanied by any actual physical impact, may be recovered in an action for negligence if such fright is followed by consequent physical damage to the plaintiff. Such damages are not too remote.

Victorian Railway Commissioners v. Coultas (37 W. R. 129, 13 App. Cas. 222) considered, and not followed.

This was a point of law raised upon the pleadings ordered to be set down for hearing before the trial of the action, pursuant to ord. 25, r. 2.

The statement of claim was as follows:

"1. The plaintiff is the wife of Arthur David Dulieu, who carries on the business of a licensed victualler at the Bonner Arms, Bonner-street, Bethnal Green, in the county of London.

"2. On the 20th of July, 1900, the plaintiff was behind the bar of her husband's said public-house, she being then pregnant, when the defendants by their servant so negligently drove a pair-horse van as to drive it into the said public-house.

"3. The defendants were also negligent in entrusting the driving of the said horses and van to their said servant, who had no knowledge or skill in driving.

"4. The plaintiff in consequence sustained a severe shock, and was and is seriously ill, and on the 29th of September, 1900, gave premature birth to a child.

"5. In consequence of the shock sustained by the plaintiff the said child was born an idiot.

"The plaintiff claims damages in respect of the aforesaid matters."

The statement of defence, after denying the above allegations, pleaded as follows:

"3. The defendants submit as a matter of law that the damages sought to be recovered herein are too remote, and that the statement of claim on the face thereof discloses no cause of action."

G. Spencer Bower, for the defendants.

Ritter, for the plaintiff.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 5.—KENNEDY, J., read the following judgment: In this case the only question for the judgment of the court is in the nature of a demurrer. The defendants have pleaded, as a matter of law, that the damages sought to be recovered are too remote and that the statement of claim upon its face discloses no cause of action. The statement of claim alleges that on the 20th of July, 1900, the plaintiff, then being in a state of pregnancy, was behind the bar of her husband's public-house, and that the defendants, by their servant, negligently drove a pair-horse van into the public-house. It goes on to allege, in paragraph 4, that the plaintiff in consequence sustained a severe shock and was seriously ill, and on the 29th of September following gave premature birth to a child; and, in paragraph 5, that in consequence of the shock sustained by the plaintiff the child was born an idiot. Then follows the claim for damages. The only matter we have to decide is whether, if it is proved at the trial that the defendants' servant did negligently drive a pair-horse van, and by reason of his negligence drove it into the public-house where the plaintiff was, and did thereby cause her such a nervous shock as to make her ill in body and suffer bodily pain in the way alleged, the plaintiff has a good cause of action for damages under paragraph 4. The head of damage under paragraph 5 is rightly treated by the plaintiff's counsel as untenable. The defendants' counsel summed up his contention against the legal validity of the plaintiff's claim in the statement that no action for negligence will lie when there is no immediate physical injury resulting to the plaintiff. He has argued that bodily harm, which in the present case resulted to the plaintiff through the shock received by her through the inroad of the van and horses into the room in which she was, and which so acted upon her, in her then state of health, as to produce the bodily harm, was in point of law too remote a consequence of the negligence of the defendants' servant. My brother Phillimore and I agree that this contention ought not to be upheld; but as we arrive at the result by somewhat different courses of reasoning, and the case is, upon the authorities, not free from difficulty, and raises points of general interest, I think I ought to state the considerations which have led me to my conclusion. This is an action on the case for negligence—that is to say, for a breach on the part of the defendants' servant of the duty to use reasonable and proper care and skill in the management of the defendants'

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

van. In order to succeed the plaintiff has to prove resulting damage to herself, and "a natural and continuous sequence uninterruptedly connecting the breach of duty with the damage as cause and effect": Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, cited in Beven on Negligence in Law (2nd ed.), p. 7. In regard to the existence of the duty here, there can, I think, be no question. The driver of a van and horses in a highway owes a duty to use reasonable and proper care and skill so as not to injure either persons lawfully using the highway or property adjoining the highway, or persons who, like the plaintiff, are lawfully occupying that property. His legal duty towards all appears to me to be practically identical in character and in degree. I understood the plaintiff's counsel to suggest that there might exist a higher degree of duty toward the plaintiff sitting in a house than would have existed had she been in the street. I am not at all satisfied that this is so. The wayfarer in the street, as it seems to me, has as much right of redress if he is injured in person or in property by the negligence of another as the man who is lawfully sitting on a side wall or in an adjoining house. "The whole law of negligence assumes the principle Volenti non fit injuria not to be applicable" for reasons which Sir Frederick Pollock points out (Law of Torts (6th ed.) pp. 166-167) in a passage which follows the quotation which I have just made. There is no legal reason why because A. is using the street as he has a right to do instead of sitting indoors that B. should claim to be entitled to drive his van negligently over A.'s body or to destroy his clothing by negligently bespattering it with mud. The legal obligations of the driver of horses are the same, I think, towards the man indoors as to the man out of doors; the only question here is whether there is an actionable breach of those obligations if the man in either case is made ill in body by negligent driving which does not break his ribs but shocks his nerves. Before proceeding to consider the objections to the maintenance of such a claim as that of the present plaintiff, it is, I think, desirable for clearness sake to see exactly what are the facts which ought to be assumed for the purposes of the argument. We must assume all that consistently with the allegations of the statement of claim can be assumed in her favour. We must therefore take it as proved to the satisfaction of a jury that the negligent driving of the defendants' servant reasonably and actually caused a nervous or mental shock to the plaintiff by her reasonable apprehension of immediate bodily hurt, and that the premature childbirth, with the physical pain and suffering which accompanied it, was a natural and a direct consequence of the shock. I may just say, in passing, that I use the words "nervous" or "mental" as interchangeable epithets on the authority of the judgment of the Privy Council in Victorian Railway Commissioners v. Coultas, 37 W. R. 129, 13 App Cas. 222; but I venture to think "nervous" is probably the more correct epithet where terror operates through parts of the physical organism to produce miscarriage and illness; and where, as in the present case, these physical injuries are produced by the shock, the use of the epithet "mental," as I am led to think from a perusal of some of the relevant cases, requires caution, in view of the undoubted rule that merely mental pain, unaccompanied by any injury to the person, cannot sustain an action of this kind: Beven on Law of Negligence (2nd ed.), p. 77. Now, these being the assumed facts, what are the defendants' arguments against the right to recover damages in this action? First of all, it is argued fright caused by negligence is not in itself a cause of action; ergo, none of its consequences can give a cause of action. In Mitchell v. Rochester Railroad Co., 151 N. Y. Rep. 107, at pp. 109, 110, the point is put thus: "That the result may be nervous disease, blindness, insanity, or even a miscarriage, in no way changes the principle. These results merely show the degree of fright or the extent of the damages. The right of action must still depend upon the question whether a recovery may be had for fright." With all respect to the learned judges who have so held, I feel a difficulty in following this reasoning. No doubt damage is an essential element in a right of action for negligence. I cannot successfully sue him who has failed in his duty of using reasonable skill and care towards me unless I can prove some material and measurable damages. If his negligence has caused me neither injury to property nor physical mischief, but only an unpleasant emotion of more or less transient duration, an essential constitutent of a right of action for negligence is lacking. "Fear," as Sir Frederick Pollock has stated in his work on Torts (6th ed., p. 51), "falls short of being actual damage, not because it is a remote or unlikely consequence, but because it can be proved and measured only by physical effects." It may, I conceive, be truly said that, viewed in relation to an action for negligence, direct bodily impact is without resulting damage as insufficient a ground of legal claim as the infliction of fright. That fright—where physical injury is directly produced by it—cannot be a ground of action merely because of the absence of any accompanying "impact" appears to me to be a contention both unreasonable and contrary to the weight of authority. Leaving out of sight as perhaps involving special considerations cases of wilful wrongdoing, such as Wilkinson v. Downton, 45 W. R. 525 [1897] 2 Q. B. 57, decided by my brother Wright in a civil court, and the authorities as to criminal responsibility which are cited in Mr. Beven's Negligence in Law (2nd ed., pp. 81 and 82), we have, as reported, decisions which go far, at any rate, in my judgment, to negative the correctness of any such contention: Jones v. Boyce, 1 Stark. 493; Harris v. Mobbs, 27 W. R. 154, 3 Ex. D. 268; and Wilkins v. Day, 32 W. R. 123, 12 Q. B. D. 110. All the three cases are cited by Wright, J., in his judgment in Wilkinson v. Downton, and he there explains the judgment given in favour of the plaintiff in each of them on the ground that the fright occasioned by the defendant's wrongdoing—to the passenger in the earliest case and to the horse in the two later cases—properly ought in the circumstances to be regarded as the direct and immediate cause of the damage which ensued. In other words, an action was held to lie though the only physical injury did not accompany but was occasioned by the fright. Further, we have directly in point the decision given in December, 1882, by the Common Pleas Division in Ireland under the presidency of the present Lord Morris in the unreported case of Byrne v. Great Southern and Western Railway Co. of Ireland, and affirmed on appeal in a judgment delivered by the late Sir Edward Sullivan, and the approval of the last mentioned case in 1890 by the Exchequer Division in Bell v. Great Northern Railway of Ireland, 26 L. R. Ir. 428. In the course of his judgment (at p. 442) Palles, C.B., expressly points out that in the circumstances of the case in Byrne v. Great Southern and Western Railway Co. of Ireland there was nothing in the nature of impact, and the parts of the evidence which he quotes clearly show that this was so. In Victorian Railway Commissioners v. Coultas, which was much relied upon by the defendants in the argument before us and which I shall have to refer to later on more fully, the Privy Council expressly declined to decide that "impact" was necessary. But if

"impact" be not necessary, and if, as must be assumed here, the fear is proved to have naturally and directly produced the physical effects, so that the ill results of the negligence which caused the fear are as measurable in damages as the same results would be if they arose from an actual impact, why should not an action for those damages lie just as well as it lies where there has been actual impact? It is not, however, to be taken that in my view every nervous shock occasioned by negligence and producing physical injury to the sufferer gives a cause of action. There is, I think, one important limitation. The shock, in order to give a cause of action, must be one which arises from a fear of immediate personal injury to yourself. A. has, I conceive, no legal duty not to shock B.'s nerves by the exhibition of negligence towards C. or towards the property of C. That limitation was applied by Bruce and Wright, JJ., in the unreported case of Smith v. Johnson & Co., referred to by Wright, J., in Wilkinson v. Downton. In Smith v. Johnson & Co. a man was killed negligently by the defendant in the sight of the plaintiff, and the plaintiff became ill, not from the shock produced by fear of harm to himself, but from the shock of seeing another person killed. The court held that this harm was too remote a consequence of negligence. I should myself, as I have already indicated, have gone a step further and said, upon the facts in Smith v. Johnson & Co., that, as the defendants neither intended to affect the plaintiff nor did anything to affect him, there was no evidence of any legal duty towards the plaintiff, or of that absence of care according to the circumstances by which Willes, J., in Vaughan v. Taff Vale Railway Co., 8 W. R. 549, 5 H. & N. 679, at p. 688, defines negligence. I observe that Sir Frederick Pollock begins the passage in his work on torts (6thed., p. 50), in which he discusses the point at issue before us, with a question which expresses it. The learned author puts the inquiry in this form: "Where a wrongful or negligent act of A. threatening Z. with immediate bodily hurt, but not causing such hurt, produces in Z. a sudden terror or nervous shock from which bodily illness afterwards ensues, is this damage too remote to enter into the measure of damages if A.'s act was an absolute wrong, or to give Z. a cause of action, if actual damage is the gist of the action?" In order to illustrate my meaning in the concrete, I will say in regard to the present case that I should not be prepared to hold that the plaintiff was entitled to maintain this action if the nervous shock was produced, not by the fear of bodily injury to herself, but by sorrow or vexation arising from the sight of mischief being threatened or done either to some other person or to her own or to her husband's property by the intrusion of the defendants' van and horses. The cause of the nervous shock is one of the things which in my view the jury will have to determine at the trial. It remains to consider the second and somewhat different form in which the defendants' counsel put his objection to the right of the plaintiff to maintain this action. He contends that the damages are too remote, and relies much upon the decision of the Privy Council in Victorian Railway Commissioners v. Coultas, to which I have had occasion to make a passing reference. In that case the principal circumstances were that the appellants' gatekeeper negligently invited the male plaintiff and his wife, who were driving a buggy, to enter the gate at a crossing when a train was approaching, and, though there was no actual collision with the train, the escape was so narrow and the danger so alarming that the lady fainted and suffered a severe nervous shock which produced illness and a miscarriage. The colonial court had entered judgment for the plaintiff for the amount found by the jury at the trial of the action brought against the appellants for negligence. The Privy Council reversed this decision. The principal ground for their judgment is formulated in the following sentence: "Damages arising from mere sudden terror, unaccompanied by any actual physical injury, but occasioning a nervous or mental shock, cannot under such circumstances, their lordships think, be considered a consequence which, in the ordinary course of things, would flow from the negligence of the gatekeeper." A judgment of the Privy Council ought, of course, to be treated by this court as entitled to very great weight indeed, but it is not binding upon us; and in venturing, most respectfully, not to follow it in the present case, I am fortified by the fact that its correctness was treated by Lord Esher, M.R., in his judgment in Pugh v. London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway Co., 44 W. R. 627, [1896] 2 Q. B. 248, at p. 250, as open to question; that it was disapproved by the Exchequer Division in Ireland in Bell v. Great Northern Railway Co. of Ireland, where, in the course of his judgment, Palles, C.B., gives a reasoned criticism of the Privy Council judgment which, with all respect, I entirely adopt; and, lastly, by the fact that I find that the judgment has been unfavourably reviewed by legal authors of recognized weight, such as Mr. Sedgwick (On Damages (8th ed.), p. 861), Sir Frederick Pollock, and Mr. Bevan. Why, I venture to ask, is the "accompaniment of physical injury" essential, as, if I read aright the passage which I have quoted, the Privy Council asserts it to be? For my own part, I should not like to assume it to be scientifically true that a nervous shock which causes serious bodily illness is not actually accompanied by physical injury, although it may be impossible, or at least difficult, to detect the injury at the time in the living subject. I should not be surprised if the surgeon or physiologist told us that nervous shock is in itself truly an affection of the physical organism. Let it be assumed, however, that the physical injury follows the shock, but that the jury are satisfied upon proper and sufficient medical evidence that it follows the shock as its direct and natural effect, is there any legal reason for saying that the damage is less proximate than damage which arises contemporaneously? "As well might it be said" (I am quoting from the judgment of Palles, C.B., 26 L. R. Ir., at p. 439) "that a death caused by poison is not to be attributed to the person who administered it, because the mortal effect is not produced contemporaneously with its administration." "Remoteness," as a legal ground for the exclusion of damage in an action of tort, surely means, not severance in point of time, but the absence of direct and natural casual sequence; the inability to trace, in regard to the damage, the propter hoc in a necessary or natural descent from the wrongful act. As a matter of experience, I should say that the injury to health which forms the main ground of damages in an action of negligence, either in cases of railway accidents or in "running down cases," frequently is proved, not as a concomitant of the occurrence, but as one of the sequelæ. To one other point only in the judgment in Victorian Railway Commissioners v. Coultas will I now refer. The judgment proceeds, at p. 225: "If it were held that they can, it appears to their lordships that it would be extending the liability for negligence much beyond what that liability has hitherto been held to be. Not only in such a case as the present, but in every case where an accident caused by negligence had given a person a serious nervous shock, there might be a claim for damages on account of mental injury." I find, with all respect, a difficulty in appreciating this argument, because in that case, as is to be assumed in this, there was evidence of actual physical illness, and not only of a mental pain, and the defendants, if the verdict on this part of the case was against the weight of evidence, should have moved for a new trial. The case standing as it did, it is difficult to see how a decision on the appeal in favour of the respondents would have sanctioned the maintenance of an action for merely mental hurt. The counsel for the defendants on the argument before us referred also to two American cases. One I have already mentioned—Mitchell v. Rochester Railroad Co. The Court of Appeals of the State of New York did, no doubt, there hold both, as I have already stated, that no recovery may be had for fright, and also that it could not properly be said that the plaintiff's miscarriage in that case was the proximate result of the defendants' negligence. Shortly, the facts were that the plaintiff whilst waiting for a tramcar was nearly run over by the negligent management of the defendant's servant of a car drawn by a pair of horses, and, owing to terror so caused, fainted and lost consciousness, and subsequently had a miscarriage and consequent illness. The court, upon the present point, base their decision, to use their own language at p. 110, upon a view that the injuries "were plainly the result of an accidental or unusual combination of circumstances which could not have been reasonably anticipated and over which the defendant had no control." I can only say, with due deference to the learned judges who so decided, that I cannot assent to the view they thus took upon the assumed state of facts, which was that the defendants' driver by negligent driving threatened the plaintiff with immediate bodily injury, and by that threat caused her terror which caused the physical injuries above mentioned. Whether the terror was, in the circumstances, a natural and reasonable result of the threat was a question of fact for the jury. It must be taken, I think, that they found so. But if the damage thus occasioned ought to be held not to be proximate, it seems to me to be difficult to maintain the correctness of the decisions in Jones v. Boyce, Wilkins v. Day, and Harris v. Mobbs. It may be admitted that the plaintiff, as regards the personal injuries, would not have suffered exactly as she did, and probably not to the same extent as she did, if she had not been pregnant at the time; and no doubt the driver of the defendants' horses could not anticipate that she was in this condition. But what does that fact matter? If a man is negligently run over or otherwise negligently injured, it is no answer to the sufferer's claim for damages that he would have suffered less injury or no injury at all if he had not had an unusually thin skull or an unusually weak heart. The other American case cited for the defendants is Spade v. Lynn and Boston Railroad, 60 Amer. State Rep. 393, decided by the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts in 1897. The court there held, as expressed in the head-note of the report, that in an action to recover damages for an injury sustained through the negligence of another there can be no recovery for a bodily injury caused by mere fright and mental disturbance. But whilst the decision is thus, in the result, in accord with the New York case, it is given upon very different grounds. In his full and interesting judgment Allen, J., who delivered the decision of the court, admits fully that which, as I have just pointed out, the New York court denied—viz., that damages for physical injury caused through fright which is occasioned by negligent conduct are not in principle too remote. "A physical injury," he says, "may be directly traceable to fright, and so may be caused by it. We cannot say, therefore, that such consequences may not flow proximately from unintentional negligence, and, if compensation in damages may be recovered for a physical injury so caused, it is hard on principle to say why there should not be also a recovery for the mere mental suffering when not accompanied by any perceptible physical effects." This reasoning obviously concedes more than the present plaintiff asks, for she asks to be compensated in damages only if she proves physical injury. The learned judge then proceeds to state why the right to recover, which on principle ought to exist, is in his view properly refused. "It would seem, therefore," he says, "that the real reason for refusing damages sustained from mere fright must be something different, and it probably rests on the ground that in practice it is impossible satisfactorily to administer any other rule." He goes on to develop his argument on the ground of public policy—the hardship of holding persons bound to anticipate and guard against anything but "the probable consequences to ordinary people" (in which it is clear he considers the consequences of fright should not be included), and the risk of opening "a wide door for unjust claims which could not be successfully met." He refers, amongst other cases, to the Victorian Railway Commissioners v. Coultas, and it will be seen on a reference to the report of that case, 13 App. Cas. at p. 226, that, while the judgment of the Privy Council proceeds mainly upon the view that the damages are too remote, it does also claim justification from the requirements of public policy and the danger which would arise from a contrary decision on account of "a wide field opened for imaginary claims." Naturally one is diffident of one's opinion when one finds that it is not in accord with those which have been expressed by such judicial authorities as those to which I have just referred. But certainly, if, as is admitted, and I think rightly admitted, by the Massachusetts judgment, a claim for damages for physical injuries naturally and directly resulting from nervous shock which is due to the negligence of another in causing fear of immediate bodily hurt is in principle not too remote to be recoverable in law, I should be sorry to adopt a rule which would bar all such claims on grounds of policy, and in order to repress the possible prosecution of unrighteous or groundless actions of the like character. Such a course involves the risk of denial of justice to meritorious claims, and it necessarily implies a certain degree of distrust which I do not share in the capacity of legal tribunals to get at the truth in this class of case. So far as I am entitled to speak from experience, I see no reason to suppose that a jury would really have more difficulty in weighing the medical evidence as to the effects of nervous shock through fright than in weighing the like evidence as to the effects of nervous shock through a railway collision or a road-car accident where, as often happens, no palpable injury, or very slight palpable injury, has been occasioned at the time. I have now, I think, dealt with the authorities and the arguments upon which the defendants rely, and I have done so at greater length than I should have wished to do but for the general interest of the points involved and the difficulties which the conflicting authorities undoubtedly present. In this conflict I prefer the decisions of the Irish courts; they seem to me to constitute strong and clear authorities for the plaintiff's contention. It is suggested on the part of the defendants that the applicability of the judgment in Bell v. Great Northern Railway Co. of Ireland is impaired by the fact that the female plaintiff in that action was a passenger on the defendants' railway and as such had contractual rights. It appears to me that this can make no practical difference whatever. There was no special contract; no notice to the railway when they accepted her as a passenger that she was particularly delicate or peculiarly nervous and liable to fright. The contractual duty existed, as it often does exist, concurrently with the duty apart from the contract; but the one is in such circumstances practically co-extensive with the other in the rights which it gives and the correlative liabilities which it imposes. I hold that if on the trial of the action the jury find the issues left to them as the jury found them in Bell v. Great Northern Railway Co. of Ireland after the direction of Andrews, J., which was approved by the Exchequer Division, the plaintiff will have made out a good cause of action.

PHILLIMORE, J., read the following judgment: The discussion in this case has ranged over wide ground, and many points have been brought to our notice. It will not, I hope, be thought that these matters have been omitted from consideration or not materially considered because I am able to put my conclusions into a comparatively narrow compass. I think there may be cases in which A. owes a duty to B. not to inflict a mental shock on him or her, and that in such a case, if A. does inflict such a shock upon B., as by terrifying B., and physical damage thereby ensues, B. may have an action for the physical damage, though the medium through which it has been inflicted is the mind. I think, for example, that it may well be, as the Exchequer Division in Ireland held in the case of Bell v. Great Northern Railway Co. of Ireland, that a railway company has a duty to its passengers to use its best endeavours to convey them, not merely safely, but securely in the etymological sense of the word; and that, when it fails and physical damage accrues to a passenger through the fright which its failure occasions, the passenger may have an action. I cordially accept the decision of my brother Wright in Wilkinson v. Downton that everyone has a legal right to his personal safety, and that it is a tort to destroy this safety by wilfully false statements, and thereby to cause a physical injury to the sufferer. In that case it will be observed that the only physical action of the wrongdoer was that of speech. I think there is some assistance to be got from the cases where fear of impending danger has induced a passenger to take means of escape which have, in the result, proved injurious to him, and where the carrier has been held liable for these injuries, as in Jones v. Boyce. The limit of the applications of this principle is shown in Adams v. Lancashire Railway Co., 17 W. R. 884, L. R. 4 C. P. 739. These principles and cases seem to establish that terror wrongfully induced and inducing physical mischief gives a cause of action. Against them is to be set the weighty authority of the Victorian Railway Commissioners v. Coultas. This is an authority to be treated with the utmost respect, but no more binding upon us than it was upon the Exchequer Division in Ireland. Still less are the special reasons for the decision binding. I do not know whether I should or should not have come unaided to the same conclusion as that which was in that case arrived at; but I think it possible that I should, though not for the reasons which have prominence in the judgment. It must be conceded on behalf of the plaintiff that to give rise to a cause of action the act which terrifies must be either wilful or negligent. Negligence is a breach of duty owed to the person complaining. It is not certain that as between people travelling on highways there is any duty so carefully to conduct yourself or your vehicle as not to frighten others. It is a duty so carefully to conduct yourself or your vehicle as not to cause collision or some other form of direct physical damage. The gatekeeper in the Victorian Railway case was careless in opening the gate, and would have rendered his railway company liable if there had been actual impact, even if the actual impact was produced by a wrong manœuvre taken under the influence of fear: see per James, L.J., in The Bywell Castle, 28 W. R. 293, 4 P. D. 219, at p. 223. But it may be, nevertheless, that in such circumstances a railway is not liable if there be escape of actual impact, however narrowly. There are dangers sometimes from the traffic at Charing Cross which might frighten not only an inexperienced and elderly country woman, but an experienced and cool citizen, the ideal vir constans from whom ἐμπειρία makes ἀνδρεία. But if physical consequences were induced by terror so produced, it may be that there would be no cause of action. This principle is suggested, though in language perhaps open to criticism, by Baron Bramwell in Holmes v. Mather, 23 W. R. 869, L. R. 10 Ex. 261. It may be—I do not say that it is so—that a person venturing into the streets takes his chance of terror. If not fit for the streets at hours of crowded traffic, he or she should not go there. But if a person, being so unfit, either permanently or temporarily, stays at home, he or she may well have a right to his or her personal safety, giving to these merely the meaning given by my brother Wright, J.; and wilfully or negligently to invade this right, and so induce physical damage, may give rise to an action. In the case before us, the plaintiff, a pregnant woman, was in her house. It is said that she was not the tenant in possession, and could not maintain trespass quare clausum fregit if this had been a direct act of the defendant and not of his servant, as it was. This is true; her husband was in possession. But none the less it was her home, where she had a right and on some occasions a duty to be; and it seems to me that if the tenant himself could maintain an action his wife or child could do likewise. It is averred that, by reason of the careless driving of the defendants' servant, a pair-horse van came some way into the room, and so frightened her that serious physical consequences thereby befell her. If these averments be proved, I think there was a breach of duty to her for which she can have damages. The difficulty of these cases is, to my mind, not one as to the remoteness of the damage, but to the uncertainty of there being any duty. Once get the duty and the physical damage following on the breach of duty, and I hold that the fact of one link in the chain of causation being mental only makes no difference. The learned counsel for the plaintiff has put it that every link is physical in the narrow sense. That may or may not be. For myself it is unimportant. The American cases to which we have been referred are worthy of much attention and respect. As to the decision of the Court of Appeal in Mitchell v. Rochester Railroad, I would make the same observations as I have made on the Victorian Railway case. I accept the reasoning in the later case of Spade v. Boston, and I think I should have come to the same decision, but I should not have expressed it in such broad and sweeping language. The following passage, 60 Amer. State Rep. at p. 395, which I only discovered after I had written the first part of my judgment, exactly expresses what I mean up to a certain point: "Not only the transportation of passengers and the running of trains, but the general conduct of business and of the ordinary affairs of life must be done on the assumption that persons who are liable to be affected thereby are not peculiarly sensitive and are of ordinary physical and mental strength. If, for example, a traveller is sick or infirm, delicate in health, specially nervous or emotional, liable to be upset by slight causes, and thereby requiring precautions which are not usual or practicable for travellers in general, notice should be given, so that, if reasonably practicable, arrangements may be made accordingly and extra care be observed. But, as a general rule, a carrier of passengers is not bound to anticipate or to guard against an injurious result which would only happen to a person of peculiar sensitiveness." Aliter in this case, where the plaintiff is not a passenger or a traveller. Our judgment must be for the plaintiff with costs. I do not, however, think that she has any lawful claim for damages in respect of the matter stated in paragraph 5 of her statement of claim. This, indeed, her learned counsel has abandoned.

Judgment for plaintiff.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, H. Dade & Co.

Solicitors for the defendants, William Hurd & Son.

House of Lords.

From C. A. (England). July 30, 1901.

COWLEY v. COWLEY. (a.)

Peer—Title or dignity of honour acquired by marriage—Re-marriage to a commoner—Damage—Injunction.

The High Court has no jurisdiction to entertain questions of dignity.

A peer's wife obtained a divorce and then married a commoner, but continued, on a bona fide claim of right, to use her title as a peer's wife.

Held, (1) such questions are vested in the House of Lords, not as an appellate court from a court of law, but in its own inherent jurisdiction as the Committee for Privileges; (2) no legal wrong was committed by the lady so continuing to use her former title.

Decision of Court of Appeal (49 W. R. 19, [1900] P. 305) affirmed.

Appeal from the order of Court of Appeal (49 W. R. 19, [1900] P. 305) (Lord Alverstone, M.R., and Rigby and Collins, L.JJ.), reversing decision of Barnes, J. (48 W. R. 463, [1900] P. 118).

In this case Lord Cowley sought to restrain a lady, who was formerly his wife, but who had since married Mr. R. E. Myddleton Biddulph, from using the style or title of "Countess Cowley."

The facts are shortly stated by Lord Macnaghten.

Haldane, K.C. (Bargrave Deane, K.C., and C. J. Willock with him), for the appellant.

Lawson Walton, K.C. (Mark L. Romer with him), for the respondent.

THE HOUSE took time for consideration.

Earl of HALSBURY, L.C.—In this case I wish to say that if the matter were res integra, and if what I am about to say did not arise, the reasoning of the Court of Appeal appears to me to be just and sound, and I should move that the appeal be dismissed with costs; but I think it is material that one should consider for a moment whether or not any such suit can be entertained. I do not wish to express any final opinion as to whether such a suit could be maintained if there were the elements of annoyance or malice, though I confess there is a doubt in my own mind whether even in such cases an action on the case would not be very difficult to maintain; but given, as it is assumed here, that there was no malice and no annoyance, and no assertion of marriage, either implied or expressed, so as to give rise to a suit of jactitation, the simple broad question being whether this lady, who, it is not doubted, bonâ fide, claims a right, and intends to claim a right, to be known by the name by which during the whole period of her married life she undoubtedly was known, can retain that right notwithstanding the divorce, it seems to me absolutely clear that no such suit could be entertained.

More than one reason occurred to my mind in considering this question. I do not know what jurisdiction the Divorce Court had in dealing with this matter at all. It seems to have been assumed that it had reference to the divorce; but counsel for the appellant has very candidly admitted that it is not a question of divorce at all, nor has the Divorce Court by any stretch of its jurisdiction any right to determine this question simply because there has been a divorce suit, and the lady who by her petition has succeeded in getting rid of her husband now claims to call herself by the name by which she has been known. What jurisdiction Barnes, J., had to entertain this question I confess I am wholly at a loss to understand. And, further, it seems to me that if counsel for the appellant had been successful in suggesting that this was a case in which there was a sort of territorial right in respect of a dignity, he would only by another process show that he was hopelessly out of court; because what jurisdiction has any court of law to determine a question of a dignity? I am not aware of any such jurisdiction. If indeed there was a claim to such a right, the jurisdiction would be vested in this House, not as an appellate court from a court of law, but in its own inherent jurisdiction as the Committee for Privileges. It has been laid down that no question of honour can be tried by a court of law. Where there was a question of a fine quoted in Collins, and ancillary to it a question of dignity, it was said by the learned judges in that case that they were not going to allow by a side-wind a matter outside their jurisdiction to be brought in upon the pretence that there is a question which the ordinary courts by an action in the Court of Common Pleas had a right to determine.

Under these circumstances it appears to me there is not the faintest shadow of a foundation for this suit; and I am a little surprised that in the elaborate judgment of the learned judge (Barnes, J.) he should never have considered at all what a curious thing it would be in our jurisprudence if, because a thing might be considered convenient, and, I will assume for the sake of argument, desirable, therefore you could invent a new jurisdiction and apply it to a matter with which that court has no concern whatever.

Under these circumstances I have thought it right to say this much. I think it is not a very abstruse point. It is admitted by everybody that no such case was ever heard of before, and that the question might equally arise, not only in the case of two persons divorced, but even in the case of a courtesy title to certain ranks of peerage. That a court of law should concern itself with such a question as that is certainly not a thing to be desired; but it is enough to say that for a court of law there is no foundation for any jurisdiction, and there is no precedent to be found where such a question has ever been decided. Under these circumstances, for these additional reasons, besides those which the Court of Appeal have given, and with which I entirely concur if the matter was to be reasoned upon that footing at all, I think this appeal ought to be dismissed, and with costs; and I move accordingly.

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Lord MACNAGHTEN.—I am of the same opinion, and substantially on the same grounds.

It seems to me that the present controversy between Earl Cowley and the lady who was his wife is a matter with which no court of law has any concern.

The position of the parties is clear enough. In 1889 Lady Violet Neville married Lord Dangan. On his succeeding to the earldom of Cowley she became Countess Cowley, and entitled to the privileges of peerage. She obtained a divorce from her husband on the ground of his misconduct. It was conceded, and I suppose rightly conceded, that there was nothing in her position as the divorced wife of Earl Cowley to deprive her either of the title or the privileges which she had acquired as his wife. Then she married a commoner, and thereupon she lost her right to the title of countess and the privileges of peerage. Still everybody knows that it is a very common practice for peeresses (not being peeresses in their own right) after marrying commoners to retain the title lost by such marriage. It is not a matter of right. It is merely a matter of courtesy, and allowed by the usages of society. In accordance with this usage the respondent still calls herself Countess Cowley. The appellant complains. He says she has no right to do so. That is perfectly true. And then he claims an injunction from a court of law to prevent his late wife using that designation on the ground that it is an invasion or disturbance of the dignity which belongs to him as an incorporeal hereditament.

The answer seems to be twofold. If it be a disturbance of a dignity, that is a matter not within the cognizance of a court of law. The right to a peerage can only be tried before the peers. And it was declared long ago that "it appertained altogether to the royal prerogative to give such honour, reputation, and placing to his counsellors and others his subjects as should be seeming to the King's most excellent wisdom."

There is another answer which, to my mind, is equally conclusive. It is that Lord Cowley has not suffered either legal wrong or damage. Counsel for the appellant argued that a legal wrong had been done to him because the respondent without colour of right claimed to share or participate in his incorporeal hereditament—the earldom of Cowley. For my part I must confess I cannot understand in what sense it can be said that the lady claims to participate or share in this hereditament. I can understand the Dowager Lady Cowley complaining. It is, or may be, inconvenient to her that another lady should use the same title which may have the effect of relegating her to the less coveted style of a dowager. But it seems to me that there is no substance in Lord Cowley's complaint, and that he at least suffers no damage. And, therefore, even if the matter were cognizable at law, I should hold that there was no right to an injunction. There is no precedent for such an order, and I should be very sorry that this House should make a precedent in this case.

Lady Dacres' case, on which counsel for the appellant relied, seems to me not to be altogether in his favour. This House declared on the opinion of the judges present that the Lady Dacres, by marrying Mr. Chute, a commoner, had lost her privilege of peerage in law. But still it is to be observed that the resolution of this House speaks of her as "the Lady Dacres," from which I think it may be inferred that the adherence to that style, even after the privilege of peerage was lost, was not so shocking a thing as counsel would have your lordships to understand.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Lord JAMES OF HEREFORD.—There being no pleadings in this case, we must look at the arguments of counsel to learn upon what ground the present application for an injunction is made. From those arguments I gather that the injunction to restrain the respondent from terming herself Countess Cowley is based on the following grounds: It is said that Lord Cowley being in possession of the earldom holds an incorporeal hereditament, which is property, in the possession of which he alleges he has been disturbed by the retention of the name of Countess Cowley by the respondent. To establish the alleged disturbance I understood counsel for the appellant to argue at the bar that the respondent by virtue of her marriage with a commoner has lost her right to bear the title of nobility. It will be observed that this proposition in no way calls in aid the fact of a divorce having been decreed. If the respondent had been a widow, the same question would have arisen.

The argument was founded upon a dictum in Coke on Littleton (1 Co. Lit. 16*b*), which says: "And there is a diversitie betweene a woman who is noble by descent and a woman that is noble by marriage. For if a woman, that is noble by descent, marrie one that is under the degree of nobilitie, yet she remaineth noble still; but if she gaine it by marriage, she loseth it if she marry under the degree of nobilitie; and so is the rule to be understood, Si mulier nobilis nupserit ignobili desinit esse nobilis. But if a dutchesse by marriage marrieth a baron of the realme, she remaineth a dutchesse and loseth not her name, because her husband is noble, et sic de cæteris."

It may be that this dictum of Lord Coke is quite correct. I express no opinion upon that. But the disregard of it in my opinion does not constitute a disturbance of any property. Effect may be given to it if, for instance, in Parliament the respondent sought to plead her privilege of Parliament. But the case now before this House is by way of appeal from a decree of a court of law, and in my opinion such courts have no power to control the action of a person who, under the conditions existing in this case, assumes the name, not for the purposes of fraud or molestation, but on a bonâ fide claim of right.

I further concur with the views which have been expressed by the Lord Chancellor and Lord Macnaghten, that the jurisdiction to try all questions of right connected with peerage and all dignities connected with peerages lies in this House and not in a court of law.

Lord BRAMPTON.—I so entirely agree in the judgment which has been pronounced by the Lord Chancellor that I think it is unnecessary to add one word.

Lord LINDLEY.—By letters patent under the great seal, dated the 11th of April, 1857, the dignity of the earldom of Cowley was granted to the then Baron Cowley and the heirs male of his body. The dignity so granted was an incorporeal hereditament—Cruise's Digest, ch. 3, p. 169, tit. xxvi. Dignities, c. 2; and such hereditament was granted for an estate in tail male. In 1895 this estate became vested in the present earl, and it has ever since been and is now vested in him.

In 1889 Earl Cowley married Lady Violet Neville. She was a daughter of a peer, and therefore of noble blood; but she was not a peeress in her own right. When her husband became Earl Cowley she acquired an estate for life in his dignity: see Co. Lit. 16*b*, and Cruise's Digest, tit. xxvi., ch. 1, par. 86. That has been the law ever since Coke's time, and it is not, I believe, disputed. Her life estate was not determinable on the death of her husband, but was determinable on a second marriage with a commoner: see Co.

Lit. 16. So long as her life estate in the earldom was undetermined she was entitled to the honour and dignity of a peeress and to the name attached to it.

In 1897 the Countess of Cowley obtained a divorce from her husband; but, although the divorce dissolved her marriage, it did not determine her life estate in the peerage which she has already acquired. There is no principle of common law, nor is there anything in the Divorce Act, which produces any such result. The case of Fendall v. Goldsmid, 2 P. D. 263, 26 W. R. Dig. 153, goes far to show that so far as name is concerned the countess was entitled to continue after the divorce to use the name and style which she had previously acquired the right to use.

In July, 1898, however, Lady Cowley married a commoner, and it seems clear that, although she did not use the position to which she was entitled by birth, her life estate in the dignity which she had acquired by marriage ceased: see Co. Lit. 16*b*, and Cruise's Digest, cited above. All the authorities are clear upon that point, whatever doubt there may be as to the effect of a lady marrying a peer lower in dignity than her first husband. But although by her second marriage the Countess Cowley ceased to be a peeress, the usages of society are such as to entitle her by courtesy to her old name. The entry in the journals of this House in the case of Lady Dacres shows the recognition of this usage by the Committee for Privileges of this House. The question we have to determine is whether Earl Cowley is entitled to an injunction from the High Court to restrain his former wife from still calling herself Countess Cowley. Barnes, J., decided this question in favour of the earl, and granted an injunction restraining her "from using the style or title of Countess Cowley." The Court of Appeal reversed this decision, and the earl has appealed to this House to restore it.

We are not now sitting as a Committee for Privileges to determine a claim to the dignity created and granted by the letters patent of 1857. The lady calls herself, and is called in society, Violet, Countess Cowley; she makes no claim to the peerage or to the dignity which is vested in her late husband; and if she did the High Court would not be the proper tribunal to entertain or decide such a claim. Chapter 6 of Cruise on Dignities is conclusive on that. The appellant's counsel urged your lordships to take the view that the countess was disturbing the earl in the enjoyment of his dignity—that is, of the incorporeal hereditament to which he is entitled. On reference to the authorities relating to actions on the case for disturbance, I can find no instance of an action for disturbing a dignity; nor any instance of an action for disturbing any incorporeal hereditament in the absence of actual damage. Damage is essential to the violation of such a right: see Com. Dig., "Action on the Case for Disturbance," and Roscoe on Real Actions, 353.

The controversy between the parties is thus reduced to a dispute about the use of a name as distinguished from a dignity. Speaking generally, the law of this country allows any person to assume and use any name, provided its use is not calculated to deceive and to inflict pecuniary loss. Your lordships will find the law on this subject examined in a very instructive note from the pen of the late Mr. Waley in 3 Davidson's Conveyancing, pt. 1 (2nd ed.), p. 283. The judgment of Tindal, C.J., in Davies v. Lowndes, 1 Bing. N. C. 597, and of the Privy Council delivered by Sir Robert Phillimore in Du Boulay v. Du Boulay, 17 W. R. 594, L. R. 2 P. C. 430, leave no doubt about it. Sir Robert Phillimore in Du Boulay v. Du Boulay stated that "in this country we do not recognize the absolute right of a person to a particular name to the extent of entitling him to prevent the assumption of that name by a stranger." Then, after alluding to trade names, the judgment continues: "The mere assumption of a name which is the patronymic of a family by a stranger who has never before been called by that name, whatever cause of annoyance it may be to a family, is a grievance for which our law affords no redress.

If this is true of strangers, it is a fortiori true of persons who have once acquired the right to use a name which the usages of society allow them to retain. The Court of Appeal held, and in my opinion correctly held, that the earl's rights are not infringed by what his late wife insists on doing. To grant the injunction asked by the earl would not, therefore, be legally just. The inconvenience of granting it is great and obvious, having regard to the long-established and well-known usages of English society. Nor is it immaterial to bear in mind that the Sovereign can at any moment confer on the countess the privilege of using the name, style, and title which the earl complains of her using. The case cannot be brought within section 25, clause 8, of the Judicature Act, 1873, which authorizes the High Court to grant an injunction in all cases in which it shall appear to the court to be just or convenient to do so. The decision of the Court of Appeal ought in my judgment to be affirmed, and this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Wontner & Son; Lewis & Lewis.

Court of Appeal.

From Chan. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Vaughan Williams and Romer, L.JJ.) } Oct. 30, 31.

PELHAM CLINTON v. DUKE OF NEWCASTLE. (a.)

Will—Construction—Estate in special tail—Issue—Gift to A. if he marries a gentlewoman and has issue male, to such issue male and their male descendants.

A testator willed and bequeathed certain estates to his son Charles. Then after providing that another son might redeem those estates, he continued: "The proceeds to go with the limitations of this will—that is to say, to my son Charles if he marries a fit and worthy gentlewoman and has issue male, to such issue male and their male descendants, in failure of which," then over.

Held, that Charles took an estate in tail male special. Decision of Buckley, J. (49 W. R. 12), affirmed.

This was an appeal from a decision of Buckley, J. (reported 49 W. R. 12).

The facts were as follow:

Henry Pelham, fourth Duke of Newcastle, by the fifth codicil, dated the 14th of August, 1846, to his will dated the 31st of January, 1814, willed and bequeathed to his son, Lord Charles Pelham Pelham Clinton certain estates, and after providing that his eldest son, the Earl of Lincoln, might purchase and redeem those estates for certain sums of money, the testator continued: "The proceeds to go with the limitations of this will—that is to say, to my son Charles if he marries a fit and worthy gentlewoman and has issue male, to such issue male and their male descendants, in failure of which," then over.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

At the date of the codicil Lord Charles was unmarried.

On the 10th of August, 1848, he married Elizabeth Grant.

On the 12th of January, 1851, the testator died.

In the same year Lord Charles executed a disentailing deed of the properties in question.

On the 14th of December, 1894, Lord Charles died.

The plaintiff in the present action was the eldest son of the marriage of Lord Charles with Elizabeth Grant.

The action came on under an order dated the 18th of June, 1900, made upon the application of the defendant, the present Duke of Newcastle, and upon the admission by him of the marriage, and that Elizabeth Grant was a fit and worthy gentlewoman, and that the plaintiff was the eldest son of the marriage, and that Lord Charles died as above stated, for the determination of the point of law, whether upon the true construction of the fifth codicil the same codicil conferred on Lord Charles a mere life estate, or an estate in tail male or in tail, or an estate in fee simple.

Buckley, J., held that the codicil gave Lord Charles an estate in special tail male.

The plaintiff appealed.

Eady, K.C., and Peterson, for the plaintiff.—The will shows an intention on the part of the testator to give Lord Charles only a limited interest and not an estate tail. It is said that he takes an estate tail by virtue of the rule in Wild's case, 6 Rep. 17, but that rule does not apply to a case like the present, where the gift to the son is immediate, but the gift to the issue is a future contingent gift. There is no gift of an estate tail here at all, but there is a plain intention to give this property in succession.

They referred to Byng v. Byng, 10 W. R. 633, 10 H. L. Cas. 171.

Haldane, K.C., Vaughan Hawkins, and Benn, for the defendant.—Upon the construction of the will, independently of the rule in Shelley's case, 1 Rep. 93*b*, a special estate tail descended to Lord Charles which he could have barred whether issue were born or not. Page v. Hayward, 2 Salk. 570, really decides this case.

They also referred to Roe dem. Dodson v. Grew, 2 Wils. 322; Bowen v. Lewis, 9 App. Cas. 890, 33 W. R. Dig. 245; Van Grutten v. Foxwell, 46 W. R. 426, [1897] A. C. 658; Roddy v. Fitzgerald, 6 H. L. Cas. 823; Preston on Estates, vol 2, p. 412; Fearne on Contingent Remainders, p. 423 (10th ed.).

Eady, K.C., replied.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—In this case I think Buckley, J., has arrived at the right conclusion, and I doubt whether I could add anything which would be of assistance to anybody beyond what appears in Buckley, J.'s, judgment; but inasmuch as the case is one of considerable importance, and certainly raises a very interesting point of law, I think I ought to give the reasons I have formed for concurring in his judgment.

The short point which arises is this: In the year 1851, Lord Charles Clinton executed a disentailing deed. It is said that at that time he had only a life interest, or, at any rate, that he had not an estate tail. Buckley, J., has held that on the true construction of the fifth codicil Lord Charles took, not a mere life interest, but an estate in special tail male. I think it would be convenient if I say what I have to say upon the authorities before I come to the construction which I put upon the codicil itself, because it seems to me that in this case, as I suppose in nearly every, if not every, other will case, we have to gather the intent from the words that the testator has used.

Now I do not wish to go so far as to say that Page v. Hayward is an authority conclusive upon the point. It seems to me to be an instance of the way in which a will containing not dissimilar provisions is to be construed. I need not read the words of that will again; they appear from the report and have been referred to in Buckley, J.'s, judgment, and in the text-books to which reference has been made. The court came to the conclusion upon the words there that the estate devised to Mary was a good estate tail, and so was the estate to Elizabeth, but it was an estate in special tail—it was to the heirs male begotten of her body by a Searle, and they further resolved this, which seems to me to be of importance, that the words "upon condition," though they are express words of condition, should be taken to be a limitation. Therefore I think the court only got at the particular estate tail which they held Mary had, by looking at the subsequent words which they construed as words of limitation, or, as I understand, words which define the estate that Mary got. It is perfectly true that in the third resolution they say that the estate tail of Mary and Elizabeth, or either of them, does not cease by marrying one that is not a Searle, for the remainder over was in default of both conditions, and in the meantime the estate was limited to her and the heirs male of her body. It seems to me that that is only a conclusion that follows from the fact that they had previously found upon the words of the will that Mary had a special estate tail.

Then with regard to the case of Dodson v. Grew, 2 Wils., at p. 322. Again I wish to say that I do not wish to be thought to suggest that it is an authority conclusive of this case, but it does again seem to be a case in which the court looking at the whole will came to the conclusion that there was an estate tail, and for reasons which I think to be applicable, if I may use no stronger expression, to this particular will. The court there thought that of two intentions both could not be carried out, there being a doubtful expression, an estate being given for life to the testator's nephew George, and after his decease to the issue male of his body lawfully begotten. The court came to the conclusion that the words as to issue male were so strong that they showed the general intention was that there should be an estate tail, and that, therefore, they must over-ride the particular words which would have indicated only a life estate in George. Of course they did attach great importance to the use of the word "issue" in the will. They were of opinion that the testator used the word "issue" in the will as indicating by the use of such term what may be called a legal intention, and, therefore, in that case—that again being a case in which there was something that might be construed as a condition—the court came to the conclusion that there was an estate tail in the person who otherwise would have been the tenant for life.

Lastly, I want to say a word about Roddy v. Fitzgerald. I am not surprised to see that the learned common law judges were equally divided—they were not really equally divided, because Baron Martin did not give a judgment because he was interested in some previous case which would have been affected by the judgment, but I notice that Lord Wensleydale, one of the learned lords, observed that the judges would have been equally divided had Baron Martin given his opinion.

That, to my mind, is one of the cases in which it is very difficult to say that any ordinary individual reading that will would have come to that conclusion, looking at the power that was given to the man to appoint as he thought fit to children; and again, I do not think that case is what I may call an authority which is conclusive. I think it is very important, because it shows how far the House of Lords thought it right to go in giving effect to the word "issue," and in giving effect to words which in that will would primâ facie, and but for the existence of the subsequent direction, have been held to confer an estate for life. I think Mr. Vaughan Hawkins is at any rate justified in saying that it does limit to a very large extent any construction we might put upon the words "issue male," which are also found in this will.

Now that being the state of the cases which Buckley, J., has thought material, and which I think are material as affording a guide in laying down the principles, although not conclusive, I now go back to say in a very few words why I consider this codicil confers an estate tail.

It is a curiously drawn codicil. I think one great answer to the main argument of Mr. Swinfen Eady is that he presumes in the whole of his argument that there is a bequest in the first instance to the son Charles of all the estates, and severs that from what comes afterwards. He referred only indirectly to the 28th section of the Wills Act. I would only note in passing that that only says that "where real estate shall be devised to any person without any words of limitation such devise shall be construed to pass the fee simple or other life estate unless a contrary intention appears by the will." I think that the reasonable construction of this codicil is what Buckley, J., has put upon it. The testator began by saying what he was going to do with his estates; he was going to bequeath them to Charles, and, of course, if that had stood alone Charles would have had them absolutely after the Wills Act. Then there are some intermediate words as to there being mortgages, and as to there being a right to sell, or power of sale, and as to giving Lord Lincoln, the eldest son, the power to purchase the estates. Then I think the scheme of the codicil is to pick up again what was to be done with the property which is first referred to, because there is a direction that the money which is to take the place of one property is to go with the limitations of this will. I read that as picking up again the sentence which commenced with the words "I bequeath to Charles"—that is to say, to my son Charles—"if he marries a fit and worthy gentlewoman and has issue male, to such issue male and their male descendants." Now it was not disputed that there would be an estate tail in the issue; at least it was not substantially disputed. The real question, and the important question, we have got to consider is, Do these words constitute an estate tail in Charles? I do not think, speaking for myself, if the words had been "to my son Charles if he marry a fit and worthy gentlewoman and has issue male," and if there had not been a previous difficulty raised by the gift to Charles, the case would have been arguable; but I think, looking at the sentence as a whole, it is quite clear that he was speaking throughout of the limitations in his will, and meant to limit the estate whether it was the estate which he bequeathed or the money which represented the estate to his son Charles and to his issue male after him if he married a fit and worthy gentlewoman. Therefore, I think that the same line of reasoning on which the learned judges in the three cases which I have referred to came to the conclusion that those words were sufficient to confer an estate tail, and not a mere life estate or other estate, is equally cogent to bring us to the conclusion that Buckley, J., arrives at.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I have come to the same conclusion. The case is a difficult one, but after all it is a case in which we have to construe the terms of a particular will, and it is not a case in which we have to lay down, according to my understanding of the case, any general rule; and that being so, I am content to deliver judgment now without further consideration. I give, as I think one ought to do in such a case—that is, in the case of the construction of a will of doubtful terms—all weight to the conclusion which has been arrived at by the judge of first instance, and I am not prepared to differ from his conclusion. But I say of this case, as Lord Cranworth says of all such cases in Roddy v. Fitzgerald upon p. 871: "I must begin by saying that the decision of these cases is never very satisfactory because one cannot but feel that the real intention which the testator had in view is very frequently defeated instead of being carried into effect, but the duty of the court is only to interpret the language of the will attending to certain well-known rules or canons of construction." I have no inclination to favour such rules one jot more than previous authority compels me to favour them, because I am very strongly of opinion that such rules have a very constant tendency to prevent the courts that have to construe wills from giving effect to what is often the obvious intention of the testator so far as his words are concerned; if one leaves out of consideration the technical meaning or the technical canon of construction which judges have thought fit to adopt, and which very often is not present to the mind of the testator at all, even though that testator's will may have been drawn with the assistance of a professional lawyer.

I make these observations here because it seems to me that it is very difficult to doubt in the present case but what one is defeating by the conclusion to which one comes the manifest intention of the testator. Can anyone doubt that the real object of this testator was to cut out of his inheritance a son of whose conduct he did not approve, and to substitute for him one after the other his younger sons and their descendants one after the other in succession taking estates tail. That was, so far as I can see, the plain intention of this father, and we are putting a construction upon this will which facilitated the very contrary happening, and in fact has led to the very contrary happening, because we are holding that all these estates tail might be barred by suffering a recovery in the way in which they have been barred, and by that means the general intention of the testator would be utterly defeated. But still, as Lord Cranworth says, the duty of the court is only to interpret the language of the will according to certain well-known canons of construction, and we have to determine here according to those canons of construction whether the children here take as purchasers, or whether they really take under the limitation established by the user of the words "issue male." Before I have done with that, I want to say this with regard to some authorities that have been cited—I am going to base my decision on Roddy v. Fitzgerald. I of course do not say that strong arguments might not be based on the other authorities which have been cited. My lord has expressed very strongly his view that an argument may be based upon those authorities, but I do wish to say one word about one of them. So far as Page v. Hayward is concerned, you start with the creation of a plain estate tail in respect of the issue begotten of the body of Mary Price. Now, having got those words you go on, and you get words which not only primâ facie are conditions, but which are by the very terms of the will expressed to be conditions; and then it was held that notwithstanding that—that is to say, notwithstanding the words being express condition, the words might be taken as a limitation. It was a very strong thing to do that in that case—at least so it seems to me; but it is not to be forgotten that it was a case in which there clearly was an estate tail immediately upon the death of Nicholas Searle, and, therefore, the question was really not a question merely of construing the condition as a condition on the happening of which there was to come into existence on the death an estate tail, but a question of the application of a condition which was a condition to defeat the estate tail. If one looks at the resolution one sees that the third resolution says that the estate tail of Mary and Elizabeth or either of them does not cease by marrying one that is not a Searle. Therefore, it is obvious that you have got an estate tail wholly independently of the words of that condition, and then what is said is, having got an estate tail wholly independently of that condition, are we to treat the words which formally are conditional as conditional, or as words of limitation? And it is said, having regard to that fact, that you start with an estate tail, that you are in such a case entitled to treat the words as words of limitation and not as a condition. I do not say that that prevents the case applying. I have not thought it out sufficiently to see whether—the judgment is very short—the terms of the resolution are such as make it a case of general application, but I do say that that difficulty made me look about to see whether there were any more cogent reasons than the application of that case which would lead me to the same conclusion.

Now with regard to the case in 2 Wils. of Dodson v. Grew I want to say that there Wilmot, C.J., decides the whole case upon the intention of the testator. He points out that the testator really has made an inconsistent will and that you cannot carry it out as a whole. He then looks about for what he calls the general intention, and for what he calls the particular intention, and then he proceeds to say that no one can doubt what that general intention was, and that you cannot carry that out unless you so construe the words as to create an estate tail. That is what seems to me to have been the intention of the judgment of Wilmot, C.J. Then, having arrived at that conclusion, the Chief Justice said the word "issue" is either a word of purchase or a word of limitation as would best effectuate the intention of the testator. It is a plural word, and takes in all the sons of George Grew, and the words "issue male of his body and heirs male of the body of such issue," mean only that they were not all to take at a time—that is, not to take distributively, but in succession, as if he had said for ever.

Having said that much about those two cases, let me pass on to Roddy v. Fitzgerald. As I understand that case it is a very strong case to show that the primâ facie meaning of the word "issue" is such that it is a word of limitation, and not a word of purchase, and I so read the word here; and it seems to me that when once you read the word in that way and add to it the clause which is found afterwards—that is to say: "to his son Charles if he married a fit and worthy gentlewoman and had issue male, to such issue male and their male descendants, in failure of which"—and then comes the limitation in favour of the testator's son Thomas and a series of other limitations, and I do not think it was denied that each of them in that sequence subsequent to that first one create an estate tail. In that state of things, having got the word "issue" used in that sense, and this clause, "in failure of which," it looks very much as if Roddy v. Fitzgerald applied exactly. But Mr. Swinfen Eady says, "No, it does not," because, although you have got the word "issue" used as a word of limitation, and it is necessary to look at "issue" exactly as if it were heirs of the body, and although you have got in this case, as in Roddy v. Fitzgerald, the condition or the provision "in failure of which issue," yet he says, "The word 'issue' in respect of which there might be a failure there refers to a general failure of issue, and here it is not of general failure of issue, but it is something more limited." I am afraid I do not understand the meaning of that observation. As to the issue, there is a limitation that if he married a fit and worthy gentlewoman and had issue male, to such male issue and their male descendants, I do not see anything in that which prevents the same argument arising as would arise from the failure of general issue. But I suppose I have not duly appreciated that argument. At all events, I am perfectly clear myself in this case there is nothing in the words "issue male and their descendants" which gives anything to Mr. Swinfen Eady's clients as purchasers. I say that I have come to that conclusion upon consideration of the arguments which have been addressed to us. Having said that, I have only one more observation to make, and that is this, that I do not read the words following, "if he marry a fit and worthy gentlewoman and have issue male," as words which create a condition at all. It seems to me that the whole of those words are words of limitation and not of condition. Having said that I do not think I can usefully add anything.

ROMER, L.J.—I also think that Buckley, J., has put a right construction upon this codicil, and I need only add a few remarks to what has already been said.

In the first place, I think that the reference in the codicil to the marriage of Charles with a fit and worthy gentlewoman is not a condition properly so called, and that Charles takes some estate in the property devised, whether he marries as mentioned in the codicil or not. The case of Page v. Hayward is a strong authority to support that view; indeed, that was a much stronger case in that direction than the present. Nor do I think that according to the true construction of this codicil there was a gift in fee to Charles with an executory devise over in case he married as provided and left male issue by that marriage. The codicil clearly speaks of the various successive gifts as being by way of limitation, and where the court can give effect to gifts in a will such as are found in this codicil by way of legal remainders the court will prefer to do so rather than treat the gifts as arising by way of executory devise. That being so, it appears to me that there are left but two possible constructions of this codicil. First, that the codicil created a gift to Charles in special tail male; or, secondly, that it created a gift to Charles for life with remainder to certain of his male issue by the marriage mentioned as purchasers in tail male. Now of these two possible constructions I think the first is the true one. By that you can give effect to what appears to me the true intent of the testator, without adding or implying anything that is not stated on the face of the codicil. I think that the intent was so far as possible to give such an estate to Charles as would on his death if he had married as provided pass to his male issue by the marriage in the ordinary course of succession, and that it was only on ultimate failure of that issue that the next gift was to take effect by way of remainder. In his limitation the testator uses the word "issue," which is a word of well-known legal import, and one peculiarly apt and proper to create an estate tail. Moreover, when the wording of the remainder given to the son Thomas after the determination of the estate given to Charles and his issue is considered it is clear that the testator regarded Thomas's issue by the marriage indicated as succeeding by virtue of the estate given to Thomas, and I think it is plain on this codicil that at any rate the estate given to Thomas was an estate in special tail male, and I cannot think that the testator intended the estate given to Charles to be different to that which was to be given to Thomas if Thomas succeeded.

On the other hand, the second construction which I have mentioned above gives rise to considerable difficulty. In the first place it is noticeable that the testator does not expressly give to Charles an estate for life, and I do nor think we ought to imply such a limitation, the court not being obliged to do so. Whether, if the testator had used the words "estate for life" in describing the interest given to Charles, that would have been sufficient for the appellant's purposes we need not consider. Secondly, though it is true that the testator speaks of the male descendants of the male issue of Charles by the particular marriage, and that it is unnecessary to do that, if the gift was to Charles in special tail male, yet we know that testators often do add unnecessary words, and if the testator in speaking of Charles's male issue intended to give them an estate tail as purchasers the question arises, which of the issue are meant to be purchasers. It is said the sons of Charles only. But the testator has not said so, and I do not see why the court should imply it unnecessarily, nor do I think he can be taken to have meant that all the issue living at Charles's death should be regarded as purchasers. He has not said so, and I do not think he could have intended sons' sons to take simultaneously as purchasers. Moreover, the gift over is on failure of all the male issue, and their male descendants, and I do not see why the court should be driven unnecessarily to suppose he implied cross-remainders in tail. I think that the limitations of this codicil are more simply and properly carried out by holding that there is a gift to Charles in special tail male as decided by Buckley, J. It is true that by reason of the fact that a special estate tail can be barred the testator's intention may in one sense be defeated, but it is only because that is the legal effect of a special tail male, and a consideration of that kind, that such an estate can be barred, cannot possibly affect in the eyes of the court the legal effect of the words which the testator has used in this codicil. For these reasons I agree in thinking that the appeal should be dismissed.

Solicitors, Blair & W. B. Girling; Richard Smith & Sons, for Marshalls & Bate, East Retford.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } July 4, 1901.
Kekewich, J. }

RICHARDS v. DE WINTON.
RICHARDS v. EVANS. (a.)

Common—Compulsory purchase—Extinction of commonable rights—Compensation—Apportionment—Jurisdiction—Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), ss. 102, 103, 104—Inclosure of Land Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 97), ss. 15, 16, 17.

Where common lands have been taken compulsorily for public purposes, and a committee of commoners has been duly appointed under section 102 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and has received the compensation money, the court has no jurisdiction to interfere in determining who are the persons interested in such money, as machinery for determining them has been provided by the various Acts of Parliament relating to the subject.

The Merthyr Tydvil Urban District Council, under the powers conferred by the Merthyr Tydvil District Council Waterworks Act, 1895, had taken certain portions of two commons for constructing their waterworks. This Act incorporated the Land Clauses Act and also extended the application of section 2 of the Commonable Rights Compensation Act, 1882, by enlarging the list of improvements in which the money so paid might, by the desire of the commoners, be expended.

By two agreements dated the 18th of May, 1895, the council had agreed with D. T. Jefferys, as agent for the commoners of the two commons, to pay £40 per acre for the extinction of the commonable rights. Meetings of the commoners had been duly convened and held, and the defendants had been appointed committees of the respective parishes. The committees had ratified the agreements of the 18th of May, 1895, and had in their hand the moneys paid by the council for the extinction of the rights.

The plaintiff claimed a declaration that he was entitled to these sums as sole commoner.

The defendants raised the objection that the court had no jurisdiction to entertain the action.

Warrington, K.C., and R. Rowlands, for the plaintiff.—These commons have been taken for public purposes, under section 104 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845; the committee are authorized to enter into an agreement with the promoters to receive the compensation money, and to apportion it among the persons interested. The court has power under that Act to decide who are the persons interested: Fox v. Amhurst, L. R. 20 Eq. 403, 24 W. R. Dig. 134.

S. T. Evans, K.C., and R. J. Parker, for the defendants.—The committee was elected by the persons having commonable rights over the land, it is part of the plaintiff's case that this committee has been duly elected, and he cannot now be heard to say that he is the only commoner. This action is not maintainable, as the committee have to decide who are the persons entitled, and in case of dispute the matter must be referred to the Board of Agriculture. [KEKEWICH, J., referred to Nash v. Coombs, 16 W. R. 663, L. R. 6 Eq. 51.]

Warrington in reply.—The Acts are silent as to the way in which the persons interested are to be ascertained, and there is no machinery for determining who are the proper persons qualified to vote at the meeting to determine to which of the improvements mentioned in the Act the money may be laid out. The court therefore has jurisdiction to interfere in settling these questions.

KEKEWICH, J.—Notwithstanding the difficulty and novelty of the question falling for decision, I do not think I shall gain anything by deferring judgment.

Now, what is the question? The plaintiff's counsel has pointed out in his reply that there is no machinery for determining who are the proper persons to say whether or not this money shall be laid out in some of the improvement purposes which are sanctioned by the general and special Acts of Parliament. This is a singular omission, and what it would be right to do, if the question were now before me whether the money be laid out in that manner or not, I need not pause to determine. That is not the question which I have to consider. The plaintiff claims as his the whole of the money in the hands of the defendants, who are the committee or committees appointed under the provisions of the Land Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845. I shall speak of them as the committee for the sake of simplicity, because though they are two for the purposes of the present action they both stand in exactly the same position. At present the plaintiff claims, not that the money should be laid out in improvement purposes, but that it should be paid to him because he is the sole commoner. It is a strange phrase, but still that is his position. The committee, on the other hand, say that they are prepared to do their duty, that it is for them to determine, and they are prepared to determine for themselves, whether he is or not; or if it becomes a question which they cannot properly determine, that the Act provides machinery by which that can be determined by a competent tribunal. That is the question which I must determine—namely, whether I ought to intervene—in fact whether I have any power or right to intervene—between the plaintiff and the committee, and say that the committee is not to do its duty and fulfil the obligations cast upon it by the Acts of Parliament. Now what are these obligations? The fasciculus of clauses under the head of common lands in the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, runs from sections 99 to 107, and except one particular provision—to which I shall presently refer—there is no occasion to go through them in detail. The Act contemplated that in the course of taking lands for the purposes of railways and other public works the promoters of the undertaking—as they are always called—would have to buy up common rights, and those who have had any experience in such matters know very well that the Legislature was well advised in providing for such a state of facts, because it has occurred often and must occur again and again so long as public works are authorized by statute—that is to say, compulsory powers are vested in public bodies. So that the Legislature provided, in short, that there being no trustees, as is often the case when lands are taken compulsorily, or no tenant for life, still less any tenant in fee who can make a bargain, something must be done to ascertain what money should be paid for the acquisition of common rights, and the Legislature provided that a meeting should be summoned of those who claimed to be interested, and they were to determine what should be done. They would appoint a committee and the committee were authorized to make a bargain binding upon the commoners and to receive the money. It was not at all difficult machinery, by no means complicated, and fairly straightforward. No doubt it was contemplated that it would work very well because in most cases there is not any serious doubt who are the commoners. Then the committee having been appointed and having made their bargain with the promoters of the undertaking, of course the money which they had received had to be distributed in some way or another among those whom the committee represented, and section 104 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, provides thus: "and such compensation when received shall be apportioned by the committee among the several persons interested therein according to their respective interests." That is the whole thing; they were left to do it, and under that, it seems to me, they were bound to ascertain who were the "several persons interested therein." They were bound to ascertain what the particular interests were, not only of commoners but of commoners who had varying rights, and then to distribute the compensation money among those parties according to their respective interests. Difficulties might arise, but the Legislature does not seem to anticipate that any would arise, and as a matter of fact I believe that it is only now and again that difficulties have arisen. What would happen if they arose it is rather hard to say. The case to which I called attention in the course of the argument—Nash v. Coombs—shows that the court will be open to the committee to come as stakeholder for directions in the character of trustees, and they might come to the court by a bill as it would have been in those days, and now I suppose by an originating summons or at any rate by a writ to ascertain what they should do with the money which was intrusted to their care; and no doubt some means would be found to make them do their duty if they did not show the proper alacrity in performing it. But I do not see how the court could have determined, even under that section, who were the several persons interested therein if it was objected that there was no jurisdiction. I suggested the case of a committee threatening and intending to exclude some person who had an interest, and whether he could maintain an action for an injunction to prevent their distributing the money without making proper provision for him. As at present advised, I think if any such action were brought, and it were resisted, it would fail on the ground that it was not competent for the court to interfere. Of course I am not thinking of a case of fraud or of the committee improperly refusing to hear and determine certain claims, or anything of that kind, for everything that was wrong in that sense no doubt the court would find a remedy. But the duty seems to me to be cast upon the committee to apportion the money "among the several persons interested therein according to their respective interest," and though it is impossible to say it is a new right because of the substitution of the right to money for the right of common, still it is in that sense a new right created by statute with machinery for ascertaining the extent and limits of the right, and to such a case as that it is difficult to apply the common law, and to say that the court has jurisdiction when the particular procedure or remedy has been given by statute. So it seems to me to stand under the Land Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845. The next statute with which I have to deal is the Inclosure Act of 1852. I do not think I need dwell on that. The defendants' counsel has properly called my attention to it because in construing these Acts it is certainly desirable to have them under one's eye and compare them. There is a difference in that Act from the Act of 1845, to which I am next coming, and it is a difference which one must regard in construction; but as regards the general provisions of the Acts and the effect of them, I do not think I need dwell upon the language of that Act, although I have not forgotten it. Then comes the Inclosure of Land Act of 1854, and we must remember that it is really an Act for amending the Land Clauses Consolidation Act of 1845, as regards the fasciculus of clauses to which I have called attention. Section 15 of the Act presupposes that the common rights had been taken by the promoters of the undertaking and that the bargain is complete. The Act does not substitute any new provision at all, or any varied provision for determining how the bargain is to be made. It supposes that the meeting has been called, the committee has been appointed, the committee has met the promoters of the undertaking, and a bargain has been struck, and more than that, that the money has been received by the committee. So far the provisions of the Land Clauses Consolidation Act are not touched at all. But then it seems to have occurred to the Legislature that there might be a difficulty in carrying out that apportionment by section 104 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, with which I have just been dealing. The phrase is peculiar. It says: "Where . . . the majority of such committee shall be of opinion that the provisions of such Act"—that is, the Land Clauses Consolidation Act—"for the apportionment thereof"—that is, the money—"cannot be satisfactorily carried into effect," and so on. I was somewhat puzzled at first to know what was the meaning of "cannot be satisfactorily carried into effect." I think it means no more than this: if difficulties occur in the apportionment which the committee do not see their way to solve. That is what I think it means. Then what are they to do. They are to make an application in writing to the commissioners—that is to say, a body which was a public office, which was then the Inclosure Commissioners, which is now the Board of Agriculture, to call a meeting of the persons interested in such compensation money. They are to apply to the commissioners to call a meeting, and then the commissioners are to call a meeting if they please. The Act of 1852 distinctly recognized their rights to say Yes or No. There is nothing to interfere with that in this Act, and if the commissioners neglected to call such a meeting—that is to say, did not accede to the application, then again we might possibly have been in a fix; but we have not reached that state yet. As any hesitation on the part of the commissioners of the Board of Agriculture cannot be reasonably anticipated, I think I may pass that by as one of the contingencies with which I am not now called upon to deal. Then the meeting that they are to call is to determine whether or not such compensation money shall be apportioned under the provisions of this Act. Now, up to this time I have failed to find any means of disposing of the money except by apportionment. The provisions, which were much discussed and to which I referred just now, with regard to applying the money to public improvements, had not then seen daylight. They had not occurred to anyone up till then, at any rate had not been mentioned by the Legislature, and the only thing to do, as far as I can see, was either to leave the money where it was, which can hardly be supposed to be right, or to apportion it among the persons interested as directed by section 104 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act. Therefore I am sorry to say I do not exactly see what was the point of the meeting being called to determine "whether or not such compensation shall be apportioned under the provisions of this Act." My difficulty in seeing what was in contemplation by the Legislature is increased by this, that there is no provision here for the event—extremely unlikely no doubt, but still a possible event—of the meeting determining that the compensation money should not be apportioned. In that event nothing happens at all and what would really be done in that deadlock I am not fortunately called upon to say and do not propose to attempt to determine. The rest of the Act proceeds on the footing which no doubt is the reasonable and likely one, that the meeting having been called by the commissioners, it will determine that the money shall be apportioned. From that we start. It is of course open to the plaintiff to say that we have not arrived at that, that there has been no application to the Board of Agriculture, that they have not called a meeting and the meeting therefore has not determined whether the compensation money should be apportioned, and, therefore, that it is useless to consider what is to happen when that has been done. I think the answer to that is this, that if unfortunately the deadlock which I pointed out occurs, the court must decide for itself whether there is any solution within the power of the court of such deadlock. It has not occurred and I must deal with the matters as they stand, giving credit to the committee for a desire to do their duty as they say they are prepared to do and of course giving credit to the Board of Agriculture that it will use the discretion vested in it properly and for the benefit of all concerned. Then I must assume, as the Act does for the present purpose, that the meeting will be called, and that the money shall be apportioned. Then what is to happen? The money will be paid into the bank so that it will be under the control of the Board of Agriculture; then section 17 contains the procedure which seems to me to present no difficulty at all when once you have got to it. The Inclosure Commissioners direct an inquiry, and they appoint an assistant commissioner for the purpose, and they, through him, are "to proceed to ascertain, determine, and award the names of the parties who are entitled to such estates, rights, and interests in the said common and commonable lands, and the amount or value of their respective shares, rights, and interest therein, and the proportionate amount of the price so to be paid as aforesaid for such estates, rights, and interests to which each party so entitled as aforesaid is entitled in respect of his share, right, or interest as aforesaid." That is to be binding. When once you get to that stage it seems quite impossible for the High Court or any other court to intervene except perhaps on the invitation of the Board of Agriculture. I do not say they might not have the assistance of the court if they wished, but it is left entirely to them to determine. As I have already said, it does not seem to me to be an objection to these provisions that the Board of Agriculture has not yet been called in, and cannot yet be called in because the preliminary steps have not been taken. Here we have still a stronger provision than even the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act of 1845. In that Act we have only the provision which I have read directing the committee to apportion the money. Here we have not only a direction to the commissioners to do it, but a carefully considered procedure with their duties and powers expressed in very plain as well as elaborate language. With that it seems to me I cannot interfere, and have no right to interfere. Again, the plaintiff must come under the Act as against the committee to claim money which was received by the committee under the procedure appointed by the Act, and claiming under the Act he must claim in the manner pointed out by the Act, and through the tribunals appointed by the Act. That being my opinion on these Acts, I need only give a passing word to the Commonable Rights Compensation Act, 1882, and to the special Act of Parliament by which the Merthyr Tydvil District Council took this land. It had not been thought of before that there was or might be a way of applying the money to be paid for commonable rights which would be equally beneficial to the commoners as dividing between them sums which no doubt in some cases are extremely small; and so this Act of 1882 provides that the money may be laid out in certain improvements, and the special Act, which incorporates the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, and, of course, these other Acts enlarge those powers. That is all. It says that the improvements which are mentioned in the Act of 1882 shall include also some others which are mentioned specifically in the special Act. That does not affect the apportionment in the least. One is bound to look at those Acts, of course, to see the whole scheme of legislation, but I have not to construe the Act of 1882 at all. I have only to see how far it assists me in determining what is the meaning of the previous Act. There no doubt comes in the plaintiffs' counsel's objection. If the money is to be laid out in this way, who is to say whether it shall be laid out or not, or whether it shall be laid out for any particular purpose? My answer to that is, that at present I have nothing to do with that. When the question arises, if it unfortunately comes before me, I will do my best to deal with it; but at the present moment all that I have to determine is whether the committee, being willing to discharge the duties cast upon them by Parliament, there being not the slightest objection that they do not intend to discharge those duties honestly and to the best of their abilities, and that if there are any difficulties which they cannot see their way to solve they will not have recourse to the easy means which Parliament has pointed out to them. I think my duty is to say that I cannot interfere with the committee under the present circumstances. The action must be dismissed with costs.

(a) Reported by C. W. MEAD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Judgment for the defendants.

Solicitors, Schultz & Sons, for Gwilym James, Charles, & Davies, Merthyr Tydvil; Sharpe, Parker, Pritchards, Barham, & Lawford, for D. T. Jeffreys, Brecon.

Chan. Div.
Cozens-Hardy, J. } Aug. 6, 8, 1901.

In re MAGDALEN COLLEGE, OXFORD. (a.)

Practice—Brokerage—Compulsory purchase—Payment out of court—Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), s. 80.

The proceeds of land compulsorily sold were paid into court and invested. On application for the sale of the investments and payment out of the money by the party absolutely entitled,

Held, that the party who paid the money into court must pay the brokerage on the sale of the investments.

Land was compulsorily sold under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act by the President and Scholars of Magdalen College, Oxford, to the London County Council and the London School Board.

The purchase-money was by order of the court invested in railway stock and in Consols.

The college authorities were now desirous of investing the purchase-money in land.

They petitioned the court for the payment of the money to the Board of Agriculture (under the provisions of the Universities and College Estates Act, 1858 to 1880 and 1898) and asked that the council and school board should be ordered to pay the brokerage on the sale of the funds.

Vernon Smith, K.C., and Borthwick, for Magdalen College.

Frederic Thompson, for the county council.

C. T. Mitchell, for the London School Board.

COZENS-HARDY, J.—The only question on this petition is whether the parties who paid the money into court are bound to pay the brokerage on sale of the interim investments. I expressed some surprise that a point of this kind should be still open. I have caused inquiries to be made of the registrars, and am told that the distinction taken by counsel for the county council has never been, so far as they know, raised before; and in practice the brokerage has in all cases been treated as part of the costs and paid by the party who paid the money in. And though there is no direct authority, the practice seems to me to be right. Section 69 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act provides several ways in which the money paid into court may be applied. Now it has been settled long ago that in cases where there has been an interim investment in securities, and the money is required to be invested in land, all the costs of getting the money required for investment, including brokerage, must be paid. In other words, the money which is to be applied for the purposes mentioned in the section is the whole purchase-money, or the value of the interim investments regarded as a gross sum without any deduction. It is said that this brokerage is not within the reasonable costs the payment of which is provided for by section 80. I think that section means that the person entitled is to have an option whether he will have the stock or the money. If he chooses the latter, I cannot see anything in principle, and certainly there is nothing in the authorities, to make me draw any distinction between a case where the money is to be invested and one where it is to be paid out. The brokerage must be paid as part of the costs.

Solicitors for the petitioners, Routh, Stacey, & Castle.

Solicitor for the London County Council, W. A. Blaxland.

Solicitor for the London School Board, C. E. Mortimer.

(a.) Reported by J. H. DAVIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Chan. Div.
Farwell, J. } Nov. 13.

In re RICHARDS.
UGLOW v. RICHARDS. (a.)

Will—Construction—Power superadded to a life interest—Insufficiency of income—"To use as she may deem expedient"—Practice—Representation by separate counsel.

Where a testator gave the income of his estate to his wife for her life with remainder to residuary legatees, but directed that "in case such income shall not be sufficient, she is to use such portion of my said real and personal estate as she may deem expedient,"

Held, that she had a general power of appointment during her life over the capital.

In re Pedrotti's Will, 27 Beav. 583, 8 W. R. Ch. Dig. 100, distinguished.

Adjourned summons

By his will dated the 9th of July, 1898, Richard Richards, a retired miner, who died on the 12th of August, 1900, gave the income of all his real and personal estate to his wife, Jane Richards, for her life, and also directed that, "in case such income shall not be sufficient, she is to use such portion of my said real and personal estate as she may deem expedient," and that on her decease what was left of his real and personal estate should be divided in shares among named residuary legatees.

The testator's estate consisted of sums amounting to over £3,000, deposited at a bank at the time of his death in the joint names of himself and his wife.

Shortly after his death his widow had caused the said sums to be transferred into her own name, and, having subsequently withdrawn them, now refused to account for them, but claimed them as her absolute property.

This summons was therefore taken out by an executor of the will, who was also one of the residuary legatees, to have it determined whether the said sums formed part of the testator's estate, or were the absolute property of the widow.

(a.) Reported by WARWICK H. DRAPER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

J. Austen Cartmell appeared for an executor—the judge having intimated that in cases like the present a trustee or executor could not appear by the same counsel as a beneficiary interested in arguing the case (see similar ruling of Farwell, J., noted in 46 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL, 2).

W. H. Cozens-Hardy, for a plaintiff, who was a residuary legatee.—All that the widow can have at the outside is the income supplemented by so much of the capital as will provide her with a maintenance suitable to her station in life: Re Pedrotti's Will, 27 Beav. 583, 8 W. R. Ch. Dig. 100. £1 a week is the sum so suitable; and the residuary legatees are entitled to a declaration that she cannot come upon the capital except for the sum which would make up that needed for her maintenance.

Jenkins, K.C. (Ashton Cross with him), for the defendant, the widow.—In re Pedrotti's Will is distinguishable, not having the words "as she may deem expedient," which are used in the present case; it is also an old case and does not lay down any principle. The defendant has a general power of appointment over the capital.

FARWELL, J.—The only question causing me difficulty is whether I am bound by In re Pedrotti's Will. I have come to the conclusion that the words are different in the two cases, and that here there is a gift with a general power of appointment. In In re Pedrotti's Will the testator bequeathed the income of his residue to his wife for life, and proceeded: "And I further devise, in case anything should occur that her income is not sufficient, she shall be at liberty to go to the principal." The widow's power of resorting to the capital was there contingent on the happening of some external event. In the present case there are the words "to use such portion as she may deem expedient"; in In re Pedrotti's Will there was no such guide, so that the court adjudicated by holding that the testator meant an amount for maintenance suitable to the donee's station in life and gave accordingly. In the present case the apparent contingency depends simply on the will of the wife. the words "in case such income shall not be sufficient" being merely introductory. The phrase is ambiguous; it may mean, as held in In re Pedrotti's Will, "sufficient for her wants," or it may mean, as I think it does here, "sufficient for her desires." It is left to her to fix the amount, so that if she deems it expedient to say that the income is insufficient and to add to it, she has a general power of appointment over the capital. There are cases which show that although the words used are words of contingency, yet the gift can be held to be dependent on the will of the donee and not on the contingency. I therefore declare that upon the true construction of this will the defendant is entitled to a general power of appointment by deed or writing during her lifetime over the capital of the testator's residuary real and personal estate, in addition to a tenancy for life of the income, and that the sums mentioned, together with interest thereon, are her absolute property.

Solicitors, Robbins, Billing, & Co., for Marrack, Nalder, & Hoskin, Truro; Kingsford, Dorman, & Co., for E. Lawrence Carlyon, Truro.

Chan. Div. } Buckley, J. } Nov. 6.

In re FORD.
FORD v. FORD. (a.)

Administration—Inoperative will—Intestacy—Advances to children—Hotchpot—Statute of Distributions (22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 10), s. 5—1 Will. 4, c. 10.

Where a will has become inoperative by reason of the sole executor and universal devisee and legatee dying in the lifetime of the testator, there is an intestacy within section 5 of the Statute of Distributions, and the provisions of that statute, as to children sharing in the residue bringing their advances into hotchpot, apply.

Adjourned summons.

The testator in this case devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate to his wife absolutely, and appointed her his sole executrix. This constituted the whole will.

He died in September, 1900, a widower, having survived his wife, who died in 1892.

Letters of administration with the will annexed had been granted to the two defendants.

The testator left several children, to some of whom he had made advances in his lifetime.

This summons was taken out by two of the children of the testator for the determination of the question whether on the distribution of the residuary estate the persons entitled to share therein ought to bring into hotchpot sums of money or benefits given to them by the testator on his lifetime, and for administration of the real and personal estate.

Terrell, K.C., and James G. Wood, for the plaintiffs.—There is no intestacy here within the Statute of Distributions, as there is a will and an appointment of an executor, and the statute does not apply to a partial intestacy: Vachell v. Jeffereys. Prec. Chan. 169; Cowper v. Scott, 3 P. Wms. 119; Wheeler v. Sheer, Moseley, 288; Edwards v. Freeman, 2 P. Wms. 435; Walton v. Walton, 14 Ves. 318; Wilkinson v. Atkinson, Tur. & R. 255. Williams v. Arkle, 24 W. R. 215, L. R. 7 H. L. 606, turned on a matter of construction. No doubt there was a dictum of Jessel, M.R., in Stewart v. Stewart, 29 W. R. 275, 15 Ch. D 539, at p. 543, to the contrary; but we submit that that dictum was not a correct statement of the law. The case of Harte v. Meredith, 13 L. R. (Ir.) 341, we admit, is against us, but that case is not binding upon the court, and is, we submit, wrong. Immediately upon the appointment of the executor, the executor became a trustee for the next-of-kin in case there should be a lapse, and the court does not permit the trust to fail because of the death of the trustee. The statute 1 Will. 4, c. 40, making the executor trustee of the undisposed-of residue for the persons entitled under the statute does not apply, as here the executor was intended to take beneficially. It is true the executrix died in the lifetime of testator, but how can the amount of the shares of the children be made to depend upon the accident of the executor surviving.

Astbury, K.C., and Gatey, for the defendants.—In all the cases cited the executor survived the testator. Here there was a total intestacy. Moreover, the dictum of Jessel, M.R., in Stewart v. Stewart is good law. We also rely on Harte v. Meredith, where under exactly similar circumstances the advancement provision of the statute was held to apply.

BUCKLEY, J.—I have to decide whether the testator has died intestate within section 5 of the Statute of Distributions (22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 10). To a plain man it would seem that, as he had made an instrument which became wholly inoperative, he had died intestate. But I am told that is not so, and several cases have been referred to as showing this. In all the cases cited, except the Irish case, there was an appointment of an executor who survived the testator and proved the will, and there was therefore no intestacy as to the legal interest in the personalty. There was also in these cases a disposition of some part of the beneficial interest. Now what was the principle of those cases? They discriminate between total and partial intestacy—that is, as to the beneficial interest. Now it is said that the will here is not wholly inoperative, but that it must be read as if a testator had appointed X. Y., an executor, as a trustee for A. B., and then, if A. B. dies in the lifetime of the testator, that there arises a trust for the next-of-kin, and that the will is an operative one. Suppose that is so, and X. Y. survives, and there is therefore a valid appointment of an executor, then the statute 1 Will. 4, c. 40 applies, and the executor is to be deemed a trustee of the undisposed-of residue for the next-of-kin who are ascertained according to the Statute of Distributions. The residue is not distributed among those persons equally, but the widow takes a third and the children two-thirds, according to the provisions of the statute. But it is said I must disregard the provisions of the statute as to advances made by the testator. It is difficult to say that you would follow the statute as to the shares taken by the widow and children, but not as to advances made to the children being brought into hotchpot. As to the dictum of Sir W. Grant in Walton v. Walton, that where the executor holds in trust for next-of-kin a child advanced need not bring the advance into hotchpot, Sir George Jessel in Stewart v. Stewart, 15 Ch. D., at p. 543, says, "The law is different from what it was supposed to be in his (Sir W. Grant's) time, which was that advancement did not apply to a share of residue." Even if I could treat the case as one of a trust imposed upon the conscience of the trustee who had died in the lifetime of the testator so that the court would not suffer the trust to fail, the trust would be for the persons entitled under the Statute of Distributions, and to be ascertained upon the principles of the statute. But the statute applies to cases where the ordinary or other person is enabled to make distribution. That is exactly the case here. There is no executor, but an administrator cum testamento annexo. The exact point before me was decided in Harte v. Meredith. That case is not binding upon me, but I find nothing in it to differ from and I propose to follow it, and I hold that the children advanced must bring their advances into hotchpot before receiving their shares of residue.

(a.) Reported by NEVILLE TEBBUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Solicitors, Douglas Ford & Co.; Rowcliffes, Rawle, & Co; Carr, Scott, Smith, & Gorringe.

Chan. Div.
Buckley, J. } Aug. 5, 1901.

BARNARD CASTLE URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. WILSON AND OTHERS. (a.)

Waterworks — Local government — School — Swimming bath—Domestic purposes—Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 93), s. 12—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 56, 65.

The supply of water to a school for the purposes of a swimming bath by a body acting under the Public Health Act, 1875, incorporating the Waterworks Clauses Acts, 1847 and 1863, is a supply for domestic, and not for trade or business purposes, within the meaning of those Acts.

(a.) Reported by NEVILLE TEBBUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Action.

The question in this action was whether the managers of a school were entitled to have water supplied to a swimming bath used for the school at the ordinary water rate, as for a domestic purpose, within the Public Health Act, 1875, and the Acts incorporated therewith.

The school in question was a school at Castle Barnard, in Durham, called the "North-Eastern County School," and the defendants were the governors of it.

This school was carried on under a scheme sanctioned by the Charity Commissioners. No profits were made, but any surplus funds were invested for the benefit of the foundation.

There was a swimming bath upon the premises which held about 35,000 gallons of water, and which was used by the boys, both by boarders and day scholars. The school had room for 300 boarders and 50 day scholars. It was supplied with water by the plaintiffs, the Urban District Council, who were the local sanitary authority, with water for washing, drinking, cooking, and other domestic purposes.

The plaintiffs had no special Act, but supplied water under the Public Health Act, 1875, and the Acts incorporated therewith.

The plaintiffs had supplied the swimming bath until March, 1899, under a special agreement. They subsequently gave notice to the governors of the school that they should treat the swimming bath as a trade purpose and should for the future charge for water supplied to it at the rate of 6d. for every 1,000 gallons. The governors, however, would not agree to this, and continued to take the water supply for the bath. The plaintiffs brought this action claiming a declaration that the governors of the school were not entitled to a supply of water from the plaintiffs for the swimming bath as for a domestic purpose, within the meaning of the Waterworks Clauses Acts, 1847 and 1863, as incorporated in the Public Health Act, 1875; that the plaintiffs were entitled to payment from the defendants for the bath at the rate of 6d. per 1,000 gallons; that the plaintiffs were entitled to cut off the water of the defendants until such payment was made; and an injunction to restrain the defendants from taking the water, except as water for purposes other than domestic purposes within the meaning of the above Acts.

S. G. Lushington, for the plaintiffs.—The purpose for which the defendants use the water supplied by the plaintiffs is a public purpose, and not a private one. The keeping of a school is a business—Wauton v. Coppard, 47 W. R. 72, [1899] 1 Ch. 92; Doe dem. Bish v. Keeling, 1 M. & Sel. 95; and that is so whether it is a charity school or not—Rolls v. Miller, 32 W. R. 806, 27 Ch. D. 71; German v. Chapman, 26 W. R. 149, 7 Ch. D. 271; and the use of the water for the swimming bath is a trade and not a domestic purpose, within section 12 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863, and consequently the plaintiffs are not bound to supply it.

He also referred to Busby v. Chesterfield Waterworks and Gas Light Co., 6 W. R. 515, El. Bl. & El. 176.

R. C. Glen, for the defendants.—This school was not carried on for profit by the defendants, and was not their "business": Smith v. Anderson, 29 W. R. 21, 15 Ch. D. 247. A school is a large family, and its purposes are not public but domestic: Liskeard Union v. Liskeard Waterworks Co., 30 W. R.

292, 7 Q. B. D. 505. The plaintiffs cannot charge an extra rate for a fixed bath: Weaver v. The Corporation of Cardiff, 48 L. T. Rep. 906, 31 W. R. Dig. 215.

Lushington, in reply.—In Weaver v. Corporation of Cardiff there was a special Act, and special provision as to baths.

BUCKLEY, J.—The fact of the school being carried on at a profit does not make any difference to the question I have to decide—namely, whether under section 12 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863, which contrasts a supply of water for domestic purposes with a supply for trade, manufacture, or business, this is a supply for the one purpose or the other. The only sections bearing upon the question are sections 56 and 65 of the Public Health Act, 1875. The effect of section 56 is that where a local authority supplies water it may charge a water rate to be assessed upon the net annual value of the premises in the manner pointed out. Section 65 enables a local authority to supply water to any public baths or washhouses, or for trading or manufacturing purposes, on such terms and conditions as may be agreed on. I have to deal with a series of enactments containing no reference to baths except public baths. In Weaver v. The Corporation of Cardiff, where there was a special Act requiring the company to supply water for domestic purposes, not including a supply for baths, washhouses, or public purposes, it was held that a fixed bath connected with the water service, and used for a private residence, was within the exception. It is admitted that a supply of water to an ordinary bath-room in a private residence would not be a supply for the purposes of trade, manufacture, or business, and that if the owner of a private residence constructed a swimming bath on his own premises for his own use the supply of water to it would be for a domestic purpose. But the plaintiffs say that the keeping of the school is carrying on a business, and the swimming bath is supplied for the purpose of that business—the business of receiving, feeding, housing, and teaching the boys during the school terms. If this is true, the supply of water for the boys to wash their hands, or for cooking their meals, would be a supply, not for domestic purposes, but for the purposes of a business. This seems an extravagant proposition. I think that it is impossible to say that providing this swimming bath is a business as distinguished from the other purposes for which the school is carried on. Suppose the school authorities taught carpentering or kept a gymnasium upon the premises, could they be said to carry on a business as teachers of carpentry or as gymnasium proprietors? I think not. What is referred to in the Act is the whole business of a school and not the keeping of a swimming bath as a mere incident to it. Directly you find the water supplied is supplied for domestic purposes, even though for the domestic purposes of the business of keeping a school, it is a supply for domestic purposes, and not a supply for a business. The nearest case to the one before me is that of Liskeard Union v. Liskeard Waterworks Co., where it was held that a supply of water for the inmates of a workhouse was not for a public purpose. Lord Coleridge in his judgment, after saying that in the prosecution of that which is a public purpose there may be domestic uses, says (7 Q. B. D., at p. 509): "Every large family is partly made up of persons quite unconnected by ties of blood or marriage, and the number of those so connected may bear a very small proportion to the whole number of persons collected together, as, for instance, in the case of a school, where a number of persons of different families are collected from different places, but under one head, and one roof, and are for all practical purposes one family." It seems to me that that is the real way to treat this case. All the boys constitute for the purposes of this question one family, and one establishment, and the supply of water for them is as much a supply for a domestic purpose, as the supply for the masters, or for any other members of the family, and as it is conceded that in a private residence there is no distinction between water supplied for a swimming bath and that supplied for ordinary washing purposes, it follows that water supplied for this bath is supplied for domestic purposes.

Action dismissed.

Solicitors, Doyle, Devonshire, & Woodhouse, for J. Ingram Dawson, Barnard Castle; Huntingdon & Leaf, for A. T. Piper, Barnard Castle.

Chan. Div. } Nov. 13.
Wright, J. }

In re THE LEYTON AND WALTHAMSTOW CYCLE CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Company—Winding up—Costs—Compulsory order—Petitioning creditor's debt under £50.

*Where a compulsory winding up order is made on the petition of a creditor whose debt is under £50, he may, if supported by creditors for a larger amount, be allowed his costs.

A judgment creditor for £35 3*s.* 6*d.* for goods supplied petitioned for the winding up of a trading company, and his petition was supported by other creditors whose debts were of the total amount of £128.

The company had never held it statutory meeting and was insolvent.

Cozens-Hardy, for the petitioner.

The company did not appear.

WRIGHT, J., in making the usual compulsory winding-up order said that the petitioning creditor's debt being under £50 he would not ordinarily have been allowed any costs, but as he was supported by other creditors for a considerable amount the usual order as to costs would be made.

Solicitors, Reed & Reed.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and } Nov. 6.
Darling and Channell, JJ.)

STODDART (Appellant) v. HAWKE (Respondent). (b.)

Gaming—Betting—Office used for betting—Coupons for prizes for naming winners of horse-races issued from office in London—Money received in Holland—Betting Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 119), ss. 1, 3, 4.

Coupons were issued in connection with a newspaper from an office in London kept by the appellant. The coupons, which could be obtained on application free of charge, were to be filled in by the competitors in a wagering competition, and when so filled in were to be sent in postal orders to an office in Holland. These postal orders were not payable in Holland, and had to be returned to England to be cashed. The money so sent in by competitors was eventually received by the appellant.

* See In re Herbert Standring & Co., 39 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL, 603, [1895] W. N. 99.

(a.) Reported by L. W. BYRNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(b.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Held, that an offence had been committed under section 1 of the Betting Act, 1853, notwithstanding that the money was received from the competitors abroad, and that the appellant had been rightly convicted.

Case stated.

Appeal from a decision of Mr. Alderman Smallman sitting as magistrate for the City of London.

The material facts as set forth in the special case were as follow:

On the 30th of April, 1901, the appellant, Joseph Stoddart, was convicted on five summonses, the first four of which were that he, being the owner of a certain office or place situate at 10, Red Lion-court, Fleet-street, did, on various dates in March, 1901, open, keep, and use the said office and place for the purpose of money or valuable things being received by or on behalf of him, the said owner, as or for the consideration for an undertaking or promise to pay or give thereafter money on events or contingencies of or relating to horse-races and the game of football, thereby infringing 16 & 17 Vict. c. 119.

The fifth summons charged the appellant with keeping and using the office for the purpose of money, &c., being received by or on behalf of one G. Stoddart.

The five informations were laid by John Hawke, and the appellant was sentenced to six months' imprisonment without hard labour.

The following facts were proved or admitted:

The appellant was the owner of the office and registered proprietor of Sporting Luck, and the paper was published and its business conducted at the office in question. The newspaper contained advertisements relating to sporting coupons competitions, and copies of coupons called "International Supplement" were put in evidence. The coupons were procurable at the office by intending competitors either with or apart from the paper free of charge. All the coupons filled up and dispatched by the competitors, together with the remittances, were, in accordance with the instructions, addressed to Sporting Luck, Middleburg, Holland. In one case the remittances were to be made payable to the appellant and in subsequent issues to G. Stoddart.

It was proved that remittances were sent to the appellant in Holland and accepted for the competitions, and the authorities at the General Post Office cashed postal orders payable to the appellant or G. Stoddart which were returned from Holland amounting to £9,683, and that between the 28th of February and the 3rd of April no fewer that 87,556 such orders were cashed, English postal orders not being payable in Holland. Numbers of these postal orders were identified as having been sent for the purposes of the competitions.

It was proved that on the 19th of March, 1901, there was an announcement of the dissolution of partnership between the appellant and his son G. Stoddart, as turf accountants at Middleburg, the appellant having been convicted on the 7th of March for similar offences. G. Stoddart was a young man of twenty-one years of age, who had previously assisted the appellant at 10, Red Lion-court, where he carried on a betting business as J. & H. Drew, being guaranteed by his father.

The competitions were described as Sporting Luck contests, and the address in Holland was given as Sporting Luck, Middleburg.

It was contended on behalf of the appellant that, in order to bring the case within the Act, it was necessary to prove that the appellant had kept or used the office in Red Lion-court for the purpose of receiving money, &c., at that office, and that a receipt of money to be within the Act must be a receipt given at the time the bet was made and the promise to pay given before the events came off.

For the respondent it was maintained that the sending of the money to the appellant and G. Stoddart by way of Middleburg, the bulk being in postal orders which can only be cashed in this country, was merely a subterfuge, and that the real gist of the offence created by statute was the opening and keeping of a house, as the one advertised, for the purposes which it forbids.

The magistrates found that G. Stoddart was acting at Middleburg as agent for, or as jointly interested with, the appellant in the receipt of the moneys posted to Middleburg, and that the appellant had himself received some of the postal orders, and, as has been stated, convicted the appellant.

Lord Coleridge, K.C. (Montague Shearman and Stutfield with him), for the appellant.—The object of the Act as declared by the preamble is not the suppression of betting, but of betting-houses, and for a conviction it is necessary to show that money was received on the premises in question. Here the money was recieved in Holland, and therefore the office in Red Lion-court is not a betting-house, nor can the appellant be convicted for keeping it as such. If the appellant were to use his office in Red Lion-court for the purpose of receiving money at Smith-street, Westminster, it would be the latter and not the former which would be the betting-house. Moreover, the money, although the appellant got the benefit of it, eventually was not received by him until after the contingency, and it ought not to be considered as a continuing offence. Section 4 of the Act of 1853 makes the receipt of money for bets a special offence, but the receipt of money must be in England, and a receipt of the kind contemplated by section 1 of the Act, and unless the money be received in a house there has been no offence.

He cited from the judgment of Lord James of Hereford in Powell v. Kempton Park Racecourse Co., 47 W. R. 585, [1899] A. C. 143, at p. 191; Davis v. Stephenson, 24 Q. B. D. 529, 38 W. R. Dig. 110; Bradford v. Dawson, 45 W. R. 347, 66 L. J. Q. B. 191; and Cox v. Andrews, 32 W. R. 289, 53 L. J. M. C. 34.

Horace Avory, K.C., and J. K. Mackay, for the respondent.—The real question here is whether there is evidence upon which the magistrate's finding of fact can be supported. He found, and we submit rightly on the evidence, that the house in Red Lion-court was used by the appellant either for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto or for the purpose of receiving money from them in consideration for a promise on his part to pay a prize on a sporting contingency. If the facts proved support those findings then the appellant comes within the mischief of the statute and the conviction must be affirmed. The appellant's contention comes to this: that the court should read into the Act the words "in the house," but the court ought not to read in words unless they must be added in order to give effect to the Act of Parliament which without some such addition would be nugatory or senseless. In Davis v. Stephenson there was no evidence that the betting man had ever been in the public-house before the bets were made, or that the landlord knowingly allowed his house to be used as a place of deposit for money which had been received on a spot outside the area included in the licence, and the court (Lord Coleridge, C.J., and Lord Esher, M.R.) held that the indictment charging the landlord of the house with unlawfully "suffering" the said licensed house to be kept and used in contravention of the Act of 1853 failed. In this case the appellant had used the premises for every purpose except that of actually receiving the money from the competitors.

Lord Coleridge, in reply, cited Macnee v. Persian Investment Corporation, 38 W. R. 596, 44 Ch. D. 306.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J., in giving judgment, said: Notwithstanding the very able argument of Lord Coleridge, with the assistance of the equally able argument of Mr. Avory, I am of opinion that this conviction ought to be affirmed. The appellant is charged under the second branch of section 1 of 16 & 17 Vict. c. 119. It is clear that he carried on some kind of business at 10, Red Lion-court, and from that place coupons were issued, without which he could not have received the money. I do not think that the statute ought to be confined to money being received at the prohibited place, having regard to the preamble of the Act and the case of Powell v. Kempton Park Racecourse Co. I entirely agree with the view of the object of the Act expressed in the House of Lords by Lord James of Hereford, and if that is taken to be, as it undoubtedly is for this purpose, a true exposition of the Act, this particular transaction is within the mischief of it. It was said by the noble and learned lords who gave judgment in that case, and I think quite correctly, that the court must find something in the Act of Parliament which, without undue straining, and without construing it otherwise than in its natural meaning, brought the transactions under consideration within the scope of the statute, and that if there is any doubt they must refer to the preamble. The material part of the statute so far as we have to construe it is the second portion of it, and under that the defendant was charged with a keeping a house or office, or having the care or management of it, for the purpose of money being received by him or on his behalf for an illegal consideration—viz., a betting consideration. The facts were that the defendant carried on some kind of business at Red Lion-court, and occupied there a place at which Sporting Luck was published. He advertised that from that place people could get coupons, without which the defendant would not have received any of this money at all. I am not going to say for the purposes of this case that there is any evidence of resorting by persons for getting coupons, because the defendant is not charged under the part of the Act dealing with that, but it seems to me that the statute is not to be confined to the moneys to be received at the place. I think that, having regard to the preamble and to the judgment in the case of Powell v. The Kempton Park Racecourse Co. in the House of Lords, we ought to say that the main substantial offence which it was intended to hit at by the statute is keeping the place for the purpose of the owner of that place receiving money. It would defeat, I think, the intention of the Legislature if we were to add to or imply in the words "for the purpose of the money or valuable things being received," the words "being received at that place." I do not think I can put a better illustration than to say that if we are compelled to do that there would be no offence if the whole transaction had been carried out at Red Lion-court by the issue of coupons and then when a coupon had been delivered to the applicant it had been said, "Don't pay the money to me, but be good enough to pay it into my bank." Taking the fact, however, that it was a necessary part of the system that these coupons should be issued in order that Mr. Stoddart should receive the money, I am clearly of opinion that there was evidence upon which the alderman could convict. I am glad to be able to come to this conclusion, although I do not go so far as to say the case is perfectly clear, because this system might do great and irreparable mischief in a few weeks. I come to the conclusion that the main offence intended to be struck at by the statute is the keeping of a place localizing the business in order to enable the proprietor of that place or business to receive the money. Therefore the alderman, in my judgment, came to the right conclusion, and the conviction must be affirmed.

DARLING, J.—I concur. The words of the statute have reference to using a place "for the purpose of any money or valuable thing being received by or on behalf of such owner," and the contention of the appellant was that he was not forbidden to do what he did, because he did not receive the money in this house at Red Lion-court, nor, indeed, in England. He had done so before and had been convicted, and this was a carefully considered scheme for, in my opinion, evading the statute, because it was admitted by Lord Coleridge himself that what the appellant did was really within the mischief of the statute, and that no doubt the Legislature would—if it had been pointed out to them that anyone would do what the defendant had ingeniously contrived to do—have used apt words to prevent him. Therefore Lord Coleridge said this was a casus omissus. I do not think it was. I think the words used by the Legislature are wide enough to cover the case. The statute does not say that the money must be received in the house, and as these words are not in the statute, why should we read them in? I have during the argument heard no reason why we should construe the statute so as to make betting easier. It is notorious that the amount of harm which is done in this country by betting is enormous, and the amount of crime to which it leads no judge who has gone assize can be blind to. It leads to the robbery of employers and all sorts of crimes, and why should the court be careful to narrow down the statute and read into the section words which the Legislature has not put there? It appears to me that what was done at the appellant's house in London was an essential and necessary part of the transaction, and therefore, wherever the money might reach him, he did in fact use this house for the purpose of money being received by or on behalf of the owner of the house. Those are the words of the statute, and therefore we are warranted in affirming the conviction, the more so as there is no reason on the ground of public policy or the like why we should not give to the words their plain meaning.

CHANNELL, J.—I am of the same opinion. I do not think it throws much light upon the question to consider whether the defendant had intended to evade the statute. The real question was whether the act of the defendant was forbidden by statute or not. If it were not forbidden, then he was entitled to do what he had done. What was forbidden by the Act was the use of an office for certain purposes, among which was the use of it for money to be received. The coupons were an essential part of the transaction, and without these documents the money could not have been received, and the house was kept for the purpose of issuing them, and nothing else. The judgments in Powell v. Kempton Park Racecourse Co. have very great bearing on the present case. It is there clearly shown that the object of the Act was to put down betting houses—in other words, it was the localization of that class of business which was hit at. Now, asking the question whether in this case the house in Red Lion-court was a house for the localization of betting, the answer is clearly in the affirmative. The coupons were an essential part of the system and without them money could not have been received. The house in my judgment was therefore kept for a material part of the business, and the defendant was rightly convicted.

Appeal dismissed, with costs, and the conviction affirmed.

Solicitors, Le Brasseur & Oakley; Malkin & Co.

Consistory Court of Rochester.

Before the Chancellor of the Diocese, Sitting with Assessors. Nov. 2.

SWEET AND OTHERS v. GORDON YOUNG. (a.)

Ecclesiastical law—Clergy discipline—75th and 109th Canons—"Immoral conduct"—Clergy Discipline Act, 1892, s. 2.

If the conduct of a clerk in holy orders is "unworthy of the character of ministers of religion," then he is guilty of "immoral conduct" within the meaning of section 2 of the Clergy Discipline Act, 1892, notwithstanding that no act of indecency is proved against him.

This was the complaint of Charles Sweet, Reginald Wynn Rucker, and Wentworth Ewing Cattley, parishioners of the defendant, alleging that on a number of occasions the defendant had been guilty of insobriety, and that (a) on an occasion in March, 1897, "after dinner at Chipstead Rectory the defendant uttered the ribald and unclean words, Do you admire my parlourmaid? Did you notice the beauty of her form? Would you like to see her stripped?"; and (b) "that on the 4th of July, 1899, at about 1.30 a.m. the defendant was in a dancing-room at the Alsatian Club in Oxford-street, London, with a prostitute on his knee, and was behaving himself in an immoral and riotous manner with the said prostitute and other prostitutes."

The court found that some of the various charges of insobriety were proved, and that both the charges (a) and (b) had been established, but there was no evidence of any act of indecency having occurred at the Alsatian Club or elsewhere.

Gill, K.C., and Talbot contended that it was not necessary to prove any act of indecency. The defendant's conduct, taken as a whole, should be considered. A much stricter test of what was moral should be applied to a clerk in holy orders than to a layman. The case here was that the defendant was, so to speak, making a night of it, and was in a disorderly house which was the resort of prostitutes, and he was there not even out of mere curiosity, but was thoroughly enjoying himself.

They cited Beneficed Clerk v. Lee, [1897] A. C. 226, 45 W. R. Dig. 52.

Rawlinson, K.C., and Longstaffe, for the defendant.—If there were no act of any sort of indecency a fortiori there was no "immoral conduct." For a clerk in holy orders to act indiscreetly, as the defendant admits that he did in going to the club at all (he denied that any woman sat on his knee), the Legislature did not intend the words immoral conduct in section 2 to be extended to that. The 75th and 109th Canons are no doubt wide, but they do not apply to the defendant's conduct.

They cited The Bishop of Rochester v. Harris, [1893] P. 137, 41 W. R. Dig. 73.

THE CHANCELLOR, in delivering judgment, said: The second section of the Act enacts that "if a clergyman either is convicted by a temporal court of having committed an act constituting an ecclesiastical offence, and the foregoing section does not apply to him, or is alleged to have been guilty of any immoral act, immoral conduct, or immoral habit . . . he may be prosecuted, &c. . . ." In Beneficed Clerk v. Lee, [1897] A. C. 226, at p. 229, Halsbury, L.C., said: "It is provided in section 12, 'the expressions immoral act, immoral conduct, and immoral habit shall include such acts, conduct, and habits as are proscribed by the 75th and 109th Canons issued by the Convocation of the Province of Canterbury in the year 1603.' The language of these canons denounces the offences which the 109th Canon sums up as 'uncleanness and wickedness of life' but it goes further, and condemns acts and conduct hardly to be considered immoral, but certainly dangerous, to the reputation or unworthy of the character of ministers of religion."

The 75th Canon provides: "No ecclesiastical person shall at any time, other than for their honest necessities, resort to any taverns or alehouses, neither shall they board or lodge in any such places. Furthermore, they shall not give themselves to any base or servile labour, or to drinking or riot, spending their time idly by day or by night playing at dice, cards, or tables, or any other unlawful game; but at all times convenient they shall hear or read somewhat of the Holy Scriptures, or shall occupy themselves with some other honest study or exercise, always doing the things which shall appertain to honesty, and endeavouring to profit the Church of God, having always in mind that they ought to excel all others in purity of life, and should be examples to the people to live well and Christianly, under pain of ecclesiastical censures to be inflicted with severity, according to the qualities of their offences."

The 109th Canon is as follows: "If any offend their brethren either by adultery, whoredom, incest, or drunkenness, or by swearing, ribaldry, usury, or any other uncleanness and wickedness of life, the churchwardens or questmen, and sidesmen, in their next presentments to their ordinaries, shall faithfully present all and every of the said offenders, to the intent that they and every of them may be punished by the severity of the laws, according to their deserts, and such notorious offenders shall not be admitted to the holy communion till they be reformed."

Taking into consideration the whole facts of the case he (the Chancellor) had directed the assessors that if the facts alleged were proved they would constitute the statutory offence intended by the words "immoral conduct."

The court had found that the charges (a) and (b) were established, and on some of the occasions alleged they found that the defendant had been under the influence of drink.

Solicitors, Wontners; Sayle, Carter, & Co.

(a.) Reported by GWYNNE HALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Court of Appeal.

From Chan. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Vaughan Williams and Romer, L.JJ.) } Oct. 29; Nov. 13.

WARREN v. BROWN. (a.)

Light — Prescription — Extent of right — Light for ordinary purposes—Trade requiring extraordinary degree of light.

There is no standard of light. In considering whether ancient lights have been substantially interfered with, regard must be had to the ordinary uses by way of habitation or business to which the house has been put or might reasonably be supposed to be capable of being put.

A plaintiff is therefore entitled to relief where his extraordinary amount of light has been substantially interfered with, even though sufficient light is left for ordinary purposes.

Decision of Wright, J. (49 W. R 206, [1901] 1 Q. B. 722), reversed.

This was an appeal from the decision of Wright, J. (reported 49 W. R. 206, [1901] 1 Q. B. 722).

The facts of the case were these: Two of the three plaintiffs were the owners, and the third was the lessee and occupier, of a factory in a street in the town of Leicester, the business carried on in the factory being that of a hosiery manufacturer.

In the factory, which was built in 1860, there were windows which had, down to the obstruction complained of in the action, enjoyed the access of light in greater quantity than was necessary for ordinary purposes.

From 1860 to 1884 the factory was used as a boot and shoe factory—a purpose which required only an ordinary amount of light.

From 1884 downwards it was, with a few short intervals, used as a hosiery manufactory. That manufacture required an unusual degree of light, especially during the time next before the obstruction complained of, owing to improvements in the kind of machinery employed, which rendered necessary a very exceptional quantity and quality of light for the continual and accurate adjustment of filaments to fine needles moving by machinery at speed in bundles of some hundreds.

In 1899 the defendant, who had an old building on the opposite side of the street to the factory, raised his building considerably above its original height, and so diminished the light through the plaintiffs' windows, though still allowing the passage through those windows of enough light for all ordinary purposes.

The action was tried by Wright, J., without a jury, and owing to the conflict of authority his lordship at the conclusion of the arguments reserved judgment.

On giving judgment on the 4th of August, 1900, his lordship found that the plaintiffs had suffered substantial damage and he assessed that of the tenant at £100 and that of the owners at £200, but he held that as the plaintiffs had abundance of light left for all ordinary purposes of habitation or business they were not entitled to the relief claimed by them, on the ground that their extraordinary use had been interfered with.

The plaintiffs appealed.

Hugo Young, K.C., and W. R. Stevenson, for the plaintiffs, contended that they were entitled to have preserved to them the whole of the extraordinary amount of light their windows had received during the statutory period, although that extraordinary amount of light had been actually required for their hosiery business during a portion only of the twenty years.

Warmington, K.C., and A. Neilson, for the defendant, argued that the plaintiffs as owners of ancient lights were entitled to so much light as was necessary for the ordinary purposes of life and no more.

Cur. adv. vult.

Nov. 13.—ROMER, L.J., read the judgment of the court, which was as follows: In this case Wright, J. has found that certain of the plaintiffs' ancient lights have been substantially interfered with by the defendant's new building. He has also found that the plaintiffs have in fact thereby suffered substantial damage, for he assesses their losses, as to the tenant at £100, and as to the reversioners at £200. On these findings one would have expected judgment entered for the plaintiffs; but the learned judge has made an additional finding, and by reason of that he has dismissed the action. This finding is to the effect that, notwithstanding the substantial diminution of the ancient lights caused by the defendant's new building, abundant light remains for all ordinary purposes of inhabitancy or business. We felt some doubt at first as to what this additional finding meant, and whether it was not contradictory to the other findings; but after further consideration of the judgment, and after consulting Wright, J., we have no doubt as to the meaning of the additional finding. It means that, though the light coming from certain of the ancient lights has been substantially diminished, and though the rooms thereby lighted have been so darkened that both the tenant and the reversioners have suffered substantial damage, yet the darkened house is still as useful for purposes of habitation or business as what we may term the average run of houses. In other words, the learned judge appears to think that, as a matter of law, there is a sort of standard in the matter of light, and that if a particular house is by its ancient lights extremely well lighted, those lights may with impunity be substantially interfered with so long as the house in its darkened condition does not fall below the standard. In our opinion that is an erroneous view of the law. We do not propose to go through all the numerous cases which were cited before us and before Wright, J. It is not necessary to do so for the purposes of this case. No doubt, before Kelk v. Pearson, 19 W. R. 665, L. R. 6 Ch. App. 809, was decided, and still more so before the judgment of Lord Cranworth in Yates v. Jack, 14 W. R. 618, L. R. 1 Ch. App. 295, some inaccurate views as to the nature of the right to light acquired under the statute were entertained and expressed by various judges; and in some of the earlier cases, and, indeed, even in some later ones, language has been employed in some judgments which would appear to support the view of the law taken by Wright, J. But we think that in recent times the law has become settled, and we propose to state shortly, so far as is material for the immediate point arising in this case, what we understand the law to be. The statute in its terms might appear to sanction the view that the right to light once acquired was absolute as to every part of it, so that any interference, however slight, would be wrongful. But it was soon established that the statute had not altered the character of the right, though it had altered the method by which it could be acquired; and it was held that the right would not be interfered with if there were no substantial diminution of the light such as to cause substantial damage to the tenant or owner. And, in considering what would be a substantial diminution and substantial damage, it is held that the proper point of view is to pay regard not to what some person having fantastic or peculiar views might choose to regard as a substantial diminution or as substantial damage, but to the views of persons of ordinary sense and judgment. And, in particular, in considering whether a house has been substantially injured, it is proper to have regard to the ordinary uses by way of habitation or business to which the house has been put, or might reasonably be supposed to be capable of being put. We do not say that in the recent cases the law has been expressed exactly in the language we have used, but we mean that, though various expressions have been used by different judges, yet in substance, and as the result of what are now regarded as binding authorities, the above is a fair statement of the law as it is to be gathered from those judgments which are now to be regarded as sound. And at the present day, if ancient lights are interfered with substantially, and real damage thereby ensues to tenant or owner, then that tenant or owner is entitled to relief. With regard to the exact point arising in this case, we think that, since the case of Kelk v. Pearson, it is impossible to hold properly that the statutory right is not interfered with merely because after the interference the house may still come up to some supposed standard as to what a house ordinarily requires by way of light for purposes of inhabitancy or business. Some houses, owing to their having numerous or particularly advantageous ancient lights, are extremely valuable for purposes of habitation or of business. In these cases an owner of the servient tenement cannot justify a substantial interference with these lights, or (it may be) a complete stoppage of some of them causing great damage to the house, on the ground that other houses in the neighbourhood, or even the majority of those houses, or some imaginary standard house, are or is not better lighted than the injured house after the injury. Nor is the fact that, owing to the house being very well lighted, certain special businesses requiring much light are being or can be carried on, to be wholly disregarded in considering the effect of an interference, merely because after the interference other businesses not requiring much light can be carried on. Yet it is to an opposite conclusion that Wright, J., appears to have come. Immediately after stating, with regard to the room on the ground floor affected by the interference with its lights, "that abundant light remains for all ordinary purposes of inhabitancy or business," he proceeds to point out what he means by that by observing that "the room in its present state is better lighted than the ground-floor front rooms in many of the principal streets"; and accordingly he gives no relief to either tenant or reversioners. And it is especially noticeable, as to the reversioners, that he considers they have in fact suffered damage to the extent of £200, and that could only be on the ground that the house had been permanently affected in its letting value; and even as to the tenant we may observe that a very well lighted house is not being unreasonably used because a business requiring much light is being carried on there. The precise point arising in this case was clearly dealt with by Mellish, L.J., in Kelk v. Pearson, where he says: "I cannot think that it is possible for the law to say that there is a certain quantity of light which a man is entitled to, and which is sufficient for him, and that the question is, whether he has been deprived of that quantity of light. It appears to me that it is utterly impossible to make any rule or adopt any measure of that kind. It is essentially a question of comparison, whether by reason of deprivation of light the house is substantially less comfortable than it was before." This statement has been since approved of and followed in many cases, and we believe it accurately states the existing law on the subject. So far as other judges have in their judgments used expressions which appear to, or do in fact, conflict with what Mellish, L.J., has said, those expressions cannot, in our opinion, be justified. And in particular we may say that the opposing views expressed by Malins, V.C., in Lanfranchi v. Mackenzie, 15 W. R. 614, L. R. 4 Eq 421, and Dickinson v. Harbottle, 21 W. R. 115, 28 L. T. Rep. 186, cannot now be regarded as sound. That being so, we think that in the present case the plaintiffs are entitled to relief. The case has been treated before us by both parties as one turning solely on the findings of Wright, J. He has found substantial interference with light, and substantial damage to the plaintiffs; and, that being so, there should be judgment for them for the damages assessed. The defendant ought to pay the costs of the action and of this appeal.

(a.) Reported by S. E. WILLIAMS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Law & Worssam, for R. H. Buckby, Leicester; J. A. Collins, for J. & S. Harris, Leicester.

Appeal.
(Collins, M.R., and Stirling and Mathew, L.JJ.) Nov. 5.

BEVAN v. CRAWSHAY BROTHERS (CYFARTHA) (LIMITED). (a.)

Master and servant—Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Dependants in part dependent on earnings of deceased workman—Funeral expenses—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), Schedule I. (1) (a) (ii.) (iii.)—Workmen's Compensation Rules, 1898, r. 4 (3).

In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, it appeared that the deceased workman was at the time of the accident living with his father and mother, and that he was in the habit of paying his weekly earnings of 8s. to his mother to put into the common family fund. Shortly after the accident the father left his wife and family, and the mother gave notice of request for arbitration, claiming compensation as having been partly dependent on her son's earnings. No steps were taken for making the father a respondent to the arbitration proceedings in accordance with rule 4 (3) of the Workmen's Compensation Rules, 1898. The county court judge made an award in favour of the mother for a weekly payment of 3s. for the period of three years, and the sum of £6 8s. for funeral expenses.

Held, that, even if the father ought to have been made a respondent to the proceedings under rule 4 (3), which was doubtful having regard to rule 2, the employers, not having taken the point before the county court judge, were not entitled to take it on appeal.

Held, also, that the county court judge, in determining what sum was reasonable and proportionate to the injury to the dependants under Schedule I. (1) (a) (ii.), was entitled to take into consideration the funeral expenses and to award a named sum in respect of those expenses, subject to the limitation imposed by the maximum mentioned in the schedule.

Appeal from a decision of the judge of the Merthyr Tydvil County Court in an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RÜCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The applicant for compensation, Margaret Bevan, was the mother of a boy named David Bevan, a collier, who was killed by an accident on the 3rd of December, 1899, in the Cwm Pit Colliery, belonging to his employers, Crawshay Brothers, Cyfartha (Limited). It was admitted that the accident arose out of and in the course of his employment.

It appeared that the deceased boy at the time of the accident was living with his father and mother, though the father was only occasionally at home, and that he was in the habit of paying his wages, amounting on the average to about 8s. a week, to his mother, who kept the common family fund and maintained him. The other members of the family household were a brother and sister of the deceased.

On the 7th of January, 1900, the father made a claim for compensation. The employers refused to admit any liability under the Workmen's Compensation Act except for funeral expenses. No further step was then taken in the matter, and in April the father left his wife and family.

On the 12th of June, 1900, the mother gave notice of request for arbitration, claiming compensation as having been in part dependant upon the earnings of the deceased at the time of his death.

At the hearing before the county court judge the evidence showed that the total cost of maintaining the family was 30s. a week, the cost of maintaining the deceased boy alone being 5s. 6d. a week, that the fathsr earned from 15s. to £1 a week, the other son 14s., and the deceased 8s.

The objection was taken that the mother was not entitled to make a claim under the Workmen's Compensation Act, because she was not a "dependant" wholly or in part dependent upon the earnings of the boy within the definition in section 7.

That section provides that "'dependants' means (a) in England and Ireland such members of the workman's family specified in the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846, as were wholly or in part dependent upon the earnings of the workman at the time of his death." By section 1 of the Act the employer is liable to pay compensation in accordance with the first schedule to the Act, and in that schedule the scale of compensation to "dependants" is laid down. A "parent" is one of the persons specified in the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846, and "parent" is defined as including both father and mother.

The county court judge held that the mother was a dependant in part dependent on her son, and awarded her the sum of 3s. a week for the period of three years, if she should so long live, and the sum of £6 8s. for funeral expenses.

The employers appealed.

It was stated that since the hearing the father had died.

Francis Williams, K.C., and S. T. Evans, K.C., for the employers.—First, the mother is not entitled to claim under the Act. The only person who legally filled the position of "dependant" to the deceased at the time of his death was his father: see Main Colliery Co. v. Davies, [1900] A. C. 358, 48 W. R. Dig. 13. If the father and mother were both dependants, then the father ought to have been made a respondent as required by rule 4 (3) of the Workmen's Compensation Rules, 1898. Secondly, the mother was not in fact partially dependent on the deceased; for the evidence shows that the cost of maintaining the deceased boy was 5s. 6d. a week, and the total cost of living of the family was 30s. a week, and the earnings of the father and the other son were more than sufficient to maintain the family apart from the deceased. Thirdly, the county court judge had no power to allow a sum for funeral expenses. By Schedule I. (1) (a) (iii.) an allowance for funeral expenses can only be made where the deceased left no dependants.

W. D. Benson, for the applicant.

COLLINS, M.R.—This is an application under the Workmen's Compensation Act made by a person who claims as a dependant of the deceased workman. The deceased was the son of a Mr. and Mrs. Bevan, both of whom survived him. The family consisted, besides the deceased boy, of another brother and a sister. The father instituted proceedings by making a claim to compensation under the Act, but he did not pursue them beyond a certain point. The proceedings were, however, continued by Mrs. Bevan, who gave notice of her desire for an arbitration, and went before the county court judge and asked for compensation on the footing of partial dependency. It is now said that it was not competent to the county court judge to deal with the matter in the absence of the husband. We are told that the husband left his wife, and has since died. In fact, the county court judge entertained the application, and, taking into consideration the earnings of the family and how far they had been diminished by the death of the son, came to the conclusion that dependency had been established, and made an award in favour of the applicant. It is argued that this award was bad, being vitiated by reason of the fact that the husband was not made a party to the proceedings.

It is provided by rule 4 (3) of the Workmen's Compensation Rules, 1898, that "if there is any conflict of interest between the dependants themselves, the application may be made by such legal personal representative on behalf of some only of such dependants, or if there is no such legal personal representative the application may be made by some only of such dependants, the other dependants in either case being named as respondents." But in my opinion this provision for making dependants parties is not so absolute as is contended for. I find that rule 2 says as follows: "When application is made for the settlement by the judge, or by an arbitrator appointed by the judge, of any matter which under the Act is to be settled by arbitration, the party making such application shall be called the applicant; and, subject to these rules, all other persons whose presence at the arbitration may be necessary to enable the judge or arbitrator effectively and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved shall be made parties to the application, and shall be called the respondents." In this case the county court judge proceeded with the arbitration without the presence of the husband. I am not sure that the presence of the husband was necessary to enable the county court judge to adjudicate effectively and completely on the questions involved in the arbitration. But, however that may be, no point was made before the county court judge of the fact of the father not being present before the court. I doubt whether the father's presence was necessary, and, the point not having been raised at the hearing, it seems to me that no injustice has been done by the award.

I come now to the second point which has been raised —viz., that no dependency has in fact been established. It is argued by the employers that, having regard to the sums received by the mother from the deceased and from the other members of the family, and to the family expenditure, it follows, as a matter of arithmetic, that no loss pecuniarily has been sustained by the mother in consequence of the death of the son. But the question of dependency is a question of fact, and where the evidence is not clear and undisputed, but is given by the witnesses subject to differences of opinion, as in this case, it is not the province of this court to say that the decision of the county court judge should not stand.

Then, thirdly, the objection is taken that funeral expenses are mentioned in the award. It is contended that the county court judge exceeded his jurisdiction in awarding a specific sum for funeral expenses, and reliance is laid on the express terms of Schedule I. Paragraph 1 (a) (iii.) says that, where the workman leaves no dependants, the amount of compensation shall be "the reasonable expenses of his medical attendance and burial." Sub-paragraph (i.) provides the scale of compensation where the workman leaves dependants wholly dependent upon his earnings. Sub-paragraph (ii.) deals with the case where he leaves dependants in part dependent upon his earnings, and says that in that case the compensation shall be such sum, not exceeding in any case the amount payable under the foregoing provisions, as may be determined, on arbitration under this Act, to be reasonable and proportionate to the injury to the said dependants. Then comes sub-paragraph (iii.) which I have read. It is said that the earlier words, which relate to the case where the deceased leaves dependants partially dependent upon his earnings at the time of his death, are not distinguishable from the words of Lord Campbell's Act, and that under that Act no allowance could be made for funeral expenses: Dalton v. South-Eastern Railway Co., 6 W. R. 574, 4 C. B. N. S. 296. But this Act expressly says that an allowance for funeral expenses is to be made where there are no dependants. I think the Act assumes that even where there are no dependants a sum would have to be paid for the funeral expenses by the legal representative of the deceased, and it accordingly enacts that in such a case he shall be reimbursed. But if an allowance for funeral expenses is made in cases where there are no dependants, why are not such expenses a factor to be taken into consideration where there are dependants, and where the arbitrator is considering under sub-paragraph (ii.) what sum is reasonable and proportionate to the injury to the said dependants? The Act shows that funeral expenses are intended to be the subject of compensation in some cases. And I see nothing to eliminate them from being a factor to be considered in such a case as this, subject to the limitation imposed by the maximum mentioned in the schedule. In my opinion the county court judge has not acted ultra vires. He has not awarded the maximum compensation and then awarded a further sum for funeral expenses. He has awarded a sum which it was within his power to award, and he appears to have been right in taking the funeral expenses into consideration. The appeal must therefore be dismissed.

STIRLING and MATHEW, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the employers, Schultz & Sons, for Gwilym James, Charles, & Davies, Merthyr Tydvil.

Solicitors for the applicant, Ullithorne & Co., for D. W. Jones, Merthyr Tydvil.

From Chan. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Vaughan Williams and Romer, L.JJ.) } Oct. 30.

INDERWICK v. TATCHELL. (a.)

Will—Construction—Gift over in default of issue—Surviving brothers and sisters—Children of deceased brother.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

A testator by his will devised and bequeathed his property in seven shares to his seven children for life, with remainder to each child's children or child. The share of any child dying without children was to go to his then surviving brothers and sisters as tenants in common for their respective lives, with remainder to their respective children, and if there should be but one surviving brother or sister, then to him or her absolutely. If any child left no child him surviving, but left grandchildren, the grandchildren were to take such child's share. In default of grandchildren, such child's share was to go to his then surviving brothers and sisters as tenants in common, and if there was but one to that one absolutely.

Held, that the word "surviving" was to be taken in its natural meaning, and that the children of a deceased child of the testator were not entitled to participate along with the surviving children of the testator in the share of a child of the testator who had survived their father and died without issue.

Per Romer, L.J.—The decision of Cozens-Hardy, J., in Harrison v. Harrison (49 W. R. 613, [1901] 2 Ch. 136), dissenting from the third rule in In re Bowman (37 W. R. 583, 41 Ch. D. 525), approved.

This was an appeal from a decision of Kekewich, J.

The testator, John Inderwick, by his will dated the 17th of April, 1867, devised and bequeathed his real and leasehold properties to trustees upon trust in seven distinct specified portions, one portion for each of his seven children, Edward Samuel, John, George, Walter, Ann (afterwards Mrs. Lindner), Louisa Hannah, and Emily (afterwards Mrs. Tatchell), with remainder to each of such child's children or child living at the death of such child equally as tenants in common.

In the case of Edward Samuel the gift over on his death was limited to children by his first wife.

Then came an accruer clause which provided that the share or shares original and accruing of any child dying without leaving children should go among his, her, or their "then surviving brothers and sisters" equally as tenants in common for their respective lives, with remainder amongst their respective children. And if there should be but one surviving brother or sister then to him or her absolutely, subject to an annuity of £50 for life to any wife or husband of any brother or sister so dying as aforesaid.

Then came a proviso that on the death of any child without leaving a surviving child or children, but leaving a grandchild or grandchildren him or her surviving, the child's share should go over to the grandchild or grandchildren.

This proviso was followed by a second accruer clause in the following terms: "But if there shall be no such then surviving grandchild or grandchildren, then it is my will and I do hereby declare and direct that the estate, part, share, and property of my said deceased child or children respectively shall go and be conveyed, assigned, and assured unto and equally between his, her, or their then surviving brothers and sisters in equal shares as tenants in common if more than one, and if there shall be but one of my children then surviving the whole of such accruing part, share, estate, and property shall go and be conveyed, assigned, and assured to that one, his or her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, and to whom I hereby give, devise, and bequeath the same accordingly." The will also contained a stringent forfeiture clause on the alienation or incumbrance of any share.

The testator died in 1867. His seven children named in the will all survived him.

The testator's sons John, George, and Walter died in the years 1868, 1874, and 1876 respectively, without ever having had issue.

In 1877 a deed of arrangement was entered into between the surviving children of the testator, the husbands of Mrs. Lindner and Mrs. Tatchell joining as such, and the children of the testator's eldest son Edward Samuel by his first wife (all of whom were sui juris), who joined in respect of their reversionary interest in their father's original and accrued shares. By this deed the surviving children agreed that the first accruer clause correctly represented the testator's intention, and that the will should, as regarded their original and accrued shares, be construed as if the second accruer clause had not been contained therein. And the children of Edward Samuel Inderwick agreed inter se that in the event of any of them predeceasing their father, leaving children him surviving, such children should take between them the shares original and accruing of the child so dying. Both these provisions were made subject to the operation of the forfeiture clause in the will, but were to take effect as far as possible.

In 1895 Alfred, a son of Edward Samuel Inderwick, died, predeceasing his father, leaving a widow and two infant children.

In 1899 Edward Samuel Inderwick died, leaving him surviving four children, and the two children of Alfred.

In 1900 Louisa Hannah Inderwick, the testator's unmarried daughter, died.

Questions then arose as to the disposal of her original and accruing share.

The plaintiffs, the children of Edward Samuel Inderwick and the children of Alfred, contended that they were entitled between them to one-third of her original and accruing shares.

The defendants, Mrs. Lindner and Mrs. Tatchell, contended that they were entitled to have those shares divided into moieties to be held in trust for themselves for life, leaving for future determination the question of the rights of the survivor upon the death of either.

Kekewich, J., decided in favour of the defendants' contention.

The plaintiffs appealed.

Eady, K.C., P. O. Lawrence, K.C., and Daunay, for the appellants.

Warrington, K.C., and S. Dickinson, for the respondents, were not called upon.

The following cases were referred to in the course of the argument: Waite v. Littlewood, 21 W. R. 131, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 70; Eyre v. Marsden, 4 My. & Cr. 231; In re Bowman, Whytehead v. Boulton, 37 W. R. 583, 41 Ch. D. 525; Beckwith v. Beckwith, 25 W. R. 282; In re Benn, 34 W. R. 6, 29 Ch. D. 839; In re Walker's Estate, Church v. Tyacke, 28 W. R. 91, 12 Ch. D. 205; In re Bilham, Buchanan v. Hill, 49 W. R. 483, [1901] 2 Ch. 169; Harrison v. Harrison, 49 W. R. 613, [1901] 2 Ch. 136.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—In this case I think that Kekewich, J., has arrived at the right decision. I need scarcely say that I should feel the greatest difficulty in dealing with the various authorities that have been cited if it were necessary to deal with them. If I thought that this case depended upon any general rule to be deduced from those cases, as, for instance, whether it falls within the general rule laid down by Kay, J., in In re Bowman, I should have required further argument, and, speaking for myself, a great deal more time for consideration. In my view, the general result of the authorities is that at any rate for the purposes of this case there is no hard-and-fast general rule which would force us to put a construction on this will which I think the words do not bear. I think the cases of Eyre v. Marsden and Beckwith v. Beckwith, which were referred to, turned upon the terms of the particular will, and I think that the judgments first of Baggallay, L.J., in Beckwith v. Beckwith, and then of Cotton, L.J., in In re Benn, show clearly that in their opinion there was no such general rule, and that the rule which had been applied in such a case as Waite v. Littlewood depended upon considerations that are not material at any rate for the purposes of the present case. I say no more about those authorities because I do not think I should serve any useful purpose by discussing them. I only refer to the judgments of Cotton, L.J., and Baggallay, L.J., because they seem to me to negative the view of there being any general rule which would apply to this particular case. Lastly, with regard to the supposed general rule, you have only to read the judgment of Kay, J., remembering it was founded on those two cases of Eyre v. Marsden and In re Benn; and the subsequent judgments of Cozens-Hardy, J., in Harrison v. Harrison, and Joyce, J., in In re Bilham, to see how extremely difficult it is to say that there is any general recognized principle or general rule which might force us, so to speak, to put a different construction upon the words than their natural meaning, assuming that we look at the terms of the will only. I decide this case upon the terms of this will and I come to the conclusion, upon the terms of the will, that in the clause to which our attention has been directed the words "their then surviving brothers and sisters," mean their then surviving brothers and sisters, and do not include the stirps of a pre-deceased brother or sister. I may be wrong, but I should have thought, apart from authority, that such words as "their surviving brothers and sisters" ought to receive their natural meaning, and that you ought not to turn "surviving" into "other" brothers and sisters, whether surviving or not, unless there is something in the will to lead you to the conclusion that the word "surviving" is to be construed as "other." Speaking for myself, I think that such words ought to have their natural meaning unless from the whole of the will, or from other clauses in the will there is an indication that they are to have a different meaning. I do not find in this will any indication that they are not to have their natural meaning. But I go further. I think there are two clauses of the will (which certainly is a difficult will to construe, and from the point of view of the argument addressed to us on behalf of the appellant, very properly, may be said to be an ambiguous will) which seem to me to confirm the view that this testator, by the language he used, was using the words "brothers and sisters surviving" in their natural sense. The first question is, what is to happen to the last share but one? If the testator was not using the words "then surviving brothers and sisters" in their natural meaning, I feel it difficult to understand why in the clause which immediately follows he should have spoken of one such surviving brother, and should have left the share whether accrued or not—for this purpose it does not matter—to him absolutely. Then again I see very great difficulty in understanding the grandchild clause unless the words "then surviving brothers and sisters" were meant to be read with their ordinary meaning, because whatever may be the object of putting in the grandchild or grandchildren clause, there is a distinct provision that if that clause does not apply—if there are no grandchildren, so to speak, to satisfy it—the shares are to go to the then surviving brothers and sisters in equal shares as tenants in common. That is met most ingeniously by saying that really both these two clauses are inconsistent with the original settlement of the original share in the earlier part of the will, and that, therefore, you must consider that, as both the original settled share and an accrued settled share were to go first to the sons and daughters, and then to their children, you must assume that that is the way in which the share which falls in under the second clause to which I have referred—namely, the last brother but one, and the grandchildren clause, had gone. I cannot think that it is an argument to which I ought to give weight. It seems to me when you find—and you have only to judge from the language of the will—not only the words "then surviving brothers and sisters" but two clauses in which events are to happen according to the survival or non-survival of other brothers and sisters, and the existence or non-existence of grandchildren, the then surviving brothers and sisters are to get certain rights. I think in this will the testator did use the word "surviving" in its natural meaning, and that we ought to hold that effect should be given to it in the way Kekewich, J., has decided. Of course, upon anything else but the construction of the will I say at once that I should pronounce my opinion with the very greatest hesitation, but on the construction of this will, after the consideration I have given to it, and having had the great advantage of hearing it discussed yesterday and to-day, I have a very strong feeling that that is the only construction we can fairly put upon the will, and, therefore, I think this appeal should be dismissed.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I agree. It was not disputed on behalf of the appellants that if you construed the words literally the appellants had no case. But it was suggested that the words were not to be construed literally. Then it was suggested that you ought to put a construction upon these words in accordance with what I will call Kay, J.'s, third view in In re Bowman. But against that it affords me, I must say, some satisfaction to say that it seems difficult, or, as Cozens-Hardy, J., expresses it, beyond the wit of man to discover any rule which will guide you as to when you are to construe and when you are not to construe the word "surviving" literally. That being so one really has merely to look at the will and ascertain what was the intention of the testator. I do not suppose that at any time, however much the tide may be in favour of literal construction, it could be said that you are to follow literal construction if, from the four corners of the will, you can ascertain that the literal construction would be contrary to the intention of the testator. But we seem, in this case, to have arrived at this point, that there is no hard-and-fast rule to enable you to say when you are to follow the literal construction and when you are not. It is a matter always of the intention of the testator to be ascertained from the whole of a will. In this case I entirely agree with what the Lord Chief Justice has said as to the intention of the testator. I think for the reasons he has given it is clear here that the testator intended what he said, and I have nothing to add to the reasons which he has given.

ROMER, L.J.—I agree that in this will the words "surviving brothers and sisters," the words used by the testator, are used by him in their primâ facie and literal sense, and that there is nothing in this will to justify us in holding that the words are to have a secondary, or more extended, meaning. I should like to add that I also think there is no such fixed rule of construction as that which is called the third rule in the case of In re Bowman, and I have nothing to add on that point to what was said by my brother Cozens-Hardy in his judgment in the case which has been referred to.

Solicitors, Collison, Prichard, & Barnes; Garrard, James, & Wolfe.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. Kekewich, J. — Aug. 1, 1901.

In re WOOD.
WOOD v. WOOD. (a.)

Will—Construction—Gift to illegitimate children by name—Gift to next-of-kin of children.

Illegitimate children cannot be treated as legitimate for the purpose of benefiting those who would have been their next-of-kin if they had been legitimate, even though it is the intention of a testator that this should be done.

In re Standley's Estate, L. R. 5 Eq. 303, 16 W. R. Ch. Dig. 151, followed.

Dictum of Stirling, J., in In re Deakin, 43 W. R. 70, [1894] 3 Ch. 565, not followed.

Originating summons.

The testator by his will, after bequeathing legacies to each of his seven children by name, devised and bequeathed his residuary estate to trustees upon trusts for conversion and investment, and for the payment of the income to his widow during her life, and directed that after her death the trustees should stand possessed of his residuary estate in trust in equal shares for such of the said seven children as should then be living, and should have attained or might attain the age of twenty-one years, and for all or any of the issue—who being a male or males should attain the age of twenty-one years or being a female or females should attain that age or marry—of any of his said children who should die in the lifetime of his widow leaving issue living at her death, and so that such issue should take through all degrees according to their stocks and in equal shares the share or shares which their parent would have taken if living at the time aforesaid, and so that no issue should take whose parents should be living at the time aforesaid and capable of taking.

He also directed his trustees to retain the legacy or other bequest and also the share of his residuary trust estate which any daughter of his might take under those provisions and to hold the same upon trust to pay the income of each such daughter's legacy and share to her during her life for her separate use during any coverture and after her death in case she should leave a husband surviving her upon trust to pay the income to the husband for life or any less period if she should so direct or appoint, and subject thereto upon trusts for the benefit of her children; and if there should be no such child then in trust for the persons who at the death of such daughter would have become entitled to such share under the statutes for the distribution of the personal estates of intestates in case she had died possessed thereof without having been married, such persons taking as tenants in common in the shares in which they would have taken under such statutes.

After the death of the testator it was discovered that three of his children were born before his marriage.

The widow of the testator died in December, 1900, and six of the seven children survived her.

One of the testator's illegitimate children, a daughter, died in January, 1901, without having had any issue or exercised the power of appointment given to her by the will in favour of her husband (who survived her).

The question raised by the summons was whether her legacy and share of residue upon her death without issue (1) devolved upon the persons who would have been her next-of-kin at the time of her death in case she and the other persons described in the will as the testator's children had all been legitimate, or (2) passed to her legal personal representative as if it had been absolutely bequeathed to her, or (3) became divisible amongst the persons entitled in right of the testator's widow and legitimate children as if he had died intestate in relation thereto.

(a.) Reported by J. F. ISELIN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Warrington K.C., and Lyttelton Chubb, for the plaintiff, one of the legitimate children of the testator, referred to Hill v. Crook, 22 W. R. 137, L. R. 6 H. L. 265; In re Deakin, 43 W. R. 70, [1894] 3 Ch. 565; In re Standley's Estate, L. R. 5 Eq. 303, 16 W. R. Ch. Dig. 151; In re Haseldine, 34 W. R. 327, 31 Ch. D. 511.

P. O. Lawrence, K.C., and Peterson, for the legal personal representative of the deceased daughter; and Renshaw, K.C., and F. Thompson, for the persons entitled on an intestacy, were not called upon.

KEKEWICH, J.—It seems to me I shall best perform my duty be rejecting Mr. Warrington's contention. There is little doubt, and none of us can doubt, that the rules which obtained in the younger days of some of us, and which were handed down from the time of Lord Eldon, if not earlier, have been modified, and benevolently modified, in later years. For example, a case which has just been mentioned to me, which I have more than once had occasion to refer to, In re Haseldine, was a very strong case of extracting from the language used by a testator an intention to include illegitimate children under a phrase or terms which otherwise would be strictly construed as meaning children only in the ordinary sense of the word. There is another case, one before Stirling, J., of In re Deakin, and I have myself not hesitated to adopt the same line in the case which Mr. Warrington intended to cite but did not cite, of In re Parker, 45 W. R. 536, [1897] 2 Ch. 208.

Now the question I have to decide is whether we should go a step further than those cases. Here I am asked to go still further and say that illegitimate children are to be regarded as legitimate for the purpose of giving to those who are not in law their next-of-kin under the statute, but to those who would have been their next-of-kin under the statute if they had been legitimate, the property which was settled upon these illegitimate children. It must not be forgotten that in order to arrive at that conclusion I must introduce words into the will. The words in the will are: "In trust for the persons who at the death of such daughter would have become entitled to such share under the statute for the distribution of the personal estates of intestates in case she had died possessed thereof without having been married." I must, in order to support the construction which I am asked to support, add "in case she had died possessed thereof legitimate and without being married." Am I to read those words into the will? The view I take of it is that to do so would be to take another step in the benevolent view—which may hereafter be adopted for aught I know to the contrary by the Court of Appeal and the House of Lords—of letting in illegitimate children where the court sees that that is the testator's intention. I think that is a step which ought not to be taken by a judge of first instance, but ought only to be taken by the Court of Appeal or the House of Lords for our guidance. Mr. Warrington cannot cite a case where it has been done. He says the principle carries it the whole length, but he does not say the particular thing has ever been done however strong the case has been. The very point came before Wood, V.C., in In re Standley's Estate, and he declined to interpret the law in that way. The words there were to the son's "Next-of-kin under the statute for the distribution of intestates' estates, in case he had died intestate and unmarried," with the result, the child being illegitimate, that only those who were the next-of-kin in blood without being so in law would take, if anybody was to take at all, a fact which I also act on in this case. The words do not exclude the possibility of children to him, and therefore if anybody were to take at all it must be those who were next-of-kin according to the statute, on the hypothesis of the child being illegitimate. Wood, V.C., is, I need hardly say, a very high authority, but he declined to adopt that. He says at p. 309: "The only cases in which effect has been given to a limitation in favour of illegitimate children (who, in the eye of the law, are no children at all) are cases where it can be distinctly ascertained that the testator pointed out those children as personæ designatæ although he did not name them." Now, I do not understand that to be in the least touched by the decision in Hill v. Crook, and the other cases to which I have been referred. Still, in order to give illegitimate children anything under the term "children," you must ascertain from the testator's will the intention (construed, of course, according to the evidence of the surrounding circumstances), and you must find that he must have intended them to have been included in the clause. Wood, V.C., declined to go further and say that the next-of-kin (though the children themselves are to be taken as children, notwithstanding the illegitimacy) would be let in. He expresses a decided opinion upon that. He says: "What the testator has attempted to do is this"—apparently he gives him credit for having intended it, and that is the real point upon which I want to lay stress—"to declare his children, though illegitimate, are to be taken as legitimate, and then to say under the description "next-of-kin" there shall be let in all the persons who could have been their next-of-kin if they had been legitimate. I apprehend that is an attempt which the law will not permit to succeed."

Now what have I here? I assume, and it is a very fair assumption to make from what I know of the case, that the testator wished to recognize all these children as legitimate though some of them were illegitimate. That he was entitled to do. Then he wishes to do as the testator in In re Standley did—namely, to say, "that under the description 'next-of-kin' shall be let in all the persons who would have been their next-of-kin had they been legitimate." That is what Wood, V.C., says. He intended to do it, I recognize it was his wish, on the proper construction and language of his will, yet I cannot give that effect to it, because I apprehend that is an admission which the law will not permit to succeed.

Now I am a little puzzled I confess by the reference to that case by Stirling, J., in In re Deakin because although Stirling, J, of course would not overrule a decision of Wood, V.C. (I take care to refer to the learned judge as Wood, V.C., not as known now as Lord Hatherley, because the decision was given when sitting as Vice-Chancellor); yet that is a very technical way of putting it. He might have examined the case, and said it was distinguished by other authorities, and that it was not now a case which could be followed. If he had said that of course it is quite possible I might have found ground to follow Stirling, J., but this is what he does say, [1894] 3 Ch., at p. 573: "The case of In re Standley's Estate, decided by Lord Hatherley when Vice-Chancellor, was relied upon as an authority adverse to the conclusion at which I have arrived. I must confess myself unable effectually to distinguish it, but it was decided before Crook v. Hill. The reasoning on which the decision was based appears to me to be inconsistent with the principles there laid down, and notwithstanding the weight justly due to any decision of Lord Hatherley I am unable to follow it, having regard to the more recent authorities which are binding on me." That is what Stirling, J., says in the case of In re Deakin, Starkey v. Eyres.

Now the learned judge held that, in the case of an attempt, such as the Vice-Chancellor points out, to bring in as next-of-kin under the statute those who were not, according to the eye of the law, the next-of-kin, the two cases in that respect were not the same. They were not on similar lines. In many respects no doubt they were, and I quite follow Stirling, J., in saying that before Crook v. Hill the line of reasoning which was adopted by the Vice-Chancellor was inconsistent in some respects, at any rate, with the principle of Crook v. Hill, but neither in In re Deakin nor in Crook v. Hill, nor any other case, have we got a decision on that point that the law will not permit a man to do that which the testator in In re Standley attempted, and which the testator here attempted. I cannot read Stirling, J.'s, judgment as saying that that attempt has been legalized and made possible and successful by the subsequent cases, and therefore finding a direct decision on that neat point by Wood, V.C., I think, sitting here as a judge of first instance, I am bound to follow it. I must leave it to a higher court to say if I am wrong.

[It was admitted that the result was that there was no intestacy but an absolute gift to the deceased daughter, and consequently her legal personal representative was entitled to her legacy and share of residue.]

Solicitors, Indermaur, Clark, & Palmer; Field, Roscoe, & Co.

Chan. Div.
Farwell, J. } Nov. 8.

SMITH v. NORTHLEACH RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL. (a.)

Practice — Costs — Action against public authority — Payment into court as to part of claim — Discontinuance—Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61), s. 1 (c).

The provisions of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, s. 1 (c), as to the payment of solicitor and client costs by the defendant, do not apply when an action has been discontinued.

Adjourned summons.

This was an action to restrain the defendants from abstracting or interfering with the flow of water to the plaintiff's mill called the Northleach Mill, and for damages.

The defendants had constructed works with a view to supplying the town of Northleach with water pursuant to the provisions of the Public Health Act, 1875.

The plaintiff claimed that the defendants had abstracted the water under three different heads.

The defendants with regard to the plaintiff's claim for an alleged wrongful continuance of abstraction of water authorized by a revocable licence, contended that the alleged abstraction, if continued after the date of the alleged revocation, did not in any case continue after the month of March, 1899, and while denying all liability for the same, they brought into court the sum of £10, and said that the same was sufficient to satisfy that part of the plaintiff's claim.

On the 25th of October, 1901, the plaintiff accepted the sum of £10 paid by the defendants into court in full satisfaction of the causes of action mentioned in the statement of claim.

The case now came before the court on the question of costs.

The Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, provides: Section 1.—Where after the commencement of this Act any action, prosecution, or other proceeding is commenced in the United Kingdom against any person for any act done in pursuance, or execution, or intended execution of any Act of Parliament, or of any public duty or authority, or in respect of any alleged neglect or default in the execution of any such act, duty, or authority, the following provisions shall have effect—

(b) Wherever in any such action a judgment is obtained by the defendant, it shall carry costs to be taxed as between solicitor and client.

(c) Where the proceeding is in an action for damages, tender of amends before the action was commenced may, in lieu of or in addition to any other plea, be pleaded. If the action was commenced after the tender, or is proceeded with after payment into court of any money in satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim, and the plaintiff does not recover more than the sum tendered or paid, he shall not recover any costs incurred after the tender or payment, and the defendant shall be entitled to costs, to be taxed as between solicitor and client, as from the time of the tender or payment; but this provision shall not affect costs on any injunction in the action.

Butcher, K.C., and Ashworth James, for the plaintiff, referred to McIlwraith v. Green, 14 Q. B. D. 766, 33 W. R. Dig. 61; R. S. C., ord. 26, r. 1.

Jenkins, K.C., and William Wills, for the defendants, referred to the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, s. 1 (c).

FARWELL, J., in giving judgment referred to McIlwraith v. Green, and said that the defendants were to pay the plaintiff one-third of their taxed costs up to the date of the payment into court; that the plaintiff was to pay the defendants their taxed costs since the date of payment into court, without disturbing any order as to costs already made. The defendants were not entitled to solicitor and client costs. [His lordship referred to the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, s. 1 (b) (c)] As there was no judgment in this case, and there could not be having regard to the discontinuance, the Act did not apply as regards solicitor and client costs.

Solicitors, Peacock & Goddard, for Mullings, Ellett, & Co, Cirencester; Blyth, Dutton, Hartley, & Blyth, for Thomas Mace, Chipping Norton, and Henry Temple Ravenor, Witney.

K. B. Div.
(Wills and Kennedy, JJ.) } Aug. 9, 1901.

PEARKS, GUNSTON, & TEE (LIMITED) (Appellants) v. KNIGHT (Respondent).

SAME (Appellants) v. VAN TROMP (Respondent). (a.)

Adulteration—Food and drugs—Article not of the nature, substance, and quality demanded—Butter—Adding milk to—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), s. 6.

(a.) Reported by PAUL STRICKLAND, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

A provision merchant who sells to a purchaser, who demands butter, a compound consisting of butter made by the ordinary process, in which a large proportion of the water in the cream or milk is eliminated, to which was added milk from which no water was eliminated, in consequence of which the compound contains an excess of water, is guilty, under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, of selling to the prejudice of the purchaser an article of food not of the nature, substance, and quality demanded by the purchaser.

These two cases were stated, the first by the stipendiary magistrate for the Staffordshire Potteries District, and the second by a stipendiary magistrate for South Staffordshire.

In each case informations were preferred by the respondent charging the appellants, grocers and provision merchants, with having unlawfully sold to the prejudice of the respective purchasers certain butter which was not of the nature, substance, and quality demanded by them, contrary to the provisions of section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875.

PEARKS & CO. v. KNIGHT.

In this case the following are the facts as set out:

On the 20th March, 1901, the respondent caused to be purchased by Charles Gifford at the appellants' shop at Fenton one half-pound of butter for the purpose of submitting the same to analysis. The price of the half-pound was fivepence.

All the requirements of the statutes relating to the purchase of an article for analysis were duly complied with.

The public analyst certified that the butter contained 22·53 per cent. of water, and that this was at least 6 per cent. too much.

Water is a natural constituent of butter, and is always present in butter to a considerable though varying extent. Butter is made sometimes from milk, sometimes from cream, sometimes from milk and cream. Milk contains about 88 per cent., cream about 50 per cent of water.

There is no statutory standard for the composition of butter as regards the proportion of water it may contain. The Board of Agriculture have made no regulations as to this under section 4 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts, 1899. The standard taken by the analyst certifying in the present instance is 16 per cent.

The 6 per cent. excess of water which the sample of the appellants' butter was certified to contain was not the result of the manufacture of butter from milk or cream, or both, but was caused by the addition to butter already manufactured from milk or cream, or both, of extraneous milk, which milk had been incorporated with the butter by some process subsequent to the manufacture of the butter.

This added milk was not required for the production of butter, but was incorporated with the butter for the purpose of increasing its weight by means of the extra water thereby introduced.

It is not unusual for a butter manufacturer to blend two or three different kinds of butter.

No evidence was called for the appellants, but it was contended on their behalf that an article could not be adulterated by the addition of a constituent from which it was derived, and therefore that the butter in question, having been made exclusively from milk or cream, or both, was in fact not adulterated butter whatever the percentage of water might be, and there being no legal standard as to the quantity of water in butter, the fact that the butter contained 22·53 per cent. of water was, under the circumstance, no evidence of adulteration, and that no offence was committed under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, by not eliminating a natural constituent of the article.

The magistrate was of opinion that of the 22·53 per cent. of water found in the butter 6 per cent. was excessive and was caused by the addition of the milk, and he held that the process of adding the milk to the butter, being for the purpose of the addition of water, constituted an offence under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, in that an article was sold not of the nature, substance, and quality demanded by the purchaser, the same being adulterated with water.

The question for the opinion of the court was whether upon the above statement of facts the magistrate came to a correct determination and decision in point of law, and if not, what should be done in the premises.

Joseph Walton, K.C. (B. D. Bonsey with him), for the appellants.—The conviction was wrong. The question here is whether the butter as sold was not of the nature, substance, and quality of the article demanded—viz., butter. It matters nothing at all how much water there is in the butter, provided that such water is not added water. The article sold to the respondent was of the nature, substance, and quality demanded by him—i.e., butter. Butter is defined by section 3 of the Margarine Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 29), as "the substance usually known as butter, made exclusively from milk or cream, or both, with or without salt or other preservative, and with or without the addition of colouring matter." The butter in question was made of milk or cream exclusively, but in the course of a certain process more milk, and therein more water, was added. This, however, was only an additional process in the making of the butter. The product was still butter made exclusively of milk or cream. There is nothing in the Act which says there must be a particular mode of making butter so long as it is made of milk or cream, and there is no fixed percentage of water in the case of butter. By section 4 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, the Board of Agriculture may make regulations as to what proportion of water butter may contain, but no such regulations have been made. The article in question could not under section 8 of the Act of 1899 be sold as margarine, because it contained more than 10 per cent. of water, therefore, if it could not be sold as butter it would be impossible to sell it at all. The question of fraudulent intention is irrelevant to the question. The finding of the magistrate was therefore wrong and the conviction should be quashed.

Danckwerts, K.C. (B. C. Brough with him), for the respondent, was not called on.

PEARKS & CO. v. VAN TROMP.

The facts as stated in this case are as follows:

On the 1st of April, 1901, the respondent caused to be purchased, by T. E. Guilbert, at the appellants' shop at Brierley Hill, half a pound of butter for the purpose of analysis. The butter was labelled "Pure Dairy Butter" and was wrapped in a paper on which were the words "Pure Butter." The butter so purchased was divided into three parts and one was sent to the public analyst. All the requirements of the statutes in that behalf were complied with.

The public analyst certified that the butter contained 21·75 per cent. of water and that this was at least 5 per cent. too much.

Water is a natural constituent, and though the quantity varies in different kinds of butter it is always present in a considerable proportion, but should never exceed 16 per cent. Butter is made by churning either from milk alone or from cream and sometimes from both milk and cream. Milk contains about 88 per cent. of water, and cream about 50 per cent.

There is no statutory standard for the composition of butter as regards the quantity of water it should contain. The Board of Agriculture has not made any regulation as to this under section 4 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 51).

It is a common practice in the trade to blend different kinds of butter, and the process of blending adopted by the appellants is to mix different kinds of butter together and during this process to add to it full cream milk. The butter in question had been blended by the above-mentioned process—that is to say, it was composed of different kinds of butter mixed together, genuine full cream milk being added to it during the process.

The excessive amount of water found in the butter was derived entirely from the milk which was added during this process.

The price of full cream milk is three farthings a pound, and butter about tenpence.

It was contended on behalf of the appellants that until regulations are made by the Board of Agriculture under section 4 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, any article made exclusively from milk or cream, or both, was in fact butter; that there being no statutory standard as to the quantity of water in butter, the fact of the butter containing 21·75 per cent. of water was, under the circumstances, no evidence of adulteration; that no offence was committed under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, by not eliminating a natural constituent of the article; that the facts disclosed no evidence of adulteration or any offence under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875.

The magistrate was of opinion that the water found in the butter was excessive, and as it was caused by adding milk to an already manufactured article the mixture could not properly be called butter, but was butter adulterated by the addition of water in the form of milk.

He was further of opinion that the said milk was added fraudulently and with intent to increase the bulk of the mixture.

He was further of opinion that the fact that the Board of Agriculture had not exercised the powers conferred upon it by section 4 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, did not warrant the appellants in mixing milk with the butter and so producing an abnormal amount of water in the mixture.

The question for the opinion of the court was whether upon the facts stated the magistrate was right in law in convicting the appellants of the offence charged in the information under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875.

Horace Avory, K.C. (H. D. Bonsey with him), for the appellants.

Danckwerts, K.C. (B. C. Brough with him), for the respondent, was not called on.

WILLS, J.—I am clearly of opinion that these convictions should be supported and that our judgment should be for the respondent in each of these cases. Section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, provides that "no person shall sell to the prejudice of the purchaser any article of food or any drug which is not of the nature, substance, and quality of the article demanded by such purchaser." In each of these cases the purchaser demanded butter and the appellants supplied him, not with butter, but with an article which had been but was no longer butter; for by some ingenious process, the nature of which is probably a trade secret, cream or milk had been added to it in such a way as not to become butter. This cream or milk was not subjected to the ordinary process by which butter is made. Butter made by the ordinary process contains no doubt a certain proportion of water, but only about 16 per cent. The very object, however, of the process employed by the appellants, was that the cream or milk which was added to the butter should not be turned into butter at all, but that a considerable quantity of the watery parts which in the ordinary process of making butter would be eliminated should be left in the resulting compound. This was a spurious compound and was not genuine butter as demanded by the purchaser. It does not matter what the motive was for adding the cream or milk. The magistrates have found there was an excessive amount of water in the butter and that the cream or milk was added fraudulently. But even if the appellants had added it honestly that would be no answer to the offence under section 6 with which they were charged. Therefore I am of opinion that the convictions were right and that the appeals must be dismissed.

KENNEDY, J.—I am entirely of the same opinion, and for the same reasons.

Judgment for respondents.

Solicitors for appellants, Neve, Beck, & Kirby.

Solicitors for respondents, Thomas White & Sons, for M. F. Blakiston, Stafford.

K. B. Div. (Mathew, J.) — Aug. 5, 7, 1901.

RATCLIFF AND ANOTHER v. MENDELLSOHN. (a.)

Stock Exchange—Broker in default—Liquidation—Completion by jobber with broker's clients—Right of jobber to sue broker for difference.

A broker and member of the Stock Exchange was declared a defaulter, there being then due from him to a firm of jobbers £986. A further sum of £281 became due on the closing at the hammer price. The jobbers completed with the broker's clients and were paid the differences due from them, but by the rules of the Stock Exchange the jobbers had to account for £281 of the amount so received to the official assignee of the Stock Exchange, who was carrying out the liquidation of the broker's estate. The jobbers brought an action against the broker to recover £986 and £281. At the date of trial the liquidation was still proceeding, and the jobbers had paid an interim dividend.

Held, that the action could be maintained, and that the jobbers were entitled to recover the amount claimed, less the amount of the dividend received.

Action in the commercial list tried by Mathew, J., without a jury.

The plaintiffs were jobbers on the Stock Exchange.

At the date of the mid-May settlement, the 13th of May, 1901, there became due to the plaintiffs from the defendant, who was then a broker and member of the exchange, the sum of £986 for differences in respect of contracts for the sale or purchase of shares entered into by the defendant on behalf of his clients with the plaintiffs. These contracts were carried over to the end of May settlement.

On the 16th of May the defendant was declared a defaulter, and all his contracts then open with the plaintiffs were closed at the hammer price of the various shares, in accordance with rule 177 of the Stock Exchange Rules and Regulations, the result being that a further sum of £281 was shown to be due from the defendant to the plaintiffs. At the end of May settlement the defendant's clients either completed with the plaintiffs through other brokers or again carried over, and the plaintiffs received from such other brokers the sums due from the clients in respect of those transactions.

(a.) Reported by F. O. ROBINSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The plaintiffs had been paid by the official assignee of the Stock Exchange a dividend of 2s. 6d. in the pound in respect of the defendant's indebtedness to them, and there were other assets out of which a further dividend would be paid, but the amount thereof was doubtful.

The plaintiffs claimed in this action to recover £986 and £281.

By the points of defence it was pleaded, in substance, as to the whole claim, that the plaintiffs' sole right was to prove in the Stock Exchange liquidation of the defendant's estate; as to the £281, that the transactions had been completed by the defendant's clients with the plaintiffs.

Evidence was given on behalf of the plaintiffs that by the rules and practice of the Stock Exchange the plaintiffs would have to account to the official assignee for £281 of the amount received by them from the defendant's clients.

Rufus Isaacs, K.C., and Carrington, for the plaintiffs.—The fact that the plaintiffs have participated in the Stock Exchange liquidation of the defendant's estate is no bar to their taking proceedings at law against him for the recovery of their debt: see Ex parte Ward, In re Ward, 30 W. R. 560, 20 Ch. D. 356. Then it is further said that as to the claim for £281 the plaintiffs, having elected to complete with the defendant's clients, cannot now sue the defendant; but that point is concluded by the decision in Stoneham v. Wyman, 6 Com. Cas. 174. It is clear from the evidence that the plaintiffs have to account to the official referee for the £281 received from the defendant's clients and therefore the plaintiffs are out of pocket to that extent, but the plaintiffs will of course have to give credit for the amount of the dividend they have received out of the defendant's estate.

Bankes, K.C., and J. R. Atkin, for the defendant.—Ex parte Ward, In re Ward, only decides that after the liquidation has come to an end the defaulter may be sued by his Stock Exchange creditors. It is no authority for saying that he may be sued whilst the liquidation is pending. It is contrary to the spirit and intention of the rules as to liquidation and most inequitable that the defendant should be sued, for by the operation of the rules he has been stripped of all his assets, which are now vested in the official assignee, and he has therefore no means of satisfying the judgment and must inevitably become a bankrupt. If the plaintiffs can sue the defendant it would follow that a defaulter could sue a member of the exchange for credit differences on the closing at the hammer price, but it is clear that he has no such right of action: see Ex parte Grant, In re Plumbly, 28 W. R. 755, 13 Ch. D. 667. As to the £281 the position is the same as if there had been no default, for the plaintiffs have elected to complete with the defendant's principals.

Isaacs, K.C., in reply, referred to Richardson v. Stormont, 48 W. R. 451, [1900] 1 Q. B. 701.

Cur. adv. vult.

Aug. 7.—MATHEW, J.—This is an action in which the plaintiffs, who are jobbers and members of the Stock Exchange, seek to recover two sums of £986 and £281 from the defendant, who was formerly a broker on the Stock Exchange. It appeared that at the date of the mid-May settlement in the present year, which took place on the 13th of May, there were several contracts for the purchase and sale of stocks and shares open between the plaintiffs and the defendant which were carried over to the end of May settlement in the usual way, leaving a balance of £986 due from the defendant to the plaintiffs on the mid-May settlement. On the 16th of May the defendant was declared a defaulter. The hammer price was fixed on that day, and the usual liquidation proceedings under the rules of the Stock Exchange took place. It is not necessary to describe the nature of those proceedings at length; but shortly stated it became the duty of the official assignee of the Stock Exchange to collect the amounts due to the defendant from members of the Stock Exchange, and to consider and adjudicate upon all claims made by members and others against his estate. As to the first part of the claim—namely, that for £986, it has not been argued, and could not be argued, that the liquidation of the defendant's estate under the rules of the Stock Exchange operated as a release of the defendant; that point was settled by the case of Ex parte Ward. The contracts between the plaintiffs and the defendant survived the liquidation, and it is not contended that what was done under the Stock Exchange rules released the defendant, or in any way altered or controlled the ordinary law. But it was contended for the defendant that although it could not be said that there was a release there ought to be a suspension of the plaintiffs' remedy at law. The case was put in this way. The official assignee was collecting all the assets of the defendant, and it was said that it would be a great hardship if a judgment was to be recovered against the defendant which he had no means of meeting and which therefore would terminate in his bankruptcy. It was also said that the defendant had various claims against his clients, and that when they had been collected a dividend of twenty shillings in the pound might possibly be paid. On the evidence before me I think this is far too sanguine an estimate. I doubt whether the dividend will be more than three or four shillings in the pound. That being so, and there being no authority to say that the legal remedies of the plaintiffs were suspended, and there being certainly no rule of the Stock Exchange providing for such a result, I have come to the conclusion that the plaintiffs are entitled to enforce their legal remedies on the contracts, and are therefore entitled to succeed on the first part of the claim.

The second part of the claim was for £281. The plaintiffs were entitled to be paid a dividend of the defendant's estate in respect of this £281 as in the the other case. But the contracts which had been entered into with the plaintiffs by the defendant's clients ran on until the settlement at the end of May, then, in accordance with the course of business, other brokers were appointed in the place of the defendant to act for those clients, and their transactions with the plaintiffs were closed and settled. Upon this it was said on behalf of the defendant, What claim can the plaintiffs have against him, their contracts having been fulfilled? and the position was, therefore, it was said, exactly the same as if there had been no liquidation because the plaintiffs had received the whole amount due to them. But if that argument prevails it is clear that the plaintiffs will be in a better position than the other creditors of the defendant, and the course of business of the Stock Exchange is that there shall be so far as possible an equality among the different creditors of the defaulter, and to secure that end there is a rule (No. 155 which provides that "a creditor receiving under any circumstances a larger proportion of differences on a defaulter's estate than that to which each of the creditors is entitled shall refund such portion as shall reduce his dividend to an equality with the others." Now evidence has been given by the official assignee as to the course of business under that rule. He said that the invariable practice is to require a person who has received more than the other creditors to bring the amount so received into the general account of the defaulter's estate; in other words, the plaintiffs have to pay that £281 to the official assignee, which will be treated as part of the assets of the defendant's estate out of which the plaintiffs and the creditors are entitled to be paid a dividend. The result is that the plaintiffs, having to pay in that way, are out of pocket to that extent; but as in the former case the contracts with the defendant survived, and on those contracts the defendant is liable to indemnify the plaintiffs in respect of what they are obliged to hand over to the official assignee in accordance with the rules. In that state of things the defendant is still liable to the plaintiffs, and the plaintiffs are therefore entitled to recover the second sum claimed. There will, therefore, be judgment for the plaintiffs, but allowance will have to be made for anything which has been paid to the plaintiffs as a dividend on the defendant's estate.

Judgment for the plaintiffs for an amount agreed by counsel.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Michael Abrahams, Sons, & Co.

Solicitors for the defendant, Osborn & Osborn.

K. B Div. (Mathew, J.) July 22, 26, 1901.

NIGEL GOLD MINING CO. (LIMITED) v. HOADE. (a.)

Insurance—Products of gold mine—"Arrests, restraints, detainments"—Outbreak of war—Seizure—Property in enemy's territory—Right of assured to recover.

The plaintiffs were a company incorporated and registered in Natal, and owning and working a gold mine in the Transvaal. On the outbreak of the war on the 11th of October, 1899, between the South African Republic and Great Britain, the plaintiffs ceased to work their mine. A few days after the war had begun, gold products which had been extracted from the plaintiffs' mine before that date were seized by the officials of the South African Republic while still in the plaintiffs' possession. The plaintiffs had effected an insurance of the produce of their mine by a policy covering arrests, restraints, and detainments of kings, princes, and people. In an action on the policy to recover the value of the gold seized,

Held, that the plaintiffs were not disentitled by any principle of public policy from recovering the loss.

Action in the commercial list tried by Mathew, J., without a jury.

The action was brought to recover a loss under a policy of insurance subscribed by the defendant and others, underwriters at Lloyd's.

The facts of the case and the arguments of counsel are fully stated in the judgment.

Scrutton, K.C., and Balloch, for the plaintiffs.

Joseph Walton, K.C., Lord Robert Cecil, K.C., and Leohnis, for the defendant.

(a.) Reported by F. O. ROBINSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The following authorities were referred to: Brandon v. Curling, 4 East. 410; The Phœnix, 5 C. Rob. 20; The Vrow Anna Catherina, 5 C. Rob. 161; The San Jose Indiano, 2 Gall. 268; Society for the Propagation of the Gospel v. Wheeler, 2 Gall. 104; The Venus, 8 Cranch. 253; Bentzon v. Boyle, 9 Cranch. 191; Twiss on Law of Nations in Time of War (2nd ed.). p. 306; Upton on Maritime Warfare and Prize Law, pp. 149, 150; Dicey on the Conflict of Laws, p. 135; Nordenfelt v. Maxim-Nordenfelt Guns and Ammunition Co., [1894] A C. 535; and Printing and Numerical Registering Co. v. Sampson, 26 W. R. 627, L. R. 19 Eq. 462.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 26.—MATHEW, J.—This was an action on a policy of insurance effected by the plaintiff company with the defendant, an underwriter at Lloyd's. The subject-matter of the insurance is described in the policy as "amalgam precipitates from cyanide and chlorination processes, lead bullion and gold bars." So small was the apprehension when the policy was effected that peaceful relations with the South African Republic would be disturbed that the premium was only 6d. per cent. The policy provided for the commencement of the risk with reference to the different subjects insured, and protected the property while on the premises at the plaintiffs' mine in the Transvaal and until despatched therefrom. In the ordinary course a second policy would have protected the gold while being carried to England. The risk on the amalgam commenced when taken from the plates and entered in the amalgam register. The policy contained in print the usual capture clause, and there was added in writing the following clause: "This insurance covers and includes risk of theft, larceny, burglary, and all and every risk, whether loss arise from want of integrity of assured's employees or otherwise. To pay average irrespective of percentage. This instrument is not to be deemed a sea insurance policy." The last words appear to be a provision with reference to possible stamp objections. The plaintiff company were the owners of a gold mine in the Transvaal, and on the 17th of October, 1899, after the commencement of the war, the agents of the Transvaal Government seized and carried away from the mine 780 ounces of amalgam, and in February, 1900, there was a further seizure by agents of the Government of 106 ounces of amalgam. This latter quantity had not been entered in the amalgam register until some days after the seizure. In the year 1888 the plaintiff company had been registered in Natal as a joint stock company. Subsequently the company had received a supplemental incorporation in the Transvaal. The object of this proceeding was to enable the company to sue and be sued in the Transvaal in its corporate name and to obviate the difficulty under Transvaal law of representing a foreign company under a power of attorney. I am satisfied from the evidence given in the case that this additional incorporation was supplemental and ancillary only and did not alter the status of the company; a branch office had been opened at Johannesburg, but it was only used for transfers of shares and transacted no other business. The only property of the company was the gold mine in the Transvaal. There was a resident manager and secretary, and the working of the mine was controlled by a committee of directors who went up from Natal for the purpose every month.

The first point made for the defendant was that the loss was not covered by the policy. It was said that the written clause superseded what was in print and that the only losses covered were those described in writing. This does not seem to me the true construction of the policy. The printed matter is not repugnant to or inconsistent with what is written; both clauses described the risks intended to be insured. As to the second seizure the defendant contended that the policy had not attached by reason of the failure to register the amalgam. The condition of registration was an important protection to the underwriter, and its omission, in my judgment, prevents the loss from being recoverable.

The main contention of the defendant's counsel was that the subject-matter of insurance was enemies' property and that after a declaration of war the policy had become ineffective. It was pointed out that the company had been carrying on their business within the territories of the South African Republic, and had acquired a commercial domicil in the Transvaal, and that the products of their mine were Transvaal and not British property, and it was urged that, from the time when war was declared, the property was stamped with a hostile character and on the high seas would be subject to capture and condemnation as a lawful prize. In support of this contention recourse was had to the authority of cases decided in the English and American Prize Courts in the early part of last century. There can be little doubt that these cases would not be followed now, and even when those decisions were pronounced their authority was rejected by eminent lawyers: see The Venus, 8 Cranch. 252, at p. 279. The sounder opinion would seem to be, that the subject of our country surprised by a declaration of war in the country where he has a commercial domicil ought to have time allowed him to free himself from his commercial engagements, and effect a removal of his property. The conflicting opinions upon this subject are discussed with great ability in in Duer on Marine Insurance, vol. 1, lecture 5. In this case there was no indication of any intention on the part of the Natal company to continue their business in the Transvaal after war had been declared. There was no evidence of any intention on the part of the company to continue their mining operations while the war continued. No authority was cited to show that the supposed rule relied upon by the defendant had ever been recognized or adopted in insurance law. I am satisfied that for the purposes of this case the gold products in question are not to be regarded at the time of seizure as enemies' property merely by reason of the commercial domicil of the company when war was declared.

But the same result was sought to be reached in a different way. It was said that the plaintiff company had a two-fold character. It was a British company and a Transvaal company; it was amphibious and was at once friendly and hostile. It was urged that the goods should be deemed to be Transvaal goods, and that the company should be deemed to be a Transvaal company, and that to indemnify the plaintiffs should be deemed to be an addition to the resources of the Transvaal Government, and therefore to be against public policy. But this argument seems to me to offer a series of fictions in lieu of the plain facts. I am of opinion that the gold products in question were British goods, and were seized by a hostile force, and that the loss is covered by the policy. My judgment is therefore for the plaintiff company.

Judgment for the plaintiffs.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Loughborough, Gedge, Nisbet, & Drew.

Solicitors for the defendant, Waltons, Johnson, Bubb, & Whatton.

K. B. Div. (Phillimore, J.) — July 10, 11, 12, 15, 1901.

ROBINSON GOLD MINING CO. (LIMITED) AND OTHERS v. ALLIANCE MARINE AND GENERAL ASSURANCE CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Insurance—Bullion—Perils—"Arrests, restraints, and detainments"—"Warranted free of capture, seizure, and detention"—Bullion taken possession of by assured's government—Subsequent declaration of war.

Gold bullion the property of a Transvaal company was insured during transit from the Transvaal to the United Kingdom by a policy which covered the risks of "arrests, restraints, and detainments" of rulers, and which contained a clause "Warranted free of capture, seizure, and detention." The gold while in transit in the Transvaal was, on the 2nd of October, 1899, removed from a railway train and taken possession of by officials acting under the orders of the Transvaal Government. At that date it was anticipated that war would shortly break out between the Transvaal and this country, and war did in fact begin on the 9th of October. According to the law of the Transvaal the taking of the gold was in the circumstances a legal act. In an action on the policy,

Held, that the gold had been seized within the meaning of the warranty, and that the plaintiffs could not recover a loss under the policy.

Action in the commercial list tried by Phillimore, J., without a jury.

The plaintiffs, who were mining companies, incorporated and registered under the laws of and carrying on business in the South African Republic, claimed to recover a loss under a policy of insurance dated the 12th of September, 1899, by which gold was insured at the plaintiffs' mines in the Witwatersrand goldfields and in course of transit therefrom to the United Kingdom.

The perils insured against included "arrests, restraints, and detainments of all kings, princes, and people," and the policy contained the following clause: "Warranted free of capture, seizure, and detention, and the consequences thereof, or any attempt thereat, piracy excepted, and also from all consequences of riots, civil commotions, hostilities, or warlike operations, whether before or after declaration of war."

Consignments of gold to which the policy attached were on the 2nd and 9th of October, 1899, seized in the Transvaal by officials of the South African Republic acting under the authority of the Executive Government of the Republic.

War broke out between the Republic and this country on the 11th of October, 1899.

The defence raised the same points as those in Driefontein Consolidated Mines v. Janson, 49 W. R. 660, [1901] 2 K. B. 419; and in addition thereto the defendants pleaded that the loss was not caused by any peril insured against, and, alternatively, that the "warranted free of capture" clause exempted the defendants from liability.

Evidence was given on behalf of the plaintiffs that the seizure of the gold was legal according to the law of the Republic.

Lawson Walton, K.C., and J. A. Hamilton, K.C. (Campbell Johnston with them), for the plaintiffs.—The act of the Government of the South African Republic in seizing the gold comes within the language of the policy. The words "arrests, restraints, and detainments" must not be construed as applying merely to the acts of a hostile power; they are equally applicable to an act committed by the orders of the assured's own government: see Aubert v. Gray, 11 W. R. 27, 3 B. & S. 163; Phillips on Insurance, ss. 1109, 1111; Rotch v. Edie, 6 T. R. 413. There has, therefore, been a loss by perils insured against. Then it is said that the defendants are protected by the warranty. It is submitted the warranty is confined to belligerent risks. Its phraseology is not appropriate to include the lawful actions of the assured's government. The facts of the case clearly do not constitute a capture, nor are they seizure and detention. Seizure involves the exercise of something in the nature of physical force, an act either of violence pure and simple, or of legal force to punish a breach of the law. The taking possession of this gold can only be said to be forcible in the sense in which every act of a government in the nature of taxation may be said to be carried out by force.

(a.) Reported by F. O. ROBINSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

They cited Cory v. Burr, 31 W. R. 894, 8 App. Cas. 393; Kleinwort v. Shepard. 7 W. R. 227, 1 E. & E. 447; Powell v. Hyde, 4 W. R. 51, 5 E. & B. 607; Johnston v. Hogg, 31 W. R. 768, 10 Q. B. D. 432; Rodocanachi v. Elliott, L. R. 9 C. P. 518; Greene v. Pacific Mutual Insurance Co., 9 Allen, 217; Brunner v. Webster, 5 Com. Cas. 167; Nobel's Explosives Co. v. Jenkins & Co., [1896] 1 Q. B. 326, 45 W. R. Dig. 147; Kidston v. Empire Marine Insurance Co., 15 W. R. 769, L. R. 2 C. P. 357.

Joseph Walton, K.C., and Lochnis (Lord Robert Cecil, K.C., with them), for the defendants.—If the loss comes within the perils insured against, then it is clearly within the words "seizure and detention" in the warranty. The suggestion that these words must be confined to the acts of a belligerent or penal character is one for which no authority can be shown. On the other hand, if the warranty does not cover this case, the loss is equally not within any of the perils insured against.

Lawson Walton, K.C., replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 15.—PHILLIMORE, J., read the following judgment: This case is remarkable by reason of the large sum at stake. It is remarkable in its features, and still more remarkable from the position and juxtaposition of the two witnesses who have given evidence. But the circumstances are so peculiar that it is not likely to give rise to any guiding rules of general importance. I am about to decide it as one of construction. The plaintiffs, who are several mining companies incorporated according to the laws of then existing South African Republic, and therefore to be deemed to be subjects and citizens of that Republic, sue upon a policy of insurance on gold in transit from the mines to a bank at Johannesburg, at the bank, and thence by land and sea conveyance to France and England, and they declare upon two losses—one on the 2nd of October at Vereeniging, a frontier railway station of the then Republic; the other at Johannesburg, also in the Republic, on the 9th of October; and they aver that these losses were caused by perils insured against, to wit, "arrests, restraints, and detainments of kings, princes, and people." These perils are in the policy. The defendants, while denying that the losses were by perils insured against, also rely upon a clause of exception which is in these words, "Warranted free of capture, seizure, and detention, and the consequences thereof, or any attempt thereat, piracy excepted, and also from all consequences of riots, civil commotions, hostilities, or warlike operations, whether before or after declaration of war." I have no doubt that the gold was in each case forcibly taken by officers of the South African Republic within the territory of the South African Republic from the custodians of the gold who were carrying it or holding it for the plaintiff companies. The actual officials or servants of the plaintiff companies were not present, but if they had been they could not have effectually resisted. As it was the custodians submitted without resistance. At this time war had not broken out; it did not break out till the 11th of October, nor had martial law been proclaimed. But commandoes had been called out, and the Volksraad had passed a resolution which had the force of law, vesting the legislative power for the time being in the executive. I have further no doubt that the gold was legally seized according to the laws in force in the South African Republic. I shall best explain my meaning by saying that it was constitutionally seized. The evidence of the two witnesses satisfied me that when once a commando was in the field it was in the power of the Executive Government to seize any chattels which it might deem necessary to be seized for the purposes of the war, and that for that purpose it had a discretion which could not be inquired into or traversed. This power might be, and may have been, capriciously and arbitrarily exercised, and the fact that, except in the cases of cattle and wagons, no compensation was given, and the only recompense offered to the sufferer was a share in possible booty, made it a crude and hard law. But the circumstances of the South African Republic beginning its history with most of its frontier exposed to sudden incursions of savage tribes made it not unnatural. The Romans, the fathers of all Western laws, had a not dissimilar provision in the case of a tumultus Gallicus, our own law contains cases where entry upon a subject's lands was held justified by the necessity of making ramparts against an invading enemy; and other similar cases are to be found in the report of Rex v. Hampden, 3 State Trials, 825, at pp. 903-905, the case of ship money, and elsewhere. International law recognizes this right flagrante bello even as exercised against the citizens of a neutral state. This is the jus angariae which will be found treated of in Sir R. Phillimore's Commentaries on International Law, vol. 3, ss. 29-31, and by other authors. But it is unnecessary to inquire whether this law be natural and reasonable, according to precedent or not. I am satisfied that it existed, and upon the whole I think that the taking was made under it. It is true that originally there were two motives for the taking, and that one of them was to keep the resources of the country from going away, not to appropriate for commando purposes; but the other motive was also present, and the subsequent acts of the executive in confiscating in a literal sense this gold may be deemed to relate back and to cover the taking. Moreover, the former motive might perhaps afford a good cause under the principles of law applicable to all nations in case of emergency, which are well laid down in the American case of Mitchell v. Harmony, 13 Howard 115, at p. 134. This brings me to the two questions, Was the taking of this gold an arrest, restraint, or detainment of rulers? If so, was it also a capture, seizure, or detention, or a consequence of warlike operations? I am in some doubt upon the first point. Restraint of princes and rulers is more often exercised by a government against the citizens of another state. It generally arises in a war, or at least as an act of retortion such as embargo or blockade. It is not a restraint of princes when a ship or cargo is arrested by civil process at the suit of a subject. This was decided upon the construction of a bill of lading in Crew, Widgery, & Co. v. Great Western Steamship Co., 3 Times L. R. 394, 738. On the other hand, the case of Aubert v. Gray decided that where the Queen of Spain took within her own territory a vessel belonging to her own subjects for military purposes in a war against Morocco, the loss by this taking was a loss by restraint of princes, and that case would look very like the present one if it were not for a reservation in the judgment. Phillips on Insurance, s. 1109, says that "The policy extends to captures, arrests, and detentions . . . by the government of which the assured is a subject for any cause other than a violation of law, as the taking of a vessel by government to be used as a fire ship." Arnould on Insurance (6th ed.), p. 761, speaks to the same effect. I do not propose to decide this point at present, and I pass on to the next question, Was this taking a capture, seizure, or detention within the terms of the clause of exception? It has been suggested that these words point to hostile taking and to hostile taking only. That is probably true of capture. But seizure is an additional word. It means more than capture; and in good sense and according to the precedents it should cover this case. So I think of detention. It has been contended that seizure implies force. So it does, and as I have said, I think this was force. It has been contended further, alternatively (1) that force excludes law; (2) that at any rate seizure is not where the taking is by lawful force. The first proposition seems to me radically unsound. I can perhaps dispose of it by a single citation from the decision of Sir W. Scott (afterwards Lord Stowell) in the case of The Maria, 1 C. Rob. 340, at p. 361: "It is wild conceit that wherever force is used it may be lawfully resisted; a lawful force cannot be lawfully resisted. The only case where it can be so is in the state of war and conflict between two countries, where one party has a perfect right to attack by force and the other has an equally perfect right to repel by force." As to the second proposition it is in direct conflict with the decided cases. Seizure signifies "the taking of a ship by the act of governments or other public authority for a violation of the law of trade or some rule or regulation instituted as a matter of municipal police or in consequence of an existing state of war." This is the language of Bigelow, C.J., in Greene v. Pacific Mutual Assurance Co., 9 Allen 217, at p. 222. In Cory v. Burr the seizure was not, as it was at first contended before me, an act of mere force. It was a legal seizure. This was substantially admitted throughout the course of that case, and is clearly pointed out by Lord Blackburn in the House of Lords. In fact the doubt among lawyers at one time was whether an unlawful taking was a seizure. This doubt gave rise to the arguments in Kleinwort v. Shepard and Johnston v. Hogg. The cases I have cited further show that seizure is not confined to hostile acts. Nor is the word detention. Phillips in the passage cited by me puts detention with captures and arrests as a peril insured against by the ordinary words of a policy, and enumerates among the causes of detention acts of the assured's government. In fact when we come to look at the words enumerating the loss side by side with the words of exception, it is pretty evident that in some cases the words of the exception, though written in different language, do not merely qualify but delete some of the words of enumeration. The language of the body of the policy, as I was reminded, is ancient, that of the exception comparatively modern. But "takings at sea" must be eliminated by the exception of "capture," "detainment of princes" by "detention." Phillips heads the section of his work devoted to this class of peril insured against not "Arrest, restraint, and detainment of princes," but "Capture, arrests, restraints, and detention." This argument may be put this way: There is no arrest or restraint of princes except by capture, seizure, or detention, the most outlying case of restraints of princes, Rodocanachi v. Elliott, being a case of detention. In other words, if the risk is one covered in the body of the policy it is necessarily excluded by the clause of exception, a clause which probably excludes this risk and some others. I have not thought it necessary to dwell upon the words "consequence of warlike operations before the declaration of war." It is not necessary; but I am not sure that in this very peculiar case these words would not also apply. Lastly, it has been suggested that here there is no seizure because the subject must be deemed to have acquiesced, and, perhaps, even agreed in accordance with his duty to the appropriation of his goods. This argument pushed to the extreme would make the assured cause his own loss and pushed not so far it makes this taking a kind of irregular taxation, and then there would be no more a loss by restraint of princes than there would be if the ship were sold under a levy for taxes. I do not take this view of the facts To my mind the very singular facts of this case are more like those suggested in Mitchell v. Harmony, to which I have already referred, but if I did take this view I should say there was no loss by perils insured against. Another defence is raised by paragraphs 4, 5, and 6 of the defence. A similar defence has been disallowed by the majority of the Court of Appeal, affirming Mathew, J., in the case of Driefontein Consolidated Mines v. Janson. I understand that that case is on the way to the House of Lords; but at present I am bound by the decision of the Court of Appeal. This case is not the same case; and I am by no means sure that the facts which the plaintiffs have had to prove to launch this case do not conclude some of the doubts which weighed with the majority of the Court of Appeal, and prove some steps in the defendants' argument which were at that time and in that case unproved. But I have not gone sufficiently deeply into the former case to be sure of this and it is not necessary to do so, as on other grounds my judgment must be for the defendants with costs.

Judgment for the defendants.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Ingle, Holmes, & Sons.

Solicitors for the defendants, Waltons, Johnson, Bubb, & Whatton.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

K. B. Div. (Wright, J.) — Nov. 7, 8.

MELLOR'S TRUSTEE v. MAAS & CO. (a.)

Bankruptcy—Bill of sale—Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31), s. 4—Bills of Sale Act, 1878, Amendment Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43), s. 8—Hiring and purchase agreement.

Mellor, a publican, being in want of money to complete the purchase of a hotel, applied to the defendants for a loan of £2,000. They refused to lend on a fourth mortgage of the hotel, and Mellor refused to give them a bill of sale It was therefore arranged that the defendants should buy the furniture in the hotel from the vendor for £2,000 instead of Mellor, and should let the furniture to Mellor under a hiring and purchase agreement. Mellor subsequently became bankrupt, and the furniture was claimed by the trustee in the bankruptcy.

Held, that the defendants had purchased the furniture as trustees for Mellor, who was the real owner, and that they had no title to the goods except under the hiring and purchase agreement, which was void for want of registration as a bill of sale.

(a.) Reported by P. M. FRANCKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Beckett v. Tower Assets Co., 39 W. R. 438, [1891] 1 Q. B. 638, followed.

Action assigned to Wright, J., as the judge having jurisdiction in bankruptcy.

Upon the 4th of May, 1899, Mellor, the bankrupt, entered into an agreement with one Sykes whereby Sykes agreed to sell and Mellor to buy the Crown Hotel, Leamington, together with the furniture, fixtures, and stock therein, save certain specially excepted furniture, for the sum of £30,000, whereof £750 was paid by Mellor as a deposit at the time of signing the agreement.

The purchase was to be completed on the 15th of May.

As the time for completion drew near Mellor found himself short of the sum required to complete the purchase by £2,000.

He called on Maas & Co., the defendants, who are wine and spirit merchants, and asked them to lend him that amount upon a fourth mortgage on the hotel.

They declined to lend on mortgage, but offered to lend the sum required on a bill of sale, which was refused by Mellor. Maas & Co. then suggested that they should buy the furniture at the hotel from Sykes for £2,000 and let it to Mellor.

This suggestion was agreed to, and accordingly, on the 15th of May, Maas & Co. bought the furniture for £2,000 from Sykes and executed a hire-purchase agreement of the furniture to Mellor.

Mellor also signed an agreement whereby in consideration of Maas & Co. granting the hire-purchase agreement he undertook to purchase all his wines and spirits from them so long as any sum should remain due under the said agreement.

Maas & Co. did not take possession of the furniture, which remained in the hotel, and the hire-purchase agreement was not registered as a bill of sale.

A receiving order was made against Mellor on the 13th of December, 1900, he was adjudicated bankrupt on the 19th of December, and a trustee of his estate was duly appointed. Maas & Co. seized the furniture on the day before the receiving order was made, and gave notice thereof to the official receiver. The trustee in bankruptcy laid claim to the furniture as being the property of the bankrupt, and upon his claim being disputed by Maas & Co. he commenced the present action. By agreement between the parties the furniture was valued at £1,730, and that amount was paid into a bank by Maas & Co. to abide the result of the trial. By his statement of claim the trustee asked for a declaration that the hire-purchase agreement of the 15th of May, 1899, was a bill of sale and void for want of registration, and for an order for the payment to him of the sum of £1,730.

Muir Mackenzie and H. J. Rowlands, for the plaintiff, called the bankrupt, who gave evidence of the facts above set forth.

Reed, K.C., and Frank Mellor, for the defendants.—The plaintiff has made out no case. Even if he obtains a declaration that the hire-purchase agreement is void, he does not thereby make out his title to the furniture, because it never was the property of Mellor. By the contract of the 4th of May Sykes had only agreed to sell the furniture to Mellor, no property in it was to pass until payment. Upon the 15th of May so much of that contract as related to the furniture was rescinded by mutual consent, and Sykes sold the furniture to Maas & Co., as he had a perfect right to do. The defendants' title rests upon their purchase from Sykes, and not upon the hire-purchase agreement. Therein lies the distinction between this case and the cases of In re Watson, Ex parte The Official Receiver, 38 W. R. 567, 25 Q. B. D. 27, and Beckett v. The Tower Assets Co., 39 W. R. 438, [1891] 1 Q. B. 638, in which, apart from the hire-purchase agreements, the claimants had no title to the goods in question.

Muir Mackenzie, in reply.—The property in the furniture passed to Mellor by the agreement of the 4th of May: see Coburn v. Collins, 35 W. R. 610, 35 Ch. D. 373. Further, if the whole transaction be looked at, it is obviously a mere device by Maas & Co. to obtain security for a loan to Mellor. The hire-purchase agreement is merely a licence to seize, and a security for the repayment of £2,000. The case falls within the principle of Beckett v. The Tower Assets Co.

Frank Mellor was further heard.

Cur. adv. vult.

Nov. 8.—WRIGHT, J.—In this case the question is whether Maas & Co. had the title to certain furniture and goods in a hotel at Leamington, and it raises a somewhat nice question more of fact than of law.

I agree with Mr. Reed to this extent, at any rate, that Sykes, the former holder of the public-house, had not, at the time of this transaction—that is, at the time of the giving of the supposed bill of sale—parted with his title to the goods. It is not a case like the case of Coburn v. Collins, to which I was referred. Sykes had given to Mellor only a contractual right to have a conveyance of the goods, which was contingent on payment by Mellor. Sykes was still, therefore, in a position to sell to Maas & Co. There might be a breach of contract, but even that would be avoided if the contract were altered by the consent of all parties before breach, and if in fact there was a real sale by Sykes to Maas it is immaterial for the purposes of the present case whether the hiring agreement is good or void, because, as Mr. Reed said, if void it would still leave the property in Maas & Co.

The question is, Was there a real sale to Maas & Co. in their own right? The object of all the parties was a loan on security, but Maas & Co. would not accept the security of a fourth mortgage, and Mellor refused to give a bill of sale. It was therefore proposed that Sykes should sell to Maas & Co., and Maas & Co. should transfer to Mellor by way of hiring agreement. It is obvious that the sale to Maas & Co. was to be solely for the purpose of such a transfer. It was to be a sale only on the terms of leaving the goods in the public-house for Mellor at a price of £2,000. No one can suppose that Maas & Co. were to become absolute beneficial owners, free to remove the goods and deal with them as they pleased. Sykes would not have agreed to that; nor would Mellor have agreed to it. That would have defeated the common purpose of selling the business as a going concern. Nor was there any separation of the £30,000, nor any fresh valuation. It seems to me clear that Sykes and Mellor could have prevented Maas & Co. from removing the goods or from selling to any one but Mellor.

Under these circumstances I think that Maas & Co. must be regarded as trustees for Mellor, and Mellor as being the real owner, unless the property is taken out of Mellor or charged by the hiring agreement. But if Mellor is to be regarded as the real owner, then the hiring agreement was an assurance to Maas & Co. or was an essential part of his title, and it operated as a licence by Mellor to Maas & Co. to take possession of the goods as against Mellor's equitable interest and it was a security for a loan. Beckett v. The Tower Assets Co. seems to me to be in point.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, Wellington Taylor.

Solicitor for the defendants, Betteley.

Court of Appeal.

Appeal.
(Collins, M.R., and Stirling and Mathew, L.JJ.) Nov. 8.

REEKS v. KYNOCH (LIMITED). (a.)

Master and servant—Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Serious and wilful misconduct—Contributory negligence—Where a sudden impulse rather than wilful disobedience caused the accident—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, s. 1, sub-section 2 (c).

The applicant was a lad who worked at a machine used to cut slits in the heads of screws. He had been frequently warned not to put his hand near the wheel while it was in motion. There was no guard on the wheel. A screw having fallen out on to the table before it was cut, he leaned over the machine to pick it up and replace it, and two of his fingers were cut off.

The county court judge found that though the lad was negligent, he was not "guilty of serious and wilful misconduct."

Held, that the element of wilfulness did not enter at all into what the lad did, as he seemed to have acted on a sudden impulse, and therefore the award could be supported.

This was an appeal by the employers from an award in favour of the workman made by the learned judge of the Birmingham County Court.

The applicant was nineteen years of age, and worked at a slitting machine used to cut slits in the heads of screws.

To do the work there was a circular saw, driven by a belt from an overhead shaft.

The screws were put loosely into holes which were in the slot, and the workman brought them into contact with the saw by turning a handle on a wheel.

There was no guard on the saw, and the applicant had been warned not to put his hand over the wheel while it was revolving.

A screw fell out, and he attempted to pick it up while the wheel was in motion, with the result that two of his fingers were sliced off.

The lad brought an action for damages against the company, under the Employers' Liability Act, 1888, claiming damages on the ground of want of proper fencing to dangerous machinery.

The jury returned a verdict to the effect that the accident had been brought about by the boy's own fault, and judgment was entered for the defendants.

The lad's counsel thereupon applied to the learned judge to award compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and the masters opposed it on the ground that the lad had been guilty of serious and wilful misconduct.

The learned county court judge held that however negligent it was for the applicant to reach over the wheel to pick up the screw, it was not such serious and wilful misconduct as to disentitle him to relief, and he made an award accordingly in his favour.

The employers appealed.

Stamford Hutton, for the employers.

J. B. Mathews, for the applicant.

COLLINS, M.R.—I do not think that on the facts as found by the learned judge there has been any miscarriage of justice in this case, and I see no reason for reversing his decision or ordering a new trial. I think the primâ facie inference arising on the facts is that the lad acted on a sudden impulse, and the essential element of wilfulness is therefore entirely absent. For these reasons the appeal fails.

STIRLING and MATHEW, L.JJ., gave judgment to the same effect.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the employers, W. Morris, Birmingham.

Solicitors for the applicant, Ford & Ford, for A. J. O'Connor, Birmingham.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Appeal.
(Collins, M.R., and Stirling and Mathew, L.JJ.) Nov. 7.

KNIGHT v. CUBITT & CO. (b.)

Master and servant—Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Sub-contractor—Work ancillary to the business of the undertakers—Height of building—Work of demolition—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), ss. 4, 7.

The appellants, who were builders, entered into a contract to demolish and rebuild a house which exceeded thirty feet in height. They then made a sub-contract with one Clements to do the work of demolition. A workman in the employment of Clements was killed by an accident while engaged in the work of demolition, the building at that time being only eleven feet in height, with the exception of the party-wall, which remained standing and exceeded thirty feet in height. It appeared that the appellants habitually entered into contracts to demolish and rebuild houses, but they never did the work of demolition themselves, always sub-contracting with another person to do that part of the work. In proceedings by the widow of the deceased man to recover compensation from the appellants under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, the county court judge found that the house at the time of the accident exceeded thirty feet in height, and that the work of demolition was not merely ancillary to but was part of the business of the appellants, and he held that they were liable as "undertakers" to pay compensation under section 4 of the Act.

Held, that there was evidence upon which the county court judge was justified in finding that the house at the time of the accident exceeded thirty feet in height, as the party-wall which exceeded that height was standing; and, further, that the work of demolition was part of and not merely ancillary to the business of the appellants, and that they were therefore liable as undertakers under section 4.

Appeal from the award of the deputy-judge of the Brompton County Court under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

The applicant was the widow of a workman who was killed by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment.

Messrs. Cubitt & Co., who are builders, had entered into a contract to demolish and reconstruct a house, which exceeded thirty feet in height. Cubitt & Co. entered into a sub-contract with a housebreaker, named Clements, whereby the latter undertook the work of demolition. Cubitt & Co. habitually entered into contracts to demolish and reconstruct buildings, and it was their invariable practice to contract with a third person to do the work of demolition, as they never did that part of the work themselves.

The deceased man was in the employ of Clements, and he was employed in the work of demolition.

(b.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

While so employed he was killed by an accident. At the time of the accident the work of demolition had proceeded so far that the building was only eleven feet in height, except that the party wall between it and the adjoining house, which wall exceeded thirty feet in height, remained standing.

The county court judge held, first, that the deceased man was employed on a building exceeding thirty feet in height within section 7, sub-section 1, of the Act, on the grounds (1) that the building when the work of demolition commenced exceeded thirty feet in height, and (2) that the party wall, which exceeded thirty feet in height, remained standing at the time of the accident; and secondly, that the work of demolition was not merely ancillary to the business of Cubitt & Co., but was part of their business, and that they were liable to pay compensation under section 4 of the Act.

He accordingly made an award in favour of the applicant for £273.

Cubitt & Co. appealed.

Ruegg, K.C., and Minton-Senhouse, for the appellants.—The work of demolition was merely ancillary to the appellants' trade or business, and was not part of their ordinary work. The evidence shows that they never themselves did the work of pulling down buildings, but always let this part of the work out under a sub-contract. Their business was that of building. The case comes, therefore, within the exception at the end of section 4 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and the appellants are not liable. [They referred to Pearce v. London and South-Western Railway Co., 48 W. R. 599, [1900] 2 Q. B. 100.] Secondly, this building was not at the time of the accident over thirty feet in height within section 7, sub-section 1, of the Act. The height of the building at the time of the accident is the height to be looked at (Billings v. Holloway, 47 W. R. 105, [1899] 1 Q. B. 70), and at that time the building was only eleven feet in height. The fact that the party-wall between it and the next house remained standing cannot affect the question. [They also referred to Mellor v. Tomkinson, 47 W. R. 240, [1899] 1 Q. B. 374, and Rixsom v. Pritchard, [1900] 1 Q. B. 800, 48 W. R. Dig. 112.] Thirdly, the appellants were not the "undertakers" in respect of the work of demolition within the meaning of the definition in section 7, sub-section 2. That means the persons who are on the spot and have the control of the operations and execute the work. Clements here had the control of the demolition work.

Edmond Browne, for the applicant, was not called upon.

COLLINS, M.R.—I am of opinion that this appeal should be dismissed. The points taken on behalf of Cubitt & Co. are that they are not the "undertakers" in respect of the work of demolition; that the work of demolition was merely ancillary to and was no part of their trade or business; and that the building did not exceed thirty feet in height at the time of the accident. I will take the points in their inverse order. First, did the building at the time of the accident exceed thirty feet in height? We have a finding of fact by the county court judge that it did. We have only to consider whether there was any evidence upon which the county court judge could reasonably so find. I do not impugn anything decided in Billings v. Holloway. The finding of the judge stands independently of that case. It is said that there is no evidence to support that finding. The man was employed in the demolition of a building, a substantial part of which—namely, the party-wall, was at the time of the accident over thirty feet in height. I am not prepared to say that in that state of facts there was no evidence upon which the county court judge could find that the man was at the time at work on a building which exceeded thirty feet in height. That objection therefore fails. The two other points may be taken together. It was said that Cubitt & Co. were not liable as "undertakers" because they themselves never did the work of demolition, but always employed a sub-contractor to do it, and that this was merely ancillary to their business as builders. The answer to that is that it is part of their ordinary business to undertake to demolish buildings and rebuild them, though for their own convenience they do not themselves do the actual work of demolition. They contracted to demolish and re-construct this building. They undertook both obligations, and that is their usual practice. Therefore I can see nothing to exclude Cubitt & Co. from the position of "undertakers." This particular question arises under section 4 of the Act, which deals with contractors who are undertakers, and the undertakers there dealt with are those who ex hypothesi have sub-contracted with another person to do that which they themselves have undertaken to do. That is clear from the last clause in the section, because that clause excepts from the operation of this section work which is merely ancillary to and no part of the trade or business of the undertakers. Upon the evidence, this work of demolition was part of their business, and not merely ancillary to it. The appeal therefore fails.

STIRLING, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The question whether Cubitt & Co. were the "undertakers" in respect of the work of demolition depends upon the definition of "undertakers" given in section 7, sub-section 2, of the Act. It is said that Cubitt & Co. were not the undertakers because from the wording of the definition the person who executes the work or a substantial part of it is the undertaker. That section ought in this case, however, to be read along with section 4, and when that is done one sees that the Act contemplates that persons may be undertakers though they do not themselves execute the work or a substantial part of it, but enter into contracts with other persons to execute it. Therefore I think that Cubitt & Co. were undertakers.

It is then said that the concluding clause in section 4 covers the present case and takes Cubitt & Co. out of the operation of that section. It is said that the trade or business carried on by Cubitt & Co. is not that of demolishing buildings. The evidence shows that Cubitt & Co. in fact always employ other contractors to do the work of demolition. That, however, is not the question. The question is, is it part of the trade or business of Cubitt & Co. The evidence shows that they entered into a contract to do work of which the demolition of the building formed part, and that it is their usual form of contract. I infer from that that it is part of the business of Cubitt & Co. to pull down buildings with a view to rebuild them, though they find it more convenient not to execute that part of the work themselves, but to contract with others to do it. Therefore that point fails. As to the height of the building, I agree with what the Master of the Rolls has said.

MATHEW, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I have not the least doubt that the work of pulling down the building was part of the business of Cubitt & Co., because this form of contract was the ordinary contract they entered into. As a matter of convenience they make a sub-contract for this part of the work, and the sub-contractor carries it out. They were, therefore, the undertakers, and under section 4 they became liable to pay compensation. The only other question was as to the height of the building; and upon this point the county court judge had, in my opinion, abundant evidence to justify his finding of fact.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Leighton & Savory.

Solicitors for the respondent, Pattinson & Brewer.

Appeal.
(Collins, M.R., and Stirling and Mathew, L.JJ.) Nov. 6.

AYRES v. BUCKERIDGE.
WHEALE v. RHYMNEY IRON CO. (LIMITED).
JONES v. RHYMNEY IRON CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Master and servant—Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Weekly earnings—Employed less than two weeks—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), Schedule I.

A workman was employed to work in the demolition of a building, the terms of his employment being that he should work sixty hours a week—viz., eleven hours a day on five days of the week and five hours on Saturday, at the wages of 7½d. an hour, and that he should be liable to be discharged at an hour's notice. When he had worked for four days, for a period altogether of forty-four hours, he was accidentally injured.

Held, that, as there was a presumption that his employment would continue from week to week, there was evidence to support the finding that his average weekly earnings within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act were sixty times 7½d.

A workman was employed to work as a haulier at the wages of 5s. 2d. a day. He began to work on a Wednesday and he continued to work every day, Sunday included, till the following Wednesday, when he was accidentally injured. He received as wages for the eight days £2 1s 4d.

Held, that, as he had worked for a period of more than a week at 5s. 2d. a day, although that period was partly in one calendar week and partly in another, there was evidence to support the finding that his average weekly earnings were six times 5s. 2d.

Appeals from awards in arbitrations under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

In the case of Ayres v. Buckeridge, which was an appeal from the judge of the Brentford County Court, the applicant for compensation was the widow of Francis Ayres, a labourer, who met with an accident in the course of his employment, and suffered therefrom personal injury which resulted in his death.

The deceased man was engaged by the foreman of Mr. R. S. Buckeridge to assist in the demolition of a building at Ealing.

He was at the time of the engagement in work at Whitechapel, and the question arose what rate of wages would be remunerative to him, taking into account the fact that he would have to travel to and from his work.

In the result it was arranged that he should be employed for eleven hours a day for five days in the week and for five hours a day on Saturday, making altogether sixty hours a week, and that he should receive payment at the rate of 7½d. per hour.

He was not engaged for any specified number of weeks, and he was liable to be discharged from the employment at an hour's notice.

He did, in fact, work in his employment for four days, including the day on which he met with the fatal accident, and he worked for eleven hours on each of the four days.

It was stated that an ordinary workman in the position of the deceased would probably be employed for from forty to fifty hours a week.

The county court judge made an award in favour of the applicant for £292 10s. He calculated this sum on the basis that this was the amount which the deceased would have earned if he had worked for sixty hours a week at the rate of 7½d. an hour for a period of three years.

The employer appealed.

Atherley-Jones, K.C., and H. Kisch, for the employer.—The amount of compensation ought to be based on the amount of wages in fact received by the deceased during the time that he was actually employed. By paragraph 1 (a) (i.) of the first schedule to the Act the compensation in such a case as this is to be "156 times his average weekly earnings during the period of his actual employment under the said employer." The period of this workman's actual employment was forty-four hours in the first week of the employment. Wages at 7½d. an hour for forty-four hours amount to £1 7s. 6d. On this basis the award ought to have been for £214 10s.

They referred to Lysons v. Andrew Knowles & Sons, 49 W. R. 636, [1901] A. C. 79; Hathaway v. Argus Printing Co., 49 W. R. 113, [1901] 1 K. B. 96; and Williams v. Poulson, 16 Times L. R. 42.

Bray, K.C., and W. M. Thompson, for the applicant.—The county court judge was right in having regard to the contract, which was for employment by the week. Where there is an employment for weekly earnings, the man's "average weekly earnings" are what he would have earned if he had worked for a week. It is immaterial that he was prevented from actually working for more than three or four days.

In the case of Wheale v. Rhymney Iron Co. (Limited), which was an appeal from the judge of the Tredegar County Court, the applicant for compensation was a workman who had sustained personal injuries from an accident in the course of his employment as a haulier, which incapacitated him for work.

There was no regular contract of employment, but the applicant was engaged to work on a Wednesday, and continued to work every day, including Sunday, until the following Wednesday, when the accident happened. His rate of wages was 5s. 2d. a day, and he in fact received altogether £2 1s. 4d.

The county court judge took the average weekly earnings as being six times 5s. 2d.—viz., £1 11s.; and he made an award for a weekly payment of half that sum—viz., 15s. 6d.

The employers appealed.

Ruegg, K.C., and A. Bertram, for the employers.—The applicant in fact earned £2 1s. 4d. in two weeks—that is to say, during parts of two weeks—and his average weekly earnings were, therefore, half that sum—viz., £1 0s. 8d.—and the award ought to have been for a weekly payment of half that sum—viz., 10s. 4d.

They cited Williams v. Poulson and the Scotch case of Cadzow Coal Co. v. Gaffney, 3 Ct. Sess. Cas., 5th series, 72.

Atherley-Jones, K.C., Lloyd Morgan, and R. Vaughan Williams, for the applicant.—The Scotch case assumes that a week means a calendar week; but the Act says nothing about a calendar week. A week naturally means a period of seven days, and if the court puts that construction on the Act it is clear that this man's average weekly earnings were six times 5s. 2d.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RÜCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

In the case of Jones v. Rhymney Iron Co. (Limited), which was also an appeal from the judge of the Tredegar County Court, the workman began to work in his employment as a haulier on a Tuesday, and continued to work every day, except Sunday, till the Wednesday in the following week, when he met with an accident which incapacitated him for work. His wages were 5s. 2d. a day.

The county court judge made an award similar to that in the last case—viz., for a weekly payment of 15s. 6d.

The employers appealed.

Ruegg, K.C., and Bertram, for the employers.

Abel Thomas, K.C., and Lloyd Morgan, for the applicant.

COLLINS, M.R.—These cases raise nearly the same point upon the construction of the Workmen's Compensation Act. In the first case, that of Ayres v. Buckeridge, it seems to me that the deceased workman was employed under circumstances which might fairly raise the inference which I think was drawn by the learned county court judge, that the employment was to continue from week to week. He was to work for sixty hours a week, and having regard to the fact that he was living at a distance from his work, special terms were made with him, which raised the inference that he was to be employed for a week. In fact he only worked for four days, including the day of his death. There was, therefore, not a complete week, still less a fortnight. But since the case of Lysons v. Andrew Knowles & Sons has been decided in the House of Lords we have got rid of the idea that it is necessary for the workman to have been in his employment for two weeks at least in order that his average weekly earnings may be ascertained. We have to fall back on the principle that the tribunal must use the materials which are at its disposal to make the best calculation it can of what the average weekly earnings were. The Act does not give complete compensation as the law does in an action of negligence. No such intention is apparent in the scheme of the Act. There need be no negligence at all, and, further, a certain nexus is established between the person injured and the employer in whose service he is injured. The only compensation given by the Act is that which is measured by the earnings in the employment of that particular employer. The problem is to find out what we are justified in supposing those earnings would have been. The Legislature has prescribed a comparatively easy method for ascertaining that where the facts admit of its being applied. Schedule I. (1) says that, where the injured workman dies and leaves dependants, the amount of compensation shall be a sum equal to his earnings in the employment of the same employer during the last three years, or, if he has been employed less than three years, then it shall be 156 times his average weekly earnings during the period of his actual employment under the same employer. Here the workman was employed for only four days, and it is impossible to apply strictly the rule laid down in the schedule. In these circumstances, on the principle laid down in Lysons v. Andrew Knowles & Sons, the workman is still entitled to compensation, and we have to use such materials as are before us for determining what his average weekly earnings would have been. The average must be arrived at by taking the actual facts and from them arriving at a hypothetical sum, because we have not the materials to arrive at anything else. I think it is fair to do as the county court judge did—i.e, to treat this workman as a person whose standard of wages at the time of his death was sixty hours a week at 7½d. an hour. I think the county court judge dealt with the case in accordance with the law as laid down in the House of Lords.

In the second case, that of Wheale v. The Rhymney Iron Co., the injured workman had worked for eight days, from a Wednesday to the following Wednesday, at wages at the rate of 5s. 2d. a day. The county court judge awarded him compensation on the basis of his having been employed for a whole week at 5s. 2d. a day—that is to say, at the rate of £1 11s. a week. It is said that he ought to have divided that sum by two, because the employment lasted over parts of two weeks. But the Act contains no suggestion whatever of a calendar week. And, apart from that consideration, it seems to me that, on the principle laid down in Lysons v. Andrew Knowles & Sons, you must not measure the compensation, where the period of work has been less than two actual weeks, by the standard of actual facts only. To do so is to confound the actual with the hypothetical. Where you have actually two weeks, you can base your calculations according to the rule of the schedule. But where you have not two whole weeks, then you are just in the same position in point of law as if you had only a week or less; you must use the actual as a step to the hypothetical, and not as itself measuring the whole possible earnings. In other words you are obliged to use the materials before you in forming a conclusion as to what he would have earned had he had the opportunity of working for two complete weeks. In this case I think we can form such a conclusion and say what we suppose would have been the man's earnings in a week, or, to put it as I think is better, what would have been his earnings taking one week with another had he had an opportunity of working during two weeks or more. It seems to me that the county court judge was justified in coming to the conclusion that the amount which this man might have expected to earn per week in this employment, if he had had the opportunity, was six times 5s. 2d.

In the third case, that of Jones v. Rhymney Iron Co., the same reasoning applies, but a difficulty is caused by the fact that the House of Lords in Lysons v. Andrew Knowles & Sons, though they held that there was no necessity for the workman to have been in employment for two weeks, yet made an order based on the hypothesis that the workman in that case had worked for parts of two weeks. But there the workman was in no sense a weekly labourer, he was merely employed for one day on two occasions. It seems to me that there is nothing in that order which obliges us in this case to divide the sum received by the workman by two, because in fact the period during which he was employed covered parts of two different weeks.

STIRLING and MATHEW, L.JJ., concurred.

Solicitors for the employers, Beyfus & Beyfus; H. P. Becher, for Simons & Powell, Pontypridd.

Solicitors for the applicants, Griffith & Gardiner; Holt-Beever & Co., for D. Evans, Brecon.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } Nov. 27.
Byrne, J. }

In re COHEN'S EXECUTORS AND LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL'S CONTRACT. (a.)

Vendor and purchaser—Real estate—Conveyance by personal representatives under the Land Transfer Act—Executors appointed for property outside the jurisdiction—Land Transfer Act, 1897, ss. 1, 2, sub-section 2; 24, sub-section 2.

A personal representative in the sense in which the expression is used in the Land Transfer Act, 1897, means a personal representative in whom, prior to the Act, a chattel real belonging to the deceased would have vested.

Executors appointed solely for the foreign property of a testator are not, under the Land Transfer Act, 1897, necessary parties to a conveyance of testator's English real estate.

Summons.

This was a vendor and purchaser summons, in which the London County Council claimed that a good title had not been shown to certain property which they had agreed to purchase.

The facts of the case, as agreed by the parties, were as follows:

Abraham Cohen, of Sydney, New South Wales, temporarily residing at the Tudor Hotel, Oxford-street, London, duly made and executed his will bearing date the 11th of July, 1900, whereby he appointed David Nathan and E. L. Samuel executors of his will as to property and premises thereinbefore given to them (which property and premises were in Australia), and his sons S. B. Cohen and Nathan M. Cohen and his son-in-law L. H. Nathan general executors of that his will. Testator died shortly afterwards, and the will was proved in the principal registry of the Probate Division on the 16th of July, 1901, by the said S. B Cohen, N. H. Cohen, and L. H. Nathan.

By a contract in writing dated the 8th of July, 1901, and made between "the executors of the will of A. Cohen" by their agents of the one part and the County Council of London of the other part, the former agreed to sell to the latter certain freehold premises of testator situate in Hackney and required for purposes authorized in the London County Council (Improvements) Act, 1900.

On the investigation of title the council requisitioned that the persons mentioned in the will as executors of testator's Australian property should join the conveyance.

F. Thompson, for the purchasers.—The question is whether under the Land Transfer Act, 1897, s. 1, sub-section 2, the real estate of the testator did not vest in all his executors alike, those nominated for his Australian property and those appointed executors for general purposes. What is necessary under section 1 of the Act is to find out who are testator's personal representatives. By the old law a testator's personal estate vested in the executors before probate, and it is now the same as to real estate. It is not enough to say that no grant of probate could be made to the Australian executors, for a Court of Probate is not a court of construction. The point for a Court of Probate to decide is what testamentary documents shall be admitted to probate: In re Parker's Trusts, [1894] 1 Ch. 707; In the Goods of Coode, L. R. 1 P. & D. 449. 16 W. R. P. Dig. 11; In the Goods of William Harris, 18 W. R 901, L. R. 2 P. & D. 83; In the Goods of Wallich, 3 S. & T. 423. So far as creditors go all executors are equally liable in respect to debts, though each is appointed executor of a different part of testator's property: Rose v. Bartlett, Cro. Car. 292, at p. 293; Williams on Executors (9th ed.), p. 200; In re Pawley and London and Provincial Bank, 48 W. R. 107, [1900] 1 Ch. 55.

Vaughan Hawkins, for the vendors.—By the common law a man might appoint executors for different parts of his property, and might in fact die testate as to his goods in one diocese and intestate as to his goods in another. All sections in the Land Transfer Act relating to personal representatives subsequent to section 2, sub-section 2, imply that the personal representatives are personal representatives within the jurisdiction. If the purchasers' view is correct, it would be necessary for all special executors to disclaim.

F. Thompson replied.

BYRNE, J., after stating the facts, said: The general question I have to decide is, Are the Australian executors necessary parties to the conveyance? There are two facts to be borne in mind. In the first place, the Australian executors are not entitled to a grant of probate here. In the second place, it is open to a testator to appoint different executors of different parts of his property. In the present case, then, the testator did what was lawful. He appointed executors of his Australian property and he appointed general executors. Now it is said that the Land Transfer Act by constituting a real representative has in fact had the operation of vesting the English real estate in the general and colonial executors jointly, and that no title can be made without their all joining in the conveyance. Now Part I., section 1, sub-section 1, of the Land Transfer Act provides: "Where real estate is vested in one person without a right in any other person to take by survivorship, it shall on his death, notwithstanding any testamentary disposition, devolve to and become vested in his personal representatives or representative from time to time as if it were a chattel real vesting in them or him." Section 24, sub-section 2, of the same Act provides that the expression personal representative in this Act means an executor or administrator. Therefore in section 1 the words "devolve to and become vested in his personal representatives" mean devolve to and become vested in his executors or administrators. Then section 2, sub-section 2, provides: "All enactments and rules of law relating to the effect of probate or letters of administration as respects chattels real and as respects the dealing with chattels real before probate or administration, and as respects the payment of costs of administration and other matters in relation to the administration of personal estate, and the powers, rights, duties, and liabilities of personal representatives in respect of personal estate, shall apply to real estate so far as the same are applicable as if that real estate were a chattel real vesting in them or him, save that it shall not be lawful for some or one only of several joint personal representatives without the authority of the court to sell or transfer real estate."

The question is, are the words in the Act "become vested in his personal representatives or representative from time to time," so large as to force me to hold that in all cases real estate vests in persons named in the will as foreign executors in respect of foreign assets, jointly with those named as executors in respect of assets in England? The true object of the Act was to provide that the persons already having or being entitled to the control of personal estate should also have or be entitled to the control of real estate. I think it not unfair with a view to try to ascertain the meaning to ask, would chattels real have vested in the colonial executors jointly with the other executors? The answer is that they would not. Would it not, then, be going against the meaning of the Act to hold that the real estate vested in persons not entitled to English probate and not entitled to chattels real. I think that the true meaning of section 1, when it speaks of personal representative, is a personal representative in whom chattels real would vest. I think, therefore, that a good title can be shown without joining the colonial executors.

(a.) Reported by J. ARTHUR PRICE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Solicitors, W. A. Blaxland; Edwards & Cohen.

Chan. Div.)
Buckley, J.) Nov. 12, 13.

BENNETT v. STONE. (a.)

Vendor and purchaser—Conditions of sale—Wilful default—Form of conveyance—Honest mistake—Vendor in possession—Account of rent and profits not on the footing of wilful default—Occupation rent—Losses incurred by vendor in carrying on business.

A vendor who delays the completion of a contract by attempting to insert a clause in the conveyance which he honestly, though erroneously, believes it to be his right to insert is not guilty of wilful default so as to disentitle him to interest on the unpaid balance of the purchase-money.

Where, in an action for specific performance, the decree is simply for an account of rents and profits received by the vendor or for his use while in possession, he will be charged with the rents which he actually received, but not with occupation rent in respect of land which he did not let; and he will be allowed any necessary disbursement in connection with taking over the property from an outgoing tenant, but not losses incurred by him in carrying on a farming business on the property when so taken over.

Adjourned summons.

By an agreement dated the 26th of September, 1898, the defendants agreed to sell to the plaintiff some land in Surrey for £75,000, of which £1,000 was to be paid immediately as a deposit and the residue on the 2nd of January, 1899.

By article 2 it was provided that on the purchaser paying his purchase-money on the date aforesaid he should as from the 25th of December, 1898, be let into possession or into receipt of the rents and profits, and up to that day all rents, rates, taxes, and outgoings should (if necessary) be apportioned, and if from any cause whatever other than the wilful default of the vendors the completion of the purchase was delayed beyond the 2nd of January, 1899, and the agreement should not be cancelled and the deposit forfeited by the vendors under the last clause thereof, the purchase-money should bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum to the day of actual payment thereof.

The deposit was paid, but the purchase was not completed on the 2nd of January, 1899. The draft conveyance furnished by the plaintiff contained words securing to him the benefit of certain covenants which had been entered into by one William Cunliff with the defendants to do certain things with respect to the land. The defendants added to this clause words restrictive of this assurance. The plaintiff objected to this addition, and, on the 22nd of June, 1899, commenced an action for specific performance.

On the 2nd of February, 1900, Buckley, J., holding that the defendants were wrong in insisting on this addition, pronounced judgment for specific performance, and ordered that interest, if any, be computed at the rate of 5 per cent. on the £74,000, or at such lower rate as the same might be reducible to under the contract, from the 2nd of January, 1899; the judgment also ordered "an account of the rents and profits of the said hereditaments received by the defendants or by any other person or persons by the order or for the use of the defendant" since the 2nd of January, 1899.

By his certificate dated the 13th of June, 1901, the master found that the amount of the interest due from the plaintiff to the defendants was £8,661 12s. 6d., and that the defendants had received on account of the rents and profits of the hereditaments £776 18s., and that they had paid, or were entitled to be allowed on account thereof, £1,797 6s. 10d. It appeared that the tenant of about two-thirds of the land had given up possession on the 29th of September, 1899, and that the defendants, instead of letting his farm, had entered into possession themselves, and, for the purpose of working it, had purchased quantities of farming stock and utensils; the sums paid for these, as well as £469 11s. 9d. paid to the outgoing tenant in respect of his tenant rights, were included in the £1,797 6s. 10d.

The plaintiff now took out a summons to vary the certificate (1) by disallowing the amount allowed for interest; (2) by disallowing such of the expenses comprised in the £1,797 6s. 10d. (including the £469 11s. 9d.) as were incurred by the defendants in consequence of their farming the land themselves; (3) by charging the defendants with an occupation rent in respect of the land which they did not let.

H. Terrell, K.C., and Sheldon, for the plaintiff.—The delay was due to the defendants not having accepted the draft conveyance without alteration; it was held at the trial that they ought to have done so. A vendor owes to a purchaser the duty of doing all that he is bound to do under the contract; if he does not do that he is in default. "Wilful" means that the person whose action or default is in question is a free agent and knows what he intends to do or not to do: In re Young and Harston's Contract, 34 W. R. 84, 31 Ch. D. 168. If, therefore, a vendor knows all the facts, and honestly, it may be, puts a wrong construction on those facts, he is guilty of wilful default. Honest mistake by a vendor in relation to a matter of title is an exception to this rule. In all the cases where a mistake by a vendor has been held not to be wilful default it has been as to a matter of title; on the other hand, wherever the mistake has has been in relation to the execution of the conveyance, the vendor has been held to be guilty of wilful default. A mistake as to the form of conveyance is covered by the same principle. [They also cited De Visme v. De Visme, 1 Mac. & G. 336; Sherwin v. Shakspear, 2 W. R. 668, 5 D. M. & G. 517; In re Hetling and Merton's Contract, 42 W. R. 19, [1893] 3 Ch. 269; In re Mayor of London and Tubbs' Contract, [1894] 2 Ch. 524; In re Wilson's and Steven's Contract, 43 W. R. 23, [1894] 3 Ch. 546; In re Woods and Lewis's Contract, 46 W. R. 643, [1898] 2 Ch. 211; North v. Percival, 46 W. R. 552, [1898] 2 Ch. 128.] On the question of rents and profits the defendants made no effort to procure a tenant from year to year, and ought, therefore, to be charged with an occupation rent. In an account of rents and profits of an estate they cannot charge the plaintiff with losses incurred in a business: Phillips v. Silvester, 21 W. R.

(a.) Reported by H. L. ORMISTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

179, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 173; Earl of Egmont v. Smith, 6 Ch. D. 469, 25 W. R. Dig. 79.

Astbury, K.C., and Dunham, for the defendants.—This was an innocent mistake on the part of the vendor. A vendor is not guilty of wilful default unless he omits to do something intending thereby to make a default; a man cannot intend to make a default unless he knows that what he omits to do will be a default. On the question of rents and profits, an occupation rent cannot be charged to a vendor remaining in possession unless he is guilty of wilful default. The losses incurred by the defendants in carrying on the farm ought to be allowed to the defendants because, being in possession, they were in the position of trustees and, therefore, bound to keep the land in cultivation.

BUCKLEY, J., after stating the facts as above set out, continued: The neat point in this case is, Whether, when a vendor is wrong as to some words to be contained in the conveyance, that is a wilful default for the purpose of such a clause as this? The authorities as to what is wilful default in such a clause as this are very numerous. The parties have contended before me on authorities up to a very recent date from In re Young and Harston's Contract, and they have cited to me some half-a-dozen cases of which that is the commencement. Now in In re Young and Harston's Contract Bowen, L.J., used words, which have always been referred to and cited since, as to what, in such a contract as this, is the meaning, first, of the word "wilful," and, secondly, of the word "default." Those words stand wholly untouched, so far as I can see, by any subsequent decision, except that they are modified by the language which the Court of Appeal used in In re The Mayor of London and Tubbs' Contract, where Lindley, L.J., after referring to what Lord Bramwell had said in Lewis v. Great Western Railway Co., 26 W. R. 255, 3 Q. B. D. 195, and to what Bowen, L.J., had said in In re Young and Harston's Contract, goes on to say that Lord Bramwell's words are, in his opinion, "quite consistent with Bowen, L.J.'s observations in In re Young and Harston's Contract, if it be borne in mind that Bowen, L.J., presupposed knowledge of what was done and intention to do it, and was not addressing himself to a case of honest mistake or oversight." I think, after that expression in Lindley, L.J.'s, judgment, Bowen, L.J.'s words in In re Young and Harston's Contract are to be read as modified, if there be any modification in it, in the sense that Bowen, L.J., was not addressing himself to an honest mistake or oversight; and if there be an honest mistake or oversight, that will not be a wilful default.

The result of the authorities, I think, comes to this, that by the word "wilful" is meant that the vendor, being a free agent and in a position to do either of one of two acts, chooses to do the one and not to do the other; and that "default" includes the case where the vendor, owing to the purchaser the duty to act reasonably in all matters relating to the completion, does an act in breach of that duty. The vendor owes to the purchaser, among other things, the duty of acquainting himself with all the material facts, and it will be a breach of his duty if, knowing the facts, he elects to do an act which is not reasonable, or if he neglects to acquaint himself with the facts and, consequently, does an act which is not reasonable. It is not necessary to show intentional delay or wilful obstruction; but it is necessary to show that the vendor has committed an act of default. This is not satisfied by showing that by mistake or oversight he has done or omitted to do something which he ought to have done. Lord Bramwell, in the words to which I have referred in Lewis v. Great Western Railway Co., was dealing with the words "wilful misconduct" and not "wilful default"; and therefore what he says is only applicable by way of analogy. His words are these: "'Wilful misconduct' means misconduct to which the will is a party, something opposed to accident or negligence; the misconduct, not the conduct, must be wilful." If I may venture to appropriate that language to myself with variation I should say that "wilful default" means that, not the act, but the default, must be wilful. You must predicate of the act that it is a particular class of act; it is not enough to show that the act is wilful. What you must show is that the default is wilful, which means that you must predicate that the default is one of a particular kind. Now just a word as to the half-a-dozen cases which have been cited, in three of which it was held that there was not, and in three of which it was held that there was, an act of wilful default. It was held in In re Young and Harston's Contract that it was wilful default for a vendor to go abroad two days before the date fixed for completion, with the result that he could not execute the contract because he was not there to execute it; it was held in In re Hetling and Merton's Contract that the vendor, who knew he had to complete and who relied upon a power of attorney enabling somebody else to sign his name for him, which was not, in point of fact, sufficient for the purpose, had been guilty of wilful default; and it was held in In re Wilson and Steven's Contract that a vendor who did not obtain admittances to certain copyholds, so as to be in a position to complete at the date of completion, was guilty of wilful default. Contrasted with those cases are these: In re Mayor of London and Tubbs' Contract, where the mistake was that the vendor, in describing his title, erroneously described his title to some part of the premises; In re Woods and Lewis's Contract, which was a case of an unknown defect of title; and lastly, North v. Percival, where the question between the parties was whether the contract included 36 acres or 42 acres—the purchaser insisted that it was 36 acres only; the vendor said he must take the 42 acres or nothing—the purchaser was held entitled to specific performance—the purchaser succeeded, but it was held that the vendor's repudiation of the contract by resisting the claim to specific performance did not constitute such wilful default as to disentitle him to interest. Now when one comes to see what those several decisions are, one must come to this conclusion, that in each case where it was held to be wilful default the vendor was doing an act, intending not to do the contrary, which was not a reasonable act to do with a view to completion. The man ought not to have gone abroad; the man ought not to have neglected to look at his power of attorney to see if it was good enough or not; the man ought not to have run the risk of neglecting to get in the copyhold admittances—it was his duty to have prepared himself to complete and he did not do so. As to the others, it has been argued before me, as to two of them, at any rate, that they were cases in which the vendor had made a mistake in his title (and we know the courts are easy to people who make a mistake in title, because it is not easy to know whether you have a good title or not) and that it was upon that ground that the vendor succeeded. It seems to me that in In re The Mayor of London and Tubbs' Contract the court did not put it upon the ground that the mistake was a mistake of title; it put it upon the ground that the vendor had been the victim or had been guilty of honest mistake or oversight; Lindley, L.J.'s, judgment upon that seems to me plain, because, if he was going to put it upon the ground of a mistake of title, that ground was enough for the whole decision; and what was the reason of qualifying Bowen, L.J.'s words in In re Young and Harston's Contract, by saying that they did not refer to oversight, if he was going to decide on the other ground? It was not a mistake of title, and, therefore, the man was not to be excused on that ground. It seems to me that what I have got to look to is whether the vendors in this case have made an honest mistake. Now during the argument I asked the question once or twice whether there is any case to be found in the books in which the question has arisen between purchaser and vendor as to the form or language or contents of the conveyance, in which ultimately on the litigation of the question it turned out that the purchaser was right and the vendor was wrong; and there was no case to be found. Such a question must have arisen over and over again, and if such an action could be maintained I should have expected to find an authority to that effect, but it is not to be found. The particular matter here is simply this: the agreement having been executed in September, 1898, the vendors had been pressing the plaintiff repeatedly from that time onwards to complete, and he did not complete. I think he could not complete because he had not got the money. The conveyance had been arranged on the 23rd of May, 1899, and had been approved of on behalf of both parties. It came back on the 22nd of June, in a form which, as I held at the trial, the vendors had wrongly made. On the same day the plaintiff issued his writ in this action. The result was that he got specific performance, and he got his costs, because, in my view, the party who was in the wrong must pay his costs; if he was in the wrong, honestly or not, he has occasioned the costs and must pay them. But when you come to the question of wilful default, it is a different one altogether. I think the conduct of these vendors was not wilful default within the meaning of the contract. That is not the only ground on which I decide this case; it is quite plain after In re The Mayor of London and Tubbs' Contract that what I have to look to in this case is not necessarily solely whether there was wilful default, but whether the wilful default was the causa causans of the delay; because the court there, although they differed, Kay, L.J., dissenting, as to what was wilful default, were all of opinion that if there had been wilful default the delay was not attributable to that cause. I am satisfied that from 1898 until the 22nd of June, 1899, the vendors had been repeatedly pressing the purchaser to complete his contract. He had not got the money to do so and was seeking to get it here and there, and they were unable to obtain completion, and the completion did not take place really because the purchaser had not got the money. The writ was issued on the 22nd of June, 1899. The matter was not completed and the draft conveyance was first sent in on the 5th of March, 1901, more than a year after the judgment; and for all that appears the plaintiff, up to the present moment, is not provided with the purchase-money to complete the purchase. I do not think if there was a wilful default, which I think there was not, that that was the causa causans of the delay. The purchaser has not been kept out of his money, he has simply been keeping the vendors out of their money, and I see no reason to deprive them of the 5 per cent. interest which they contracted for in 1898. I think, therefore, the summons to vary the master's certificate as to interest fails.

Then the next point is as to the account of the rents and profits. It will be noticed that this decree contains no account upon the footing of wilful neglect or default, it is simply an account of rents and profits received by them or for their use. It seems to me that, in taking that account, they are to be charged, of course, with the rents which they received; but I find no machinery there for charging them with an occupation rent of the land which they did not let, that would be chargeable under a decree for wilful neglect and default; but it is not in this decree; they are chargeable, therefore, only with the rents they received. Then what are they to be allowed as against that? It seems to me they must be allowed the £469 11s. 9d. which they had to pay to the outgoing tenant upon his leaving the premises; that was a necessary disbursement in connection with the taking over of that property from that tenant. But they ask for something more than that—they ask for losses incurred by carrying on the business after they had taken it over and when they did not let it. Evidence has been filed in which it is in dispute whether they could have let it or not. That would have been material if there had been an account on the footing of wilful neglect and default, but I do not think it is material on this account. It seems to me that as a result of this I cannot say, and I do not mean to say, that the defendants are not entitled to get from the plaintiff anything in respect of this expenditure, but I do say that they are not entitled to it under this decree. I do not see how in a decree directing an account of rents and profits they can have an account of business carried on by them upon the premises which has resulted in a loss. Whether it was necessary or not I do not know; it is not in the decree,

Solicitors, R. Davies & Son; Henry White.

K. B. Div. (Lawrance, J.) — Aug. 12, 1901.

LONG EATON RECREATION GROUNDS CO. (LIMITED) v. MIDLAND RAILWAY CO. (a.)

Lands Clauses Acts—"Injuriously affected"—Breach by statutory body—Railway works—Owner of adjoining property — Damages for depreciation to such property by reason of breach of restrictive covenants—Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, s. 68.

A railway company purchased land from grantees of the plaintiffs, with notice of restrictive covenants entered into by such grantees with the plaintiffs, for the benefit of other lands retained by the plaintiffs. The railway company did certain specific acts which, if done by a private purchaser, would admittedly have been breaches of the restrictive covenants for which such purchaser would be liable to be restrained by injunction.

Held, following Metropolitan Board of Works v. McCarthy, 23 W. R. 115, L. R. 7 H. L. 243, at p. 253, that although no part of the plaintiffs' land had been acquired, nevertheless the plaintiffs could recover compensation from the railway company, because by the construction of the railway there had been an interference with their rights under the restrictive covenants, which rights added to the market value of their property, and by the interference of the defendants this property, as property, had been lessened in value.

This was an action upon an award which was tried before Lawrance, J., at Derby, and further argued on questions of law before the learned judge in London, when judgment was reserved.

Hugo Young, K.C., and W. H. Stevenson, for the plaintiffs.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Baggallay, K.C., W. J. Noble, and C. H. Sargant, for the defendants.

The facts and arguments sufficiently appear from the judgment.

LAWRANCE, J.—The defendants in this case are owners in fee simple of certain land situate on the north-west of Springfield-avenue, at Long Eaton, which they purchased from grantees of the plaintiffs. The conveyances from the plaintiffs to these grantees contained covenants by the grantees that they would not erect or permit to be erected any erection or building of any kind except a fence wall not more than two feet high, with suitable iron palisades, nearer to Springfield-avenue than a line which on the plan is marked "building line," and would not erect any buildings on the land conveyed other than private dwelling-houses with proper conveniences thereto fronting Springfield-avenue of a certain value; and would not carry on upon the land conveyed any trade or business of a noisy or offensive character. The defendants purchased with notice of these restrictive covenants. They have constructed a railway embankment with a permanent railway on the land, and it is admitted that the embankment encroaches beyond the building line. Instead of a two-feet fence wall they have erected a post and rail fence nearer Springfield-avenue than the building line and they intend to run trains along the railway. In my opinion these specific acts if done by a private purchaser of the defendants' land would have been a breach of the restrictive covenants for which such purchaser would be liable to be restrained by injunction. It was argued for the defendants that a railway embankment was not a "building" within the meaning of the covenant, and several cases—Child v. Douglas, 2 W. R. 461, Kay 560; Bowes v. Law, 18 W. R. 640, L. R. 9 Eq. 636; Manners v. Johnson, 24 W. R. 481, 1 Ch. D. 673; and Frith v. Tryer, [1893] 3 Ch. 158—were cited in support of that contention. In my view these cases do not materially assist the discussion, and in the absence of any conclusive authority upon the point, I hold, without much hesitation, that a railway embankment alone—i.e., even without its possible appurtenances such as signal boxes and the like, is a building within the meaning of the covenant, the object of which is to maintain a uniform range of buildings: see dictum of Sir W. Page Wood, V.C., in Child v. Douglas, Kay 560, at p. 567. But it can hardly be contended that if a private owner were to make and use a railway on this land he would not be carrying on a "business of a noisy character" within the meaning of the covenant. However, the defendants have not taken any part of the plaintiffs' land, which lies entirely on the east of Springfield-avenue, and the question therefore is whether the land of the plaintiffs has been "injuriously affected" by the execution of those works within section 68 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845.

Now the test for answering the question whether the land has been "injuriously affected" was proposed by Mr. Thesiger and adopted by Lord Cairns in the Metropolitan Board of Works v. McCarthy, 23 W. R. 115, L. R. 7 H. L. 243, at p. 253, and it is this: "Where by the construction there is physical interference with any right public or private which the owners or occupiers of property are by law entitled to make use of in connection with such property, and which gives an additional market value to such property apart from the uses to which the particular owner or occupier might put it, there is a title to compensation if, by reason of such interference the property as a property is lessened in value." It seems to me the present case falls within that definition.

The plaintiffs are the owners and occupiers of land on the east side of Springfield-avenue, there has been a physical interference by the defendants with the right of the plaintiffs to have no buildings other than those of a certain size and description as specified in the conveyance erected on land which the defendants have taken; there has been a similar interference with the plaintiffs' right to have the building line regarded and the brick wall built as provided if built at all, and there has also been an interference with their right by express covenant that this land shall not be used for any business of a noisy character. I think all these rights were rights which the plaintiffs were entitled to make use of in connection with their property on the east side of Springfield-avenue. They only exist for the purpose of maintaining and improving that property, and any covenants entered into with them must necessarily be entered into with a view to and in connection with the land to which the plaintiffs are indebted for their name and existence. I have no doubt whatever that the covenants by the defendants' predecessors in title gave an additional market value to the plaintiffs' property, and that by reason of the defendants' interference the plaintiffs' property, as a property, is lessened in value apart from the uses to which they are at present putting it. In fact, as far as regards the present uses I think probably less damage would be done to the property when used as a recreation ground than if it were put to the more ordinary uses of property of this description.

The real question on this point of the case is whether the benefit of a restrictive covenant is matter for compensation if none of the land is taken for the benefit of which the restrictive covenant is imposed. There seems to be no direct authority on this point. The question must therefore be dealt with on principle.

Now, there can be no doubt that interference with an easement is matter for compensation, though no part of the dominant tenement is taken, and this is so, not because an easement is land (for an easement cannot be taken compulsorily under the Lands Clauses Act: see Duke of Bedford v. Dawson, L. R. 20 Eq. 353, 24 W. R. Dig. 236), but because by the interference the dominant tenement is injuriously affected. But for the purpose of compensation it seems to make little difference whether the owner of the servient tenement has granted a right of light over his tenement to the owner of the dominant tenement, or whether he has covenanted not to erect any obstacle on his tenement which will obstruct the access of light to the dominant tenement. Derogation from the grant in the former case, and breach of the restrictive covenant in the latter, would both be wrongs for which a remedy by injunction would be available. The damage to the dominant tenement would be the same in either case. In the case of In re Masters and the Great Western Railway Co., 49 W. R. Dig. 20, [1900] 2 Q. B. 677, and in the Court of Appeal in 49 W. R. 499, [1901] 2 K. B. 84, the owner of one plot of land covenanted with the owner of an adjoining plot, a mine owner, that the latter should have the right to sink a shaft in the first-named plot subject to the reasonable approval of the owner of that plot. This right was held to be one, for interference with which the mine owner was entitled to compensation, on the ground that his land, though no part of it was taken, was injuriously affected. No doubt in Baily v. De Crespigny, 17 W. R. 494, L. R. 4 Q. B. 180, Hannen, J., delivering the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench, seems to have expressed the view that interference with the benefit of such covenants as those in the present case would not give a right to compensation, but those observations were not necessary to the decision of that case, and they seem to be directed more to the right of action at law than to the right to compensation under the Lands Clauses Act. They were not treated as conclusive in Kirby v. Harrogate School Board, [1896] 1 Ch. 437, 44 W. R. Dig. 144, where restrictive covenants are contemplated as a basis of compensation and are put upon the same footing with easements. Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway v. Anderson, 46 W. R. 509, [1898] 2 Ch. 394, 47 W. R. Dig. 168, and Fleming v. Newport Railway Co., 8 App. Cas. 265, tend in the same direction, and I think that upon principle, land which is entitled to the benefit of a restrictive covenant, a right highly analogous to the benefit of an easement, is injuriously affected if that benefit is extinguished, although no part of the land itself is taken.

Three points made by counsel for the defendants require notice. First, that these breaches were matter for action at law, and therefore not matter for compensation under the Lands Clauses Act. I am clearly of opinion that this contention is not well founded. The acts done by the railway company were, I think, reasonably necessary for their authorized railway and were therefore not matter of action: see Hammersmith Railway Co. v. Brand, 18 W. R. 12, L. R. 4 H. L. 171; Kirby v. Harrogate School Board; and Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway v. Anderson.

The second point requiring notice is this. It is argued by counsel for the defendants that no land can be injuriously affected unless some land or some interest in land is taken. It is clearly not necessary that any land should be taken, because by section 68 of the Lands Clauses Act if the lands are taken "or injuriously affected" compensation is payable. Then is it necessary that some interest in land should be taken? That depends upon the meaning of "interest in land." If the phrase excludes an easement such as a right of way or right of light, then it is clearly not necessary that such an interest in land should be taken. But if an interest in land includes a right of light, I cannot see why it should not equally include a restrictive covenant which is for many purposes very analogous to an easement. The plaintiffs are owners of land entitled to the benefit of a right very analogous to an easement, and differing but slightly from the right in In re Masters and the Great Western Railway, which was held to be the subject of compensation. I am of opinion, if it is necessary that an interest in land should be taken, these rights of the plaintiffs are a sufficient interest. That interest has been taken, and the land of the plaintiffs has been injuriously affected in consequence.

The third point arises upon the covenant not to carry on any business of a noisy character, and the compensation claimed, and in my opinion recoverable, on account of that covenant. It is argued, and no doubt it was held in Hammersmith Railway Co. v. Brand that no compensation could be recovered by the owner of the land, no part of which had been actually taken, for annoyance caused through the ordinary working of a railway, although it is to be observed full compensation for such annoyance could be recovered if any part of the land were taken: Cooper Essex v. The Acton Local Board, 14 App. Cas. 153, 37 W. R. Dig. 104. But no case has decided that where land, being under an express covenant that it shall not be used for a noisy business and that covenant being for the benefit of other land, is taken by a railway or other statutory body carrying on a business of a noisy character, the owner of the land for whose benefit the covenant is imposed is debarred from recovering compensation for the loss and consequent injurious affecting of his land. I think that upon principle he ought to be entitled to compensation: see Fleming v. Newport Railway Co., 8 App. Cas. 265, at p. 278. Where land is taken which is bound by a covenant restricting its user for the benefit of other lands, the owner of that other land suffers an injury which is special and apart from that which the rest of the community are exposed to. His right is, as I have said, hardly distinguishable for this purpose from an easement, which would unquestionably, if disturbed, give a right to compensation. The presence of the restrictive covenant distinguishes such a case as this from cases of the class of Rex v. Pease, 4 B. & Ad. 30; Vaughan v. Taff Vale Railway Co., 8 W. R. 549, 5 H. & N. 679; and Hammersmith Railway Co. v. Brand, the principle of which is in my opinion inapplicable.

I think, therefore, that upon all these claims the plaintiffs are entitled to compensation, and I give judgment for them for £650, the amount of the award, with interest.

Solicitors, Lee & Watts, for Whittingham & Williams, Derby; Beale & Co.

K. B. Div.
(Ridley and Phillimore, JJ.) } May 21, 22, 1901.

GRAHAM AND OTHERS v. COMMISSIONERS OF HIS MAJESTY'S WORKS AND PUBLIC BUILDINGS. (a.)

Crown—Commissioners of Works and Public Buildings—Contract by—Liability of commissioners—Principal and agent.

The Commissioners of His Majesty's Works and Public Buildings, who were incorporated by 37 & 38 Vict. c. 84, may be sued in an action for breach of a contract entered into by them as such commissioners.

Argument of a question of law raised by the defendants on the pleadings.

The action was for damages for alleged breach by the defendants of a contract contained in an indenture of the 11th of September, 1899, made between the plaintiffs and the defendants.

The plaintiffs were builders and contractors, and the defendants were a corporate body incorporated under the Commissioners of Works Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 28), and the Works and Public Buildings Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 84), s. 2.

The plaintiffs in their statement of claim alleged that by an indenture of the 11th of September, 1899, the plaintiffs contracted with the defendants to erect for the latter a post-office at Stalybridge, and to complete the same according to certain specifications and conditions annexed to the said indenture, in consideration whereof the defendants agreed to pay the plaintiffs the sum of £5,743 by instalments; that the plaintiffs commenced to erect the said post-office, but the defendants on the 2nd of January, 1901, served a written notice upon the plaintiffs, wrongfully determining the said contract.

The defendants in their defence alleged that the action was not maintainable, and that the plaintiffs could only proceed (if at all) by petition of right.

The defendants submitted that they were a corporate body incorporated under the Acts above mentioned, and that the contract in question was entered into by the defendants as servants, agents, and on behalf of the Crown, as a department of the Government, and not otherwise.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The defendants then stated facts which they alleged justified them in determining the contract.

The plaintiffs in reply denied that the contract was entered into by the defendants as servants and agents of the Crown as a department of Government, and alleged that the contract was entered into by the defendants as principals.

The Commissioners of Works Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 28), provides:

Section 1.—The persons who for the time being, under the provisions of the Act passed in the last session of Parliament, chapter forty-two, shall be the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings, shall be and they are hereby constituted a corporation, by the name and style of "The Commissioners of Her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings," and by that name shall and may have perpetual succession, and use a common seal, to be by them from time to time altered as they shall think fit, for the purpose of taking and holding all the lands, tenements, and hereditaments whatsoever, of every tenure, by this Act vested in them, or hereafter to be vested in or purchased by them under or by virtue of the provisions of this Act, and of conveying, assigning, leasing, underleasing, or otherwise disposing of the same lands, tenements, and hereditaments, and of entering into any covenants or agreements respecting any such hereditaments vested or to be purchased, taken, or disposed of as aforesaid, but not for any other purpose.

The Works and Public Buildings Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 84)—an Act to regulate the incorporation of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings, and for other purposes relating thereto—recites:

Whereas there are divers corporations created by the various Acts of Parliament mentioned in the first schedule to this Act, and now subsisting under the same name of "The Commissioners of Her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings," and the commissioners for the time being of Her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings are also incorporated under the name of the Battersea Park Commissioners, by the Act mentioned in the second schedule to this Act, and it is expedient that all such corporations should be amalgamated:

Be it enacted:

Section 2.—The commissioners for the time being of Her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings as incorporated by and for the purposes of the Act of the fourteenth and fifteenth years of her Majesty, chapter forty-two, are hereby declared to be and shall be a corporation to all intents and purposes, and as such shall have and hold and may exercise not only all the estates, property, interests, privileges, and powers now vested in or enjoyed by them under that Act, but also all estates, property, interests, privileges, and powers now vested in or held or enjoyed by the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings as a corporation under the Act of the fifteenth and sixteenth years of her Majesty, chapter twenty-eight, or any subsequent Act, and in or by the Battersea Park Commissioners.

Sir R. B. Finlay, A.G. (Askwith with him), for the defendants.—This action cannot be maintained. When a person contracts as a servant of the Crown and on behalf of the Crown he is not liable on such contract, and no action thereon can be maintained against him: Gidley v. Lord Palmerston, 3 Br. & B. 275, 7 Moore, 91; Palmer v. Hutchinson, 6 App. Cas. 619, 30 W. R. Dig. 138; Dunn v. Macdonald, 45 W. R. 355, [1897] 1 Q. B. 401, 555. The only remedy, if any, in such a case as this, is by petition of right. Further, the fact that the defendants have been incorporated by various statutes makes no difference as regards their being liable to be sued on such a contract as exists in the present case. In none of the various incorporating statutes relating to the Public Works Department is there any clause as to suing and being sued, except where it was expressly intended by the Legislature that there should be such a power, for example, as in section 2 of the Act dealing with Westminster Bridge (16 & 17 Vict. c. 46), where the words "shall and may sue and be sued" are inserted, and also as in the Act dealing with the General Post Office, Edinburgh (21 & 22 Vict. c. 40), s. 22. The prerogative of the Crown cannot be taken away except by express words: Cushing v. Dupuy, 5 App. Cas. 409, at p. 419, 28 W. R. Dig. 33; Théberge v. Landry, 25 W. R. 216, 2 App. Cas. 102. The commissioners therefore cannot be sued, and no action in this case lies.

The following cases were also cited: Reg. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, In re Nathan, 32 W. R. 543, 12 Q. B. D. 461, at p. 471; Reg. v. McCann, 16 W. R. 397, L R. 3 Q. B. 141, at p. 147; Jones v. Mersey Docks, 13 W. R. 1069, 11 H. L. Cas. 443; In re Wood's Estate, Ex parte Her Majesty's Commissioners of Works and Public Buildings, 34 W. R. 375, 31 Ch. D. 607; In re Mill's Estate, Ex parte Commissioners of Works and Public Buildings, 35 W. R. 65, 34 Ch. D. 24.

Scott Fox (J. Andrew Strahan with him), for the plaintiffs.—The action is maintainable. It is an action upon a contract made between the plantiffs and the commissioners, who are an incorporated body having power to enter into the contract. It is not an action against the Crown. There has been a breach of this contract by the defendants, and by the ordinary law of principal and agent the plaintiffs are entitled to sue the defendants in respect of such breach. The whole question here is whether the defendants contracted for themselves or whether they have contracted as agents for the Crown. If the latter, of course the Crown would be a principal, and the defendants, being agents, could not be sued because there would be no contract between them and the plaintiffs: see Churchward v. The Queen, L. R. 1 Q. B. 173. But in the present case the defendants were contracting for themselves as principals and not as agents, and therefore are liable upon the contract. In Nurse v. Lord Seymour, 13 Beav. 254, it is true, it was held that under 7 Geo. 4, c. 77, the Commissioners of Woods and Forests could not sue or be sued for specific performance of contracts entered into by them, but by section 1 of The Commissioners of Works and Public Buildings Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 28) they were expressly incorporated. Thorn v. Commissioners of Her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings, 32 Beav. 490, and Corbett v. Commissioners of Her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings, 16 W. R. 889, 18 L. T. Rep. 548, are both authorities showing that the commissioners are liable to be sued. By section 2 of 37 & 38 Vict. c. 84 the commissioners are expressly made a corporation to all intents and purposes. Further, in the case of In re Wood's Estate it was held that the commissioners do not represent the Crown. [The court stopped counsel.]

Askwith replied.

RIDLEY, J.—I think judgment in this case ought to be given for the plaintiffs. If the question had turned upon the construction of the Acts of Parliament which were referred to by the Attorney-General, and which deal with the constitutions of the present defendants and of the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, I should have required time to consider those Acts of Parliament, and to go through them more carefully than it is necessary to do upon the present occasion. I think, however, that the point raised in this case can be decided without special reference to the Acts to which I have alluded. The present question depends upon the general principle which regulates the position of a public officer—I mean the principle that an officer appointed by the Government and treated as an agent for the public is not liable to be sued upon a contract made by him in that capacity. That is the general principle. The question here is, Have the present defendants, the Commissioners of His Majesty's Works and Public Buildings, been in this case acting as agents for the Crown or not? There are several decisions which may guide us upon this question, and I propose to make my judgment turn upon those previous decisions rather than upon the particular instances which were quoted on behalf of the plaintiffs, in which these Commissioners of Public Works and Buildings have been held liable under particular Acts of Parliament. In 37 & 38 Vict. c. 84 there are, no doubt, provisions which might make the liability of the commissioners depend upon those particular provisions and considerations rather than upon the general principle. But the question which arises in this case and which we have to determine is, I think, this: Is the contract sued upon made for and on behalf of the Crown, or is it a contract made by the persons sued, for themselves? Of course, it may be either. Let us now consider the authorities that have been cited on this part of the case. First, there is the early case of Gidley v. Lord Palmerston, in which Lord Palmerston, the Secretary of State for War, was sued upon his obligation to pay a retiring allowance alleged to be due to the plaintiff. It could not be argued that he became liable to that obligation otherwise than as a servant of the Crown. There was no other liability which could rest upon him. He had made no contract, but it was from his position as Secretary of State for War that the liability was said to rest upon him. It was accordingly held that no action would lie against him. Next let us take the case of Dunn v. Macdonald. In that case the defendant had been appointed her Majesty's Commissioner and Consul-General for a protectorate in Africa, and he had engaged the plaintiff to serve with him for three years. Before going into what was actually decided in that case, I may make this observation about it. That case, it might be suggested, was a case in which primâ facie one would say that, unless the defendant had been a servant of the Crown—in his capacity, that is to say, as Commissioner and Consul-General—he never would have engaged the plaintiff at all as such public servant, so that it is not so strong a case in that way as the case of Gidley v. Lord Palmerston, because here was a man appointed for a particular purpose engaging another person to serve him in a particular capacity and for a particular purpose. The decision of the Court of Appeal there was that there was no liability upon the defendant, as he had not made, and he was held not to have made, an express contract, and he was held not to be liable upon the implied warranty that he had authority to contract as he did. I do not propose to go through that case at length, because I think it is rather the application of the principle than the principle itself that we have here to consider, for the principle itself seems to be undoubted. I will, however, quote a short passage from the judgment of Lopes, L.J., in which he says: "The liabilities of public agents on contracts made by them in their public capacity are on a different footing from the liabilities of ordinary agents on their contracts. In the former case, unless there is something special which would be evidence of an intention to be personally liable, an agent acting on behalf of a government is not liable for breach of a contract made in his public capacity, even though he would by the terms of the contract be bound if it were an agency of a private nature." That, I think, means that, although the agent were to put his own name in the contract without stating that he was agent for the Crown, if, from the surrounding circumstances of the case, you can gather that he does contract as agent for the Crown, and in that capacity only, he is not liable upon the contract. It might be, therefore, from the surrounding circumstances of this case, that we ought to conclude that these defendants were contracting as servants of the Crown only, but all the facts in the case point, as I think, in the opposite direction. It is far removed from the two previous cases I have referred to. It is a case in which a public body make these contracts in the course of their duty in all parts of the country in respect of works required for his Majesty's Government, The defendants seem to me to be making these contracts in their own capacity, and that is the inference I should draw here. There is no such special appointment as there was in the case of Sir Claude Macdonald in Dunn v. Macdonald, and certainly there is no such relation between the defendants and the contractors as existed in the case of Gidley v. Lord Palmerston. I therefore think that this is a case in which the defendants have expressly contracted for themselves. The funds from which they will have to pay, if judgment is given against them, are, I suppose, the funds which will be granted by Parliament. This is sufficient to decide the case; and the previous decision in the case of In re Wood's Estate goes far to show that that is the way in which Lindley, L.J., regarded the position of Her Majesty's Commissioners of Works and Buildings in that case. In the course of his judgment Lindley, L.J., said: "No authority has been cited to show that this particular corporation, incorporated by the Act of 1855 for certain public purposes, is to be treated as the Crown, and there is no ground for holding that a corporation specially incorporated in this way is in the same position, as regards costs, as the Crown." It is quite true that the precise point did not arise in that case, for there the decision turned on the Act 18 & 19 Vict. c. 95, and the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, which by section 1 became incorporated in the subsequent Act when passed. That being so, it was there held that these commissioners were bound by the provisions contained in the Lands Clauses Act, as to costs, by virtue of the Acts of Parliament themselves. The objection that the Crown would not be bound did arise, and it was dealt with by the court in the way I have mentioned. There is no ground for holding that such a corporation, specially incorporated in this way, is in the same position as the Crown. I think, for these reasons, that this case must be treated as one in which the defendants have specially made this contract, and they are liable to be sued upon it.

PHILLIMORE, J.—I am of the same opinion, but I prefer to put my judgment upon a somewhat narrower ground. I think that the Attorney-General rightly treated this case in his argument as a question of determining what the contract was. The Crown cannot be sued, and, as the Crown cannot be sued, so neither can the subject take an indirect action against the Crown by suing a Crown servant in contract as the agent for the Crown. A Crown servant acting as agent for the Crown is no more liable than any other agent acting for a principal. But, for the purpose of the conduct of business, it is extremely convenient that the Crown should establish, with the sanction of Parliament, officials or corporations, who can speedily sue and be sued, upon business engagements of the Crown, without the formalities of the procedure necessary when a subject is seeking redress from his Sovereign. It is desirable—and otherwise business could not be carried on—that persons who contract with the Crown for business purposes should have the power of appealing from the head of the Government department to his Majesty's courts of justice as any subject may have of appealing against misconstruction of his contract by his fellow-subject. For that purpose the Crown has in certain cases, with the consent of Parliament, established certain officials who are to be treated as though they were agents of the Crown for this purpose, subject to contracting as principals. The Postmaster-General, and apparently the Commissioners of Woods and Forests as being a corporation incorporated for the purpose, are instances of this. There is no doubt that for certain purposes these very commissioners, His Majesty's Commissioners of Works and Public Buildings, are liable to be sued. In the same way the Legislature has, under the Merchant Shipping Act, appointed that a public official may be sued in tort, not for his own tort, but for the tort possibly of the President of the Board of Trade, or of some official at a seaport, in detaining a ship as unseaworthy which in fact is not unseaworthy. In each of those cases the real person sued is the Crown, and the real person sought to be attacked is the Crown, and in such cases, if judgment is given against the public official, the judgment is a declaratory judgment only. No execution can follow upon it, because there are no moneys out of which the damages can be paid, except out of such moneys as Parliament votes for the purpose. It amounts to getting a decision upon a question of this kind: if this were the case of a subject, what would be the decision of the court upon the case brought against him. The principle in the Merchant Shipping Act is a useful one, as it shows conclusively that the Crown is really the person attacked, though through the medium of a subject, because the privileges which the Crown has as to mode of trial apply in such cases. That is shown by the case of Dixon v. Farrer, Secretary of the Board of Trade, 35 W. R. 95, 18 Q. B. D. 43, in which Sir Thomas Farrer was sued as the official named to be sued—namely, the Secretary of the Board of Trade—not for his own act, but for the act either of his superior or subordinate officer, for detaining a ship supposed to be unseaworthy. The then Attorney-General claimed, and successfully maintained his claim in the Divisional Court and in the Court of Appeal, to treat the action as a suit against the Crown and to lay its venue, as the Crown in such cases can lay its venue, by prerogative, in whatever county it pleases; and in fact he succeeded in removing the trial from Newcastle to London and having such trial in London. The only question for us is whether the Commissioners of Works and Public Buildings are one of that class of persons described by Lindley, L.J., in Dixon v. Farrer as a "nominal defendant sued as representing one of the departments of the State." There is no reason in principle why they should not be; there is nothing derogatory to the Crown in their so being, and there is very great convenience in establishing such bodies for such purposes. I think it follows that the Commissioners of Woods and Forests are in the same position. The mere fact of incorporation without reservation, it seems to me, confers the privilege of suing and the liability of being sued; and having regard to the fact that they are made a corporation; that there is no restriction upon the ordinary incidents of such a corporation; that in fact their fellows—the Commissioners of Woods and Forests—have been sued, and that they themselves in fact have been sued in cases where their powers are derived under certain Acts of Parliament, I see no reason why we should hold that their liability is restricted to those Acts. It seems to me that they have a general liability to be sued for the purpose of obtaining a decision, but of course no execution can go inasmuch as their property, if they have any, is Crown property, as was held in Reg. v. McCann. In all probability however, they have none, or none applicable to this purpose. The judgment of the court, if ultimately entered against them, would have to be satisfied, if at all, out of moneys provided by Parliament for that purpose.

Judgment for plaintiffs.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Van Sandau & Co., for Mills & Co., Huddersfield.

Solicitor for the defendants, Solicitor to the Treasury.

C. C. R.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Wills, Grantham, Kennedy. and Ridley, JJ.) — Oct. 26; Nov. 9.

THE KING v. TIBBITS AND WINDUST. (a.)

Criminal law—Preventing due course of justice—Editor and Special "Crime Investigator"—Conspiracy—Comments in newspaper about prisoners awaiting trial—Inference of intent.

It is a criminal offence to publish writings which are calculated or tend to influence the minds of the magistrates or jurors against a person who is to be brought before them for trial.

An act which tends to prevent the course of justice is a contempt of court, but it is none the less an indictable offence.

A conspiracy to publish an article in a newspaper may be inferred if the article could not have appeared in the newspaper without the concurrence of the persons charged with conspiracy.

Held, on a special case stated for the consideration of the Court for Crown Cases Reserved, that the publication of information concerning the antecedents of two prisoners who were awaiting trial was of such a character as to interfere with and obstruct the ordinary course of justice, and that inasmuch as the articles could not have appeared without the co-operation of the editor and the reporter, there was evidence of conspiracy by them.

This was a case stated for the opinion of the court by Kennedy, J.

At the Bristol Assizes the prisoners, Charles John Tibbits, editor of the Weekly Dispatch, and Charles Windust, described as a crime investigator of the same journal, were indicted for an alleged attempt to pervert the course of justice in a case in which the prisoners were charged with cruelty to children. Windust supplied and Tibbits inserted in his newspaper sensational articles concerning the antecedents of the prisoners, which was held to be of such a character as to interfere with and obstruct the due course of justice. They were found guilty by the jury, but Kennedy, J., released the prisoners on recognizances pending the decision of this court on the points reserved.

The question the court had to determine was whether all or any and which of the counts of the indictment alleged a criminal offence, and whether there was evidence adduced at the trial upon which the accused persons or either and which of them could properly be found guilty upon all or any and which of the counts in the indictment.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The following statements, containing a summary of the indictment, which contained sixteen counts (upon each of which the defendants were found guilty), is taken from the judgment of the court:

Count 1 alleged that the accused unlawfully attempted by the composition and publication of the statements contained in the issue of the Weekly Dispatch of the 13th of January to influence and prejudice the mind of the magistrate before whom the charge against Allport and Chappell was pending, and so unlawfully attempted to obstruct and pervert the due course of law and justice.

Count 2, in regard to the same publication, alleged the same offence by a similar attempt to influence, by the same publication, the minds of the jurors who might be returned and impanelled for the trial of Allport and Chappell at the assizes.

Count 3 charged, in regard to the same publication, the doing knowingly and unlawfully of an act calculated and tending to obstruct and pervert the due course of law and justice when Allport and Chappell's case was before the magistrate.

Count 4 was identical with count 3, except that it related to the trial of Allport and Chappell at the assizes.

Count 5 charged, with regard to the same publication, that the defendants, unlawfully devising and intending to injure and prejudice Allport and Chappell and to deprive them of a fair and impartial hearing before the magistrate, unlawfully, wilfully, and maliciously printed and published and procured to be printed and published a malicious and scandalous writing.

Count 6 was identical with count 5, except that it related to the trial of Allport and Chappell at the assizes.

Counts 7-12 (inclusive), in substance, repeated, in regard to the issue of the Weekly Dispatch of the 3rd of February, the same charges as were contained in counts 1-6, in regard to the issue of the 13th of January. There was an additional prefatory averment of the preferring on the 17th of February of a further charge against Allport and Chappell of attempting to murder Arthur Bertie Allport, and in counts 11 and 12 was added a charge as to the publication in the incriminated article of a scandalous representation of Allport in clerical garb.

Count 13 alleged an unlawful conspiracy between Tibbits and Windust on the 9th of January, 1901, and on divers other days between that day and the 14th of January, 1901, to obstruct and pervert the due course of law and justice in reference to the hearing before the magistrate.

Count 14 alleged the same unlawful conspiracy in reference to the trial of Allport and Chappell at the assizes.

Count 15, after prefatory averments relating to the further charges against Allport and Chappell, alleged the conspiracy on the 9th of January, 1901, and on divers days between that day and the 4th of March, 1901, setting out the dates of publication, in reference to the hearing before the magistrate and to the trial at the assizes.

Count 16, in regard to the same dates of publications, alleged an unlawful conspiracy to compose, print, and publish articles which were calculated and intended to prejudice the minds of the committing magistrate and the jurors at the trial, and so to prevent and obstruct the due course of law and justice.

At the close of the case for the prosecution counsel for the accused persons submitted: (1) There was no evidence on any of the counts of criminal intent. It was not proved that any of the statements were untrue or that the accused desired or intended to procure a false verdict or to alter the course of justice; (2) there was no evidence of conspiracy; (3) if the printing and publishing did not constitute attempts to pervert and obstruct justice, as charged in corresponding counts for contempts, they constituted nothing criminal; (4) "calculating and tending to obstruct and pervert" did not charge an offence distinct from conspiracy to pervert justice.

Further, the charge against Tibbits was conspiracy or nothing. Proving that he was editor was not proving that he published or caused or procured to be published. The publisher was not his servant or agent.

As to Windust, in 1897 he called himself criminal investigator, and in 1901 was seen reporting in the magistrate's court, which might raise a presumption that he sent in some report. There was no evidence that his report was what appeared in the Weekly Dispatch.

Foote, K.C., and Evans Austin, for the defendants.—There is no evidence on any of the counts of criminal intent, nor that the articles were not substantially true. The two defendants had not spoken to each other or seen each other about this matter, and there was no conspiracy therefore within the meaning of that word as defined in Mulcahy v. Regina, L. R. 3 H. L. 306, 17 W. R. H. L. Dig. 4. At p. 317, Willes, J., who delivered the judgment of the court, said: "A conspiracy consists not merely in the intention of two or more, but in the agreement of two or more to do an unlawful act or to do a lawful act by an unlawful means." Therefore if the printing and publishing of this matter did not constitute attempts to pervert and obstruct justice, they were not criminal per se; and with regard to the last count the words "calculated and tending to obstruct and pervert" did not charge an offence distinct from conspiracy to prevent. The modern law of conspiracy has grown out of the statute of 33 Edw. 1, c. 2, "de conspiratoribus," and in conspiracy there must be an element of falsity. [WILLS, J.—Does it not pervert justice to publish something that prevents a man getting a fair trial?—No; unless there was evidence of an intention to deceive the court.] The sole object of publishing these articles was to sell the newspaper.

He cited Reg. v. Grant, 7 State Trials N. S. 507; Reg. v. Hicklin, 16 W. R. 801, L. R. 3 Q. B. 360; Haire v. Wilson, 9 B. & C. 643; Rex v. Jolliffe, 4 T. R. 285; Skipworth's case, L. R. 9 Q. B. 219, at p. 232, 23 W. R. Dig. 74; and Rex v. Fisher, 2 Camp. 563.

Sir Edward Carson, S.G., H. Sutton, Charles Mathew, and Guy Stephenson, for the Crown.—The jury found the defendants had attempted to pervert the ordinary course of justice; that the articles were of a character to interfere with the administration of justice, and were written with intent so to interfere, and that there was conspiracy on the part of the prisoners. On these findings an indictable offence was clearly committed by the defendants. The evidence of conspiracy was conclusive. The articles were written by Windust, and published in the newspaper by Tibbits. Those two facts being proved, it was unnecessary to inquire whether they actually met together and agreed the one to write the article and the other to publish it. The moment a case came before a court of justice there should be no interference with the course of justice from outside. If there was, the offender might be committed for contempt of court, or, as in this case, a jury might be asked to express their opinion on the matter.

Foote replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

Nov. 9.—Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J., read the following judgment of the court: This was a case reserved by Kennedy, J., at the last summer assizes at Bristol. Indictments were preferred against two defendants, Charles John Tibbits and Charles Windust. The charge contained in the indictment related to the publication of certain matters in a newspaper called the Weekly Dispatch, between the 13th of January, 1901, and the 4th of March, 1901 (inclusive), and particularly to the issues of the newspaper dated respectively the 13th of January and the 3rd of February, 1901. Prior to the publication of the first article, two persons, named Allport and Chappell, had been charged before the magistrate with offences under the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1894. Further charges of attempting to murder, and of conspiracy to murder a child named Arthur Bertie Allport, and of a conspiracy to commit the offence against section 1 of the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1894, were preferred against them. On the 8th of February, Allport and Chappell were committed to take their trial at the next Bristol Assizes fixed to commence on the 20th of February. Their trial on the indictment for the attempt to murder commenced before Day, J., on the 1st of March, and terminated on the 5th of March. They were found guilty, and sentenced, Allport to fifteen years' penal servitude, and Chappell to five years' penal servitude. The publications in the Weekly Dispatch, which formed the subject of the present indictment against Tibbits and Windust, were statements relating to the case of Allport and Chappell, contained in the issues of the Weekly Dispatch during the hearing of the case against Allport and Chappell before the magistrate, and before and during the trial of these persons at the assizes. It is unnecessary to refer in detail to any of the incriminated articles, of which those of the 13th of January and the 3rd of February were the most important. It is sufficient to say that the publication went far beyond any fair and bonâ fide report of the proceedings before the magistrate. They contained, couched in a florid and sensational form, a number of statements highly detrimental to Allport and Chappell. Much of the statements relates to matters of which evidence could not have been admissible against them in any event, and purported to be the result of investigations made by the "Special Crime Investigator" of the newspaper. Under these circumstances it was contended on behalf of the prosecution that there was evidence upon which the jury might properly convict both the defendants on all the counts of the indictment. Upon the argument before us we had no doubt upon the main question which had been discussed, but having regard to the nature of the proceedings and the importance of the case, we thought it desirable that we should endeavour to lay down as clearly as possible the law applicable to such a case. Points were raised and argued on behalf of the defendant Windust as distinguished from the defendant Tibbits. It will be convenient to postpone the discussion of those points until we have dealt with the main questions of law raised on behalf of both prisoners.

It was not attempted to be argued by Mr. Foote, who appeared as counsel for both defendants, that the publication of such articles was lawful, and that the persons publishing such articles could not be punished. On the contrary, he contended that the publication of such articles was a contempt of court, and could only properly be punished as such either by summary proceedings or indictment for contempt. He further urged that there was no evidence of any intention on the part of either of the defendants to prevent or interfere with the course of justice, and that any inference, which might otherwise be drawn from the contents of the articles that they were calculated to prevent or interfere with the course of justice, was negatived by the fact that the defendants Allport and Chappell had been subsequently convicted. That the publishing of such articles did constitute a contempt of court and would be punished as such, is well established. One of the sorts of contempt enumerated by Lord Hardwicke, L.C., in the year 1742 (2 Atk. 471) is prejudicing mankind against persons before the case was heard, and he added these important words: "There cannot be anything of greater consequence than to keep the streams of justice clear and pure that parties may proceed with safety both to themselves and their characters." The case of Rex v. Jolliffe shows that a criminal information lay for distributing in the assize town, before the trial at Nisi Prius, handbills reflecting on the conduct of a prosecutor, and, in the course of his judgment, Lord Kenyon, in that case, 4 T. R., at p. 289, made the following very relevant observations: "Now it is impossible for any man to doubt whether or not the publication of these papers be an offence. Even the charge on the prosecutor would of itself warrant us to grant the information, but that is a minor offence when compared with that of publishing the papers in question during the pendency of the cause at the assizes and in the hour of trial. It is the pride of the constitution of this country that all causes should be decided by jurors, who are chosen in a manner which excludes all possibility of bias, and who are chosen by ballot in order to prevent any possibility of their being tampered with. But if an individual can break down any of the safeguards which the constitution has so wisely and so cautiously erected, by poisoning the minds of the jury at a time when they are called upon to decide, he will stab the administration of justice in its most vital parts. And, therefore, I cannot forbear saying that if the publication be brought home to the defendant he has been guilty of a crime of the greatest enormity." Again, in the case of Rex v. Fisher, the printer, publisher, and editor were convicted for publishing a scandalous defamatory and malicious libel, intended to injure one Richard Stephenson, charged with assault, and deprive him of the benefit of an impartial trial "and to injure and prejudice him in the minds of the liege subjects of our Lord the King and to cause it to be believed that he was guilty of the said assault and thereby to prevent the administration of justice and to deprive the said Richard Stephenson of an impartial trial." It was urged on behalf of the defendants that this was an indictment for libel, and that, therefore, it was no authority for the indictment in the present case. But, if the judgment of Lord Ellenborough is examined, it will be noted that the main ground of the judgment is that the publication would tend to pervert the public mind and disturb the course of justice and therefore be illegal, and we cannot doubt that, if the attempt so to do be made, or means taken, the natural effect of which would be to create a widespread prejudice against persons about to take their trial, an offence has been committed, whatever the means adopted, provided there be not some legal justification for the course pursued. The case of Rex v. Williams, 2 L. J. K. B. 30, is another distinct authority for the same view, in which it was laid down that any attempt whatever to publicly prejudge a criminal case, whether by a detail of the evidence or by a comment, or by a theatrical exhibition, is an offence against public justice and a serious misdemeanour. The publication of proceedings publicly held in a court of justice, if fair and accurate, has now the protection of the Law of Libel Amendment Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 64), s. 3. The law as laid down in the older cases to which we have referred was summarized by Blackburn, J., in Skipworth's case, L. R. 9 Q. B., at p. 232, and with reference to the objection that the more proper proceeding should be by proceedings for contempt of court, we would refer to the judgment of the court in Reg. v. Gray, 48 W. R. 474, [1900] 2 Q. B. 36, at p. 41, from which it clearly appears that in many cases it is preferable to proceed by information or indictment rather than by motion for contempt. We have no doubt whatever that the publication of the articles in this case, at the time when and under the circumstances in which they were published, constitutes a criminal offence by whomsoever they were published. We think that the facts, which bring the incriminated articles within the category of misdemeanour, abundantly appear upon the face of each count, and that, under the circumstances, it is perfectly immaterial whether the articles be described and charged as libels or contempt or not. With reference to the argument, with which we were pressed, that there was no evidence of any intention to pervert the course of justice, we are clearly of opinion, for the reasons given in the authorities to which we have referred, that this is one of the cases in which the intent may properly be inferred from the articles themselves and the circumstances under which they were published. It would, indeed, be far-fetched to infer that the articles were likely to have any effect upon the mind of either magistrate or judge, but the essence of the offence is the conduct calculated to produce, so to speak, an atmosphere of prejudice in the midst of which the proceedings must go on. Publications of that character have been punished over and over again as contempts of court, when the legal proceedings pending did not involve trial by jury, and when no one would imagine that the mind of the magistrates or judges charged with the case would or could be induced thereby to swerve from the straight course. The offence is much worse where trial by jury is about to take place, but it certainly is not confined to such cases. We further think that, if the articles are in the opinion of the jury calculated to interfere with the course of justice or pervert the minds of the magistrate or of the jurors, the persons publishing are criminally responsible: see Reg. v. Grant. We are also of opinion that the fact that Allport and Chappell, the persons referred to, were subsequently convicted can have no weight in the decision of the question now before us. To give effect to such a consideration would involve the consequence that the fact of a conviction, though resulting, either wholly or in part, from their influence upon the minds of the jurors at the trial of such articles as these, justified their publication. This is an argument which we need scarcely say reduces the position almost to an absurdity, and, indeed, its chief foundation would appear to be a confusion between the course of justice and the result arrived at. I will add only this. A person accused of crime in this country can properly be convicted in a court of justice only upon evidence which is legally admissible and which is adduced at his trial in legal form or shape. Assume the accused to be really guilty of the offence charged against him. The due course of law and justice is perverted and obstructed nevertheless if those who have to try him are induced to approach the question of his guilt or innocence with minds into which prejudice has been instilled by published assertions of his guilt or imputations against his life and character to which the laws of the land refuse admissibility as evidence. Mr. Foote attempted to restrict conspiracy to matters germane, at least to those referred to in the Statute de Conspiratoribus (33 Edw. 1). It is obvious, however, that the statute is not given an exhaustive definition, and other matters beyond those enumerated in that statute have been adjudged over and over again to be the subjects of criminal conspiracies. As to the expressions of Willes, J., in Mulcahy v. Reg., L. R. 3 H. L., at p. 317, upon which Mr. Foote insisted so much, it is plain that Willes, J., was speaking of a case in which the criminal intention had not been carried into effect, and he says that in such a case the very promise to do it—such a promise as would be binding if for a lawful purpose—is an act which negatives the suggestion that the matter rests in intention only. He never said that when the unlawful purpose has been carried out no indictment for conspiracy can be maintained unless the concerted action has been preceded by such a contract between the conspirators as, if the purpose had been lawful, would have given ground for a lawsuit. His definition is not of conspiracy, but of the kind of conduct which is sufficient to make the concerted action pass from the stage of intention into that of action.

We have now only to consider the special points which were taken on behalf of the defendant Windust as regards the first six counts, and as regards both the defendants in regard to the conspiracy counts. We agree that in such a case some evidence must be given that the defendants were really parties to the publication complained of: see Reg. v. Holbrook, 26 W. R. 144, 3 Q. B. D. 60, 27 W. R. 313, 4 Q. B. D. 42. The evidence against Windust submitted to the jury, as appears from the case stated, was as follows: That in 1897 he was the crime investigator of the Weekly Dispatch and was engaged in June of that year in investigating a case then pending at the South London Sessions. That on several of the occasions when Allport and Chappell were before the magistrates Windust was present in court taking notes of the proceedings. He was seen on the 2nd of May, 1901, at the office of the Weekly Dispatch, and the articles in question purported to be written by the special crime investigator of the paper. Under the circumstances we are of opinion that there was evidence to leave to the jury that Windust was party to, and concurred in, the publication of the articles and was an accessory before the fact. As regards Tibbits, it was proved that he was the editor of the Weekly Dispatch at the time of the publications. He afterwards placed himself as such editor in communication with the Director of Public Prosecutions respecting the inquiries which were being made at Bristol as to the publication of papers. The articles formed an important part of the issues of the paper in question, and we think that in his case there was clearly evidence to be submitted to the jury. It remains only to consider the conspiracy counts, on which the defendants were also found guilty. Inasmuch as they were also convicted on the other counts the point is not very important; but we think it right to say that there was, in our opinion, evidence for the jury as to the conspiracy counts also. Such articles would not be published without the concurrence of someone at Bristol, and the person in fact editing the paper, and we are of opinion that there was evidence to go to the jury on which they might properly draw the conclusion that the defendants combined for the purpose of publishing the articles in question. For the above reasons we think the conviction should be affirmed as against both defendants.

Solicitors for the accused, Mellor, Smith, & May; The Director of Public Prosecutions, for the Crown.

Court of Appeal.

Appeal.
(Collins, M.R., and Stirling and Mathew, L.JJ.) Nov. 25.

CATTERMOLE v. ATLANTIC TRANSPORT CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Master and servant—Employer's liability—Accident—Compensation—"Factory"—Ship in wet dock—Costs—Action under Employers' Liability Act, 1880—Action dismissed—Compensation assessed under Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), ss. 113, 186—Factory and Workshop Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 37), s. 23—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1, sub-section 4; s. 7; Schedule II, cl. 6, 10.

A workman was killed while employed on a ship lying in a wet dock. An action by his widow under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, was dismissed, and the county court judge, upon the plaintiff's application, assessed compensation, under section 1, sub-section 4, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, holding that the deceased man's employment at the time of the accident was on, in, or about a "factory" within section 7 of the Act, and he gave the plaintiff the costs of and incident to the proceedings

Held, (1) that the employment being on a ship in a dock was employment in a "factory" within the meaning of the Act; and (2) that the county court judge had power to give the plaintiff the costs of the proceedings.

Appeal from the decision of the judge of the Bow County Court, assessing compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

The plaintiff was the widow of a deceased workman, who at the time of the accident causing his death was in the employment of the defendants.

The Minnesota, a steamship belonging to the defendants, was alongside the north quay of the West India Docks. She was taking in, at No. 2 hold, a cargo of lime from a schooner lying alongside of her. She was also taking in cargo from the quay at her other holds. The defendants were themselves loading the ship by their own men. The deceased man was employed by them in No. 2 hold in assisting to take in cargo from the schooner when he was killed by an accident.

An action was brought by the plaintiff under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, but the county court judge held that the defendants were not liable under that Act, and dismissed the action.

Application was then made to him under section 1, sub-section 4, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, to assess the compensation payable.

The judge thereupon proceeded to do so, and held that the deceased man, being employed in a ship lying in a dock, was employed in or about a "factory." He assessed the amount of compensation at £234, and gave the plaintiff the costs "of and incident to these proceedings."

The defendants appealed.

B. D Kilburn, for the defendants.—The employment of the deceased man on the ship was not employment on, in, or about a dock within the meaning of section 23 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, and therefore the employment was not in a "factory" within section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. In Raine v. Jobson, 49 W. R. 705, [1901] A. C. 404, it was held that a workman employed upon a ship, which was in a dry dock for the purpose of being repaired, was employed in a "factory" within the meaning of section 7. There, however, the ship really formed part of the dry dock and physically occupied it. In this case the ship, being afloat, remained a separate entity, and formed no part of the dock. [He also referred to Flowers v. Chambers, 47 W. R. 513, [1899] 2 Q. B. 142; Woodham v. Atlantic Transport Co., 47 W. R. 105, [1899] 1 Q. B. 15; Hennessey v. McCabe, 48 W. R. 231, [1900] 1 Q. B. 491; Spencer v. Livett, Frank, & Son, 48 W. R. 323, [1900] 1 Q. B. 498; Stuart v. Nixon, 49 W. R. 636, [1901] A. C. 79.] Secondly, the county court judge had no power to give any costs when he assessed compensation under section 1, sub-section 4, of the Act of 1897. The action under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, was dismissed, and therefore he had no power to give the plaintiff the costs of the action: Foster v. Great Western Railway Co., 30 W. R. 398, 8 Q. B. D. 515. Nor had he any power to give any costs in respect of the assessment of compensation under the Act of 1897. There is no power to give costs unless by virtue of some statute. The procedure under section 1, sub-section 4, is a new procedure, and that section gives no power to the judge to allow costs. Schedule II., clause 6, does not apply, because there was no arbitration. Clause 3 does not give the judge jurisdiction, because Schedule II. only applies to any matter which under the Act is to be settled by arbitration. That schedule does not apply to a county court judge sitting to hear an action under the Employers' Liability Act. By section 1, sub-section 2 (b), a workman must elect whether he will take proceedings under the Act or independently of the Act. He cannot take both: Edwards v. Godfrey, 47 W. R. 551, [1899] 2 Q. B. 333. Here the workman elected to proceed independently of the Act, and therefore the assessment of compensation under section 1, sub-section 4, was not in an arbitration "under the Act." It is only in mercy to him that the judge is allowed to assess compensation. In Skeggs v. Keen, 1 Minton-Senhouse W. C. C. 35, Rigby, L.J., expressed the opinion that the judge in such a case had no power to give costs. That is the true view.

W. B. Yates (W. Lynden Bell with him), for the plaintiff, was only called upon to argue the second point. Schedule II., clause 6, gives the arbitrator discretion over the costs of and incident to the arbitration. The assessment of compensation here under section 1, sub-section 4, was in fact an arbitration: per Lord Shand in Hoddinott v. Newton, Chambers, & Co., 49 W. R. 380, at p. 382, [1901] A. C. 49. The judge had dismissed the action, and he then became an arbitrator to assess compensation under the Act of 1897. There is nothing in section 1, sub-section 4, to cut down this power of the judge sitting as arbitrator.

B. D. Kilburn replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

Nov. 25.—STIRLING, L.J., read the following judgment, in which COLLINS, M.R., and MATHEW, L.J., concurred: This is an appeal of the Atlantic Transport Co. from an award made by the judge of the Bow County Court under section 1, sub-section 4, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, consequent on the failure of an action brought against the company in the county court under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, and Lord Campbell's Act. This action was brought by Mary Cattermole, the widow of a workman, in respect of a fatal injury by accident caused to the workman in the course of his employment on board the company's steamship Minnesota. At the time of the accident this ship was lying in the West India Docks alongside one of the quays, and was taking in cargo partly from the quay and partly from a schooner which lay alongside the steamer in the dock. The judge determined that the injury in respect of which the plaintiff claimed damages in the action was one for which the defendants were not liable in the action, but that the defendants would have been liable to pay compensation in respect of such injury under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897; and thereupon, at the request of the plaintiff, he proceeded to assess the compensation which the company would have been liable to pay under that Act. He assessed such compensation at the sum of £234, and ordered the defendants to pay the plaintiff's costs of and incident to the proceedings. Two points were raised on the appeal. First, that the workman was not employed on, in, or about a factory within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897; secondly, that the judge had no power to give the plaintiff any costs of the proceedings.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-Law.

As to the first point, the question is whether we ought to follow the decision of this court in Flowers v. Chambers, or that of the House of Lords in Raine v. Jobson. In Flowers v. Chambers it was held by this court that a workman employed on a ship lying in a wet dock was not employed on, in, or about a dock within the meaning of the Act. In Raine v. Jobson the House of Lords determined that a workman employed on a ship lying in a dry dock was employed on, in, or about a dock within the meaning of the same Act. Now, the Act speaks of a dock in general terms, without reference to whether it is wet or dry; primâ facie, therefore, the two decisions are inconsistent, and that of the House of Lords ought to be followed. This view is confirmed when the ratio decidendi in the two cases is examined. In Flowers v. Chambers the late Master of the Rolls said: "If the Legislature had intended that ships should be brought within the purview of the Act, it would have been perfectly simple to have put the word 'ship' in the section; they have, however, chosen words expressive of certain localities to which the application of the Act is limited, and a ship is not one of them." On the other hand, in Raine v. Jobson the Lord Chancellor says: "I am not able at present to follow the train of reasoning by which the respondents sought to suggest that because the wooden structure, which was inside the dock and to which the work was being applied, was a ship which when floated into the sea would be capable of being treated as a separate entity and would be free from the operation of the Act generally, that conveys to the dock in which the ship is placed the immunity which the ship itself would possess if sailing upon the high seas." In my opinion the decision of the learned judge on this point cannot be disturbed.

The second point raises a question which was left undecided by this court in Skeggs v. Keen—viz., whether the judge had power to give the unsuccessful plaintiff any costs upon the assessment of compensation under section 1, sub-section 4, of the Act. The effect of section 1, sub-section 2 (b), of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, is to compel the workman to elect whether he will claim compensation under the Act or take such proceedings as were open to him before the Act. If he adopts the latter course he cannot make any claim under the Act except by virtue of section 1, sub-section 4, of the Act: see Edwards v. Godfrey. That sub-section provides that if an action is brought to recover damages independently of the Act for injury caused by any accident, and it is determined in such action that the injury is one for which the employer is not liable in such action, but that he would have been liable to pay compensation under the provisions of the Act, the action shall be dismissed; "but the court in which the action is tried shall, if the plaintiff shall so choose, proceed to assess such compensation, and shall be at liberty to deduct from such compensation all the costs, which, in its judgment, have been caused by the plaintiff bringing the action instead of proceeding under this Act." The sub-section goes on to direct that the compensation awarded and the directions as to deduction of costs are to be embodied in a certificate which is to have the force and effect of an award under the Act, but says nothing further as to the costs; and it is contended that the power of the judge to deal with compensation is entirely derived from this section, and cannot extend beyond what is thereby expressly conferred. In Skeggs v. Keen Rigby, L.J., stated that the inclination of his opinion was to that effect, but neither he nor any of the members of the court gave a decision on the point. If this contention be well founded, the result will be that the workman not only will be liable to have all costs caused by his bringing the action instead of proceeding under the Act deducted from the compensation, but will have to bear all his own costs, although successful in recovering compensation; whereas, according to the ordinary practice as regards costs, he ought to have the costs of successful proceedings except in so far as such are increased by any part of those proceedings which fails, and ought to bear all costs occasioned by such failure. It is true that in the Workmen's Compensation Act itself (Schedule II., clause 6) express provision is made for the costs of proceedings by arbitration under the Act; but here the Legislature is dealing with proceedings in, and consequent on, an action over the costs of which the court which tries the action would have full control by the exercise of its ordinary jurisdiction. It will be observed that section 1, sub-section 4, treats such an action as one in which it may be determined both that the employer is not liable for damages, and also that he would have been liable to pay compensation under the provisions of the Act; evidence as to the liability under the Act may therefore be adduced in the action. The sub-section does not, indeed, refer to the assessment of compensation as being made in the action, but such assessment certainly arises out of and is consequent upon it; and it would be a refined distinction to hold that, while the determination of the liability to pay compensation is a proceeding in the action, the assessment of the amount is not. In my judgment the effect of the sub-section is to leave the court in which the action is tried full liberty to exercise any power of awarding costs which it may have in the action, and to confer the additional power of deducting from the compensation costs caused by the plaintiff bringing the action instead of proceeding under the Act. Such costs, it may be observed, do not necessarily include all the costs of the action. In general the court to try such actions is a county court. By section 113 of the County Courts Act, 1888, all the costs of any action or matter in a county court, not otherwise provided for by that Act, are to be paid by or apportioned between the parties in such manner as the court shall think just, and in default of any special direction are to abide the event. By section 186 "action . . . shall mean every proceeding in the court which may be commenced as prescribed by plaint"; and "matter shall mean every proceeding in the court which may be commenced as prescribed otherwise than by plaint"; and "prescribed shall mean prescribed by the County Court Rules for the time being." By Schedule II., clause 10, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, the duty of a county court judge under this Act is, subject to rules of court, to be part of the duties of the county court. I think that under these enactments the county court judge has power to deal with the costs of the action including the proceedings for the assessment of compensation under section 1, sub-section 4, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. If the court in which the action is tried be the High Court (as may be the case where the action is originally brought in the High Court, or where, being originally brought in the county court, it is transferred to the High Court—see, for example section 6 of the Employers' Liability Act, 1880) the High Court has full power to deal with costs under section 5 of the Judicature Act, 1890. The learned judge has dismissed the action, but has ordered the defendants to pay all the costs of the proceedings, and has not ordered any costs to be deducted from the compensation. In general this would not be right; but such an order may be justified by special circumstances, as if, for example, the judge were satisfied that no costs had been caused by the plaintiff bringing an action instead of proceeding under the Act. This matter is one within the discretion of the judge; it has not been shown that the judge exercised his discretion on a wrong principle; and in the result the appeal fails, and must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, R. H. Ward.

Solicitors for the defendants, Holman, Birdwood, & Co.

Appeal.
(Collins, M.R., and Stirling and Mathew, L.JJ.) — Nov. 7.

ELLIS v. WILLIAM CORY & SON (LIMITED). (a.)

Master and servant—Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation — "Wharf"—Factory and Workshop Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 37), s. 23—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7.

A workman was injured by an accident while employed in the hold of a ship, which was lying alongside a floating structure in the Thames, assisting in the unloading of the ship. The structure was moored in the river by chains fastened to piles driven into the bed of the river, and was used as a place where cargoes were loaded and discharged. There was no connection or communication with the shore except by means of boats.

Held, that the structure was a wharf within the meaning of section 23 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, and was therefore a "factory" within section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

Appeal from an award of the judge of the Woolwich County Court under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

The applicant for compensation was a workman who at the time of the accident was employed in the hold of the steamship Harberton, which was lying alongside a structure in the Thames called Atlas No. 3.

The sole question was whether the structure was a "wharf" within the meaning of section 23 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, and therefore a "factory" within section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

The structure was moored in the Thames off Charlton, 500 feet from the south shore and 350 yards from the north shore. It was moored by chains fastened to piles driven into the bed of the river. It was 500 feet long, forty-five feet wide, and had a draught of six feet six inches, and was six feet above water level. It had nine hydraulic cranes with grabs attached. The grabs descended into the hold of the coal steamer, and took automatically a ton and a half of coal. The hydraulic crane lifted it up and turned it round into a hopper where it was automatically weighed, and then passed it through a shoot into a barge lying on the other side of the structure. There was a blacksmith's shop, a carpenter's shop, and a plant for generating electricity on the structure, and a coffee shop for the men. There was no connection or communication with the shore except by boats. It was so moored and stationed under the licence of Thames Conservancy.

At the time of the accident the ship was lying on the stream or river side of the structure. The applicant's duty was so to place the coal that the grab might the better get hold of it. While he was stooping, the grab came down and struck him on the head and injured him.

The county court judge held that the structure was not a "wharf," and made an award in favour of the employers.

The applicant appealed.

Ruegg, K.C., and W. M. Thompson, for the applicant.—This structure is clearly a wharf within the meaning of section 23 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, and is therefore a "factory" within section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. It fulfils all the functions of a wharf, the only thing being that it is not connected with the land. That, however, is not material.

They referred to Haddock v. Humphrey, 48 W. R. 292, [1900] 1 Q. B. 609.

J. E. Bankes, K.C., and H. Nield, for the employers.—A wharf must be a place physically connected with the land, and at the same time contiguous to the water. That is the ordinary and natural meaning of the word. They referred to the following dictionaries: The Century, Webster's, Chamber's, Hunter's, and Ogilvie's Imperial.

COLLINS, M.R.—The only question in this case is whether this structure is a "wharf" within the meaning of the Act. It certainly fulfils most of the primary functions of a wharf. It is used as a place for taking cargo out of ships and depositing it somewhere else. It is attached to the bed of the river, though at a distance of 500 feet from one shore and 350 yards from the other. Admittedly it is a structure of such a nature that, if it were capable of being reached from the shore by a gangway or other contrivance, it would be a wharf. It is said, however, that it is so far out in the river that it does not come within the ordinary meaning of the word wharf. It may be that a structure of this kind so placed was unknown at the time when the Factory and Workshop Acts were passed. The courts, however, must recognize the progressive developments of later times. This structure answers the purposes of a wharf; it is used as a wharf, the work done on it being the same as that done on an ordinary wharf; and it is found to be so convenient as a wharf that it has been substituted for the ordinary kind of wharf on the land. The truth is that the wharf has now been brought to the ship instead of bringing the ship in to the land to the wharf. In my opinion, it must be regarded as a wharf within the meaning of section 23 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895. It therefore comes within the definition of "factory" in section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. The county court judge's view was that this was not a wharf in the ordinary sense of the term, but I think that we should be unduly narrowing the meaning of the word as used in the Act if we were to hold that this structure was not a "wharf." The appeal, therefore, must be allowed.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

STIRLING and MATHEW, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the applicant, Buchanan & Hurd.

Solicitors for the employers, Deacon, Gibson, Medcalf, & Marriott.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div.
Cozens-Hardy, J. } Aug. 1, 2, 10, 1901.

DIXON v. STEEL. (a.)

Principal and surety—Mortgage—Collateral security.

A surety has rights with regard to collateral security, even before he pays or is called upon to pay the debt.

Summons.

This was a summons by a married woman seeking to redeem leasehold property which she had mortgaged to secure a debt of her husband, which was also secured by mortgage on a leasehold house of the husband.

By a mortgage dated the 12th of January, 1894, John Dixon mortgaged certain property (a) to Thomas Steel to secure £225 and interest.

By a mortgage dated the 20th of March, 1896, Mrs. Dixon mortgaged certain other property (b) to Thomas Steel to secure £275 and interest.

By a mortgage dated the 5th of August, 1896, and made between John Dixon, Mrs. Dixon, and Thomas Steel, in consideration of £500 advanced by Thomas Steel to John Dixon, John Dixon and his wife jointly and severally covenanted to pay the £500 with interest and John Dixon as to property (a) and Mrs. Dixon as to property (b) charged the properties with the £500 and interest, and Mrs. Dixon mortgaged certain other properties (c) to Thomas Steel to secure the £500 and also the two sums of £225 and £275 secured by the prior mortgages.

The £500 advanced on this security had been paid off, but the deed was used again as security for a sum of £500 advanced by Thomas Steel on the 20th of April, 1898; it had never ceased to be a further security for the £225 and £275.

On the 13th of June, 1899, Messrs. Steel, Maitland, & Steel, who were judgment creditors of John Dixon, obtained equitable execution against him. Before this date they had been informed that Mrs Dixon was a surety for her husband.

On the 14th of August, 1899, Thomas Steel transferred all his mortgages to Messrs. Steel, Maitland, & Steel.

By an order made by North, J., on the 2nd of December, 1899, on the application of Messrs. Steel, Maitland, & Steel, certain inquiries were directed to ascertain what was due under the judgment, what interests in land of the said John Dixon had been delivered in execution, and what liens, charges, and incumbrances there were.

The master made his certificate dated the 3rd of April, 1900, and found that the property delivered in execution was an equity of redemption in property (a), and that the incumbrances were the mortgages of the 12th of January, 1894, and the 5th of August, 1896, but that Mrs. Dixon claimed to be party to the mortgage of the 5th of August, 1896, as surety for John Dixon.

Pursuant to subsequent orders the property was sold for £375 to one Thomas Stockdale, who was authorized to pay to Messrs. Steel, Maitland, & Steel, as transferees of the first mortgage, the amount due on that mortgage. Messrs. Steel, Maitland, & Steel had since received the balance of the purchase-money, £130 4s. 1d., and claimed to apply it towards satisfaction of their judgment debt.

This action was commenced by Mrs. Dixon as plaintiff against Messrs. Steel, Maitland, & Steel and John Dixon as defendants, to redeem property (c), and the only question was whether Messrs. Steel, Maitland, & Steel were justified in applying that sum towards satisfaction of their judgment debt or whether it ought not to go in relief of Mrs. Dixon's mortgage.

Micklem, K.C., and Douglas, for the plaintiff.—The plaintiff was merely a surety, and is entitled to redeem, and the benefits of collateral security will be given to the creditor, who cannot tack a subsequent incumbrance to his mortgage debt to the detriment of the surety: Pearl v. Deacon, 5 W. R. 793, 1 De G & J. 461; Forbes v. Jackson, 30 W. R. 652, 19 Ch. D. 615; Arden v. Arden, 33 W. R. 593, 29 Ch D. 702; and Rouse v. Bradford Banking Co., 43 W. R 78, [1894] A. C. 586. Whether the creditor had notice that the plaintiff was only a surety is immaterial: Overend Gurney, & Co. v. Oriental Financial Corporation, 20 W. R. 253, 7 Ch. App. 142, L. R. 7 H. L 348.

E. W. Martelli, for the defendants.—(1) Mrs. Dixon was not, in fact, a surety; (2) if she were a surety, a surety is entitled to the security held by the principal creditor, but only if and when he pays the debt: South v. Bloxam, 2 Hem. & M. 457, at p. 463; In re Toogood's Legacy Trusts, 61 L. T. Rep. 19, 38 W. R. Dig. 133; Ferguson v. Gibson, L. R. 14 Eq. 379, 21 W. R. Dig. 6; and Hudson v. Carmichael, 2 W. R. 503, Kay 613, at p. 620.

Micklem, K.C., in reply.

COZENS-HARDY, J., after stating the above facts, read the following judgment: The sum of £130 4s. 1d. represents the equity of redemption in (a). That equity of redemption was charged together with (c) with the £500. As between (a) and (c) (a) was primarily liable. This primary liability cannot be affected by the subsequent incumbrances created by the delivery of (a) in execution. The money must be applied in partial satisfaction of the £500 secured on (c) the surety's property.

The case thus put does not seem to present much difficulty. But it was urged by Mr. Martelli in his very able argument that as the surety has paid nothing her right has not arisen, and he relied upon some observations by Wood, V.C., in South v. Bloxam, in support of his contention. It is necessary to consider what was decided in that case.

Arnold mortgaged (a) and (b) to Marcon for £2,800, his mother Susannah Arnold joining as surety in the covenant for payment. After the surety's death Arnold gave a further charge to Marcon on (a) and (b) for £600. Subsequently Arnold mortgaged (a) to the plaintiffs to secure £2,000.

In March, 1853, Marcon commenced an action against the defendant Bloxam, the surety's executor, upon his covenant in the mortgage deed. Before the defendant pleaded, Marcon had sold (a) for a sum less than was due on the first mortgage. He sought to pay off his further charge of £600 out of this sum. The defendant succeeded as to the £600 but failed on other points. The court ordered the defendant to pay the balance of the debt and interest and costs, and thereupon Marcon was to assign (b) to the defendant, and this was done: see Marcon v. Bloxam, 11 Ex. 586. The defendant's own costs of action were £658. In 1859 the defendant received £2,800 in respect of (b), being the amount of two policies on the mortgagor Arnold's life. The plaintiffs in 1863 filed a bill claiming to have the balance of the policy-moneys after payment of the first mortgage marshalled, so as to make good pro tanto what had been taken from (a) towards payment of the first mortgage. Wood, V.C., held the plaintiffs entitled. His judgment so far as material was as follows: [Here his lordship read the judgment of Wood, V.C., practically in extenso.] This only decided that the surety was not entitled to tack to his security as against a second mortgagee costs incurred in resisting the creditor's claim, except so far as they were properly incurred for the benefit of the estate. It does not seem to me to have any bearing on the present case. The observations of Wood, V.C., must be read with reference to the particular point with which he was dealing. It certainly is not the law that a surety has no rights until he pays the debt due from his principal.

(a.) Reported by W. MORRIS CARTER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

I must therefore declare that the £130 4s. 1d. is to be taken in reduction of the £500 mortgage debt.

I understand that the figures are agreed except as to this sum, and that a proper tender was made by the plaintiff.

The defendants other than John Dixon must pay the costs of the action.

Solicitors, Douglas, Ward, Bowie, & Co., for C. T. Stockdale, Sunderland; Maples, Teesdale, & Co, for Steel, Maitland, & Steel, Sunderland.

Chan. Div.
Farwell, J. } Oct. 30.

In re SHUCKBURGH.
ROBERTSON v. SHUCKBURGH. (a.)

Will—Appointment—Marriage settlement—Limitation over on remarriage of wife—Power of appointment in husband—Appointment referring only to death of wife—Accumulated income.

Where a fund was settled on marriage to pay the income to wife for life reducible to one-half on remarriage, and subject thereto to children on attaining twenty-one as husband should appoint, the husband by his will purported to exercise the power of appointment, but referred only to the death of his wife. The widow having remarried, the elder son, on attaining twenty-one, claimed the distribution of the moiety in the proportion appointed.

Held that, on the principle referred to by Wood, V.C., in Maddison v. Chapman, 4 K. & J. 709, at p. 719, 7 W. R. Ch. Dig. 102, the words which in form imported contingency were to be read as equivalent to "subject to the interests previously limited," and that the elder son was entitled to the appointed share of the moiety and of accumulated income.

Adjourned summons.

Under the settlement dated the 21st of June, 1879, made on the marriage of the late Sir George Shuckburgh, a sum of £20,000 Three per cent. Bank Annuities was brought into settlement by him, the trusts being to pay the income to the husband for life, and after his decease, if his wife should survive him, to her during her life unless and in such case until she should re-marry, and if she should re-marry then to pay the income of one moiety to her during her life for her separate use, and upon further trust from and after the failure or determination of and in the meantime subject to the trusts aforesaid to stand possessed of the capital trust premises in trust for the child or children of the marriage as he (Sir George Shuckburgh) should by any deed appoint, and in default of appointment to the children who should attain twenty-one years in equal shares; and in the event of the minority of a child the trustees were authorized to apply the whole or a part of the income of the fund to which such child was contingently entitled towards his or her maintenance and education, and any surplus income was to be invested as therein mentioned.

The husband died in 1884, leaving two children only—viz., the defendants Sir Stewkley Shuckburgh and Gerald Shuckburgh, the latter being now still an infant.

By his will dated the 5th of June, 1882, the husband purported to exercise the said power of appointment in the following words: "In pursuance of the power given to me by the said settlement I do hereby appoint that after the death of my said wife the said sum of £20,000 or the investments for the time being representing the same shall as to £12,000 thereof be held upon trust for my son Stewkley and as to the sum of £8,000 thereof upon trust for my son Gerald."

Lady Shuckburgh remarried in 1886, whereupon her interest in one moiety of the funds ceased.

The trustees had since accumulated the income of this moiety, and it was now represented by a sum of £3,696 India Stock.

The elder son having attained twenty-one years, and the trustees desiring to distribute the sons' moiety of the capital, the questions arose whether the appointment affected the fund of accumulated income and whether the fund appointed to Sir Stewkley must (under a clause in the settlement) be brought into hotchpot, so as to make the shares of the appointees equal.

Wurtzburg, for the trustees.

T. Methold, for the defendant Sir Stewkley Shuckburgh.—Where there is a set of limitations with a gift over referring to one contingency only, and that fails, the gift over takes effect as if on the failure of all the prior limitations: Jones v. Westcomb, 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 245, pl. 10; Stanford v. Stanford, 35 W. R. 191, 34 Ch. D. 362; In re Jobson, Jobson v. Richardson, 44 Ch. D. 157, 38 W. R. Dig. 220; In re Akeroyd, Roberts v. Akeroyd, [1893] 3 Ch. 363. The elder son is now entitled, on a distribution of the £10,000, to have a share of three-fifths of the capital and of the accumulated income.

Sargant, for the defendant Gerald Stewkley.—Here the limitations are only determined as to one-half of the trust fund, and there is no ground for presupposing that the testator meant to negative what all the deeds express. The court is not at liberty to guess at what the testator intended.

In re Tredwell, [1891] 2 Ch. 640, 40 W. R. Dig. 280, referred to.

FARWELL, J.—The court in construing wills of this kind has to avoid the Scylla of saying on the one hand what the testator must have meant and the Charybdis of adhering too closely to the letter on the other hand. On the whole, I have come to the conclusion that this is an appointment of the whole fund subject to the life interest of the wife or such part as existed. Assuming (but without deciding it) that Mr. Sargant is right in saying that there is no such presumption against intestacy in the case of a power as in the case of a will disposing of property, I do find on the will an absolute intention to appoint the whole of the trust property. It is quite true that the testator recites the power to appoint after the death of his wife. This is accurate in the sense that he had that much, but he had more. But what is important is not the point of time but the existence of the interest. The wife had a life interest reducible to one moiety on re-marriage. Obviously the testator refers to the death of the wife, and thus shows that he does not intend to displace her interest. I think that this is a fair way of applying principles familiar to the court. The general principle is well expressed by Wood, V.C., in Maddison v. Chapman, 4 K. & J. 709, where at p. 719, speaking of cases where there is a limitation over which, though expressed in the form of a contingent limitation, is, in fact, dependent upon a condition essential to the determination of the interests previously limited, he says: "I apprehend the true way of testing limitations of that nature is this: Can the words which in form import contingency be read as equivalent to 'subject to the interests previously limited.' Take the simplest case: A limitation to A. for life, remainder to B. for life, and, upon the decease of B., 'if A. be dead,' then to C. in fee. There the limitation to C. is apparently made contingent upon the event of A.'s dying in the lifetime of B. Nevertheless, inasmuch as the condition of A.'s death is an event essential to the determination of the interest previously limited to him, the court reads the devise as if it were to A. for life, remainder to B. for life, and on B.'s death, subject to A.'s life interest (if any), to C. in fee." I apply this to the present case mutatis mutandis. I think that the point of time is not the material matter, but the reference to the prior interest. In the present will I think that the true meaning of the words "after the death of my said wife" is "subject to the wife's interest," and that I am here justified in acting on what I have no doubt the testator really meant. The eldest son is entitled to three-fifths of the moiety and of the accumulations.

(a.) Reported by WARWICK H. DRAPER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Solicitors, Kays & Jones, for all parties.

Chan. Div. } Oct. 25; Nov. 28.
Buckley, J. }

In re TIMMINS & SONS (LIMITED). (a.)

Company—Shares subscribed for in memorandum of association—Shares allotted as fully paid up under contract of sale—Application to register memorandum of contract—Liability of subscriber to memorandum of association—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), s. 25—Companies Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 26), s. 1.

Shares subscribed for in a memorandum of association of a limited company formed in 1893 cannot subsequently be contracted to be paid for in some way other than in cash, or be superseded and replaced by others issued under a contract subsequently executed and registered, even if the shares so subscribed for were intended to be paid for in this way, and those subsequently issued were intended to be the ones subscribed for. And where the shares in question do not exhaust the whole of the shares of the company, an application under section 1 of the Companies Act, 1898, to file a memorandum stating that the shares were issued as part of the consideration of the contract will be refused.

In re Jarvis & Co., 47 W. R. 186, [1899] 1 Ch. 193, and In re Archibald D. Dawnay (Limited), 48 W. R. 600, [1900] W. N. 152, followed.

In re Whitehead & Brothers (Limited), 48 W. R. 58, [1900] 1 Ch. 804, distinguished.

Motion.

This was a motion by certain shareholders in the above company for an order enabling the applicants to file a memorandum under section 1 of the Companies Act, 1898, protecting certain shares as fully paid.

One Ebenezer Timmins, being entitled to a certain business, made his will on the 19th of April, 1888, and thereby devised and bequeathed the business premises and business to two of his sons, upon trust that they should transfer the property to a joint stock company to be formed of the testator's seven children, and the testator provided that there should be allotted to each of his children a certain specified number of shares amounting in the aggregate to 515, and that there should be allotted to the trustees of his will 235 further shares, upon trust for his wife for life, and after her death upon trust in specified numbers for his said seven children, and he provided that all the above shares should be fully-paid shares.

His wife predeceased him.

At his death, therefore, under the provisions of his will, each child was under the above scheme entitled absolutely to a certain specified number of shares, making 750 in all.

After his death the company was formed, and on the 3rd of March, 1893, was incorporated. Each of the seven children signed the memorandum of association for exactly the number of shares to which, as above, he or she was entitled, making the aggregate of 750 shares. The total capital consisted of 1,000 shares. Further shares to the number of 118 had been issued and paid for in cash, making 868 in all, leaving a balance of 132 shares.

On the 4th of March, 1893, an agreement was executed to which the seven children and the company were parties. It was an agreement for the sale of the property to the company. That agreement recited the will and provided for the allotment of the above-mentioned numbers of shares to the seven children respectively (making 750 shares in all), and that they should be fully-paid shares, and that they should be allotted in execution of the trusts of the will.

On the same 4th of March, 1893, as appeared by the minute-book, the company's seal was affixed to the agreement of that date.

On the 22nd of March that agreement was duly filed under the Companies Acts.

On the 15th of April it was resolved that shares be allotted to the seven children to the above numbers, and that share certificates be sealed and signed and issued to them; and that was done.

The object of the present application was to file a memorandum stating that 750 fully-paid shares were issued to the signatories to the memorandum in part satisfaction of the consideration for the assignment of the business mentioned in the agreement of the 4th of March, 1893.

Stewart Smith, for the applicants, in addition to the cases mentioned in the judgment, referred to in In re Brutton & Burney (Limited), 49 W. R. 360, [1901] 1 Ch. 637.

Nov. 28.—BUCKLEY, J.—To the extent to which the company had on the 15th of April, 1893, shares available for allotment, the allotment as fully paid-up shares pursuant to the agreement was properly protected by a registered contract. Upon the facts I am satisfied that the shares referred to in the agreement and allotted on the 15th of April are identified with, in the sense that they were meant to be the same as, those for which the memorandum of association was subscribed. But this does not, in my judgment, enable me to make the order which is asked. To say that the parties intended that they should be the same shares is one thing, and to say that they legally contracted that they should be the same is another. They could not so contract. When the memorandum of association was signed, and the company was registered, there was at once a contract to take and pay. The sale agreement was not yet in existence, and there could not legally be a contract to satisfy the one contract arising upon registration of the company, by rights to arise under another contract intended to be entered into with the company after it was registered. Since the decision of the Court of Appeal in Dalton Time Lock Co. v. Dalton, 66 L. T. Rep. 704, 40 W. R. Dig. 40, it must be taken as settled that the shares for which the children subscribed the memorandum of association were, for all purposes material to the present application, issued on the day on which that memorandum was registered, and that the subscribers then came under liability to pay for those shares in cash. It was not in 1893 competent to them subsequently to contract that these shares should be paid for in some other way, or should be superseded and replaced by other shares to be issued under an agreement subsequently executed and registered. It is, in my judgment, made out by this memorandum of association, and article 3 of the articles, and the draft agreement thereby identified, that the parties did intend that the shares for which they subscribed the memorandum should be paid for in manner provided by the agreement; but inasmuch as they could not, as the law then stood, enter into such a contract, the matter is not thereby advanced. The case, in my opinion, is governed by the decision of Romer, J., in In re Jarvis & Co., 47 W. R. 186, [1899] 1 Ch. 193, which was followed in In re Archibald D. Dawnay (Limited), 48 W. R. 600 [1900] W. N. 152. As regards the decision of Cozens-Hardy, J., in In re Whitehead & Brothers (Limited), 48 W. R. 585, [1900] 1 Ch. 804, I need only say that in my judgment that decision does not govern the present case. For here the total number of shares is not (as it was there) exhausted by the 750 shares in question and the 118 shares otherwise issued. To the extent of the balance of 132 shares at least there remained and remain in the present case shares capable of being allotted under the memorandum of association. This application cannot be used for the purpose of evoking a decision as to what, if any, liability there is in respect of the subscription of the memorandum of association. I refuse the motion, and I do so with the less reluctance by reason of the fact that section 33 of the Companies Act, 1900, has now repealed section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867, and has provided that no proceedings under section 25 shall be commenced after the commencement of that Act. This section might become of importance in case it were sought to enforce liability under the subscription of the memorandum of association.

(a.) Reported by NEVILLE TEBBUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Motion refused.

Solicitors, W. W. Wynne & Sons, for Joseph Burton, Runcorn.

K. B. Div. (Ridley and Phillimore, JJ.) May 22, 1901.

In re AN ARBITRATION BETWEEN THE BWLLFA AND MERTHYR DARE STEAM COLLIERIES (1890) (LIMITED) AND THE PONTYPRIDD WATERWORKS CO. (a.)

Lands Clauses Acts—Compulsory taking of land—Coal mine—Notice to treat—Subsequent rise in price of coal—Compensation—Arbitration—Basis of assessment.

Where a notice to treat for the compulsory taking of a certain part of a coal mine has been given, and arbitration subsequently takes place under the Lands Clauses Acts to determine the compensation to be paid to the owner of the mine in respect of the seams of coal in that part of the said mine, the arbitrator is entitled to take into consideration, in assessing the compensation, a rise in the value of the coal which has taken place subsequently to the date of the notice to treat.

Award stated in the form of a special case by an umpire.

By an instrument in writing under the hand of the secretary of the Bwllfa and Merthyr Dare Steam Collieries (1891) (Limited), dated the 2nd of September, 1898, and addressed to the Pontypridd Waterworks Co., the coal company, after reciting that they were the lessees of certain mines, veins, beds, and seams of coal lying under certain farms and under a portion of a certain reservoir which is situate partly in the parish of Aberdare and partly in the parish of Ystradyfodwg, in the county of Glamorgan, authorized to be made under the Pontypridd Waterworks Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. cviii.), and also within the distance of forty yards from the reservoir on the eastern side, and were desirous of and intended working such of the same mines, veins, beds, and seams of coal under the reservoir and area within the distance of forty yards from the reservoir as was commonly known by the name of the Six Feet Vein or seam of coal, in pursuance of such intention gave notice that they would, after the expiration of thirty days from the notice, begin to work such seam of coal unless in the meantime the waterworks company should signify their willingness to make compensation therefor.

By an instrument in writing dated the 15th of October, 1898, and addressed by the waterworks company to the coal company, the waterworks company, in pursuance of the provisions of the Pontypridd Waterworks Act, 1892, and of the Lands Clauses Acts and the Acts respectively incorporated therewith, gave notice to the coal company that they were willing to make compensation to the coal company for their estate or interest in that part of the mines, veins, beds, and seams of coal as they required, the coal company to leave unworked in the 6 ft. vein or seam of coal so situate under portion of the reservoir, and more particularly delineated on a plan attached thereto, and the waterworks company thereby demanded from the coal company the particulars of their estate and interest in the mines and minerals so required, and of the claims made by them in respect thereof, and further gave notice that if for twenty-one days after the service of that notice they failed to state the particulars of their claim or to treat with the waterworks company in respect of the seam of coal the amount of compensation payable to them would by virtue of section 22 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, be settled in the manner that Act provided for settling cases of disputed compensation.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

On the 2nd of March, 1899, the coal company sent to the waterworks company the said particulars, and gave them notice that, unless they were willing to agree to pay to the coal company the sum of £6,084, the coal company desired to have the amount of purchase-money or compensation to be paid by them for the coal company's interest in that part of the mines, veins, beds, and seams of coal so required to be left unworked, and the amount of compensation for damage to be sustained by the coal company in the working of the adjoining mines, veins, beds, and seams of coal by reason of such part of the beds and seams of coal being left so unworked, settled by arbitration in the manner prescribed by the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845.

The waterworks company refused to pay the coal company this sum of £6,084.

Two arbitrators and an umpire were appointed for the two companies, and the time for making the award was ultimately extended until the 15th of April, 1901. The arbitrators and the umpire then sat on several days, after which it was agreed between the parties, with the consent of the arbitrators, that the latter should retire, and that the umpire should sit during the remainder of the reference and give his award alone, which he accordingly did.

Coal rose in value subsequently to the date of the notice of the 15th of October, 1898.

During the reference the coal company claimed that in consequence of such rise the compensation to be paid by the waterworks company should be assessed, not on the basis of the knowledge of the value of the part of the mines, veins, beds, and seams of coal which was possessed at the date of the notice of the 15th of October, 1898 (which basis is hereinafter called "the first alternative"), but on the basis of the knowledge of such value which was subsequently acquired (which lastly-mentioned basis is hereinafter called "the second alternative").

During the reference the coal company claimed according to the second alternative, that they were entitled to receive from the waterworks company by way of compensation the sum of £9,961 0s. 10d., and in this claim were specifically included sums claimed for (a) wastage, (b) loss by working two acres to the dip, and (c) a sum of 10 per cent. to be paid for compulsory purchase.

At the request and with the consent of the parties it was arranged that the umpire should state in the form of a special case for the opinion of the court the question whether the coal company were entitled to have compensation assessed according to the first alternative or according to the second alternative, and that he should determine what sums the coal company were respectively entitled to receive from the waterworks company by way of compensation according to the first alternative and the second alternative respectively.

In determining the sums hereinafter mentioned the umpire made allowances for wastage, and also for loss by working to the dip, but he did not allow any sum for compulsory purchase, and he accordingly stated this special case, and made this his award.

The question for the opinion of the court was whether the coal company was entitled to have the compensation assessed according to the first alternative, or according to the second alternative.

If the coal company were entitled to have the compensation assessed according to the first alternative, then the umpire awarded and determined that they were entitled to receive from the waterworks company the sum of £2,950.

If the coal company were entitled to have the compensation assessed according to the second alternative, then he awarded and determined that they were entitled to receive from the waterworks company the sum of £5,650.

Abel Thomas, K.C. (W. D. Benson with him), for the coal company.—The second alternative stated by the umpire is the basis on which compensation should be made. The coal company is entitled to the value of the coal on the rise of the price thereof, and the umpire should take into consideration such probable rise. In Brown v. Commissioner for Railways, 15 App. Cas. 240, it was laid down that it does not follow that because a seam of coal is not presently workable at a profit that no compensation is to be given for it if it is likely to prove profitable in the future. The notice to treat by itself does not constitute a contract by the landowner; the contract is not completed until after the award is made: Haynes v. Haynes, 9 W. R. 497, 30 L. J. Ch. 578. A notice to treat creates the relation between the parties of vendor and purchaser, but until the price is ascertained the land remains the property of the vendor: see Tiverton and North Devon Railway Co. v. Loosemore, 32 W. R. 929, 9 App. Cas. 480, at p. 493. The umpire has to arrive at the true value of the coal at the date of the notice to treat, and in doing so he is bound to take into account the knowledge obtained subsequently to such date of the rise in the price of coal—this being a very important element in enabling him to fix the value as on the date of the notice. The award ought therefore to be entered for the larger sum of £5,650.

B. F. Williams, K.C. (Trevor Lewis, with him) for the waterworks company.—The first alternative is the correct one on which the compensation ought to be assessed. The whole question is what was the market price of the coal at the time the notice to treat was given. On that notice being given a contract arose between the parties and the relation of vendor and purchaser was created between them, and the property was transferred. In Penny v. Penny, 16 W. R. 671, L. R. 5 Eq. 227, Wood, V.C., at p. 236, in speaking of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, says: "The scheme of the Act I take to be this: that every man's interest shall be valued, rebus sic stantibus, just as it occurs at the very moment when the notice to treat was given." Therefore the time at which the notice to treat is given is the time at which the value is to be ascertained, and the umpire is restricted to the knowledge of the value of the coal at that time, and must not take into consideration any evidence of any knowledge of the rise in value of the coal that is obtained subsequent to that time: Rhys v. Dare Valley Railway Co., 23 W. R. 23, L. R. 19 Eq. 93. The umpire's award, ought, therefore, to be for the smaller sum. [PHILLIMORE, J., referred to Great Northern Railway Co. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 49 W. R. 261, [1901] 1 Q. B. 416.]

Abel Thomas, K.C., was not called on to reply.

RIDLEY, J.—I do not wish to say more in this case than is necessary to decide the question which of these alternatives stated by the umpire for our opinion is the right one. The first alternative is that the umpire is to assess the compensation to be paid to the coal company by the waterworks company, without reference to what has taken place since the date of the notice to treat, and that he is to deal with the matter as though he possessed no more knowledge than a vendor or a purchaser of the right to work this coal would have had on that date, and not on the basis of the knowledge of such value which was subsequently acquired.

The second alternative is that the arbitrator is to assess the compensation on the basis of the knowledge of the value which was subsequently acquired—that is to say, that he is to take into account what he has learnt since and what can be proved since that date, in order to ascertain the proper price to be given for the right to work that coal. Counsel for the waterworks company has argued that the price or the value is to be ascertained and taken at the date of the notice to treat—namely, on the 15th of October, 1898. I think that is the proper way to put it. That is the date on which the price or value is to be ascertained, and that value so fixed is what has to be given. But when we come to that position we do not at all get as far as the first alternative would require us to go. That alternative says that the arbitrator is not only to fix that as the price, but that he is to shut his eyes and to know nothing about the facts which bear upon that price, or which would have borne upon that price at that date had they been known to those who were treating for the purchase. That is a position I cannot agree with; and I think the first alternative is wrong for that reason. It seems to be based on the argument that because the price is to be ascertained as of the 15th of October, 1898, therefore at the date when the arbitrator fixes it he is to know nothing which persons would not have known who were purchasing at that date. I do not think that is the right view. I think that although that is the date at which the price is to be ascertained, the arbitrator may, and ought to, ascertain it with all the proper evidence bearing upon the subject which is put before him. He ought in such a position to say that the price to be ascertained is to be fixed as of the 15th of October, 1898, but since that date many things have happened governing the price of coal, and therefore the value of the working of these five acres, which would have influenced any person dealing for the purchase thereof if they had known them. It seems to me that the arbitrator ought to take that into account. He wants to get at what was the accurate value as near as he can, not at what would be the comparative guesswork value arrived at by persons who could not know that which the arbitrator now does know—namely, the rise and fall in the price of coal which have occurred since the notice to treat. The present case is rather a singular instance, where the rise of prices has largely fluctuated during the particular period in which the right to work the coal has to be valued, and therefore the point has more significance and attracts more notice. I believe it is in accordance with the practice of arbitrations conducted on this subject—namely, the ascertainment of the value of premises or land to be taken by railway or other companies, to give evidence of that which has taken place since the date of the notice to treat, so long as it has any bearing upon the actual value of the property at that date. It is for the arbitrator to get at the fair price, and I do not mean to say, and I wish to be understood as not saying that the arbitrator is to assume absolutely that all this coal would have been worked out at the high prices. What he is to assume is that there was such a high price (bearing, of course, upon the value of the working of that coal), and that there would have been a fall thereafter. It is with that knowledge that he ought to assess what was the price or value of the coal upon the 15th of October, 1898, the date of the notice to treat. I do not think the second alternative means more than I have endeavoured to express. It says: "On the basis of the knowledge of such value which was subsequently acquired." He is to assess upon the basis of that knowledge, not only upon the high prices which have accrued since, but upon the basis of the whole of the knowledge which he has, both of the rise and fall in prices, and using the sense and the judgment which an arbitrator is required to use in considering that those prices would not last for ever. If the second alternative means no more than that, I am of opinion that the arbitrator would correctly arrive at the value of £5,650. Therefore I think we ought to answer the question by saying that the second alternative is the correct one.

PHILLIMORE, J.—I am of the same opinion, and I so entirely agree with the judgment delivered that I have little to add. I agree with the view of my learned brother, and the contention of counsel for the respondents, that the price or value to be ascertained is the price or value at the date of the notice to treat. That being the case, I think the arbitrator has put the right question before us. The question is merely this: In ascertaining that value is the arbitrator to discard all subsequent evidence, and put himself in the position of a man scientifically inferring from the past to the future at the beginning of the term; or, is he entitled to take into consideration the actual historical facts which have happened during a portion of the term, both as facts established for the past, and as facts from which, as well as from other sources, further inference can be made for the future? Arbitrations follow too soon upon notices to treat, and the prices generally do not vary so rapidly as to make it often of importance to consider this question, and it may be we are giving the first decision upon the subject. But I think the principle is quite easy to ascertain. If there were a market value it would be otherwise, as in that case there would be no necessity to do anything else than ascertain the value of the market; but ex hypothesi there cannot be a market value of things to be taken compulsorily, because, if there were, you would not take them compulsorily but you would get them in the market. There is never any market value of any specific piece of real property. There is a market, and you may occasionally get near to ascertaining the value, but there never can be any market value. It is not the intrinsic value of the number of acres of land which is considered, but it is the value of the acres of land there situate, and that has its own special and particular value. Once establish that there is no market value, then you have to get at the real value of the property as best you can. It may be that it cannot be less than what a purchaser would give, but it certainly may be more. It does not follow that, because there is no particular demand for a particular piece of land, the owner is to sell it for a small sum. He is entitled to make the best profit he can out of it. Therefore, it seems to me that an arbitrator, when he comes to fix the value as of the date of the notice to treat, must take into consideration evidence which shows what has been the profit made out of the property since the notice to treat has been given. If that be true—and I propose to hold that it is true—with regard to all purchases of land under the Lands Clauses Acts and similar Acts, it is à fortiori true in this case. This is not a case of the purchase of land, as the Court of Appeal have thoroughly established in the case of Great Northern Railway Co. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue. The waterworks company have not bought the coalfield; they have not even bought the coal. They have only bought a right to prohibit the coal owners from raising this coal. Consequently, the true inquiry here is, not what the value of the coalfield is, or what the value of the coal is, but what the colliery company, if they had not been prohibited from taking the coal, would have made out of the coal during the time it would have taken them to have got it. Assuming that it would have taken four years as one side contended, or five years as the waterworks company contended, the real loss to the colliery company is what they would have made by getting out that amount of coal which they would naturally have got out in the first year, with interest from that date onwards to the time of the award; what they would have made out of the coal in the second year, and so forth. If you start that estimate before the working of the coal has begun, it must be purely inference. If you start it after the working has begun inference is no longer wanted. You do not want to infer what would have been got in the first year, as you know it, nor the profit, as you know it. The same applies as to the second year, and partially as to the third year. With regard to the remainder of the third year and the fourth and fifth years, it must be estimated; but, instead of being an estimate made five years off with a great deal of uncertainty, it is an estimate made at the outside two and a-half years off, with other elements for the purposes of the calculation. It seems to me to be wrong to say that the arbitrator ought to exclude that. On the contrary he is bound to include all those elements in his calculation. In other words, he is right to proceed, as he expresses it, upon the knowledge of such value which has been subsequently acquired. Therefore I think we ought to say that the second alternative is right, and that there should be judgment accordingly with costs.

Judgment for the claimants that the award should be entered on the second alternative for £5,650, with costs.

Solicitors for the claimants, the colliery company, Bell, Brodrick, & Gray, for C. & W. Kenshole, Aberdare.

Solicitors for the respondents, the waterworks company, Wrentmore & Son, for Frank James & Sons, Cardiff.

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. Divorce. } Nov. 11, 18.

BLOOD v. BLOOD. (a.)

Divorce—Variation of settlements—Section 5 of Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 61).

The court has power under section 5 of the Matrimonial Causes Act to make orders dealing with the property settled for the benefit of the petitioner, even though it may affect the property which, under the settlement, has vested in the children of the marriage.

Motion for variation of settlements under section 5 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 61).

Constance Blood had petitioned for, and obtained, a decree of dissolution of her marriage with Neptune William Blood on the ground of his desertion and adultery.

Priestley and F. Russell, for the petitioner, moved the court to extinguish the respondent's interest in the wife's trust fund under the ante-nuptial settlement dated the 25th of July, 1877. Under that instrument the wife brought into settlement certain property in trust for herself for life, and on her death for the respondent for life, if he should survive her, with remainder to the children of the marriage, with a proviso that if the petitioner should survive the respondent, and marry again after his death, and there should be only one child of the marriage, she should be at liberty to appoint a moiety of her income of her trust funds to such husband, in the event of survivorship, for his life, and a moiety of the trust funds for the children of such second marriage. Counsel contended that although there had been one child of the marriage who having attained the age of twenty-one and died a bachelor and intestate, and having thus obtained a vested interest to which the respondent as the son's next-of-kin had succeeded, yet the court should extinguish the respondent's interest therein.

Inderwick, K.C., and Barnard contended that the property was not settled property within the meaning of section 5 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859, but was property which had come to the respondent by intestacy, the trust having come to an end when the child of the marriage had become absolutely entitled.

Wright, for the trustees of the settlement.

The following cases were cited: Crisp v. Crisp, 21 W. R. 79, L. R. 2 P. & D. 426; Pocock v. Pocock, 16 W. R. 712, 18 L. T. Rep. 338; Pollard v. Pollard, [1894] P. 172; Meredyth v. Meredyth and Leigh, 43 W. R. 304, [1895] P. 92; Wigney v. Wigney, 31 W. R. 140, 7 P. D. 232.

BARNES, J., in delivering judgment, said that the only question now remaining to be decided was whether the settlement could be varied by extinguishing all the interests of the respondent in the capital and income of the petitioner's trust funds. On the 12th of June, 1900, the petitioner obtained a decree nisi on the ground of the respondent's adultery and desertion, and on the 14th of January, 1901, the decree was made absolute.

On the 25th of July, 1877, an ante-nuptial settlement was executed, the wife bringing into settlement certain property in trust for herself for life, and, on her death, to the respondent for life, if he should survive her, with remainder to the children of the marriage, with a proviso that if the petitioner should survive the respondent and marry again after his death, and there should be only one child of the marriage, she should be at liberty to appoint a moiety of her income of her trust funds to such husband, in the event of survivorship, for his life, and a moiety of the trust funds for the children of such second marriage. There had been only one child of the marriage, who attained his majority on the 13th of July, 1899, and who on the 16th of July, 1900, died a bachelor and intestate. The child had therefore obtained a vested interest in the wife's fund, and therefore his father, the respondent, was entitled to succeed to his son's property. The respondent had married again, and on the 22nd of May 1901, he had executed a settlement dealing with the property that came to him through his son under the settlement. Application had now been made under section 5 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859 (without entering into the question of the powers of the court under section 32 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857), that the property should be reconveyed to the wife freed from the husband's interest in it; and, following the case of Meredyth v. Meredyth and Leigh, to accelerate the wife's powers under the settlement. To this it was objected that the court had no power under section 5 of the Act of 1859 to do what was asked. That section enacts that "The court, after a final decree of nullity of marriage or dissolution of marriage, may inquire into the existence of ante-nuptial or post-nuptial settlements made on the parties whose marriage is the subject of the decree and may make such orders with reference to the application of the whole or a portion of the property settled either for the benefit of the children of the marriage or their respective parents as to the court shall seem fit." The words of that section were extremely wide, and the court was very desirous that they should not be narrowed down, for many and various, and so diverse in their circumstances, were the cases that had to be decided thereunder. In the case of Hartopp v. Hartopp and Akhurst, [1899] P. 65, 47 W. R. Dig. 52, it was objected that the court had no power to make the order there asked for as it would affect the interest of the children under the settlement; but he (the learned judge) had himself there held that the court had power under the 5th section, although it was not for the benefit of the children. Again, in a case just recently decided by the President, it was held that the court had power to vary a marriage settlement so as to deprive infant childrenof the marriage of part of their interests secured to them by such settlement.

(a.) Reported by GWYNNE HALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

He was therefore of opinion that the words of the section were wide enough to give the court power to act, although it was clear that the interests of the children might be affected. He therefore thought that all interests of the husband in the wife's trust funds should be extinguished and that the trustees should reconvey the wife's trust fund freed from the husband's interests, subject to any prior life interest under the settlement and subject to any charges made by the child of the marriage. The respondent must pay the costs of the petitioner and of the trustees.

Solicitors, C. Russell; Valpy, Peckham, & Chaplin.

House of Lords.

From C. A. (Ireland). Aug. 5, 1901.

QUINN v. LEATHEM. (a.)

Trades union—Inducing others to break or not to enter into contract—Coercion—Competition—Trade Union Acts, 1871-76—Lawful disposal of his time and labour—Injury to another without justification.

It is an actionable wrong to induce without justification others to break or refrain from entering into contracts, when this is done for the purpose of injuring another, and damage is thereby caused to him. Legitimate trade competition, the lawful exercise of one's calling, and the lawful use of combination for the advancement of one's trade or labour are not an interference with the rights of others. Outside such opposition, any coercion of another to prevent his disposing of his labour or goods is illegal, and purposely to cause damage to a third person in this manner is likewise an injury for which an action will lie.

Allen v. Flood (46 W. R. 259, [1898] A. C. 1) explained and distinguished.

Decision in Temperton v. Russell (41 W. R. 565, [1893] 1 Q. B. 715) approved, but not dicta of Lord Esher therein.

Decision of Court of Appeal ([1899] 2 I. R. 667) affirmed.

Appeal from the Irish Court of Appeal, Leathem v. Craig, [1899] 2 Ir. R. 667.

The respondent brought an action against various defendants, including the appellant, for a wrongful interference with the respondent's business of a butcher at Lisburn, near Belfast.

The facts are set out at length in Lord Brampton's judgment.

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

W. Martin McGrath, and Vesey Knox, for appellant.

Haldane K.C., and F. Watt, for respondent.

The authorities and arguments are given in their lordships' judgments.

THE HOUSE took time to consider their judgment.

Aug. 5.—Earl of HALSBURY, L.C.—In this case the plaintiff has, by a properly-framed statement of claim, complained of the defendants and proved to the satisfaction of a jury that the defendants have wrongfully and maliciously induced customers and servants to cease to deal with the plaintiff; that the defendants did this in pursuance of a conspiracy formed among them; and that in pursuance of the same conspiracy they induced servants of the plaintiff not to continue in the plaintiff's employment; and that all this was done with malice in order to injure the plaintiff; and that it did injure the plaintiff. If upon these facts so found the plaintiff could have no remedy against those who had thus injured him, it could hardly be said that our jurisprudence was that of a civilized community. Nor, indeed, do I understand that anyone has doubted, before the decision in Allen v. Flood, 46 W. R. 258, [1898] A. C. 1, in this House, that such facts would have established a cause of action against the defendants. Now, before discussing the case of Allen v. Flood and what was decided therein, there are two observations of a general character which I wish to make; and one is to repeat what I have very often said before—that every judgment must be read as applicable to the particular facts proved or assumed to be proved, since the generality of the expressions which may be found there are not intended to be expositions of the whole law but are governed and qualified by the particular facts of the case in which such expressions are to be found. The other is that a case is only an authority for what it actually decides. I entirely deny that it can be quoted for a proposition that may seem to follow logically from it. Such a mode of reasoning assumes that the law is necessarily a logical code, whereas every lawyer must acknowledge that the law is not always logical at all. I think that the application of these two propositions renders the decision of this case perfectly plain, notwithstanding the decision in the case of Allen v. Flood. Now, the hypothesis of fact upon which Allen v. Flood was decided by a majority in this House was that the defendants neither uttered nor carried into effect any threat at all. They simply warned the plaintiff's employer of what the men themselves without their persuasion or influence had themselves determined to do, and it was certainly proved that no resolution of the trade union had been arrived at, and that the trade union official had no authority himself to call out the men, which, it was argued in that case, was the threat which coerced the employers to discharge the plaintiff. It was further an element in the decision that there was no case of conspiracy or even of combination. What was alleged to have been done was only the independent and single action of the defendant, actuated in what he did by the desire to express his own views in favour of his fellow members. It is true that I personally did not believe that it was the true view of the facts, but as I have said we must look at the hypothesis of fact upon which the case was decided by the majority of those who took part in the decision. In my view what has been said already is enough to decide this case without going further into the facts of Allen v. Flood, but I cannot forbear accepting with cordiality the statement of the case prepared by two of your lordships—Lord Brampton and Lord Lindley—with great care and precision. Now, in this case it cannot be denied that, if the verdict stands, there was a conspiracy and threats carried into execution so that loss of business and interference with the plaintiff's legal rights are abundantly proved, and I do not understand that the very learned judge who dissented doubted any one of the propositions; but his view was grounded on the belief that Allen v. Flood had altered the law in these respects and made that lawful which would have clearly been actionable before the decision of that case. For the reasons which I have given I cannot agree with that conclusion. I do not deny that if some of the observations made in that case have to be pushed to their logical conclusion it would be very difficult to resist Palles, C.B.'s, inflexible logic; but, with all the respect which any view held by that learned judge is entitled to command, I cannot concur. This case is distinguished in its last form from the essentially important facts in Allen v. Flood. Rightly or wrongly the theory upon which judgment was pronounced in that case is one whereby the present is shown to be one which the majority of your lordships would have held to be a case of actionable injury inflicted without any excuse whatever. There was a subordinate question raised which I must not pass over. It is suggested that FitzGibbon, L.J., did not put all the questions which were necessary to raise all the points which the learned counsel desired to argue. Now I think the charge of the Lord Justice absolutely accurate, and when, in deference to the wishes of the counsel for the defendant, he consented to put such questions as were then desired, it would be intolerable that it should be made afterwards the subject of complaint that he did not at the same time put other questions which he was not asked to put at all. I move that this appeal be dismissed with costs.

Lord MACNAGHTEN (read by Lord Brampton).—Notwithstanding the strong language of O'Brien, J., and the weighty argument of Palles, C.B., I cannot help thinking that the case of Allen v. Flood has very little to do with the question now under consideration. In my opinion the decision in Allen v. Flood laid down no new law. It simply brushed aside certain dicta which were, in the opinion of the majority, contrary to principle, and unsupported by authority. Those dicta are first to be found in the judgment delivered by Lord Esher (then Brett L.J.) on behalf of himself and Lord Selborne, L.C., in Bowen v. Hall, 29 W. R. 367, 6 Q. B. D. 333. They were repeated by Lord Esher, M.R., and Lopes, L.J., in Temperton v. Russell, 41 W. R. 565, [1893] 1 Q. B. 715; but they were not, I think, necessary for the decision in either case. They did form the ground of the decision in Allen v. Flood in its earlier stages. But the only result of the final decision in that case was that the law was restored to the condition in which it was before Lord Esher's views in Bowen v. Hall and Temperton v. Russell were accepted by the Court of Appeal. In fact I think that the head-note to Allen v. Flood might well have run in these words, which were used by Parke, B., in giving the judgment of an exceptionally strong court nearly half a century ago in Stevenson v. Newnham, 13 C. B. 285: "An act which does not amount to a legal injury cannot be actionable because it is done with a bad intent." That, in my opinion, is the sum and substance of Allen v. Flood, if you eliminate all matters of merely passing interest, the charge of the learned judge, the findings of the jury (unintelligible, I think, without a careful examination of the evidence), and the discussion of the evidence itself in the two aspects in which it was presented for the consideration of this House, and for the consideration of the judges by whom the House was assisted. The case which is really brought under review on this appeal is Temperton v. Russell. I cannot distinguish that case from the present case. The facts are identical in substance, and the grounds of decision must be the same. Now, the decision in Temperton v. Russell was not overruled in Allen v. Flood, nor is the authority of Temperton v. Russell, in my opinion, shaken in the least by the decision in Allen v. Flood. Disembarrassed by the expressions which Lord Esher, M.R., unfortunately used in giving judgment, the decision in Temperton v. Russell seems to me to stand on sure ground. So far from being impugned in Allen v. Flood, it had, I think, the approval of Lord Watson, whose judgment seems to me to represent the joint views of the majority far better than any other judgment delivered in the case. Lord Watson says that he did not think it necessary to notice at length Temperton v. Russell because it was to his mind "very doubtful whether in that case there was any question before the court with regard to the effect of the animus of the actor in making that unlawful which would otherwise have been lawful." Then he goes on to say: "The only findings of the jury which the court had to consider were: (1) That the defendants had maliciously induced certain persons to break their contracts with the defendants; and (2) that the defendants had maliciously conspired to induce, and had thereby induced, certain persons not to make contracts with the plaintiffs. There having been undisputed breaches of contract by the persons found to have been induced, the first of these findings raised the same question which was disposed of in Lumley v. Gye, 1 W. R. 432, 2 E. & B. 216. According to the second finding, the person induced merely refused to make contracts, which was not a legal wrong on their part; but the defendants who induced were found to have accomplished their object, to the injury of the plaintiffs, by means of unlawful conspiracy, a clear ground of liability according to Lumley v. Gye if, as the court held, there was evidence to prove it." It must be admitted, I think, that the second reference to Lumley v. Gye in the passage which I have just quoted is a slip, a rare, if not an unexampled, occurrence in a judgment of Lord Watson's. I cannot see that Lumley v. Gye has any bearing on the question of conspiracy. But I do not think that the slip (if it be a slip) impairs the effect of what Lord Watson said. Obviously he thought that there was authority for the proposition that a conspiracy to injure may give rise to civil liability. There is authority for that proposition; but even if there were none to be found, Lord Watson's view that the proposition was supported by authority is, I think, of considerable weight. Precisely the same questions arise in this case as arose in Temperton v. Russell. The answers, I think, must depend upon precisely the same considerations. Was Lumley v. Gye rightly decided? I think that it was. Lumley v. Gye was much considered in in Allen v. Flood. But as it was not directly in question, some of your lordships thought it better to suspend your judgment. In this case the question arises directly, and it is necessary to express an opinion on the point. Speaking for myself, I have no hesitation in saying that I think the decision right, not on the ground of malicious intention—that was not, I think, the gist of the action—but on the ground that a violation of legal right committed knowingly is a cause of action, and that it is a violation of right to interfere with contractual relations recognized by law, if there be no justification for the interference. The only other question is this: Does a conspiracy to injure, if there be damage, give rise to civil liability? It seems to me that there is authority for that proposition, and that it is founded in good sense. Gregory v. Brunswick, 6 Man. & G. 205, is one authority, and there are others. There are valuable observations on the subject in Erle, J.'s, charges to the jury in Reg. v. Duffield, 5 Cox C. C. 404, and Reg. v. Rowlands, 5 Cox C. C. 436. Those were cases of trade union outrages, but the observations to which I refer were not confined to exploded doctrines in regard to restraint of trade. There are also weighty observations to be found in the charge delivered by Fitzgerald, J., in Reg. v. Parnell, 14 Cox C. C. 508. That a conspiracy to injure, an oppressive combination, differs widely from an invasion of civil rights by a single individual cannot be doubted. I agree with the remarks of Bowen, L.J., and Lord Bramwell and Lord Hannen in Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor, Gow, & Co., 37 W. R. 756, 23 Q. B. D. 598; 40 W. R. 337, [1892] A. C. 25. A man may resist without much difficulty the wrongful act of an individual. In repelling it he would probably have at least the moral support of his friends and neighbours; but it is a very different thing, as Fitzgerald, J., observes, when one man has to defend himself against many combined to do him wrong. I have only to add that I agree generally with the judgments delivered in the courts below, and particularly with the judgment of Andrews, J., in the Queen's Bench, and the judgment of Holmes, L.J., in the Court of Appeal. I do not think that the acts done by the defendants were done "in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute between employers and workmen." So far as I can see there was no trade dispute at all. Leathem had no dispute with his men. They had no quarrel with him. For his part he was quite willing that all his men should join the union. He offered to pay all their fines and entrance money. What he did object to was a cruel punishment which it was proposed to inflict on some of his men for not having joined the union sooner. There was certainly no trade dispute in the case of Munce. But the defendants conspired to do harm to Munce in order to compel him to do harm to Leathem, and so enable them to wreak their vengeance upon Leathem's servants who were not members of the union. I also think that the provision in the Conspiracy and Protection of Protection Act, 1875, which says that in certain cases an agreement or combination is not be "indictable as a conspiracy," has nothing to do with civil remedies.

Lord SHAND (read by Lord Davey).—After the able and full opinions of the learned judges of the Court of Appeal in Ireland, holding that the verdict and judgment for the plaintiff ought to stand, the grounds of my opinion that this judgment ought to be affirmed, and the appeal dismissed, may be shortly stated. I refrain from any detailed reference to the numerous cases cited in the argument. These have been considered and discussed by the judges of the Court of Appeal, and I concur in the reasoning of the majority of their lordships, and they have been already dealt with in my judgment in the case of Allen v. Flood. In that case I expressed my opinion that while a combination of different persons in pursuit of a trade object was lawful, although resulting in such injury to others as may be caused by legitimate competition in labour, yet that a combination for no such object, but in pursuit merely of a malicious purpose to injure another, would be clearly unlawful; and, having considered the arguments in this case, my opinion has only been confirmed. The learned Lord Justice before whom the case was tried told the jury with reference to the words "wrongfully and maliciously" in the first question that the questions to be answered by them were only matters of fact to be determined on the evidence, and in particular involved the question whether the intention of the defendants was to injure the plaintiff in his trade, as distinguished from the intention of legitimately advancing their own interests. The verdict affirms that this was the fact, for after the direction of the learned judge no other interpretation can be given to the finding that the acts were done by the defendants "wrongfully and maliciously." This being clearly so, the question now raised is whether in consequence of the decision of this House in Allen v. Flood, and of the grounds on which that case was decided, it is now the law that where the acts complained of are in pursuance of a combination or conspiracy to injure or ruin another, and not to advance the parties' own trade interests, and injury has resulted, no action will lie; or, to put the question in a popular form, whether the decision in Allen v. Flood has made boycotting lawful? Apart from the decision in that case the judgment of the learned judges in Ireland would have been unanimous in affirming the principle to which FitzGibbon, L.J., gave effect. The general law cannot, I think, be more happily stated than in the passage from the judgment of Bowen, L.J., in the Mogul case, 61 L. T. Rep. 820, which was quoted by Lord Halsbury, L.C., with an expression of his strong approval, in Allen v. Flood. The Lord Chancellor there said: "I can desire no more apt exposition of the law than that which is contained in Bowen, L.J.'s, admirably reasoned judgment in the Mogul case in the Court of Appeal," which he then quotes, as follows: "Intimidation, obstruction, and molestation are forbidden; so is the intentional procurement of the violation of individual rights, contractual or other, assuming always that there is no just cause for it. The intentional driving away of customers by show of violence (Tarleton v. M'Gawley, 1 Peake N. P. 270); the obstruction of actors on the stage by preconcerted hissing (Clifford v. Brandon, 2 Camp. 358; Gregory v. Brunswick the disturbance of wildfowl in decoys by the firing of guns (Carrington v. Taylor, 11 East, 571, and Keeble v. Hickeringall, 11 East, 573, n; 11 Mod. 74, 131); the impeding or threatening servants or workmen (Garret v. Taylor, Cro. Jac. 567); the inducing persons under personal contracts to break their contracts (Bowen v. Hall and Lumley v. Gye), are all instances of such forbidden acts." The Lord Chancellor also spoke with approval, as I should certainly do, of the views to a similar effect stated by Erle, J., in his work on trade unions. It may be that in certain cases the object of inflicting injury and success in that object require combination or conspiracy with others in order to be effectual. That was not so in all the cases enumerated by Bowen, L.J., but no question on that point arises in the circumstances of this particular case, for, according to the verdict of the jury, the defendants by combined action wrongfully and maliciously induced a number of persons to refrain from dealing with the plaintiff. That is sufficient for the decision of the case, although in my opinion it is further proved that they succeeded in inducing a servant and a customer of the plaintiff to break existing contracts with him. On the whole, it seems to me clear that the defendants were guilty of unlawful acts unless the judgment in the case of Allen v. Flood has introduced a change which has rendered such acts lawful. As to the vital distinction between Allen v. Flood and the present case, it may be stated in a single sentence. In Allen v. Flood the purpose of the defendant was by the acts complained of to promote his own trade interest, which he was held entitled to do, although it was injurious to his competitors; whereas in the present case, while it is clear that there was combination, the purpose of the defendants was "to injure the plaintiff in his trade as distinguished from the intention of legitimately advancing their own interests." It is unnecessary to quote from the judgments of the majority of the learned judges in Allen v. Flood to show their opinions on the importance of this essential point. Lord Herschell, for example, said: "The object which the defendant and those whom he represented had in view throughout was what they believed to be the interest of the class to which they belonged; the step taken was a means to that end"; and the other Lords in the majority expressed themselves to a similar effect. For myself, what I said was this: "If anything is clear on the evidence it seems to me to be this, that the defendant was bent, and bent exclusively, on the object of furthering the interests of those whom he represented in all that he did, that this was his motive of action, and not a desire, to use the words of the learned judge, 'to do mischief to the plaintiffs in their lawful calling.' The case was one of competition in labour, which in my opinion is in all respects analagous to competition in trade, and the same principles must apply to it." The ground of judgment of the majority of the House, however varied in expression by their lordships, was, as it appears to me, that Allen, in what he said and did, was only exercising the right of himself and his fellow-workmen as competitors in the labour market, and the effect of injury thus caused to others from such competition, which was legitimate, was not a legal wrong. It is only necessary to add that the defendants here have no such defence as legitimate trade competition. Their acts were wrongful and malicious in the sense found by the jury—that is to say, they acted by conspiracy, not for any purpose of advancing their own interests as workmen, but for the sole purpose of injuring the plaintiff in his trade. I am of opinion that the law prohibits such acts as unjustifiable and illegal; that by so acting the defendants were guilty of a clear violation of the rights of the plaintiff, with the result of causing serious injury to him; and that the case of Allen v. Flood as a case of legitimate competition in the labour market is essentially different, and gives no ground for the defendants' argument. I concur in holding that there is not sufficient ground for disturbing the verdict on the question of damages, and in holding that the special provision of section 3 of the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875, has no application to the circumstances of this case.

LORD BRAMPTON. — This case now awaiting final judgment is one which, looked at simply as affecting the parties to it, is of no serious pecuniary concern, but it involves nevertheless questions of widespread importance to every trade, and to every employer and servant engaged in the trade. The action was originally brought in the High Court in Ireland by Henry Leathem, the respondent, as plaintiff, against Joseph Quinn (the sole appellant) and four other persons—John Craig (now dead), John Davey, Henry Dornan, and Robert Shaw, as defendants—to recover damages for a wrongful interference with the plaintiff's business of a butcher at Lisburn, a few miles from Belfast. For upwards of twenty years, before July, 1895, Leathem had carried on business in Lisburn, having as one of his constant customers Andrew Munce (now also dead), who kept a butcher's shop at Belfast, to whom he supplied weekly £20 or £30 worth of the best meat; and he had in his employment as assistants several men at weekly wages. In February, 1893, a trade union society was registered under the Trade Union Acts, 1871 and 1876, by the name of "The Belfast Journeyman Butchers and Assistants' Association." Of this society Craig was president, Quinn treasurer, and Davey secretary; they were original members; the other defendants, Dornan and Shaw, joined subsequently as mere ordinary members. Leathem was not a member, nor were any of his assistants. The members of the society amongst themselves soon adopted an unregistered rule that they would not work with non-union men, nor would they cut up meat that came from a place where non-union hands were employed; but there was no evidence that, prior to July, 1895, this had been productive of any conflict between Leathem's men and the union. Early in that month, however, Leathem, on the invitation of Davey, attended a meeting of the society held at Lisburn. All the defendants were there. Leathem had at that time among his assistants a man named Robert Dickie, a family man, with young children dependent upon him; this man had been in his employ for ten years; he was desirous of keeping him and all the others employed by him in his service, but still of doing anything in reason to conciliate the society. But I had better let him tell his account of this meeting in his own words, as he told it to the jury. "I said that I came on behalf of my men, and was ready to pay all fines, debts, and demands against them; and I asked to have them admitted to the society. The defendant Shaw got up and objected to their being allowed to work on, and to their admission, and said that my men should be put out of my employment, and could not be admitted, and should walk the streets for twelve months. I said it was a hard case to make a man walk the streets with nine small children, and I would not submit to it. Shaw moved a resolution that my assistants should be called out; a man named Morgan seconded the resolution, and it was carried. Craig was in the chair; I was sitting beside him. He said there were some others there that would suit me as well. He picked them out, and they said they could work for me. I said they were not suitable for my business, and I would keep the men I had. They said I had to take them. I said I would not put out my men. Craig then spoke, and told me my meat would be stopped in Andrew Munce's if I would not comply with their wishes." The chairman spoke truly; for, on the 6th of September the secretary of the society wrote to Leathem asking "whether he had made up his mind to continue to employ non-union labour," adding, "If you continue as at present our society will be obliged to adopt extreme measures in your case." He wrote also to Mr. Munce on the 13th of September stating that a deputation had been appointed to wait upon him to come to a decision in regard to his purchase of meat from Leathem & Sons, as they were anxious to have a settlement at once. To this letter Mr. Munce sent, on the 14th of September, a very sensible reply: "It is quite out of my province to interfere with the liberty of any man. But why refer to me in the matter? I do not think it fair for you to come at me, seeing it appears to be the Messrs. Leathem that you wish to interfere with." A deputation, which included Craig, Quinn, Shaw, and Dornan, had an interview with a son of Mr. A. Munce, and on the 17th of September he wrote to the secretary the reply of his father, "that he could not interfere to bring pressure to bear on Mr. Leathem to employ none but society men by refusing to purchase meat from him, as that would be outside his province and interfering with the liberty of another man." The 18th of September brought a definite announcement from the secretary to Mr. Munce, that having failed to make a satisfactory arrangement with Mr. Leathem, they had no other alternative but to instruct his (Munce's) employees "to cease work immediately Leathem's beef arrives." Thereupon Mr. Munce was constrained to send to Leathem on the 20th of September a telegram: "Unless you arrange with society you need not send any beef this week, as men are ordered to quit work." On and from that day Munce took no more meat from Leathem, to his substantial loss. Another mode adopted by several of the defendants with a view to prevent persons from dealing with Leathem was the publication throughout the district of Lisburn of "black lists," containing and holding up to odium not only his name, but the names of persons who dealt with him, as a warning to those persons that if they wished their names to be removed from the lists they must have no more dealings with him or any other non-society shops. Amongst others, a man named McBride, a customer of Leathem, was operated on by this mode, and ceased to deal with him; attempts were also made by means of such lists to induce two other men named Davis and Hastings. With the object of further inconveniencing Leathem in his trade, two of his weekly servants, Rice and McDonnell, who had been non-union men, were somehow or other induced to join the society and to quit their service with Leathem; it is true that they gave due notice of their intention to do so, and as regards them, therefore, no separate cause of action could be maintained. But after they had left their service they were paid by the society during the time that they were out of work weekly sums of money as compensation for the wages which they would have earned with Leathem. As regards the assistant, Robert Dickie, he left his service without any notice in the middle of a week, and so broke his contract with his employers, and there was evidence that he was induced to do so through the influence of the defendants, for Dickie's evidence at the trial was that he was brought out of Leathem's shop by Rice to a meeting of the society in a room over the defendant Dornan's shop; that Shaw (another defendant) was there; that they wanted him to leave Leathem because the rest were out, and promised to pay him what he had from Leathem; that he left and was paid by Rice for the society and was then in Dornan's service. The case came on for trial at the Belfast Assizes in July, 1896, before FitzGibbon, L.J., and a special jury. The pleadings charged in the first four counts as separate causes of action—(1) the procuring Munce to break contracts he had made with Leathem; (2) the publication by the defendants of "black lists"; (3) the intimidation of Munce and other persons to break their contracts; and (4) the coercion of Dickie and other servants to leave the service of the plaintiff. Each of these counts alleged that the acts complained of were done "wrongfully and maliciously, and with intent to injure the plaintiff, and to occasion him and have occasioned him actual loss, injury, and damage." The fifth and last count charged also as a separate cause of action, that the defendants unlawfully and maliciously conspired together, and with others, to do the various acts complained of in the previous counts, with intent to injure the plaintiff and his trade and business, and that that by reason of the conspiracy he was injured and damaged in his trade. Damages and an injunction were claimed. At the conclusion of the evidence, Mr. O'Shaughnessy, Q.C., for the defendants, submitted that they were entitled to a nonsuit upon the grounds that there was no evidence of a contract between Munce and Leathem, nor of any pecuniary damage to the plaintiff by reason of the acts of the defendants, and the acts of the defendants were legitimate. The learned Lord Justice refused to nonsuit. He left, in compliance with the wishes of the defendants' counsel, the three following questions to the jury: (1) Did the defendants, or any of them, wrongfully and maliciously induce the customers or servants of the plaintiff named in the evidence to refuse to deal with the plaintiff? (2) Did the defendants, or any two or more of them, maliciously conspire to induce the plaintiff's customers or servants named in the evidence, or any of them, not to deal with the plaintiff or not to continue in his employment, and were such persons so induced not to do so? (3) Did the defendants Davey, Dornan, and Shaw, or any of them, publish the "black list" with intent to injure the plaintiff in his business, and, if so, did the publication so injure him? The jury answered each of these questions in the affirmative, and assessed the damages against all the defendants at £200, and with regard to the third question they found against the defendants Dornan, Davey, and Shaw, with an additional £50 as damages against them only. Judgment was given in accordance with that verdict. The defendants appealed, but the appeal was dismissed except that the damages were disallowed in respect of the third question. FitzGibbon, L.J., rightly I think, refused to nonsuit. For there was clearly evidence for the consideration of the jury upon one or more of (I think upon all) the causes of action. I need not discuss that point further, for it was practically disposed of during the argument before this House. No evidence was called for the defendants. From a careful perusal of the learned Lord Justice's own notes and memoranda, I am satisfied that every indulgence that could have been reasonably given to the learned counsel in presenting his case to the jury was allowed him, and I am satisfied that he must be taken to have acquiesced in the form in which the questions submitted for the consideration of the jury were left to them, even though it might otherwise have been open to criticism. After commenting upon the evidence relied upon by the plaintiff as proof of actionable misconduct, the judge told the jury that they had to consider whether the conduct and actions of the defendants went beyond the limits which would not be actionable—namely, securing or advancing their own interests or those of their trade by reasonable means, including lawful combination, or whether their acts as proved were intended and calculated to injure the plaintiff in his trade through a combination, and with a common purpose to prevent the free action of his customers and servants in dealing with him, and with the effect of actually injuring him, as distinguished from acts legitimately done to secure or advance their own interests; that acts done with the object of increasing the profits or raising the wages of any combination of persons, such as the society to which the defendants belonged, by reasonable and legitimate means were perfectly lawful and were not actionable, so long as no wrongful act was maliciously—that is to say, intentionally—done to injure a third party. To constitute such a wrongful act for the purposes of this case, he told the jury that they must be satisfied that there had been a conspiracy, a common intention and a combination on the part of the defendants to injure the plaintiff in his business, and that acts must be proved to have been done by the defendants in furtherance of that intention, which had inflicted actual money loss upon the plaintiff in his trade. And having so told the jury, he proposed to put to them as the question which they had to try upon the evidence, whether the acts of the defendants were or were not in that sense actionable? I have thought it right to follow as nearly as possible the language of the Lord Justice, for that charge was delivered before Allen v. Flood was decided in this House, and in substance I think that it was correct, having regard to the particular case. In some respects it seems to me a little too favourable to the defendants. The defendants' counsel made four objections to the summing up. The first two—viz., that the judge had given no definition of damage, and that he had told the jury that the liability of the defendants depended on a question of law—were conclusively answered in the summing up. The third objection was that the question relating to the black list should be separately left to the jury. It was then so left, and as to that the judge directed them that there was not sufficient evidence to connect Quinn and Craig with the black lists. By this, I take it, he meant not as an independent cause of action, there being, in fact, no evidence of their personal participation in the publication of these lists. But that left them still affected by them as overt acts of conspiracy, for each of which every one of the conspirators was liable, and the evidence touching the black lists is beyond question admissible under the conspiracy count. The fourth objection was that there was no evidence of any binding contract having been broken through the action of the defendants, but the judge then declined to withdraw the question of contract from the jury, and I think rightly. And, at a later stage, after the whole matter had been disposed of under the conspiracy count, he rightly refrained from putting the question at all, because it had become unnecessary. The single general question first proposed by the judge was finally divided into three separate questions—(1) Did the defendants or any of them wrongfully and maliciously induce the customers or servants of the plaintiff to refuse to deal with him? (2) Did the defendants or any two or more of them maliciously conspire to induce the customers or servants named in the evidence, or any of them, not to deal with the plaintiff, or not to continue in his employment; and were such persons so induced not to do so? (3) Did the defendants Davey, Dornan, and Shaw, or any of them, publish the "black list" with intent to injure the plaintiff in his business, and if so, did the publication injure him? The jury answered each of these questions in the affirmative.

Rightly understood, I think that the judgment in Allen v. Flood is inapplicable. But in order to properly appreciate it, it is essential to ascertain what were the material facts assumed to exist by their lordships who assented to that judgment, and what were the principles of law applied by them to those facts. This necessity will be more apparent when it is realized that unanimity of opinion as to the facts certainly did not prevail, and that the judges who were called on to render assistance to the House were given one simple question only—viz., "Assuming the evidence given by the plaintiff's witnesses to be correct, was there any evidence of a cause of action fit to be left to the jury?" The evidence of the plaintiff's witnesses handed to the judges most certainly did not altogether coincide with some very material facts assumed by their lordships. This would account for the variance in the views expressed as to the legal rights and alleged wrongful acts of the parties. It would be an endless task to endeavour to reconcile all these differences of fact and opinion. I will therefore not make the attempt. Some of this confusion arose, no doubt, from the course taken, rightly or wrongly, at the trial. Then all questions of conspiracy, intimidation, coercion, or breach of contract were withdrawn from the jury, the only matters of fact found by them being that Allen maliciously induced the Glengall Co. to discharge Flood and Taylor from their employment, and not to engage them again, and that each plaintiff had suffered £20 damages. It was assumed by their lordships that the Glengall Co. were under no contractual obligation to retain the plaintiffs, Flood and Taylor, in their service for any duration of time, but might dismiss them from their employment at any moment, and that the boilermakers were working under the same conditions; that Allen, in making the communication which induced the company to dismiss the plaintiff, was only doing that which he had a legal right to do, and their lordships held, therefore, that the plaintiffs had no legal cause of action against either the company or the defendant, and that the mere fact, as found by the jury, that the defendant was actuated by a malicious motive could not convert a rightful into a wrongful act. This proposition that the exercise of an absolute legal right cannot be treated as wrongful and actionable merely because a malicious motive prompted such exercise was established as clear law in the Bradford Corporation v. Pickles, 44 W. R. 190 [1895] A. C. 587, and it is now too late to dispute it even if one were disposed to do so, which I am not. It must not, however, be supposed that a malicious intention can in no case be material to the maintenance of an action. It is commonly used to defeat the defence of privilege, to do or to say that which, without such privilege, would be wrongful and actionable. Take the familiar instance of an action for malicious prosecution. It is not a wrongful act for any person who honestly believed that he had reasonable and probable cause, though he had it not in fact, to put the criminal law in motion against another; but if a malicious motive operating on the mind of such prosecutor be added, that which would have been a justifiable act, if done without malice, becomes with malice wrongful and actionable. What would constitute such malice it is not material for the purposes of this case to define. In the present case the alleged cause of action is very different from that in Allen v. Flood. The real and substantial cause of action was an unlawful conspiracy to molest the plaintiff, a trader, in carrying on his business, and by so doing to invade his undoubted right—in the words of Alderson, B., in Hilton v. Eckersley, 6 E. & B. 47, 3 W. R. C. L. Dig. 176—"in all matters not contrary to law to regulate his own mode of carrying on his business according to his own discretion and choice." To this I would add the emphatic expression of Lord Halsbury, L.C., in the Mogul case: "All are free to trade upon what terms they will," and of Bramwell, B., in Reg. v. Druitt, 10 Cox C. C. 592, who, in a passage referred to by Lord Halsbury, L.C., in the same case, said: "The liberty of a man's mind and will to say how he should bestow himself and his means, his talents, and his industry, is as much a subject of the law's protection as is that of his body." Again, Sir William Erle thus expresses himself: "Every person has a right under the law as between himself and his fellow-subjects to full freedom in disposing of his own labour, or his own capital, according to his will. It follows that every other person is subject to the correlative duty arising therefrom, and is prohibited from any obstruction to the fullest exercise of this right which can be made compatible with the exercise of similar rights by others." I am not aware that the rights thus stated have ever been seriously questioned. I rest my judgment on the principle expressed in the extracts which I have read. I seek for no more. The remedy for the invasion of a legal right was thus stated by Lord Watson in Allen v. Flood: "Any invasion of the civil rights of another person is in itself a legal wrong, carrying with it liability to repair its necessary or natural consequences in so far as these are injurious to the person whose right is infringed." I cannot suppose that any intelligent person reading the evidence adduced on the trial of the present case would fail to come to the conclusion that the acts complained of amounted to a serious invasion of the plaintiff's trade rights, and I am at a loss to comprehend on what ground the defendants seek to justify or excuse their action towards him. As members of a trade union they had no more legal right to commit what would otherwise be unlawful wrongs than if the association to which they were attached had never come into existence. They had no more right to coerce others pursuing the same calling as themselves to join their society, or to adopt their views or rules, than those who differed from them and belonged to other trade associations would have a right to coerce them. The Legislature in conferring on trade unions such privileges as were contained in the Acts of 1871 and 1876 most certainly has not conferred on any association or any member of it a licence to obstruct or interfere with the freedom of any other person in carrying on his business or bestowing his labour in the way which he thinks fit, provided only that it is lawful; and although a combination of members of a trade union for certain purposes is no longer unlawful and criminal as a conspiracy, merely because the objects of that combination are in restraint of trade, no protection is given to any combination or conspiracy which before the Act of 1871 would have been criminal for other reasons. One cannot read the 7th section of the Conspiracy Act of 1875 without seeing that it had no intention to tolerate such proceedings as in this case were complained of, but rather to protect those upon whom coercive measures might be practised. But I will not linger upon a consideration of what might be done in competition, for competition is not even suggested as a justification of the acts now complained of—acts of wanton aggression, the outcome of a malicious but successful conspiracy, to harm the plaintiff in his trade. It cannot be—it has not even been suggested—that these acts were done in furtherance of any of the lawful objects of the association as set forth in their registered rules, according to the statutory requirements, nor in support of any lawful right of the association, or any member of it, nor to obtain or maintain fair hours of labour or fair wages, nor to promote a fair understanding between employers and employed or workman and workman. It would indeed be a strange mode of promoting such a good understanding to coerce a tradesman's customers to leave him because he would not at the bidding of the association dismiss workmen who desired to continue in his service, and whom he wished to retain, to make way for others whom he did not want; nor for the settlement of any dispute, for none had existence.

I will next deal with the conspiracy part of the claim, respecting which much confusion and uncertainty seems somehow to have arisen, which I find it difficult to understand. I have no intention, however, of embarking upon a history relating to the subject. That would be useless for the present purpose, and I will endeavour briefly to state how I view the matter practically as far as it concerns the present case. A conspiracy consists of an unlawful combination of two or more persons to do that which is contrary to law, or to do that which is wrongful or harmful towards some other person. It may be punished criminally by indictment, or civilly by an action if damage has been occasioned to the person against whom it is directed. It may also consist of an unlawful combination by unlawful means. The essential elements, whether of a criminal or of an actionable conspiracy are in my opinion the same, though to sustain an action special damage must be proved. I will quote, as a very instructive definition, the words of a great lawyer, Willes, J., in Mulcahy v. The Queen, L. R. 3 H. L. 306, 17 W. R. H. L. Dig. 4-13, in delivering the unanimous opinion of himself and others, which was adopted by this House—"A conspiracy consists not merely in the intention of two or more, but in the agreement of two or more, to do an unlawful act, or to do a lawful act by unlawful means. So long as such a design rests in intention only, it is not indictable. When two agree to carry it into effect the very plot is an act in itself, and the act of each of the parties, promise against promise, actus contra actum, capable of being enforced if lawful; and punishable if for a criminal object, or for the use of criminal means. The number and compact give weight and cause danger." It is true that these words were uttered touching a criminal case, but they are none the less applicable to conspiracies made the subject of civil actions like the present. I have occupied more of your lordships' time than I had intended, but the case is of great importance and I feel that such unlawful conduct as has been pursued towards Mr. Leathem demands serious attention. I think that the law is with him, and that the damages awarded were in the circumstances very moderate. It is at all times a painful thing for any individual to be the object of the hatred, spite, and ill-will of anyone who seeks to do him harm. But that is as nothing compared to the danger and alarm created by a conspiracy formed by a number of unscrupulous conspirators acting under an illegal compact together and separately, as often as opportunity occurs, regardless of law, and actuated by malevolence, to injure him and all who stand by him. Such a conspiracy is a powerful and dangerous engine, which in this case has, I think, been employed by the defendants for the perpetration of organized and ruinous oppression. I think that the judgment in the courts below ought to be affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Lord ROBERTSON concurred.

Lord LINDLEY.—The case of Allen v. Flood has so important a bearing on the present appeal that it is necessary to ascertain exactly what this House really decided in that celebrated case. It was an action by two workmen of an iron company against three members of a trade union for maliciously, wrongfully, and with intent to injure the plaintiffs, procuring and inducing the iron company to discharge the plaintiffs. The only question which the House of Lords had to decide in that case was whether what Allen had done entitled the plaintiffs to maintain their act against him. What the jury found that he had done was that he had maliciously induced the employers of the plaintiffs to discharge them, whereby the plaintiffs suffered damage. Different views were taken by the noble lords who heard the appeal, but the opinion of the majority was that Allen had no power himself to call the workmen out, and all that he did was to inform the employers of the plaintiffs that most of their workmen would leave them if they did not discharge the plaintiffs. There being no question of conspiracy, intimidation, coercion, or breach of contract for the consideration of the House, and the House having come to the conclusion that Allen had done no more than I have stated, the majority of the noble lords held that the action against Allen would not lie, that he had infringed no right of the plaintiffs, that he had done nothing which he had not a legal right to do, and that the fact that he had acted maliciously, and with intent to injure the plaintiffs, did not entitle the plaintiffs to maintain the action. The decision, as I understand it, establishes two propositions, one a far-reaching and extremely important proposition of law, and the other a comparatively unimportant proposition of mixed law and fact, useful as a guide, but of a very different character from the first. The first and important proposition is that an act otherwise lawful, although harmful, does not become actionable by being done maliciously in the sense of proceeding from a bad motive, and with intent to annoy or harm another. This is a legal doctrine not new nor laid down for the first time in Allen v. Flood; it had been gaining ground for some time, but it was never before so fully and authoritatively expounded as in that case. In applying this proposition, however, care must be taken to bear in mind, first, that in Allen v. Flood criminal responsibility had not to be considered. It would revolutionize criminal law to say that the criminal responsibility for conduct never depends on intention. Secondly, it must be borne in mind that even in considering a person's liability to civil proceedings the proposition in question only applies to "acts otherwise lawful"—i.e., to acts involving no breach of duty, or, in other words, no wrong to anyone. I shall refer to this matter later on. The second proposition is that what Allen did infringed no right of the plaintiffs, even though he acted maliciously and with a view to injure them. I have already stated what he did and all that he did in the opinion of the majority of the noble lords. If their view of the facts was correct, their conclusion that Allen infringed no right of the plaintiff is perfectly intelligible and, indeed, unavoidable. Truly, to inform a person that others, not under the control of the informant, will annoy or injure him unless he acts in a particular way cannot of itself be actionable whatever the motive or intention of the informant may have been.

I will pass now to the facts of this case and consider (1) what the plaintiff's rights were; (2) what the defendants' conduct was; (3) whether that conduct infringed the plaintiff's right. For the sake of clearness it will be convenient to consider these questions, in the first place, apart from the statute which legalizes strikes, and in the next place, with reference to that statute. (1) As to the plaintiff's rights. He had the ordinary rights of a British subject. He was at liberty to earn his own living in his own way, provided that he did not violate some special law prohibiting him from so doing, and provided that he did not infringe the rights of other people. This liberty involved liberty to deal with other persons who were willing to deal with him. This liberty is a right recognized by law; its correlative is the general duty of everyone not to prevent the free exercise of this liberty without justification. But a person's liberty or right to deal with others is nugatory unless they are at liberty to deal with him if they choose to do so. Any interference with their liberty to deal with him affects him. If such interference is justifiable in point of law he has no redress. Again, if such interference is wrongful, the only person who can sue in respect of it is, as a rule, the person immediately affected by it; another who suffers by it has usually no redress; the damage to him is too remote, and it would obviously be practically impossible and highly inconvenient to give legal redress to all who suffered from such wrongs. But if the interference is wrongful and is intended to damage a third person, and he is damaged in fact—in other words, if he is wrongfully and intentionally struck at through others, and is thereby damnified, the whole aspect of the case is changed; the wrong done to others reaches him, his rights are infringed although indirectly, and damage to him is not remote or unforeseen, but is the direct consequence of what has been done. Our law, as I understand it, is not so defective as to refuse him a remedy by an action under such circumstances. The cases collected in the old books on actions on the case, and the illustrations given by Bowen, L.J., in his admirable judgment in the Mogul Steamship Co.'s case may be referred to in support of the foregoing conclusion, and I do not understand the decision in Allen v. Flood to be opposed to it. If the above reasoning is correct, Lumley v. Gye was rightly decided, as I am of opinion it clearly was. Further, the principle involved in it cannot be confined to inducements to break contracts of service; nor, indeed, to inducements to break any contracts. The principle which underlies the decision reaches all wrongful acts done intentionally to damage a particular individual and actually damaging him. Temperton v. Russell ought to have been decided and may be upheld on this principle. That case was much criticized in Allen v. Flood, and not without reason; for, according to the judgment of Lord Esher, M.R., the defendant's liability depended on motive or intention alone whether anything wrong was done or not. This went too far, as was pointed out in Allen v. Flood. But in Temperton v. Russell there was conspiracy and a wrongful act—viz., unjustifiable interference with Brentano, who dealt with the plaintiff. This wrongful act warranted the decision, which I think was right. (2) I pass on to consider what the defendants did. They were the officers of a trade union, and the jury have found that the defendants wrongfully and maliciously induced the customers of the plaintiff to refuse to deal with him and maliciously conspired to induce them not to deal with him. There were similar findings as to inducing servants of the plaintiff to leave him. What the defendants did was to threaten to call out the union workmen of the plaintiff and of his customers if he would not discharge some non-union men in his employ. In other words, in order to compel the plaintiff to discharge some of his men the defendants threatened to put the plaintiff and his customers, and persons lawfully working for him, to all the inconvenience they could without using violence. The defendants' conduct was the more reprehensible because the plaintiff offered to pay the fees necessary to enable his non-union men to become members of the defendants' union, but this would not satisfy the defendants. The facts of this case are entirely different from those which this House had to consider in Allen v. Flood. In the present case there was no dispute between the plaintiff and his men. None of them wanted to leave his employ. Nor was there any dispute between the plaintiff's customers and their own men, nor between the plaintiff and his customers; nor between the men they respectively employed. The defendants called no witnesses, and there was no evidence to justify or excuse their conduct. That they acted as they did in furtherance of what they considered the interests of union men may probably be fairly assumed in their favour, although they did not come forward and say so themselves; but that is all that can be said for them. No one can, I think, say that the verdict was not amply warranted by the evidence. I have purposely said nothing about the black list, as the learned judge who tried the case considered that the evidence did not connect the appellant with that list. But the black list was, in my opinion, a very important feature in the case. (3) The remaining question is whether such conduct infringed the plaintiff's rights so as to give him a cause of action. In my opinion it plainly did. The defendants were doing a great deal more than exercising their own rights; they were dictating to the plaintiff and his customers and servants what they were to do. The defendants were violating their duty to the plaintiff and his customers and servants, which was to leave them in the undisturbed liberty of acting as they had a perfect right to do. What is the legal justification or excuse for such conduct? None is alleged and none can be found. This violation of duty by the defendants resulted in damage to the plaintiff; not remote, but immediate and intended. The intention to injure the plaintiff negatives all excuses and disposes of any question of remoteness of damage. Your lordships have to deal with a case, not of damnum absque injuria, but of damnum cum injuria. Every element necessary to give a cause of action on ordinary principles of law is present in this case. As regards authorities, they were all exhaustively examined in Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor and Allen v. Flood, and it is unnecessary to dwell upon them again. I have examined all those which are important, and I venture to say that there is not a single decision anterior to Allen v. Flood in favour of the appellants. Their sheet-anchor is Allen v. Flood, which is far from covering this case, and can only be made to cover it by greatly extending its operation. It was contended at the bar that, if what was done in this case had been done by one person only, his conduct would not have been actionable, and that the fact that what was done was effected by many acting in concert makes no difference. One man without others behind him who would obey his orders could not have done what these defendants did. One man exercising the same control over others as these defendants had could have acted as they did, and if he had done so I conceive that he would have committed a wrong towards the plaintiff, for which the plaintiff could have maintained an action. I am aware that in Allen v. Flood Lord Herschell expressed his opinion to be that it was immaterial whether Allen said he would call the men out or not. This may have been so in that particular case, as there was evidence that Allen had no power to call out the men, and the men had determined to strike before Allen had anything to do with the matter. But if Lord Herschell meant to say that as a matter of law there is no difference between giving information that men will strike and making them strike or threatening to make them strike by calling them out when they do not want to strike, I am unable to concur with him. It is all very well to talk about peaceable persuasion. It may be that in Allen v. Flood there was nothing more, but here there was very much more. What may begin as peaceable persuasion may easily become, and in trade disputes generally does become, peremptory ordering with threats, open or covert, of very unpleasant consequences to those who are not persuaded. Calling workmen out involves very serious consequences to such of them as do not obey. Black lists are real instruments of coercion, as every man whose name is on one soon discovers to his cost. A combination not to work is one thing, and is lawful. A combination to prevent others from working is a very different thing, and is primâ facie unlawful. Again, not to work oneself is lawful so long as one keeps off the poor rates, but to order men not to work when they are willing to work is another thing. A threat to call men out given by a trade union official to an employer of men belonging to the union and willing to work with him is a form of coercion, intimidation, molestation, or annoyance to them and to him, very difficult to resist, and, to say the least, requiring justification. None was offered in this case. It is said that conduct which is not actionable on the part of one person cannot be actionable if it is that of several acting in concert. This may be so when many do no more than one is supposed to do. But numbers may annoy and coerce where one may not. Annoyance and coercion by many may be so intolerable as to become actionable, and produce a result which one alone could not produce. I am aware of the difficulties which surround the law of conspiracy, both in its criminal and civil aspects; and older views have been greatly and, if I may say so, most beneficially modified by the discussions and decisions in America and this country. Amongst the American cases I would refer especially to Vegelahn v. Guntner, 167 Mass. 92, where coercion by other means than violence or threats of it was held unlawful. In this country it is now settled by the decision of this House in the case of the Mogul Steamship Co. that no action for a conspiracy lies against persons who act in concert to damage another and do damage him, but at the same time merely exercise their own rights and infringe no rights of other people. Allen v. Flood emphasises the same doctrine. The principle was strikingly illustrated in the Scottish Co-operative Society v. Glasgow Fleshers' Association, 35 Sc. L. Rep. 645, which was referred to in the course of the argument. In that case some butchers induced some salesmen not to sell meat to the plaintiffs. The means employed were to threaten the salesmen that if they continued to sell meat to the plaintiffs they, the butchers, would not buy from the salesmen. There was nothing unlawful in this, and the learned judge held that the plaintiffs showed no cause of action, although the butchers' object was to prevent the plaintiffs from buying for co-operative societies in competition with themselves, and the defendants were acting in concert. The cardinal point of distinction between such cases and the present is that in them, although damage was intentionally inflicted on the plaintiffs, no one's right was infringed; no wrongful act was committed; whilst in the present case the coercion of the plaintiff's customers and servants, and of the plaintiff through them, was an infringement of their liberty as well as of his, and was wrongful both to them and also to him, as I have already endeavoured to show. Intentional damage which arises from the mere exercise of the rights of many is not, I apprehend, actionable by our law as now settled. To hold the contrary would be unduly to restrict the liberty of one set of persons in order to uphold the liberty of another set. According to our law, competition, with all its drawbacks, not only between individuals, but between associations, and between them and individuals, is permissible provided that nobody's rights are infringed. The law is the same for all persons, whatever their callings; it implies to masters as well as to men; the proviso, however, is all-important, and it also applies to both, and limits the rights of those who combine to lock out as well as the rights of those who strike. But coercion by threats open or disguised not only of bodily harm, but of serious annoyance and damage, is, primâ facie, at all events, a wrong inflicted on the persons coerced, and in considering whether coercion has been applied or not numbers cannot be disregarded. I conclude this part of the case by saying that in my opinion the direction given to the jury by the learned judge who tried the case was correct, so far as the liability of the defendants turns on principles of common law, and that the objection taken to it by the counsel for the appellant is untenable. I mean the objection that the learned judge did not distinguish between coercion to break contracts of service and coercion to break contracts of other kinds, and coercion not to enter into contracts.

I pass now to consider the effect of the statute 38 & 39 Vict. c. 86. This Act clearly recognizes the legality of strikes and lock-outs up to a certain point. It is plainly legal now for workmen to combine not to work except on their own terms. On the other hand, it is clearly illegal for them or anyone else to use force or threats of violence to prevent other people from working on any terms which they think proper. But there are many ways short of violence, or the threat of it, of compelling persons to act in a way which they do not like. There are annoyances of all sorts of degrees; picketing is a distinct annoyance, and if damage results is an actionable nuisance at common law; but if confined merely to obtaining or communicating information it is rendered lawful by the Act (section 7). Is a combination to annoy a person's customers so as to compel them to leave him unless he obeys the combination permitted by the Act or not? It is not forbidden by section 7; is it permitted by section 3? I cannot think that it is. The Court of Appeal (of which I was a member) so decided in Lyons v. Wilkins, 45 W. R. 19, [1896] 1 Ch. 811, in the case of Schoenthal, which arose there, and is referred to in the judgment of Walker, L.J., in this case. This particular point had not to be reconsidered when Lyons v. Wilkins came before the Court of Appeal after the decision in Allen v. Flood. But Byrne, J., modified the injunction granted on the first occasion by confining it to watching and besetting. He might safely have gone further and have restrained the use of other unlawful means; but the strike was then over, and his modification was not objected to, and cannot be regarded as an authority in favour of the appellant's contention. It must be conceded that if what the defendants here did had been done by one person it would not have been punishable as a crime. I cannot myself see that there was in this case any trade dispute between employers and workmen within the meaning of section 3. I am not at present prepared to say that the officers of a trade union who create strife by calling out members of the union working for an employer with whom none of them have any dispute can invoke the benefit of this section even on an indictment for a conspiracy. But assuming that there was a trade dispute within the meaning of section 3, and that an indictment for conspiracy could not be sustained in a case like this, the difference between an indictment for a conspiracy and an action for damages occasioned by a conspiracy is very marked, and is well known. An illegal agreement, whether carried out or not, is the essential element in a criminal case; the damage done by several persons acting in concert and not the criminal conspiracy is the important element in the action for damages: see the notes to 1 Wms. Saund. 229*b* and 230. In my opinion it is quite clear that section 3 has no application to civil actions; it is confined entirely to criminal proceedings. Nor can I agree with those who say that the civil liability depends on the criminality, and that if such conduct as is complained of has ceased to be criminal it has therefore ceased to be actionable. On this point I will content myself by saying that I agree with Andrews, J., and those who concurred with him. It does not follow, and it is not true, that annoyances which are not indictable are not actionable. The law relating to nuisances, to say nothing of the law relating to combinations, shows that many annoyances are actionable which are not indictable, and the principles of justice on which this is held to be so appear to me to apply to such cases as these. I will detain your lordships no longer. Allen v. Flood is in many respects a very valuable decision, but it may be easily misunderstood and carried too far. Your lordships are asked to extend it, and to destroy that individual liberty which our laws so anxiously guard. The appellants seek by means of Allen v. Flood, and by logical reasoning based upon some passages in the judgments given by the noble lords who decided it, to drive your lordships to hold that boycotting by trade unions in one of its most objectionable forms is lawful and gives no cause of action to its victims, although they may be pecuniarily ruined thereby. So to hold would, in my opinion, be contrary to well-settled principles of English law, and would be to do that which is not yet authorized by any statute or legal decision. In my opinion this appeal ought to be dismissed with costs.

Judgment appealed from affirmed, and appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors for the appellants, Eyre, Dowling, & Co., for Joseph Donnelly, Belfast.

Solicitor for the respondent, Francis H. White, for G. B. Wilkins, Lisburn, Ireland.

Court of Appeal.

Appeal.
(Collins, M.R., and Stirling and Mathew, L.JJ.) — Nov. 9.

WILMOTT v. PATON. (a.)

Master and servant—Employer's liability—Accident—Compensation—Factory—Mechanical power—Warehouse—Factory and Workshop Act, 1878 (41 Vict. c. 16), s. 93—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7.

The use of machinery moved by hand power is not the use of "mechanical power" within the meaning of those words in the definition of "non-textile factory" contained in section 93 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878.

The word "warehouse," in section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, is not confined to premises contiguous to water.

Appeal from an award of the judge of the Pontypool County Court in an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

The applicant for compensation was a dependant of a workman who had been accidentally killed in the course of his employment.

The employer's premises on which the deceased man was employed at the time of the accident were used for the purpose of breaking up old iron and storing iron for sale.

A very large quantity of iron, consisting of many thousand tons, was stored there, partly in an open yard, and partly in sheds.

The iron was broken by means of a heavy weight which was raised by a mechanical appliance moved by hand power.

The premises were not connected with any dock, wharf, or quay, and were not contiguous to water.

The deceased man was run over by a truck on a tramway running through the premises which he was trying to stop by putting a crowbar between the spokes of one of the wheels.

The county court judge held that the premises were a factory within the meaning of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, as coming within the definition of a "non-textile factory" given in section 93 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878. That section says that "non-textile factory" in that Act means—"(3) any premises wherein any manual labour is exercised by way of trade or for purposes of gain in or incidental to the adapting for sale of any article, and wherein steam, water, or other mechanical power is used in aid of the manufacturing process carried on there."

(a.) Reported by F. G. RÜCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The county court judge was of opinion that, though the machinery in the present case was moved by hand power, it came within the words "or other mechanical power" in the above section. He also held that the premises were a factory within the meaning of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, as being a "warehouse" to which certain provisions of the Factory Acts are applied by the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895. He accordingly made an award in favour of the applicant.

The employer appealed.

Ruegg, K.C., and A. Parsons, for the employer.—These premises were not a factory within section 93 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878. Neither steam, water, nor other mechanical power was used there. The use of machinery moved by hand power is not the use of "mechanical power": see Wrigley v. Bagley & Wright, 49 W. R. 472, [1901] 1 Q. B. 780. Neither were they a "warehouse" within the meaning of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act. The words of the section are "any dock, wharf, quay, warehouse, machinery, or plant." The word "warehouse" must be read as ejusdem generis with dock, wharf and quay, and can only apply to premises which are contiguous to water: see Haddock v. Humphreys, 48 W. R. 292, [1900] 1 Q. B. 609.

Clavell Salter and Minton-Senhouse, for the applicant.

COLLINS, M.R.—This case comes before us in an unsatisfactory sort of way. No evidence was given at the trial, and the case was argued on an agreed state of facts. Two points were raised—first, whether the premises of the employer were a factory within section 93 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878; secondly, whether they were a warehouse. The county court judge decided in favour of the applicant on both points. With regard to the first question, the matter seems to have been already decided by this court in the case of Wrigley v. Bagley & Wright. There an operation of lifting a driving wheel had been performed by means of a hand-winch and pulleys. The point was taken that this was an operation by mechanical power within the meaning of those words in the definition of "engineering work" in section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, but it was overruled by the court in the course of the argument. I therefore think the decision of the county court judge was wrong on that point.

With regard to the second question, whether the premises were a warehouse, I have come to the conclusion, though the facts are not put before the court in a satisfactory way, that the evidence shows a clear primâ facie presumption that the premises might be a warehouse, and on that ground I think the decision of the county court judge can be supported. The only point argued on this part of the case was that no place could be a warehouse within the meaning of the Act unless it was contiguous to water, because the word "warehouse" ought to be construed as ejusdem generis with the words preceding it in the section—"dock, wharf, quay." In my opinion there is nothing to debar us from holding that a place which is not contiguous to water may be a warehouse.

STIRLING and MATHEW, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the employer, W. Hurd & Son, for L. E. Webb, Pontypool.

Solicitors for the applicant, Le Brasseur & Oakley, for Le Brasseur & Bowen, Pontypool.

Appeal.
(Collins, M.R., and Stirling and Mathew, L.JJ.) Nov. 8.

BARTLETT v. SUTTON & SONS. (a.)

Master and servant—Accident—"Average weekly earnings"—Stevedore employed for one day—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, Schedule I., cl. 1 (b).

A casual stevedore's labourer was employed for one day to assist in discharging cargo from a vessel in a dock. During the day he met with an accident. He had then earned 3s. 3d.

Held, that as there was no presumption that the stevedore would have been employed by the same employer beyond the day, the amount of compensation he was entitled to was a weekly payment of one-half of 3s. 3d., the sum he had actually earned in that employment.

Appeal by the employers from an award of the learned judge of the Bristol County Court in an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

The workman was a casual stevedore's labourer, and was engaged for one day to assist in discharging a vessel, being employed and paid by the hour, and he met with an accident on that day in the course of his employment. The amount of wages he had actually earned was 3s. 3d.

The masters admitted liability, and the only question was on what basis the award was to be calculated.

It the county court it was argued for the applicant that his average earnings were six times 3s. 3d., for the employers that the man's average weekly earnings were but 3s. 3d.

The county court judge adopted neither of these views, but heard evidence as to what was the average weekly earnings of an ordinary casual dock labourer at the port of Bristol, which, on the evidence given, he found to be 18s. He accordingly awarded the applicant 9s. a week.

The employers appealed.

Ruegg, K.C., and H. H. Gregory, for the appellants.

Foote, K.C., Clavell Salter, and Minton-Senhouse, for the workman.

THE COURT allowed the appeal.

COLLINS, M.R.—I think the award made by the county court judge in this case cannot be supported, although his judgment is a logical judgment, and in fact he has only pushed home to its logical conclusion a theory based on what was laid down by the House of Lords in Lysons v. Andrew Knowles & Sons, 49 W. R. 636, [1901] A. C. 79. I do not, however, think, when the real facts of this case are considered, that it comes within the extreme position which is spoken of by some of the learned judges in that case—namely, the position where it could be said that no provision could be found in the Act for calculating in the particular case the compensation which the Legislature clearly intended should be given. In this case there is no presumption that the employment of the injured workman would last beyond the time occupied by his employers in discharging the cargo from this particular ship. The man was a casual stevedore's labourer and was paid by whatever master he worked for at so much an hour. The applicant was paid 3s. 3d. for the work which he did. The county court judge thought that the contention of neither party was correct, and for the purpose of ascertaining the applicant's average weekly earnings he adopted what he understood to be the ordinary standard of a dock labourer's wages at the port of

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Bristol throughout the year. It was not disputed, if he had jurisdiction to assess the compensation on that ground, that the figure he arrived at was one that could be reasonably challenged. But it was said he had no power to receive evidence on that point at all. I think that was so. Such a way of dealing with the matter would seem to involve this proposition—that the applicant for compensation would be entitled to have taken into consideration loss of wages other than those which he could have earned from the same employer. It is difficult to see why the workman should not be compensated for the full loss which the accident caused him, but for some reason or other the Legislature very carefully and expressly limited what he was to receive to the loss of wages earned from the master alone in whose service he was at the time of the accident. To adopt the method followed by the county court judge in this case would be to strike out of the Act the words to be found in Schedule I. (1) (b) "for any less period during which he has been in the employment of the same employer." As I have said, the Legislature did not intend to give full compensation, but only compensation in respect of the loss of not being able to be employed by the same employer. Of that there can be no doubt. In this case there is no presumption that the man would continue to be employed by the same employers for any longer period than one day or at any rate of wages, but yet the question we have to ask ourselves is this: "What has the man lost by his inability to be employed by the same employers?" In my opinion it cannot be said that the Act has provided no means for estimating the compensation in this case. I think the provision made is this—half of what he had earned from the same employer, which was 3s. 3d. It was said that to make an award of 1s. 8d. a week was to make an illusory award, and under the circumstances one that never could have been contemplated by the Legislature. No doubt it is startling, but I do not think it is illusory, although it is a very small amount. To decide otherwise would be to ignore the connection which the Act all through establishes between the workman and the master in whose service he was at the time of the accident. It seems to me therefore that this appeal must be allowed, and as the parties are willing that the case should be dealt with by us the award will be varied and the weekly payment reduced to 1s. 8d.

STIRLING and MATHEW, L.JJ., delivered judgment to the same effect.

Solicitors for the employers, W. Hurd & Son.

Solicitors for the applicant, Ford & Ford.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div.
Cozens-Hardy, J. } Aug. 9; Nov. 2.

In re HOTHAM.
HOTHAM v. DOUGHTY. (a.)

Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), s. 22, sub-section 2—Investment of capital moneys—Tenant for life—Duty of trustees.

On a sale of settled estate a tenant for life entered into a conditional contract for the investment of a part of the proceeds of the sale on mortgage of real estate. The trustees of the settled estate objected to some of the provisions of the mortgage. The tenant for life then asked for a declaration that the trustees, having received from him a direction to invest on a particular mortgage under section 22, sub-section 2, of the Settled Land Act, 1882, were bound to invest accordingly, without making any inquiry as to the title, value, or form of the mortgage.

Held, that trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Act must satisfy themselves both as to title and value and as to the form of the mortgage, just as any ordinary trustee would.

The plaintiff in this summons, Frederick William Hotham, was tenant for life of an estate called Worlingham Hall. This estate had been purchased out of capital money settled upon plaintiff by the will of Augustus Thomas Hotham.

On the 7th of February, 1901, the plaintiff entered into a contract with the Hon. A. J. Mulholland for the sale of the estate, and it was agreed that two-thirds of the purchase-money should remain as a mortgage on the estate.

The preliminaries were all arranged, and a draft mortgage conveying the estate to the trustees of the settlement under A. T. Hotham's will had been prepared and accepted by the purchaser.

The trustees of the settlement then raised objections to the draft deed, declaring that they were entitled to check the tenant for life in the exercise of his powers under sub-section 2 of section 22 of the Settled Land Act, 1882.

They were also bound to satisfy themselves that proper security was offered, and were entitled to the costs and charges incurred by them in procuring such satisfaction.

The plaintiff by his summons asked "that it might be declared that upon a direction under sub-section 2 of section 22 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, given by the applicant as tenant for life under the above-mentioned settlement to the respondents as trustees of the said settlement for the purposes of the Settled Land Act, 1882, to invest capital moneys in their hands as such trustees as aforesaid upon the security of a mortgage referred to in such direction, the respondents, as such trustees as aforesaid, are bound to invest the same accordingly, if such mortgage purports upon its face to be such a mortgage as is by the settlement or by law authorized as an investment of such capital moneys, and that they are not under obligation or entitled to satisfy themselves as to, or examine, or make any inquiry as to the title to, or value of, the security included in such mortgage, and that they are not entitled to make any alteration in the form of such mortgage.

Hon. E. C. Macnaghten, K.C., and A. à Beckett Terrell, for the plaintiff, said that the tenant for life could use his own discretion as to the investment, and was not in any way bound by his trustees: In re Lord Coleridge's Settlement, 44 W. R. 59, [1895] 2 Ch. 704. The tenant for life was a trustee for all parties under section 53 of the Settled Land Act, 1882.

H. T. Eve, K.C., and H. Fellows, for the trustees, cited the case of In re Broadwater Estate, 33 W. R. 738.

Davenport, for the mortgagor.

COZENS-HARDY, J., said that the various ways in which capital money might be invested were prescribed in section 21 of the Settled Land Act, 1882. Sub-section 2 of section 22 of the Act declared that the investment was to be according to the direction of the tenant for life. The plaintiff in this case relied upon the decision in In re Lord Coleridge's Settlement, but that did not enable him to order the trustees to invest the capital moneys on mortgage of any estate he might choose, or to declare that the trustees had nothing to do with title or value. The trustees, on the other hand, said that before they could act upon the direction of the tenant for life they must be satisfied that the mortgage was such as the court considered a proper investment of trust funds, or, in other words, that they must satisfy themselves both as to title and value and as to the form of mortgage just as any ordinary trustee would.

(a.) Reported by J. H. DAVIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

He thought the latter the correct view. Under section 42 the trustees were at liberty to adopt certain contracts made by the tenant for life without inquiry, but that did not extend to a mortgage. The trustees were bound to see that the money was applied in the manner directed by the Act, and there was no reason why they should be satisfied with the mere statement of the tenant for life that the particular investment was an authorized one. Once they were satisfied that the mortgage was a proper one they were bound to follow the directions of the tenant for life. When the trustees and the tenant for life were represented by different solicitors, it rested with the solicitors for the trustees to do what was necessary with reference to the mortgage.

The same principle applied to investments other than a mortgage under sub-section 1, section 21.

Declaration that the trustees were not bound to invest upon a particular mortgage unless and until they were satisfied as to the title and value of the proposed security.

Solicitors for plaintiff, Rowcliffes, Rawle, & Co., for Hamilton Fulton, Salisbury.

Solicitors for defendants, Collyer-Bristow, Hill, Curtis, & Dods, for Stone, Simpson, & Mason, Tunbridge Wells.

Solicitors for mortgagor, Bompas, Bischoff, & Co.

K. B. Div. (Wills, J.) — Aug. 5, 10, 1901.

CORPORATION OF TRURO v. ROWE. (a.)

Fishery—Oyster fishery—Depositing oysters on foreshore as incident to right of fishery—Municipal corporation—Short lease of foreshore taken by corporation—Powers of corporation to take lease—Sea Fisheries Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 45), s. 41—Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 42), s. 1—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), s. 107.

A right to deposit freshly dredged oysters which are unfit for the market by reason of their being contaminated with certain impurities in the water in which the oyster beds were situate, on a particular part of the foreshore of the fishery for the purpose of purifying them, which right had been exercised from time immemorial by fishermen, is a right which may be legally incident to the right of oyster fishery, and may be justified against the owner of the foreshore either by an immemorial custom or as part of the common law rights of oyster fishing.

A municipal corporation who have obtained from the Board of Trade an order for the regulation of the oyster fishery in their harbour, which order has been confirmed by Act of Parliament, may, under section 41 of the Sea Fisheries Act, 1868, take a short lease of the foreshore for the purpose of carrying out the objects of their Act, and such lease is not rendered invalid either by the Mortmain Act, 1888, or by section 107 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Further consideration by Wills, J., in an action tried before him with a jury at Truro.

The plaintiffs were the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of the city of Truro, and the action was brought by them against the defendant for damages for alleged acts of trespass on a part of the foreshore at Truro of which the plaintiffs were the lessees, and for an injunction to restrain the defendant from committing the acts of trespass alleged.

The plaintiffs are an ancient corporation incorporated by royal charter, and by a charter of 31 Eliz. it was provided that the corporation "May and shall be for ever at all future times persons fit and capable in law to hold, purchase, receive, and possess lands, tenements, liberties, privileges, jurisdictions, franchises, and hereditaments of what kind or nature soever they be, to them and their successors in fee and perpetuity, and also goods and chattels and other things whatsoever of what nature or kind soever they may be, and to give, grant, demise, and assign lands, tenements, and hereditaments, and all and singular other acts and deeds to do and execute by the same name."

By on order of the Board of Trade made under the Sea Fisheries Act, 1868, and confirmed by the Oyster and Mussel Fisheries Order Confirmation Act, 1876, the power of regulating the oyster and mussel fishery in a part of the estuary of the Truro river was conferred upon the plaintiff corporation.

By an indenture, dated the 4th of June, 1897, the plaintiffs, in order to enable them more efficiently to carry out their powers under the said order, obtained a lease of certain parts of the foreshore of the said estuary for a term of fourteen years from the 29th of September, 1896, at a yearly rent of £15.

The oysters when freshly dredged from the oyster beds in the fishery were unfit for the market owing to the water being contaminated with copper from the washings of the copper mines in the vicinity, and the fishermen had from time immemorial been in the habit of depositing the oysters, when dredged from the fishery, for a considerable time upon a portion of the foreshore leased to the plaintiffs as aforesaid in order to get rid of the copper.

The defendant and other fishermen exercised this right, each having a particular space for depositing his oysters, which space was allocated by an arrangement amongst the fishermen themselves and was staked out by withies stuck in the bed of the river.

The defendant, in accordance with this custom, was in the habit of depositing the oysters dredged by him upon a particular space on the plaintiffs' foreshore.

The plaintiffs, claiming as lessees of the foreshore under the lease of the 4th of June, 1897, brought the present action against the defendant, alleging that the acts of the defendant in depositing the oysters on the foreshore as above described were acts of trespass committed on the foreshore.

The jury at the trial found, in answer to the learned judge, (1) that the acts done by the defendant did not constitute an occupation of the soil; (2) that such acts were merely incidental to the fishing for oysters, and (3) that the oyster fishery could not be practically carried on without a storage.

Upon these findings the case was reserved for further consideration.

The Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 42), provides as follows: "Section 1.—(1) Land shall not be assured to or for the benefit of, or acquired by or on behalf of any corporation in mortmain, otherwise than under the authority of a licence from her Majesty the Queen or of a statute for the time being in force, and if any land is so assured otherwise than as aforesaid the land shall be forfeited to her Majesty from the date of the assurance, and her Majesty may enter on and hold the land accordingly."

The Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), provides as follows: "Section 105.—A municipal corporation may contract for the purchase of and hold any land not exceeding in the whole five acres, either in or out of the borough, and thereon, or on any land belonging to or hold in trust for the corporation, may build a town hall . . . or any other building necessary or proper for any purpose of the borough."

"Section 107.—(1) When any municipal corporation has not power to purchase or acquire land, or to hold land in mortmain, the council may, with the approval of the Treasury, purchase or acquire any land in such manner and on such terms and conditions as the Treasury approve, and the same may be conveyed to and held by the corporation accordingly.

"(2) The provisions of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Acts, 1845, 1860, and 1869, relating to the purchase of land by agreement and to agreements for sale . . . shall extend to all purchases of land under this section."

Duke, K.C. (J. A. Hawke with him), for the plaintiffs.—The plaintiffs are entitled to damages and an injunction. Section 1 of the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1888, operates as a forfeiture to the Crown of land acquired by a corporation in mortmain, but the title of the corporation to such land is good if those who have power to enter do not do so: Brice on Ultra Vires (3rd ed.), pp. 63-4; Great Eastern Railway Co. v. Turner, 21 W. R. 163, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 149; Ayres v. South Australian Banking Co., 19 W. R. 860, L. R. 3 P. C. 548, per Mellish, L.J., at pp. 558-9. Further, the Mortmain Act does not apply here, for by section 12 of that Act a corporation authorized to hold land is exempted from the operation of the Act. The corporation have power by their charter to acquire and hold lands, and that charter is wide enough to include leaseholds. By section 12 of the local Act of 1876 they are given power to make bye-laws for the regulation of these fisheries, and the Sea Fisheries Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 45), establishes a code for their management. Section 41 of that Act provides that "where an order of the Board of Trade . . . confers a right of regulating an oyster and mussel fishery . . . the persons obtaining the order . . . shall . . . have power (c) to provide for depositing and propagating oysters and mussels within the limits of the fishery, and for improving and cultivating the fishery." The Board of Trade have in this case made an order which has been confirmed by Parliament (39 & 40 Vict. c. xci.). The defendant has got a right of fishery, but that right does not entitle him to appropriate a particular part of the foreshore and deposit oysters there. The right is confined to the taking of fish and carrying them away. The defendant may not occupy the foreshore; that would be a dispossession of the owner and would amount to a user enabling him in course of time to acquire a statutory title to the portion of the foreshore used by him: Lord Advocate v. Lord Blantyre, 4 App. Cas. 770, 28 W. R. Dig. 95. The acts of the defendant amounted to a trespass: Blundell v. Catterall, 5 B. & Ald. 268. The right of fishery does not give the defendant a right to deposit and store oysters on the foreshore: Earl of Ilchester v. Raishley, 38 W. R. 104; Ward v. Creswell, Willes, 265; Gray v. Bond, 2 Brod. & B. 667; Aiton v. Stephen, 1 App. Cas. 456, 24 W. R. Dig. 249.

Foote, K.C. (Bodilly with him), for the defendant.—The claim of the defendant to deposit oysters was in no sense a claim to the occupation of the soil. The depositing is incidental to the right of fishery. The oysters were not stored there by the defendant, but merely deposited until they were purified. The right to do so had existed from time immemorial. There had been no trespass on the part of the defendant. The power given to the corporation by charter is to hold lands in fee simple only. The term "chattels" in the charter does not include leaseholds, nor has the corporation power to hold this lease under the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882. This is not a question of mortmain. The question depends upon the power given the corporation by the charter—namely, a power to hold lands in fee. The plaintiffs had no power to take this lease.

Duke, K.C., replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

Aug. 10.—WILLS, J., read the following judgment: The plaintiffs complain of various acts done by the defendant which they allege are acts of trespass committed on parts of the foreshore of the Port of Truro, of which the plaintiffs claim to be the lessees by virtue of a lease for fourteen years granted in the year 1897. The acts complained of are the depositing of oysters which have been dredged up from the oyster beds in other parts of the harbour, and which are placed by the defendant in a particular spot and kept there until they are ready and wanted for sale in the market. The defendant is in the habit of keeping to a particular spot, which is very roughly indicated by withies stuck in the soil or bed under the sea. It is not quite clear whether they are placed on the foreshore or below the line of foreshore; but I have the strongest impression that it was mentioned in the course of the case that they are below low-water mark. Other fishermen do the like, and the practice has been the same as far back as living memory goes. It is not contended that the defendant has any legal right to the spot in question, only that he has the right to use some part or other of the foreshore in this way, to this extent and for this purpose, as an incident to the right of fishing for oysters. The right is claimed both as a common law right and as existing by immemorial custom. The allocation of particular spaces to particular individuals is an act of comity among the fishermen themselves, and up to the present time it does not appear that any difficulty has arisen out of it. It is alleged by the plaintiffs that the time is at hand when by the improvement of the fishery and the increase in the number of the fishermen difficulties will arise which will render the possession of the foreshore by them very desirable, if not necessary, for the regulation of the fishery. The plaintiffs also complain of these acts as amounting to an occupation of the soil which will in time give a title to the occupant. The ground may be cleared at once to a certain extent. The jury have found that the acts in question were not acts of occupation but were incident to and practically necessary for the oyster fishing. The circumstances are peculiar. The oysters as gathered from some of the beds are contaminated with copper from the washings of the copper mines, and they require a prolonged stay in the particular locality in question to get rid of the copper. Oysters gathered from other beds are sometimes fit for immediate use and sometimes require to be laid down; and it is needless to say that the oysters are not kept unsold longer than is necessary. The only importance of the facts relating to the use of the fishery is as explaining the necessity for a place of deposit, without which the fishery would be of little value, and I think the jury for that and other reasons were justified in finding that the Truro oyster fishing requires such a place of deposit. The finding that the acts were not acts of occupation gets rid of the contention that the defendant is acquiring a title under the Statute of Limitations, and reduces the questions for my consideration to two—namely, Have the plaintiffs made out such a title as will enable them to maintain an action of trespass; and, secondly, can a right of deposit on the foreshore legally exist as an incident to the right of fishing for oysters? The plaintiffs do not appear, upon the evidence, to have done any single act of possession or ownership since the lease was granted. There is no evidence, for instance, that they have taken money for ballast or exercised any other act of ownership. They have therefore to rely upon the right of possession which flows from ownership and upon the presumption of actual possession which follows upon such legal right. It becomes necessary, therefore, to consider the objections which have been taken to their title. They are two; first, under the Statutes of Mortmain; and, secondly, under the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882. The Statutes of Mortmain appear to me to have nothing to do with a short lease for fourteen years. It does not seem to be open to the class of objections which gave rise to the Statutes of Mortmain, and I find that both Shelford's Statutes of Mortmain (1836), p. 9, and Tudor's Charitable Trusts, (3rd ed, 1889), p. 382, treat this as clear law, and they give a number of authorities for the proposition. These objections, therefore, may be shortly dealt with and put on one side, and I may add that as the Statutes of Mortmain do not apply, the licence to hold lands in fee which it is plain from the charter of Elizabeth existed in the old charters, and which had no application to leaseholds, is equally beside the question. The licence to hold goods and chattels, which term is used, where it is used, in contradistinction to lands, cannot, I think, have any application to leases of land. As to the objection under the Municipal Corporations Act, section 105 of the Act of 1882 confers powers on corporations to purchase or hold a limited quantity of land for certain purposes without consent of any authority, and section 107 provides that with the consent of the Treasury (for which the Local Government Board is now substituted by the Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 72), where the corporation has not power to purchase or acquire land or to hold land in mortmain, they may purchase or acquire any land on such terms as the Treasury may approve; but I think it is clear from the reference to mortmain that the Act is speaking of the acquisition of lands in fee or for such long terms as the Statutes of Mortmain do attach to, and I do not think that the implied prohibition to go outside those sections has ever been applied in practice to prohibit the taking of land by a municipal corporation on short leases, or been supposed to extend to such leases. I can see, therefore, no objection to the lease on that ground. But a municipal corporation as such has nothing to do with foreshore or foreshore rights, and the limits of expenditure are prescribed by section 140, and Schedule V., and I think they do ferbid the payment by a municipal corporation as such out of the borough fund of such a rent as this, and that, therefore, if the lease is intra vires it must be supported under some other powers. This brings me to the question of whether, under the Sea Fisheries Act, 1868, and the order made in pursuance of that Act by the Board of Trade and confirmed by the local Act of 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. xci.), any such power is conferred. There is neither in the Act of 1868 nor in the local Act any express power conferred on the grantees, who in the present case are the plaintiffs, to take and hold foreshore. On the other hand, I start with the proposition that there is no statutory or other disability which prevents a corporation, merely because it is a corporation, from acquiring a short leasehold. It seems to me, therefore, that if the acquisition of the leasehold affords a reasonable facility to the corporation for the carrying out the purposes of their Act of 1876, they may do so. This view is much strengthened by section 47 of the Sea Fisheries Act of 1868. By section 46 no fishery order can be obtained where the Crown or the Duchy of Cornwall owns the foreshore, without the consent of such owner, so that the Crown or the duchy can make its own terms. By section 47, if the foreshore belongs to a private owner no consent is necessary, but for the protection of the owner it is enacted that the order shall incorporate the Lands Clauses Act, 1845. This would of course give no power to buy any existing interest, freehold or leasehold, in the foreshore unless the special Act—that is, the order confirmed by Parliament, should confer it, and even then it would be a power to buy an existing interest, not to create a new leasehold. But it is the clearest possible intimation that it may be a useful thing for the grantees to have the foreshore, and the section applies to both classes of orders—those which create several fisheries, and those like the present order, which only give power to regulate the fishery. I have come to the conclusion, therefore, that the acceptance of the lease is not ultra vires, and that, therefore, the right to possession draws the possession with it, and that so far as this objection is concerned the plaintiffs are not out of court. For one reason I am not sorry to come to this conclusion, inasmuch as it avoids a purely technical difficulty available in another action, and leaves open only the one real question important to the parties—namely, Is there any legal objection to the finding of the jury that the acts complained of are incidental to the right of enjoyment of oyster fishing? I think the question is very nearly answered when I say that it appears to me to be a perfectly right conclusion in fact. A great part of this oyster fishery would be useless without it. I believe the same is true in varying degrees of advantage or necessity in most oyster fisheries. In this case oyster laying is absolutely necessary to sweeten some of the oysters, and the source of pollution certainly existed long before legal memory if one is at liberty to resort to history and tradition. I do not think, however, that it would make any difference were that not so. The practice is traced back as far as living memory can go, and that is evidence of immemorial usage. Oyster laying often has to be resorted to for the purpose of feeding and fattening before the oysters are ready for consumption, and although oysters may be and I believe often are sold as dredged, yet they quite as often have to be deposited and left for a time before being fit for the market. In an interesting article on oysters in the 9th edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica, the temporary laying of oysters for such purposes as I have mentioned is treated as a regular "concomitant"—to use the writer's phrase—of an oyster fishery, and I cannot see how any valid objection can be raised to a practice so widespread and so ancient. The chief objection that has been made is that it amounts to an occupation of the soil. I think this is disposed of by the finding of the jury. It was clearly a question of fact for them, and in my opinion their finding is right. The mere sticking in of a stake to indicate a spot is too trivial to talk about, even if it be on the foreshore, which I think is not the case. It is quite true that the oyster laying may interfere with the uninterrupted user of the foreshore by the owner, but a like interference with territorial rights takes place in many instances which present no legal difficulty. The rights of inhabitants to recreate themselves on a village green have been repeatedly established by evidence and upheld by the courts, and yet they may absolutely destroy all chance on the part of the owner of making any, or any but the slightest, beneficial use of land which is undoubtedly his. The custom here alleged is not open to the objection that it is in substance a claim to a profit à prendre, nor in my judgment to any other legal objection to its validity. Apart from custom the owner of the foreshore owns and enjoys the foreshore subject to the common rights of all members of the public which are such as to reduce the value of the foreshore in nine cases out of ten to something of very small pecuniary value. The owner cannot build on it because the public have rights of passage over it everywhere per mare et per terram. In all but some exceptional cases he cannot graze it, because no herbage will grow upon it. Where herbage will grow upon it, as in the fens, I do not think oysters will be found to be composite factors. At all events the enjoyment of foreshore is subject to the common rights of fishing, and if oysters constitute a part of the fish to be taken, the right of fishing must include the necessary and practical incidentals, and if they involve the consequences that in some places he cannot dig ballast or sand for sale, as he can generally, he suffers no inconvenience or loss which is not common to him and the owner, say, for example, of the village green, who cannot dig pits or do other acts of ownership which would interfere with the rights of recreation of the inhabitants. I am of opinion, therefore, that whether the rights claimed be regarded as parts of the common law rights of oyster fishing, or as claimable by immemorial custom, they can stand in law, and as they have been established in fact, the acts complained of by the plaintiff are justified. Suggestions were made that the rights in question, if upheld, might lead to trouble between the fishermen, whose numbers, it is said, are increasing, so that the old comities observed between themselves will no longer meet the necessities of the case. I do not think that such considerations affect the existence or non-existence of the rights. Inconvenience of this kind must be always liable to arise when the class of persons enjoying concurrent rights over a limited area comes to include more than can conveniently enjoy the rights simultaneously. The remedy lies usually in some form of legislation. In the present case it seems to be amply met by the powers of regulation given to the plaintiffs by the order of the Board of Trade confirmed by the Act of 1876. My judgment must therefore be for the defendant, with costs.

Judgment for defendant.

Solicitor for the plaintiffs, John A. Bartrum, for Robert Dobell, Truro.

Solicitor for the defendant, Sydney James, for J. Messer Bennetts, Truro.

K. B. Div. (Wills, J.) — Aug. 7, 1901.

MICHAEL v. HART & CO. (a.)

Damages—Measure of—Principal and agent—Stockbroker and customer—Wrongful sale of shares—Breach of contract.

The plaintiff opened an account with the defendants, stockbrokers on the London Stock Exchange, and employed them to buy and sell stocks and shares for him, in pursuance of which contract the defendants bought certain stocks and shares on behalf of the plaintiff, and the defendants entered into an agreement with the plaintiff that they would carry over such stocks and shares to a certain settling day, holding them in the meantime at plaintiff's disposal. In breach of such agreement the defendants, before such settling day and without the plaintiff's consent, sold such stocks and shares to the plaintiff's detriment.

Held, that, in assessing the amount of damages sustained by the plaintiff, he was entitled to be credited with the amount which would have resulted from a sale at the highest price the said stocks and shares could have realized between the date the account was wrongfully closed and the settling date to which the defendants had agreed to carry it over.

Further consideration by Wills, J., in an action brought for damages for breach of contract and tried before him with a jury on the 29th of July, 1901.

In April, 1901, the plaintiff employed the defendants, who are stockbrokers, members of the London Stock Exchange, to buy and sell stocks and shares for him, and he deposited with them certificates of certain shares held by him to secure any balance that might from time to time become due from him to the defendants in respect of the transactions, and this security the plaintiff afterwards increased by a further deposit of shares.

In pursuance of this employment various transactions for purchase and sale of shares were conducted by the defendants for the plaintiff for the end of April, 1901, and the mid-May, 1901, settlements on the Stock Exchange.

On the 11th and 13th of May, 1901, it was orally agreed between the plaintiff and the defendants that certain contracts for the purchase of stocks and shares which had been made by the defendants on the plaintiff's account for the Stock Exchange settlement in the middle of May should be carried over for the settlement at the end of May.

Such stocks and shares were respectively carried over by the defendants at the mid-May settlement for the end of May settlement, and the usual contracts for such carrying over were sent by the defendants to the plaintiff, who then became entitled to all the advantages of the carrying over during the currency of the account to be concluded at the end of May settlement.

The defendants wrongfully, and in breach of their contract with the plaintiff, on the 16th of May realized all the plaintiff's holding by buying in against the plaintiff 200 shares in Rand Mines and selling out against him the other shares and stocks open, at prices greatly to the detriment of the plaintiff, and they then claimed to realize the deposited share certificates in order to satisfy the amount which upon the balance of the account they alleged to be due to them from the plaintiff.

The plaintiff sued the defendants for breach of contract, and claimed a declaration that he was entitled to have an account taken on the footing of his being credited with the highest prices which the stocks and shares would have realized at any time during the currency of the account terminating on the 28th and 29th of May, and he also claimed the delivery up of the shares which had been deposited with the defendants as security.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, and the question as to the measure of damages the plaintiff was entitled to was reserved for further consideration.

Rufus Isaacs, K.C. (A. J. David with him), for the plaintiff.—The true measure of damages to which the plaintiff is entitled is the profit which would have been gained by a sale of the stocks and shares at the best price obtainable at any time between the date of the breach of the contract and the settlement at the end of May: Murray v. Hewitt, 2 Times L. R. 872. In Shepherd v. Johnson, 2 East 211, Grose, J., says: "The true measure of damages in" an action for breach of an engagement to replace stock on a given day "is that which will completely indemnify the plaintiff for the breach of the engagement." In Harrison v. Harrison, 1 C. & P. 412, Best, C.J., says: "Justice is not done, if you do not place the plaintiff in the same situation in which he would have been if the stock had been replaced at the stipulated time. We cannot act on the possibility of the plaintiff's not keeping it there."

Counsel also referred to Shaw v. Holland, 15 L. J. Ex. 87, and Brown v. Muller, 21 W. R. 18, L. R. 7 Ex. 319.

Lawson Walton, K.C. (Herbert Reed, K.C., and Kisch with him), for the defendants.—The measure of damages to which the plaintiff is entitled must be assessed at the price of the stocks and shares either at the date of the breach of the contract—namely, the 16th of May, or at the date to which they would in ordinary course have been carried over—namely, the 31st of May. Plaintiff cannot claim damages assessed on the prices obtainable on any of the intermediate dates that were most favourable to him and most unfavourable to the defendants on the mere assumption that he would have realized on such dates.

Counsel referred to Ellis v. Pond, [1898] 1 Q. B. 426, 46 W. R. Dig. 138.

Isaacs, K.C., replied.

WILLS, J.—The only question I have to deal with here is one as to damages.

The plaintiff had entered into contracts with the defendant, as his agent, and the defendant had made contracts on his behalf, which entitled him to have shares delivered to him on the carrying-over day, on payment of a certain sum of money, at certain prices. That is part of what the defendant undertook. Another part of what the defendant undertook was that in the meantime he would sell the same shares for the plaintiff when directed to do so by him, and for any possible loss on this transaction he seemed to have held ample cover as security.

He did not do so, but repudiated the contract.

It seems to me that the plaintiff is plainly entitled to all the advantages which would have been his, or which might have been his had the contract been carried out. That is a perfectly sound principle. Amongst these advantages, it is contended, there was the right to sell the shares whenever he chose during the period over which the transactions were to run, and at different times, with respect to different stocks, different prices might have been realized.

Now it is perfectly certain that, as a matter of fact, with regard to these prices, the best prices that ruled during that time never would have been realized. It is equally certain that in some cases in which people are held liable for breach of contract or for withholding property, to the possession of which the plaintiff is entitled, he has been held to be entitled to the best price that has ruled during the period over which the transactions have run; and it is equally certain, with regard to a great number of those cases, that nobody supposes that one can ever get, as a matter of course, the best prices. The great probability is that he would have speculated and exercised his judgment in some cases rightly and in some cases wrongly. But I think I am right in saying that that element has never been allowed to enter into consideration for the purpose of reducing damages, and it seems to me that this is one of those cases in which the wrongdoer suffers because he is a wrongdoer, and that the plaintiff really is entitled to the best prices which ruled during the period during which it was at his option to sell or not to sell.

In questions of damage it is very difficult to lay down any rule which shall really do actual justice between the parties; the rules are obliged to be more or less arbitrary, and this case is, I think, an illustration of it.

I think upon that view, and also upon the view that the wrongdoer must suffer, the burden must be upon the wrongdoer and not upon the other party.

I think, therefore, that the measure of damages which Mr. Isaacs has contended for is the right one to apply in this case.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Martin & Co.

Solicitors for the defendants, Beyfus & Beyfus.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J.) } June 14, 24, 1901.

MERCER v. LIVERPOOL, ST. HELEN'S, AND SOUTH LANCASHIRE RAILWAY CO. (a.)

Lands clauses—Compulsory taking of land—Notice to treat—Interest created by owner in adjoining land subsequently to date of notice—Injurious affection of such land—Right to compensation—Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 Vict. c. 18), s. 68.

The defendants, under their statutory powers, served a notice to treat on the owner of certain land. After the date of this notice the owner leased certain adjoining land, not included in the notice to treat, to the predecessor in title of the plaintiff for a long term of years. Subsequent to such lease an agreement was made between the owner and the defendants in respect of the land included in the notice to treat, and compensation paid to the owner for all damage sustained by him by reason of the severing of the property purchased from him, from his other property, or otherwise injuriously affecting such other property. Owing to the execution of certain works by the defendants the plaintiff's property was injuriously affected.

Held, that the plaintiff, although his predecessor's title was created after the date of the notice to treat, was entitled to claim compensation for the injurious affection of his interest in the property.

The service of a notice to treat does not prevent the owner of the property to which the notice to treat relates dealing with property other than that included in the notice, and persons who bonâ fide acquire interest in such other property are not deprived of their claim to compensation for injurious affection by works subsequently executed simply because, after the date of the creation of their interest, an agreement has been made between the purchaser and the owner whereby the owner has been paid compensation for the land taken and for the injurious affection of his other property.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Trial before Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., without a jury.

The following are the facts of the case as set out in the written judgment of the Chief Justice:

The action was brought by a Mrs. Mercer to recover the sum of £371 10s., the amount of an award made under the Lands Clauses Act, and the costs subject to taxation of the arbitration.

The award was made on the 5th of March, 1897, in respect of the injurious affection of certain leasehold land and houses adjoining Birchley-street, St. Helen's, belonging to the plaintiff.

The land in question forms part of the estate of Lord Gerard, and previously to the granting of the lease hereinafter referred to was in his possession as owner.

Before the year 1886 certain streets had been laid out and partially constructed, and at the time of the application to Parliament in 1886, hereinafter mentioned, a certain street known as Standish-street was already in existence. Certain other streets communicating with Standish-street, and among others Birchley-street, had already been laid out though not constructed.

In the years 1885 and 1886 applications were made to Parliament by the predecessors of the defendant company for powers to construct a railway from St. Helen's to Wigan, and by the St. Helen's and Wigan Junction Act, 1886, s. 4, powers were granted to construct, among others, Railway No. 4, in the township of Windle, commencing by a junction with a certain other line of railway, and terminating at or near the intersection of College-street and Corporation-street, which is a short distance to the south of Standish-street.

In the passage of that Bill through Parliament an agreement was come to by Lord Gerard and the promoters which was embodied in section 13 of the Act of 1886. By that section the company became bound within twelve months from the passing of the Act to purchase certain land, indicated upon a certain plan, and the section contained provisions whereby the company were to take the land, and make, sewer, and flag half of Birchley-street, construct a bridge to carry the railway over Standish-street, and lower the other streets and adjoining building land to correspond with the streets which had to be lowered to be passed under the railway.

The Act incorporated the Lands Clauses Act, and section 21 contained the usual limits of time for exercising the compulsory powers.

By an Act of 1889 the twelve months mentioned in section 13 of the Act of 1886 was extended for one year from the 26th of July, 1889, to the 26th of July, 1890; and by an Act of 1891, the powers of compulsory purchase under the Acts of 1885 and 1886, which had become vested in the defendants, were extended until the 20th of July, 1893. But there was no further extension of the twelve months ementioned in the said section 13.

Prior to the year 1891 nothing had been done by the railway company to carry out the agreement mbodied in section 13 of the Act of 1886.

On the 23rd of October, 1891, the defendants served upon Lord Gerard a notice to treat to take the land necessary for the railway.

The plan annexed to the notice to treat was for the purpose of this case identical with the plan referred to in section 13 of the Act of 1886. The notice did not refer to section 13, nor was it in any way given under that section: it was an ordinary notice to treat given by the defendants under their compulsory powers to acquire compulsorily the land shown upon the plan.

On the 12th of January, 1892, Lord Gerard sent in his claim under the notice to treat. This claim was made subject to and upon the basis of the company carrying out the provisions of section 13 of the Act of 1886.

In the month of February, 1892, Lord Gerard's agent agreed with one John Gleave, the predecessor in title of the plaintiff, to let him certain land on the east side of Birchley-street opposite the land in respect of which notice had been given by the railway company for a term of 999 years. The land was let for the purpose of building.

On the 14th of June, 1892, a lease was granted pursuant to that agreement, the term reserved being from the 1st of January, 1892, and the lease contained provisions that the lessees should within twelve calendar months build a certain number of houses upon the land demised. Some of the houses were in fact built during the summer of 1892, and some of those houses were occupied by tenants of Gleave prior to October, 1892.

On the 14th of October, 1892, an agreement was made between Lord Gerard and the defendants in respect of the land included in the notice to treat, and under that agreement Lord Gerard agreed to sell the land shown upon the plan annexed to the notice to treat, a copy of which was also annexed to the agreement, for the sum of £23,000, such sum to include all satisfaction and compensation for all damages sustained by the vendor by reason of the severing of the property purchased from the vendor from the vendor's other property, or otherwise injuriously affecting such other property by the exercise of the statutory powers.

By clause 4 of the agreement the purchase was to be completed on the 30th of November, 1892. The agreement provided by clause 6 that the company should make, sewer, flag, and channel the western half of Birchley-street. The purchase was not completed on the date contemplated.

In 1893 Lord Gerard commenced proceedings to obtain specific performance of the agreement of the 14th of October, 1892, and subsequently, upon the 27th of November, 1894, a deed of conveyance was executed by Lord Gerard whereby, after reciting that the defendants had agreed with him, the vendor, for the purchase of the land thereinafter conveyed, and among others of the rights conferred by section 13, sub-section 3, of the Act of 1886, for the sum of £24,209, which sum it had been agreed should include all satisfaction and compensation for all damages sustained by the vendor, or by reason of the severance of the property purchased from the vendor's other property, or otherwise injuriously affecting such other property by the exercise of the statutory powers, Lord Gerard conveyed the land the subject of the notice to treat to the defendants.

Subsequently to October, 1894, the defendants constructed the railway, lowered the level of Standish-street and of the northern end of Birchley-street so as to bring it to the same level at the junction of Standish-street with an upward incline towards the south, and put up a retaining wall to support the plaintiff's houses. The result of these operations by the defendants was that the access to the plaintiff's houses was permanently interfered with.

On the 12th of November, 1895, the plaintiff gave a notice claiming compensation for injurious affection under the 68th section of the Lands Clauses Act, and appointed an arbitrator, and, the usual formalities having been observed, the umpire in due course made his award, awarding to the plaintiff the sum of £371 10s. in respect of the damage and injury sustained by the plaintiff in or to her lands, messuages, and hereditaments by reason of the execution of the works of the company, and by reason of such lands, messuages, and hereditaments being injuriously affected.

Jelf, K.C. (MacConkey with him), for the plaintiff.

McCall, K.C., T. G. Horridge, K.C., and Lorraine, for the defendants.

The arguments of counsel sufficiently appear in the following judgment.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 24.—Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J., having stated the facts as set out above, read as follows: It was not disputed that the lowering of the road and the interference with the access to the plaintiff's houses did cause an injurious affection which would, under ordinary circumstances, entitle the plaintiff to compensation. This has been for a long time settled; but it was said that either the provisions of section 13 of the Act of 1886, or the giving of the notice to treat on the 23rd of October, 1891, coupled with the payment to Lord Gerard of the compensation in pursuance of the agreement, prevented the plaintiff from being entitled to recover compensation in respect of the injurious affection of the land demised to Gleave under the lease of the 14th of June, 1892. In my opinion no argument can properly be founded by the defendants upon the statutory bargain contained in section 13 of the Act of 1886.

That bargain was never carried out. The lands were not purchased under the agreement therein contained. The powers of the company for carrying out that bargain expired on the 26th of July, 1890. The land was in fact purchased under the compulsory powers contained in the Act of 1886, the time for the exercise of those powers having been extended by section 3 of the Act of 1891.

The question, therefore, to be determined is, did the transaction between the company and Lord Gerard, founded upon the notice to treat of October, 1891, disentitle the plaintiff to the right of compensation which would have otherwise existed? It is well established that no compensation can be claimed in respect of an interest in land the subject of a notice to treat created subsequently to the date of the notice: Ex parte Edwards, 19 W. R. 1047, L. R. 12 Eq. 389; Wilkins v. Mayor of Birmingham, 32 W. R. 118, 25 Ch. D. 78; Todd v. Metropolitan District Railway Co., 19 W. R. 720, 24 L. T. Rep. 435, and other cases. The argument of the defendants in this case, however, goes further. It is contended by them that after the service of the notice to treat, either taken alone or in conjunction with section 13 of the Act of 1886, no owner of any interest in property created by Lord Gerard after the date of the notice could make any claim for compensation for any injurious affection sustained by any such property in consequence of the construction of the works authorized by their parliamentary powers. In my opinion this contention is not well founded.

There are many reasons why the principle that an interest cannot be created in the land the subject of the notice to treat should not be extended in the way suggested. The notice to treat does not determine the amount of compensation for the land taken, or the amount to be paid for injurious affection. It does fix and stereotype the interest which the company desire to acquire; but the amount to be paid is the subject of subsequent agreement, or, it may be, of assessment by a jury or arbitrators. Between the time when the notice to treat is given and the damages are actually assessed a landowner may, as far as I know, deal with his adjoining lands. There is no statute or principle to restrain him from so doing, and when the amount to be paid is ascertained, whether by agreement or judicial proceedings, the real nature of the injury by severance or injurious affection has to be considered. The vendor may, since the notice to treat, have ceased to own other parts of his property. No doubt, if it could be shown that the vendor, with the consent of the person claiming the subsequent interests under him in lands other than those taken, had claimed and received compensation in respect of those interests, it might raise the case which has sometimes been made that the vendor received less for his interests in the other land from the persons acquiring them because he intended to claim and receive compensation to recoup him for accepting a lower price from the persons acquiring the interests. In my opinion, however, any such case would have to be established by evidence, and does not flow as a legal deduction from the mere fact that a notice to treat has been given for land other than that out of which the interests have been created. I may observe that by their defence the defendants properly raised an issue on this point. In this case the defendants have not adduced any evidence that in fixing the purchase-money ultimately paid to Lord Gerard anything was included for the damage to the property leased to the predecessors of the plaintiff by the lease of June, 1892.

It is true that the agreement of the 14th of October, 1892, speaks of compensation for injurious affection of the other property of the vendors. At the time that agreement was made the lease was in existence. The houses were already built fronting upon Birchley-street, and, in my opinion, it was for the defendants to prove that some claim was made or item included in respect of the then existing land and houses which now belong to the plaintiff. There is no evidence that Gleave had any notice or knowledge of the fact that the notice to treat was served on Lord Gerard in October, 1891. He must be deemed to have known of the provisions of section 13 of the Act of 1886, but, as I have already said, the land was not taken under that section, but under the ordinary compulsory powers. Evidence was given that the solicitors for the railway company did not know of the lease of June, 1892, when they made the agreement of October; but, in my opinion, that is immaterial in the absence of any evidence that a claim was being made or included in respect of the injurious affection of the land and houses in question which formed no part of the property taken. Moreover, I am by no means satisfied that the extent to which Birchley-street would have to be lowered was then known, or that the nature of the works which the defendants would have to execute to secure the plaintiff's property was known.

Section 13 of the Act of 1886 contemplated the possible lowering of Standish-street and Birchley-street to some extent, but I do not know that the actual degree of lowering could be ascertained until the railway was constructed, still less what works would be required to be carried out in connection therewith. The main ground on which I have decided in favour of the plaintiff is that, in my opinion, the service of the notice to treat does not prevent the owner of the property to which the notice to treat relates dealing with property other than that included in the notice, and that persons who bonâ fide acquire interest in such other property are not deprived of their claim to compensation for injurious affection by works subsequently executed simply because the defendants have made a settlement with the vendor in respect of the land taken and injurious affection of his other property. As I have indicated, a great deal more requires to be shown before the right of compensation, otherwise admitted, can be taken away. I have assumed in favour of the defendants that the amount of £24,209 paid under the conveyance of 1894 included the £23,000 the subject of the agreement of October, 1892. It was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that I ought not to take this view; but, having regard to the recital in the deed of 1894 to which I have referred, I think that is established.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

Solicitors for the plaintiff. Bell, Brodrick, & Gray, for J. Haslam Fox, St. Helen's.

Solicitors for the defendants, Maples, Teesdale, & Co., for Oppenheim & Malkin, St. Helen's.

K. B. Div.
(Ridley and Bigham, JJ.) June 17, 1901.

THRELKELD (Appellant) v. SMITH (Respondent). (a.)

Criminal law—Larceny—Deer—Unlawful possession of —Deer "kept or being in" a forest—Deer killed outside forest—Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), ss. 12, 14.

A person who kills and carries away a deer when it has strayed outside the boundaries of a forest, chase, or purlieu, in which it is usually kept, on to the land of a third person has not "unlawfully" killed the deer within the meaning of section 12 of the Larceny Act, 1861, and cannot therefore be convicted under section 14 of being in unlawful possession thereof.

Case stated by justices of Westmoreland.

On the 4th of March, 1901, an information under section 14 of the Larceny Act, 1861, preferred against Threlkeld, the appellant, by Smith, superintendent of police, the respondent, was heard and determined by the justices, who convicted the appellant and fined him £5.

J. E. Hasell was the owner of the uninclosed common and forest of Martindale, in which he kept a herd of wild red deer.

Lord Lonsdale was lord of the manor of Bampton, which adjoined Hasell's property, and comprised a large uninclosed common.

On the 18th of February, 1901, the appellant shot a deer which had strayed from Hasell's herd in the forest of Martindale on to the common belonging to Lord Lonsdale, and carried it away and concealed it within the buildings of his farm.

On the 25th of February the police, acting under a search warrant, found the body of the deer in the place in which the appellant had concealed it.

It was contended on behalf of the appellant that he ought not to be convicted for the following reasons:

1. That the deer, being wild and unreclaimed, belonged to the class of animals feræ naturæ; that any man might seize and keep for his own use animals feræ naturæ which have escaped from captivity; that the possessory property in such animals is gone when off the owner's land, even though driven off by a trespasser; and that therefore there could be no larceny of a deer.

2. That therefore the prosecution had to bring themselves strictly within sections 12 and 13 of the Larceny Act, 1861, and that these sections did not apply to the case, the words "kept or being" used in those sections not applying, inasmuch as the deer, when killed, was neither in the inclosed nor in the uninclosed part of the forest, chase, or purlieu.

3. That the deer not being the subject of larceny at common law, and sections 12 and 13 not applying, and Mr. Hasell not having any property in the deer at the place where it was killed, the appellant had committed no offence against either the common or statute law.

For the respondent it was contended that deer are not necessarily animals feræ naturæ, but that even if they are not the subject of larceny at common law, yet section 14 of the Larceny Act, 1861, applied.

The justices were of opinion that the appellant had not satisfied them that he had come lawfully by the deer for the following reasons: First, he had not shown that he had the right of shooting on the commons in the manor of Bampton; and secondly, he had unlawfully killed a deer kept in the uninclosed part of a forest, chase, or purlieu within the meaning of section 12 of the Larceny Act, 1861, there being a difference between the word "kept" and the word "being."

The question for the opinion of the court was whether the justices were right in point of law in finding that the appellant had not satisfied them that he came lawfully by the deer.

The Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), provides as follows:

"Section 12.—Whosoever shall unlawfully course, hunt, snare, or carry away, or kill or wound, or attempt to kill or wound, any deer kept or being in the uninclosed part of any forest, chase, or purlieu, shall for every such offence, on conviction thereof before a justice of the peace, forfeit and pay such sum, not exceeding fifty pounds, as to the justice shall seem meet. . . .

"Section 13.—Whosoever shall unlawfully and wilfully course, hunt, snare, or carry away, or kill or wound, or attempt to kill or wound, any deer kept or being in the inclosed part of any forest, chase, or purlieu, or in any inclosed land where deer shall be usually kept, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years. . . .

"Section 14.—If any deer, or the head, skin, or other part thereof, or any snare or engine for the taking of deer, shall be found in the possession of any person or on the premises of any person with his knowledge, and such person, being taken or summoned before a justice of the peace, shall not satisfy the justice that he came lawfully by such deer, or the head, skin, or other part thereof . . . he shall on conviction by the justice forfeit and pay any sum, not exceeding twenty pounds. . . ."

T. Shepherd Little, for the appellant.—The conviction was wrong. It was clear he had come lawfully by the deer. It was not a deer "kept or being in the uninclosed part of any forest" within the meaning of section 12, therefore no offence had been committed by the appellant within that section. The deer when killed was entirely outside the forest. The fact that the appellant had killed the deer outside the forest on the land of Lord Lonsdale did not constitute an offence under the Larceny Act, 1861, and therefore he could not be said to be unlawfully in possession of it within the meaning of section 14. If a deer get out of a forest it cannot be said to be "kept in." The Act does not make it an offence to shoot a deer on uninclosed land which is not a forest: Reg. v. Roe, 11 Cox C. C. 554, 18 W. R. C. L. Dig. 31; Reg. v. King, 13 L. J. M. C. 43.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Danckwerts, K.C., for the respondent.—The conviction was right. The appellant "unlawfully and wilfully" killed the deer within the meaning of section 12. The deer when killed was a deer "kept or being" in an uninclosed forest within the meaning of section 12. The word "kept" does not mean that the deer must be actually within the forest, but refers to deer which are as a rule kept within the forest, and although they may occasionally stray from a particular forest, they are nevertheless "kept" there within the meaning of the section. The appellant had killed the deer unlawfully, and therefore he could not, under section 14, show that he had "come lawfully by such deer." Even if there had been no offence under section 12, nevertheless the appellant could not show he was in lawful possession within section 14 because he had killed the deer on Lord Lonsdale's property, which act was unlawful: Davies v. Powell, Willes, 46; Blades v. Higgs, 13 W. R. 927, 11 H. L. Cas. 621.

T. S. Little replied.

RIDLEY, J.—In this case the appellant was convicted of an offence under section 14 of the Larceny Act, 1861, the justices being of opinion that he had not satisfied them that "he came lawfully by" the body of a deer found in his possession. The deer in question was one of a herd of deer kept within the forest of Martindale belonging to a Mr. Hasell. This deer had escaped from the forest and was killed by the appellant upon land belonging to Lord Lonsdale, which was outside the boundaries of the forest. The appellant was the occupier but not the owner of the land upon which the deer was killed, and therefore he cannot set up the right that the deer belonged to him. The question therefore is whether the justices ought to have found that "he came lawfully by such deer," and this question depends upon the construction of certain sections of the Larceny Act, 1861. However, I will first state what I believe to be the law with regard to forests. Offences committed within the forests were, under the Norman kings, treated as capital offences, or were very severely punished, but by a series of statutes, passed from time to time, the severity of the forest laws was mitigated. That being so with regard to offences in respect of animals feræ naturæ committed within a forest, those offences were confined to crimes committed within the forest. There were, however, certain boundaries which were wider than the forest—namely, the outskirts of the forest, and in these outskirts there were certain wider rights belonging to those persons who held the land. In Coke's Institutes, bk. 4, ch. 73, it is said that: "When the king's game of the forest do range out of the forest (and purlieu if any be) they belong not to the king but are at their natural liberty, et occupanti conceduntur." That means that the person who found them was entitled to take possession of them. Assuming, however, that it only means that the occupier of the land may kill and take them, it seems to show that the rights of the forest ceased at the limits of the purlieu. A person who killed one of those animals outside the forest did not break the forest laws, and he was not subject to criminal proceedings, though, by taking an animal not belonging to him, he may have broken the civil law. Within the purlieus the owner possessed certain other rights which are stated in Manwood's Forest Laws and in Comyn's Digest, tit. Chase I. Within the forest the owner's right was absolute, within the purlieu he had a right to kill them if he caught them, but outside the purlieu he had no right. That law has been altered from time to time by various statutes, the latest of which is the Larceny Act of 1861. Section 10 makes the stealing of domestic animals an offence punishable with penal servitude. Section 11 enacts that "whosoever shall wilfully kill any animal with intent to steal the carcase . . . shall be guilty of felony," and be liable to the same penalty as under section 10, if the offence of stealing the animal would have amounted to a felony. That has no application to section 12, although it might have to section section 13, but it is unnecessary to decide that point, for the proceedings in this case are not taken under either of those sections. Then the statute goes on to deal with deer, and we have to consider whether sections 12 to 16 are to be read together as a code to be construed with regard to the previous law upon the subject, or whether they are new provisions which are to be construed without regard to the previous law, and to be given a wider meaning than they would otherwise receive. According to the one interpretation it would be unlawful for the appellant to kill outside the forest a deer which was usually kept within the forest. According to the other interpretation it would not be unlawful because he did not kill the deer within the limits of the forest. Which of these interpretations is correct? Are we to suppose that the Act intended to give a criminal complexion to an act which previously would not have been so regarded? I should hesitate long before holding that it so intended. It seems to me improbable that it was intended to treat persons who had killed deer which had escaped from a forest in the same way as if they had killed them within the forest. Some light seems to be thrown upon the meaning of the word "unlawfully" as used in the Act by the difference between the sections which make it an offence universally to kill domestic animals, and section 12, which does not make it an offence universally to wilfully kill deer. The very word "unlawfully" itself seems to indicate that there may be circumstances under which it might be lawful to kill deer within a forest. If so, may not the word "unlawfully" be sufficiently explained in that way? The word refers to the killing of a deer in a place where it is not lawful to kill it. Then we have to interpret the words "any deer kept or being in the uninclosed part of any forest, chase, or purlieu."

It has been argued that, as the word "being" is used, a wider meaning must be given to the word "kept" so as to include deer which are usually kept within the forest but which have escaped. We may, however, read these words in the sense that the statute is protecting the boundaries of a forest and not the rights of any particular person; that it protects not only the animals which are usually kept there, but also those which happen to stray there. If that be so it seems to me that this section is capable of a narrower construction than that for which the respondent contends.

Having regard to the previous law on the subject, I am of opinion that that is the proper interpretation of section 14, and that the narrower construction is the better one.

Section 13 we need not consider. Then we come to section 14, which provides that if any deer shall be found in the possession of any person, or on his premises with his knowledge, and he does not "satisfy the justices that he came lawfully by such deer," he may be convicted and fined. It was argued on behalf of the respondent that the appellant was not in lawful possession of the deer, and that the justices could not find that he was, because the deer belonged to Lord Lonsdale under the rule of law that the owner of the land has the right to animals feræ naturæ which are on his land; and that no one has a right to kill them and take possession of them without the consent of the owner of the land. I do not think "lawfully" is used in that sense in this section. I think it is used in the same sense as "unlawfully" is used in section 12. Therefore if a person proves that he killed the deer outside the limits of a forest protected by section 12, I think he shows that he came by it "lawfully" within the meaning of section 14. Sections 15 and 16 are supplemental. They deal with attempts to kill deer and with persons who set snares or enter into a forest with intent to hunt deer. Under section 16 no person can be convicted unless he has done something within the forest, chase, or purlieu, whether inclosed or not. I think that furnishes an argument in favour of our view, and shows that all these sections are intended to protect animals at that particular place which is limited by the boundaries of the forest, chase, or purlieu. For these reasons I am of opinion that the justices were wrong, and that they ought to have found that the appellant was lawfully in possession of the deer.

BIGHAM, J.—I am of the same opinion. The respondent contends that section 14 is of general application, and is not to be read with exclusive reference to the offences created by sections 12 and 13. In my opinion that contention is not sound. Section 14 comes after the two sections which make it an offence to kill deer and before the two sections which do not relate to the offence of killing, and, therefore, I have no doubt that section 14 intends that the person charged shall not be convicted if he satisfies the justices that an offence has not been committed under section 12 or section 13, in which case he could, in my opinion, say that he came lawfully by the deer. Any other construction would lead to an absurdity, for it would make any person who happened to be in possession of any part of a deer liable to an information laid against him under section 14. In my opinion section 14 is only meant to apply to a person who is in possession of any part of a deer and is unable to show that an offence has not been committed in respect of it under section 12 or section 13.

Then it is contended that, even if section 14 is to be construed as having that narrow application, the appellant was guilty of an offence under section 12, because the deer which he killed was "kept" in the forest. This deer was one which, in a sense, was at one time "kept" or was in the uninclosed part of a forest, and would, therefore, appear to be a deer which, while it was there, came within section 12, which provides that "whosoever shall unlawfully and wilfully . . . kill any deer kept or being in the uninclosed part of any forest" may be convicted. Did the appellant "unlawfully" kill this deer? For the respondent it is contended that "unlawfully" in that section means in such a way as to violate the private rights of another individual, and that the appellant in killing this deer did violate the private rights of Lord Lonsdale. Assuming that is so, still, in my opinion, that does not make the appellant's act unlawful within the meaning of section 12. Probably it has always been contrary to the criminal law to "course, hunt, snare, or carry away, or kill or wound" any deer in a forest. From time to time statutes have defined the punishment for that offence, and they have from time to time been repealed and replaced by other statutes, the latest of which is the Larceny Act of 1861. Section 12 does not create the offence, but refers to it as an existing offence at common law, and means that if any man violates the criminal law by doing this act, he shall be liable to the prescribed punishment. In my opinion, the word "unlawfully," as used in this section, means, not in contravention of the rights of a private individual, but of the criminal law of the land. I do not think the appellant committed any unlawful act in that sense. He was possibly violating the rights of Lord Lonsdale, but he was not, in my opinion, therefore acting "unlawfully" within the meaning of section 12.

The next question is whether this deer was, at the time it was killed, "kept" in the forest, within the meaning of section 12. The deer was certainly not in any part of the forest, for it had escaped, and was in the manor of Bampton. It is contented, however, that although it was not in the forest it was "kept" in the forest. In my opinion section 12 refers only to acts done in the forest and not to anything done outside the limits of the forest, chase, or purlieu. I think the section means that the act must be done in the forest and that it is a criminal act if done there in respect of an animal which is either kept there by the owner of the forest or happens to be there.

I am therefore of opinion—firstly, that the act of the appellant was not, under the circumstances, done "unlawfully" within the meaning of section 12; and, secondly, that it was not an offence within the statute, because it was not done in a forest, chase, or purlieu; and, lastly, that it was not an offence because the deer was not at the time "kept or being" in a forest. The conviction was therefore wrong.

I would add that in my opinion the decision in Reg. v. King involves the conclusion that this offence cannot be committed except within the limits of a forest, because it was there held that the conviction was bad for omitting to state that the deer was in the inclosed part of some forest, chase, or purlieu.

Appeal allowed. Conviction quashed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Edwards & Sons, for Scott & Allan, Penrith.

Solicitors for the respondent, Bleaymire & Shepherd, Penrith.

Court of Appeal.

From K. B. Div. (Collins, M.R., and Stirling and Mathew, L.JJ.) } Nov. 28.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. MAYOR, &c., OF EASTBOURNE. (a.)

Revenue—Stamp duty—Conveyance on sale—Person authorized by statute to purchase property—Purchase of realty and chattels—Stamp duty on consideration for sale of chattels—Finance Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 16), s. 12.

By section 12 of the Finance Act, 1895, where by virtue of any Act, either (a) any property is vested by way of sale in any person, or (b) any person is authorized to purchase any property, such person shall produce to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue a copy of the Act or some instrument relating to the vesting in the first case, and an instrument of conveyance of the property in the other case, duly stamped with the ad valorem duty payable upon a conveyance on sale of the property.

Held, that the word "property" means specific property, whether real or personal, which is either vested in the purchaser by some Act or which the purchaser is authorized by some Act to purchase, and stamp duty is payable upon the whole consideraton for the purchase.

Judgment of the Divisional Court (ante, p. 59, [1901] 2 K. B. 773) affirmed.

Appeal from the judgment of a Divisional Court (reported ante, p. 59, [1901] 2 K. B. 773) on a special case stated by consent pursuant to ord. 34, r. 1, and ord. 68, r. 2, in an information by the Crown to recover £443 15s. and interest for duty under section 12 of the Finance Act, 1895, in respect of the purchase by the defendants of the undertaking of the Eastbourne Electric Lighting Co. (Limited) under statutory powers.

The consideration for the sale was the sum of £88,749 2s. 9d., and of this sum £37,929 was in respect of goods, wares, and merchandize, and the rest in respect of real estate.

The Crown claimed ad valorem duty upon the whole of the consideration. The defendants admitted that they were liable to pay duty in respect of so much of the consideration as related to the purchase of the real estate, but contended that no duty was payable in respect of the sum of £37,929. No appeal was brought in respect of the duty upon the sum of £2,000 mentioned in paragraph 5 of the case.

The facts are fully stated in the report of the case in the court below.

The Divisional Court (Kennedy and Phillimore, JJ.) gave judgment for the Crown. The defendants appealed.

By section 12 of the Finance Act, 1895: "Where, after the passing of this Act, by virtue of any Act, whether passed before or after this Act, either—(a) any property is vested by way of sale in any person; or (b) any person is authorized to purchase any property; such person shall within three months after the passing of the Act or the date of vesting, whichever is later, or after the completion of the purchase, as the case may be, produce to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue a copy of the Act printed by the Queen's printer of Acts of Parliament or some instrument relating to the vesting in the first case, and an instrument of conveyance of the property in the other case, duly stamped with the ad valorem duty payable upon a conveyance on sale of the property; and in default of such production, the duty with interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum from the passing of the Act, date of vesting, or completion of the purchase, as the case may be, shall be a debt to her Majesty from such person."

Danckwerts, K.C., and Macoun, for the defendants.—Some limitation must be placed on the word "property" in section 12; otherwise, whenever a highway board purchased materials for the repair of a highway, which they are authorized to purchase under section 52 of the Highway Act, 1864, or whenever a local authority purchased a water-cart or a lamp-post, which they can only do under statutory powers, a duly stamped conveyance would have to be produced to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue. This absurd result cannot have been intended by the Legislature. The test is whether a conveyance is required by law to pass the property. Personal chattels pass by delivery, and no conveyance is necessary. The section was not intended to impose new taxation, but merely to facilitate the collection of an old duty. Therefore the word "property" should be read as meaning personal chattels. No doubt, if a person chooses to take a conveyance of personal chattels, the conveyance must be stamped, but a conveyance is not necessary. Where property which requires a conveyance to pass it and property which does not require a conveyance are joined in one conveyance, the practice has been to apportion the consideration payable in respect of each for the purpose of stamp duty. The Divisional Court were therefore wrong.

They referred to Great Western Railway Co. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 42 W. R. 211, [1894] 1 Q. B. 507.

Sir Edward Carson, S.G., and S. A. T. Rowlatt, for the Crown.—The language of section 12 is clear. The section points to specific property which is either vested by some Act by way of sale in any person, or which some Act authorizes a person to purchase. The word "property" therefore includes all property, whether real or personal, which is specifically vested by some Act in any person or which some person is specifically authorized by some Act to purchase. This construction of the section avoids the difficulties suggested by the defendants. The contention on the other side would compel the court to read words into the section which are not there now. In the present case the defendants were authorized by statute to purchase the undertaking, including the real and personal property, of the Electric Lighting Co., and stamp duty is payable on the whole of the consideration in respect thereof.

Danckwerts, K.C., in reply.—A statute must impose a tax in clear terms: per Lord Halsbury in Tennant v. Smith, [1892] A. C. 150, at p. 154, 40 W. R. Dig. 216. Here the section does not purport to impose new taxation.

COLLINS, M.R.—In my opinion this appeal must be dismissed. The corporation were empowered by statute to purchase the undertaking of the electric company, which embraced freehold property and chattel property to a large amount. The Crown claim that it is the duty of the corporation, having acquired statutory power to purchase the whole of the undertaking, to produce to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue an instrument of conveyance stamped with the ad valorem duty payable in respect of the whole consideration for the purchase. The corporation are willing to produce a conveyance stamped in respect of the consideration payable for the realty, but deny their liability to produce a conveyance stamped in respect of the consideration for the chattels. The question in dispute turns upon section 12 of the Finance Act, 1895. The Divisional Court held that the contention of the Crown was right—namely, that the corporation must produce a conveyance stamped in respect of the whole of the consideration. The contention of the corporation is that that is a wrong view of the section. It is said that the word "property" is so wide that it would embrace, if read in its wide meaning, all sorts of transactions which the Legislature cannot possibly have intended it to embrace in this section; for instance, materials for the repair of highways which the highway authority is authorized by statute to purchase, and lamp-posts which a local authority is similarly authorized to purchase. It is therefore said that some limitation must be placed upon the meaning of the word "property." It is said that the section is one intended, not to impose fresh taxation, but merely to facilitate the collection of taxation previously imposed; and it is said that before the Act if a person purchased both real property and personal chattels, he was not bound by law to take a conveyance of the chattels, as they would pass by delivery without a conveyance, and therefore, though they might both be included in the conveyance, he only paid ad valorem stamp duty on the consideration for the purchase of the realty. The Act, it is contended, did not intend to place the purchaser in a worse position than he was in before. I agree that we must place some limitation upon the meaning of the word "property" in the section. It seems to me, upon reading the whole section together, that we get a limitation arising fairly on the language used in the section, and if the result of that construction is to impose new taxation, it is imposed according to the fair reading of the section as a whole. It is not by a process of importing into the section words which are not there that the new duty is imposed. The words here are clearly capable, when read in their ordinary and natural meaning, of imposing the duty, and we are merely placing a limitation upon the wide meaning of the words. The governing factor in this legislation is that there is a purchase of particular property, which is either vested by some Act in the purchaser, or which the purchaser is empowered by some Act to purchase. If the property is specifically vested by the Act—section 12 (a)—in the purchaser, clearly ad valorem stamp duty is payable on the whole consideration. If, on the other hand, power is conferred by the Act to purchase the property—section 12 (b)—why should the purchaser in that case be relieved from paying the duty which he would have to pay in the first case? I agree that this reading of the section imposes additional taxation, but there is no reason to suppose, so far as I can see, why the Legislature, in cases of the purchase of ascertained property under statutory authority, did not intend to impose stamp duty upon the whole consideration for the purchase. The Legislature in the two cases is dealing with the same subject-matter, which has been treated differently in the two clauses of the section as a mere matter of machinery for effecting its transfer from the vendor to the purchaser. In so deciding we are not in any way straining the language of the section. The appeal must therefore be dismissed.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-Law.

STIRLING, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I have come to the conclusion that the limitation contended for by the Crown is the true one, because I think that the word "property" ought to be read in the same sense throughout the section. It is clear that the word, when used in clause (a), means all property specifically vested in the purchaser by the Act. In that clause property is obviously not limited to real property. The word must have the same meaning in clause (b).

MATHEW, L.J., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the Crown, Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

Solicitors for the defendants, Sharpe, Parker, Pritchards, Barham, & Lawford, for H. W. Fovargue, Eastbourne.

Appeal.
(Collins, M.R., and Stirling and Mathew, L.JJ.) Nov. 8.

MCGARTH v. ROBERT NEILL & SONS. (a.)

Master and servant—Compensation for injuries by accident—"Building which exceeds thirty feet in height"—What level such measurement should be calculated from—Foundation footings—Height of building may include brickwork below street level—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, s. 7, sub-section 1.

In ascertaining the height of a building in course of erection for the purpose of deciding whether it is a building thirty feet high within the meaning of section 7 (1) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, that part of the wall which is below the street level measured from the top of the concrete foundations may properly be included, even, semble, where that part of the wall is intended subsequently to be covered up with soil.

Appeal by the employers, Robert Neill & Sons, from the decision of the Manchester County Court Judge in an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

The accident to the applicant happened on a building in the course of erection the measurements of which if taken from the bottom of the footings or from the top of the footings came within the Act as being a building thirty feet high, but if measured from the street level or the basement level would in either case fall short of the statutory height.

The walls of the warehouse were at the time of the accident if measured from the bottom of the footing exactly 33ft. 2½in.; from the top of the footing, 31ft. 2½in.; from the basement floor, 29ft. 10in.; and from the level of the street, 23ft. 5¾in.

The county court judge held that the proper measurement was from the bottom of the footings to the top of the wall and as this measurement gave a height of 33ft. 2½in., he awarded compensation to the applicant.

The respondents appealed.

Clavell Salter, for the employers.—The mean level of the street is the proper place to measure from, where the foundations, &c., are covered in. A distinction has always been drawn between height and depth. They are relative terms no doubt. Suppose a man had a well dug 100 feet deep and lined with brick-work from top to bottom. If he stood at the bottom of the well he might properly say the brick walls were 100 feet high, but standing in the street it would be wrong to speak of the walls of the well except as 100 feet deep. [MATHEW, J.—Suppose you dug a trench twenty feet deep to get a good foundation for a wall, and from the foundation you build a wall forty feet in height. A workman employed in laying the last row of bricks was killed, would he come within the benefit of the Act?—No; because the wall would only be twenty feet above the street level.] In Hoddinott v. Newton, Chambers, & Co., 49 W. R. 380, [1901] A. C. 49, the converse proposition to the present case was considered—namely, up to what point could a building be measured to. And this court held that the ridge of the roof was part of the building for the purpose ascertaining its statutory height. Assuming the court holds against me and decides that the street level is not the lowest point in a building from which the measurement of the height of the walls can be ascertained, then I submit the floor of the basement is certainly the lowest point for ascertaining the height of the building, and this building so measured is then less than thirty feet. In Halstead v. Thompson & Sons, 3 Ct. Sess. Cas., 5th series, 668. the question was whether a washhouse came within the Act. It was 30ft. 5½in. in height above its foundation; immediately above the foundation was a basement floor six feet below the level of the surrounding ground. The floor of the washhouse was 6ft. 4in. above the basement floor. The court there held that the question whether or not a building exceeded thirty feet was one of fact, and that this building had rightly been decided as coming within section 7 (1) of the Act, but they did not decide the question whether in estimating the statutory height of a building the foundations were to be taken into account.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

McCleary, for the applicant, was not heard.

THE COURT dismissed the appeal.

COLLINS, M.R.—In the case of Billings v. Holloway, 47 W. R. 105, [1899] 1 Q. B. 70, this court decided that the Act does not apply to employment on a building in course of erection which at the time of the accident does not exceed thirty feet in height, but which when completed will exceed that height; and therefore the question we have here to answer is whether this building at the time of the accident exceeded thirty feet in height. Mr. Clavell Salter contended that the street level must be the base line from which the height must be measured, and he said that it would be inconvenient and in some cases impossible to excavate and ascertain the depth below that level at which the foundations were. I agree with the decision in Halstead v. Thompson & Sons that what is really the height of a building must be a question of fact in each case, and provided there is evidence to support the finding on this point of the arbitrator, one which this court must accept. I can quite conceive a building which, when measured from its base before the footings are filled, it, to a particular point, may properly in some conditions of fact be considered as exceeding thirty feet in height, but less in other conditions of facts. I agree with Lord Macnaghten that the provision as to the height of the building is inserted to differentiate different classes of buildings and builders. In Hoddinott v. Newton, Chambers, & Co., [1901] A. C., at p. 56, he said the provisions as to the height of a building and as to scaffolding "were intended to exempt a certain class of builders of the humbler sort from the operation of the Act." A building might be an important building although the greater part was below the level of the ground or street, and all the mischief contemplated by the Act when it gave a remedy to workmen employed on that class of building might arise. In this case probably the footings were covered in, but I can see no evidence that there was more than a flooring at the top of the footings. In my judgment there is evidence upon which the judge's finding can be supported. The building measured from the top of the footings gives a measurement of 31ft. 2½in., and on that basis the building comes within the Act. It is therefore immaterial to consider whether the learned judge was justified in taking the measurement from the bottom of the footing for the purpose of deciding this case. I think the presumption from the evidence is that the flooring at the time of the accident had not got beyond that stage, and as this court can only interfere with a finding of fact, where there is no evidence to support the finding of the court below, or the judge has misdirected himself, we must accept the learned judge's finding that this building exceeded thirty feet. For these reasons the appeal fails.

STIRLING and MATHEW, L.JJ., concurred.

Solicitors for the appellants, Mackrell, Maton, & Co.

Solicitors for the applicant, Chester & Co., for Crofton, Craven, & Worthington, Manchester.

Appeal.
(Collins, M.R., and Stirling and Mathew, L.JJ.) — Nov. 8.

HOWELLS v. VIVIAN & SONS. (a.)

Master and servant—Compensation for injury by accident—"Dependants"—Dependency on son's earnings—Standard of living—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, Schedule I., cl. 1.

An applicant sought compensation for the loss of his son, and evidence was given that the applicant could maintain himself and his family without assistance from the earnings of the deceased.

Held, reversing the decision of the county court judge, that this fact did not debar the applicant from compensation as being partially "dependent" upon the earnings of the deceased at the time of his death.

Appeal from an award of the judge of the Neath County Court in an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

The applicant was the father of a workman who was killed by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment by the respondents in a coal mine.

He claimed compensation as being partially "dependent" upon the earnings of the deceased at the time of his death.

At the hearing of the matter before the county court judge evidence was given that the deceased was unmarried, was twenty-seven years of age, and lived with his father, mother, and a married sister; that his average wages were 28s. a week, the whole of which he was in the habit of paying into a common family fund kept by his mother.

His cost of living was from 10s. to 12s. a week, and his mother allowed him a small amount of pocket money weekly, spending the difference on the upkeep of the home. The father's earnings were 33s. 9d. a week.

The county court judge in deciding the application for an award said: "The facts I find were that the applicant is an able-bodied workman, earning the usual full wages of a person in his position of life . . . and had no one except himself and his wife to maintain. I take it that a 'dependant' or 'part dependant' is a person who from some cause is unable to support himself and his family without assistance from some other source and on which he may be said then to be dependent. Now can I say in this case that this able-bodied workman earning about 33s. 9d. a week, with only himself and wife to maintain, is unable to support himself without assistance? I cannot find that the applicant was a dependant, so I must find in fact that he was not dependent on his son."

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

He refused, therefore, to award any compensation to the applicant, who thereupon appealed.

S. T. Evans, K.C., Ivor Bowen, and W. H. Kelly, for the applicant.

Ruegg, K.C., and Bertram, for the respondents.

THE COURT allowed the appeal.

COLLINS, M.R.—I think the county court judge was wrong in holding that the applicant in this case was not a "dependant" upon the earnings of his son within the meaning of section 7 (2) (a) of the Act and Schedule I., clause 1 (a) (ii.), because he was able to maintain himself and his family without the assistance of his son's earnings. The learned judge seems to have acted under a misconception as to the law laid down by the House of Lords in Main Colliery Co. v. Davies, [1900] A. C. 358, 48 W. R. Dig. 113. He has adopted as the standard or test of dependency the question whether the applicant alleging to be dependent could support life without the assistance of the deceased, and he thought that a claim based on dependency under such circumstances as the present was negatived if that person could subsist without assistance. The judgment of the House of Lords seems, as I read it, to preclude us from laying down any definite standard by which to test dependency, and certainly the decision of the learned county court judge is clearly contrary to what the noble and learned lords expressed to be their view of the question.

The case must therefore go back to the county court judge to be reconsidered by him and to ascertain the amount of the award the applicant is entitled to.

STIRLING and MATHEW, L.JJ., concurred.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors, Sharpe, Parker, & Co., for Cuthbertson & Powell, Neath; H. P. Becher, for Vaizey Simons, Pontypridd.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. Kekewich, J. — Dec. 5, 6.

In re TIMMIS.
NIXON v. SMITH. (a.)

Trustee—Executor—Merging of executorship in trusteeship—Statutes of Limitations—Real Property Limitation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict c. 57)—Trustee Act, 1888, s. 8 (1) (b)—Property retained by the trustee.

Where the executors of the will of a testator who died in 1857, under which part of the property became divisible in 1873 and the remainder in 1892, were also appointed trustees of the will; in an action by a beneficiary for an account,

Held, that the office of executor had merged in that of trustee, and that, therefore, the Trustee Act, 1888, s. 8, applied, and not the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, s. 8.

Held, also, that the exception to section 8 of the Trustee Act, 1888, excluding from the benefit thereof cases in which the proceeds of the trust property are still retained by the trustee, does not apply to cases in which no moral liability attaches to the trustee.

(a.) Reported by H. CLAUGHTON SCOTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Trial of action.

Peter Timmis by his will dated the 6th of December, 1856, delivered all his lands and hereditaments unto his nephews William Smith and Peter Smith as tenants in common charged with the payment of £400 which he directed should be settled on his niece Ann, the wife of William Pointon, and her children in like manner as his residuary personal estate. And the testator gave all his personal estate and effects unto the said William Smith and Peter Smith upon trust that they should sell and convert into money such part thereof as should not consist of money and should stand possessed thereof and of all moneys produced therefrom upon trust to invest a sufficient portion thereof to produce an annuity of £120 which he directed should be paid to his wife Mary during her life, and as to the remainder of such moneys upon trust as to one equal fourth part thereof to invest the same and stand possessed thereof upon trust during the life of the said Ann Pointon to pay the annual produce thereof to her and after her decease in trust for all and every the children and child of the said Ann Pointon who being a son or sons should attain the age of twenty-one years or being a daughter or daughters should attain that age or marry to be divided between them if more than one in equal shares. And the testator directed that after the decease of his said wife his said trustees should divide the moneys and securities set apart to produce her said annuity equally between the said William Smith, Ann Pointon, Peter Smith, and Mary Smith, the share of the said Ann Pointon to be held in trust in like manner as thereinbefore directed with respect to her other share and portion under that his will. And he appointed the said William Smith and Peter Smith to be executors of that his will.

By a codicil to his will the testator appointed the said Mary Smith to be a trustee and executrix of his said will in conjunction with the said William Smith and Peter Smith and bequeathed the trust estates to them accordingly.

The testator died on the 9th of September, 1857.

The said Mary Timmis (the widow of the testator) died on the 18th of February, 1873, and the said Ann Pointon died on the 18th of November, 1892, leaving eight children who attained the age of twenty-one years or being daughters married, of whom one was the plaintiff in this action.

The defendant William Smith paid to each of the eight children or their representatives the sum of £50, being one-eighth of the sum of £400 charged upon the real estate.

No account of the share of the residuary personal estate of the testator settled upon Ann Pointon and her children had been delivered to the plaintiff, and no payment had been made to her on account thereof. It appeared, however, that the trustees, whose representatives were the defendants in the action, had paid over that share to the said Ann Pointon absolutely.

It also appeared that the said William Smith, Peter Smith, and Mary Smith each received one-fourth part of the residuary personal estate of the testator.

The plaintiff claimed an account of the personal estate of the testator not specifically bequeathed, and of the one-fourth part thereof bequeathed in trust for the said Ann Pointon and her children which came into the hands of the said William Smith, Peter Smith, and Mary Smith, and payment to her of what should appear to be due to her on taking such account.

Warrington, K.C., and W. W. Leuchars, for the defendants.—The real breach of trust was in not having the money ready for distribution at the proper time. If we are right in saying that the defendants are trustees, which we submit they are, then this is an action against trustees to recover money, and the Trustee Act, 1888, applies. The money is due from them as trustees and not as executors; it is not an action for a legacy, but an action for a breach of trust: In re Swain. [1891] 3 Ch. 233, 40 W. R. Dig. 269; In re Jane Davis, 39 W. R. 627, [1891] 3 Ch. 119; In re Page, 41 W. R. 357, [1893] 1 Ch. 304. And if they are trustees it follows that, this being an action to which prior to the year 1888 "no existing Statute of Limitations applied," this action is barred by the Trustee Act, 1888, s. 8.

Renshaw, K.C., and Crossfield, for the plaintiff.—The executorship never merged in the trusteeship and is still subsisting. But even if there was such a merger we submit that we come within the exception to section 8 of the Trustee Act, 1888, at any rate as to three-quarters of the sum claimed. Each trustee on the division of the residuary estate received more than he ought. One-fourth of what each of the defendants took ought to have been paid to the children of Ann Pointon. A trustee is only discharged by a proper payment of the trust funds. This they have not done, but each trustee has retained a portion payable to other cestuis que trustent, and they are therefore excepted from the benefit of the statute. If they remain executors the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, applies, and twelve years not having elapsed the defendants remain liable.

Warrington, in reply.—The trustees have only received the property to which they were beneficially entitled. The money which the plaintiff seeks to recover they paid away. The only claim is for the plaintiff's share, and it cannot, under the circumstances, be said to amount to a claim to property still retained by the trustees. The retainer mentioned in the Trustee Act, 1888, is not the notional retainer used in connection with the taking of a trustee's accounts.

KEKEWICH, J.—There are few things more difficult than to determine when executors cease to have duties as such and become trustees. Occasionally testators are advised to appoint different persons as executors and trustees, and these cases, though they do not present the same difficulties, illustrate and sometimes accentuate them. The duties of an executor are to pay debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and legacies. Supposing one of the debts to be disputed and an action to arise in consequence, the executor retains the property, but does he hold it as executor or as trustee? This will is of the ordinary type. It contains a direction to set apart a sum to provide an annuity for his wife, subject to that to divide the residue amongst certain persons, and on the falling in of the annuity to divide the capital so set apart to provide it. The duty to do that is given to the same persons as are appointed executors. It is obviously, therefore, the ordinary case of executors ceasing at some time or other to be executors and becoming trustees; though in one sense, of course, they never cease to be executors, for they can still be sued as such, but they cease to have any duties to perform virtute officii.

The testator died on the 9th of September, 1857, and the widow entitled to the annuity died on the 18th of February, 1873, and Ann Pointon, who was entitled to an interest for life, died on the 18th of November, 1892. Meanwhile, on the death of the widow the executors had distributed a large part of the estate—there is no evidence to show that they did not distribute the whole estate—and it appears that there was nothing more to distribute.

Were these gentlemen trustees or not? Seeing that the testator died in 1857, and that there was no apparent obstacle to winding up his estate, I think I ought to assume that long before 1892, and, I think, even before the death of the widow, they ceased to be executors and became trustees, and held the funds then in their hands as such, upon the express trusts of the will.

That being so, can I say that they are liable for the share which ought to have gone to Ann Pointon and her children, the whole of which they made over to Ann Pointon absolutely. For this purpose I need only state that the money is not forthcoming, but there is no suggestion of fraud by the trustees or of appropriation to their own use. The action is brought by one of Ann Pointon's children, and is clearly an action within section 8 (1) (b) of the Trustee Act, 1888. The defendants, the representatives of the trustees, claim the benefit of the Statute of Limitations, inasmuch as the right of action accrued in 1892, and the writ in the action was not issued until 1900.

The answer raised to that plea is that the Trustee Act of 1888 is merely remedial, and applies only to cases to which no Statute of Limitations applied before the Act of 1888. They claim that the Act of 1874 applies. If the defendants are sued as executors the case falls within the statute of 1874, and, the statutory period being twelve years, the plaintiff's claim is not barred.

Several cases have been cited to me, but they all proceed on the lines I have pointed out. On the facts proved I think the defendants are sued as trustees, and as such they are therefore entitled to the benefit of the Trustee Act, 1888.

But the plaintiff argues that the case comes within the exception in section 8, which provides that that section is not to apply where "the claim is . . . to recover trust property, or the proceeds thereof still retained by the trustee, or previously received by the trustee and converted to his use . . ."

It seems to me that the Legislature intended, not money for which the trustee has got no proper discharge, but money which he has put into his own pocket or invested in the name of some other person as trustee for himself—money, that is, upon which you can lay your finger. The plaintiff's point is that the defendant has converted this money to his own use. There is nothing to show that all the money that came into the trustees' hands was not distributed. They divided it into four parts and paid one of the four parts to Ann Pointon; and of course that was wrong, and the money is not forthcoming. The three remaining fourth parts were paid to Peter Smith, William Smith, and Mary Smith, the three trustees. Mary Smith was only entitled for life, but after her death it was to go to her children, but, having none, it passed under an appointment in her will, and so I may treat her representative as on the same footing as Peter Smith and William Smith. The plaintiff's argument is that this amounts to an appropriation by trustees for their own use, and is therefore taken out of the statute of 1888.

The answer to that argument is, that it is not a case of a trustee putting into his pocket trust money, so as to defeat the trust, for each of the trustees was entitled to the share paid to him. I think that answer is complete. The object of the statute was to prevent a trustee from reaping any benefit by its provisions if there was anything morally wrong on the part of the trustee. The statute was intended to apply to their relief if they had committed merely a legal wrong. I think that Peter Smith, William Smith, and Mary Smith only received that to which they were entitled. They ought, no doubt, to have paid one-fourth share into a separate account, but they have done nothing morally wrong. I therefore think the Trustee Act, 1888, is applicable to this case, and the plaintiff consequently fails.

Solicitors, Stephens & Stephens, for Sheldon, Plant, & Barclay, Congleton; Hudson, Mathews, & Co., for H. L. Reade, Congleton.

Chan. Div. Joyce, J. } Nov. 22, 29.

WHITE v. HARROW.

HARROW v. MARYLEBONE DISTRICT PROPERTY CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Practice — Injunction — Restraining defendant from prosecuting another action—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 24 (5).

In circumstances under which the court before the Judicature Act, 1873, would have granted an injunction to restrain an action, the court may by section 24 (5), upon a motion, order the proceedings to be stayed.

This was a motion entitled, by order of the judge, in both the above-named actions, for an order to restrain the defendant Harrow until trial or further order from objecting to certain buildings then being erected by the Marylebone District Property Co. on premises adjoining No. 24, High-street, Marylebone, and from claiming any easement of light over the said premises, or alternatively or in addition that all proceedings in the secondly above-mentioned action might be stayed, or that the applicant might be added as a defendant to that action.

By an indenture of lease dated the 20th of September, 1894, certain premises known as No. 24, High-street, Marylebone, were let by the trustees of the Portland Estate to the plaintiff White. The lease contained (inter alia) a covenant in the following words: "The lessee, his executors, administrators, and assigns, will not object to any works to adjoining premises that may be sanctioned by or on behalf of the said trustee or trustees, or other the person or persons for the time being entitled in reversion to the said estates, and will not claim any easement against the said person or persons entitled in reversion as aforesaid in or upon any adjoining or neighbouring premises belonging to the said person or persons by reason of any act or thing done or suffered by any tenant of such adjoining or neighbouring premises, and that notwithstanding any actual or constructive notice of such act or thing to the said person or persons."

By an indenture of underlease dated the 3rd of August, 1899, and made between the plaintiff White and Thomas Harrow, the said premises were demised unto the said Thomas Harrow for the term of twenty-one years.

The said indenture contained a covenant by the underlessee that he would not, without the previous written consent of the lessor, object to any works to adjoining premises which might be sanctioned by or on behalf of the lessor or the superior landlords, and would not claim any easement against the lessor or his superior landlords in, over, or upon any adjoining or neighbouring premises belonging to the lessor or his superior landlords by reason of any act or thing done or suffered by any tenant of such adjoining or neighbouring premises, and that notwithstanding any actual or constructive notice of such act or thing to the lessor or his superior landlords.

The Marylebone District Property Co., of which company the plaintiff White was a director, acquired from the superior landlords a lease of certain ground in Little Marylebone-street, adjoining the said premises No. 24, High-street, Marylebone, and commenced to erect buildings thereon.

The plans of the proposed buildings were submitted by the company to the surveyor of the Portland Estate, who, after introducing certain modifications therein, so as to protect the interests of the defendant Harrow amongst others, gave his sanction to them.

The said Thomas Harrow carried on business at 24, High-street in partnership with Stanley Harrow. Thomas Harrow having retired from the partnership the benefit of the underlease of 1899 was claimed by Stanley Harrow, the defendant in the above-named action, White v. Harrow, who was in possession of the premises.

Stanley Harrow being of opinion that the buildings in course of erection by the company would interfere with his ancient lights, commenced the above-named action of Harrow v. The Marylebone District Property Co, in which he claimed an injunction to restrain the company from erecting upon their premises any building of such a height as to darken, hinder, or obstruct the access of light to the windows of No. 24, High-street. The plaintiff White was not made a party to that action.

The plaintiff White thereupon commenced the above-named action of White v. Harrow, in which he asked (inter alia) that the action of Harrow v. The Company might be stayed.

For the purposes of this motion it was admitted that the buildings proposed to be erected by the company would prove a material obstruction to the defendant Harrow's lights.

Hughes, K.C., and Wace, for the plaintiff White.—Our client is not a party to the action of Harrow v. The Company and cannot raise his objection in that action. Inasmuch as the defendant Harrow is acting as owner of the sub-lease he is liable under the covenant: Mander v. Falcke, [1891] 2 Ch. 554, 39 W. R. Dig. 103. That being so, we are entitled to have the action stayed: Judicature Act, 1873, s. 24. The section is quite plain; the relief is not limited to the parties to the action; any person whether a party to it or not can apply. If necessary we ask leave to amend by entitling this motion in the action of Harrow v. The Company as well as in White v. Harrow.

Younger, K.C, and Edward Ford, for the defendant Harrow.—Before the Judicature Act, 1873, the action White v. Harrow might, perhaps, have been maintained. There is no way now by which we can be compelled to add White as a defendant in Harrow v. The Company. Moreover, the covenant does not enable the lessors to take away anything expressly demised. Such a construction is impossible. It would enable the lessor to pull down a building on his estate even though by doing so he might let down our building. The covenant must be construed most strongly against the lessor, especially when, as here, there is a covenant for quiet enjoyment: Liech v. Schweder, 22 W. R. 633, 9 Ch. App. 463. If the plaintiff's view is correct the second part of the covenant as to acquiring an easement is unnecessary.

JOYCE, J., directed the motion to stand for a week, the notice of motion to be amended by entitling it in the action of Harrow v. The Company as well as in the action of White v. Harrow.

Nov. 29.—JOYCE, J.—This is a curious case. The lessee of No. 24, High-street, Marylebone, commenced an action on the 31st of October against the Marylebone District Property Co. in order to restrain them from causing an injury to his right of light. For the purposes of this motion it was admitted that the proposed building would interfere, to some extent at least, with his light, but I am not at all sure that the interference can be of a serious nature. It then appeared that the plaintiff in that action held by an underlease from White containing the covenant in question. No doubt the covenant is not quite happily expressed. For the defendant it is urged that the covenant operates as a derogation from the grant. I do not see it in that way. It was rather a limitation of the grant, and the covenant for quiet enjoyment does not affect it.

(a.) Reported by H. CLAUGHTON SCOTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

That being so, how would the case have stood before the Judicature Act? To institute an action to restrain works is to "object" to them in a very forcible manner. Before the Act the plaintiff would have been entitled to an injunction to restrain the action, and that being so, having regard to the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 24 (5), I think the plaintiff is entitled to have the proceedings in the action of Harrow v. The Marylebone District Property Co. stayed, but the costs to be paid by the defendant shall be limited to such as he would have had to pay if the motion had been only in that action.

Solicitors, Samuel Lithgow; Cooper & Bake.

Chan. Div.
Wright, J.
Nov. 30.

In re LONDON AND NORTHERN BANK.
ARCHER'S CASE. (a.)

Company—Winding up—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 115—Refusal of witness to answer at private examination—Evidence required for purposes of action brought by company.

An ex-officer of a company in liquidation is bound, on an examination under section 115 of the Companies Act, 1862, to answer questions relating to documents belonging to the company which it was alleged he had handed over to the defendant in an action for libel brought by the company, even although the information sought was required merely for the purposes of such libel action.

A bank registered under the Companies Acts, shortly before passing resolutions for voluntarily winding up, had commenced a libel action against a newspaper. An ex-manager of the bank had, in that action, handed over to the solicitors for the newspaper a letter belonging to the bank.

The liquidator obtained an order in the winding up for the private examination of the ex-manager under section 115 of the Companies Act, 1862, and in the course of such examination the ex-manager refused to answer questions with regard to other documents belonging to the bank which it was alleged he had parted with without the bank's authority. The matter was referred to the court by the registrar before whom the examination took place.

Tindal Atkinson, K.C., and F. Cooper Willis, for the liquidator.

Muir Mackenzie and Montague Lush, for the witness, relied on In re North Australian Territory Co., 38 W. R. 561, 45 Ch. D. 87, and argued that the answers were really required for the purposes of the libel action.

WRIGHT, J., said that in the case of In re North Australian Territory Co. the witness was examined under section 115 as a "person whom the court might deem capable of giving information concerning the trade, &c., of the company"; in the present case the witness was an officer of the company. These documents formed part of the assets of the bank and the liquidator was entitled to know what had been done with them; even if the sole ground of the application had been to obtain evidence in the libel action, the bank surely was entitled to use its own documents in deciding whether it had a good cause of action. The witness must answer what documents of the bank he had had in his possession and what had become of them, and there must be an order on him to attend at his own expense and be further examined.

Solicitors, Helder, Roberts, Walton, & Thomas, for Simpson & Simpson, Leeds; G. H. Hoyle.

(a.) Reported by L. W. BYRNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Darling and Channell, JJ.)
Nov. 20, 21.

CRABTREE (Appellant) v. THE FERN SPINNING CO. (LIMITED) (Respondents). (a.)

Factory—Master and servant—Self-acting machine—Safety—Employment of "young person"—Factory and Workshop Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 37), s. 9, sub-section 2.

Section 9, sub-section 2, of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, provides that "a person employed in a factory shall not be allowed to be in the space between the fixed and traversing portions of a self-acting machine unless the machine is stopped, with the traversing portion on the outward run. . . ."

A boy, a "young person" within the meaning of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, was employed in a factory by a man who was in the employment of the respondents, the occupiers of the factory, and who was in charge of a self-acting machine. This man ordered the boy to clean a certain part of the machine, and in order to do so the boy was obliged to be in the space between the fixed and the traversing portions of the machine. At the time the order was given the traversing portion of the machine was stopped on the outward run. While the boy was still in the said space the man in charge, thinking the boy was clear of such space, re-started the machine, whereby the boy received injuries from which he died.

Held, that, as the man when he re-started the machine thought that the boy was clear of the space, the boy was not at the time of the accident "allowed" to be within the space by the occupiers of the factory or by any person for whom they were responsible.

The court could not interpret the words "shall not be allowed" in sub-section 2 of section 9 as meaning "shall be prevented."

Case stated.

This was an appeal by the plaintiff, an inspector of factories and workshops, from a decision of justices of Oldham.

An information was preferred by the appellant against the respondents, under sub-section 2 of section 9 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, which was as follows: The information and complaint of John Henry Crabtree, one of his Majesty's inspectors of factories and workshops, Home Office, who saith that on the 10th of May, 1901, at Shaw, in Lancashire, the Fern Spinning Co. (Limited) were then and there the occupiers of a certain factory, the same being a factory within the true intent and meaning of the Factory and Workshop Acts, 1878 to 1895, wherein, on the said 10th of May as aforesaid, a person, to wit, William Ralph, was allowed, contrary to the said Acts, to be in the space between the fixed and traversing portions of a self-acting machine, the said machine not being stopped, with the traversing portion on the outward run, whereby the said Fern Spinning Co. (Limited) are liable to a penalty not exceeding £3.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The following facts were proved or admitted: The appellant was his Majesty's inspector of factories for the Oldham district. The respondents were the occupiers of a factory at Shaw, in Lancashire, on the 10th of May, 1901, the same being a factory within the true intent and meaning of the Factory and Workshop Acts, 1878 to 1895. William Ralph was, on the said 10th of May, 1901, in employment at the said factory as a little piecer, and was a young person within the meaning of the Factory and Workshop Acts, 1878 to 1895. The said William Ralph was so employed by one John Oliver Driesen, who was then in the employ of the respondents, and in charge of a self-acting machine, and on the said 10th of May, 1901, was ordered by him, the said John Oliver Driesen, to clean the scavenger cloth, hung under the roller beam of the said machine for the purpose of cleaning the top of the carriage as the said carriage passes under the said cloth. In order to do so the said William Ralph was obliged to be in the space between the fixed and traversing portions of the said self-acting machine, and was, at the time of the accident, at a distance of sixteen yards or thereabouts from the starting-handle of the said machine, where the said John Oliver Driesen was stationed. At the time the said order was given the traversing portion of the said self-acting machine was stopped, with the traversing portion thereof on the outward run. While the said William Ralph was still in the space between the fixed and traversing portions of the said self-acting machine, and while cotton threads were stretched over the said space, the said John Oliver Driesen, thinking the said William Ralph was clear of the said space, started the said machine. The said William Ralph was in consequence caught between the carriage, which is the traversing portion of the said machine, on the inward run and the spring piece, which is a part of the fixed portion of the said machine. The said John Oliver Driesen, finding that something prevented the said carriage from running in up to its full extent, stopped the said carriage on its next outward run and saw the said William Ralph fall down between the said spring piece and the said carriage. The said William Ralph had received injuries from which he shortly afterwards died. The carriage of the self-acting machine passes about 4in. underneath and about 10in. beyond the roller beam. The space traversed by the carriage on each run is about 64in. from the front stop to the spring piece, against which the said William Ralph was crushed. The said carriage on the inward run traverses the 64in. in about two seconds. While on the outward run it moves comparatively slowly, traversing the same space in about ten to twelve seconds. There were no regulations or instructions in the said factory whereby persons employed in the space between the fixed and traversing portions of a self-acting machine as aforesaid should report themselves when they had left such space.

It was contended by the appellant at the hearing before the justices that the respondents had allowed the said William Ralph to be in such space contrary to the provisions of section 9, sub-section 2, of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, and the case of Prior v. Slaithwaite Spinning Co. (Limited), 46 W. R. 488, [1898] 1 Q. B. 881, was referred to. It was contended on behalf of the respondents that they had taken adequate precautions to prevent the said William Ralph from being in such space as aforesaid. The justices dismissed the information, on the ground that the respondents were not responsible for the said William Ralph being in such space as aforesaid, and were of opinion that the said John Oliver Driesen improperly started the machine and was responsible for doing so.

The inspector appealed.

Section 9, sub-section 2, of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, is as follows: "A person employed in a factory shall not be allowed to be in the space between the fixed and traversing portions of a self-acting machine unless the machine is stopped, with the traversing portion on the outward run, but for the purpose of this provision the space in front of a self-acting machine shall not be included in the space aforesaid."

H. Sutton (Sir R. B. Finlay, A.G., with him), for the appellant.—The magistrates did wrong in dismissing the information. They should have convicted the respondents under section 9, sub-section 2, of the Factory Act, 1895, or have punished the respondents' servant under the provisions of section 87 of the Factory Act, 1878. Although the boy was lawfully allowed to go into the space behind the machine while the machine was stationary, the moment the machine was re-started he was unlawfully allowed to be there. The words "shall not allow" should be construed as meaning "shall prevent."

R. B. D. Acland, for the respondents.—No offence had been committed under the statute; at the time the accident happened the respondents' servant thought that the boy was clear of the machine; he could not, therefore, be said to have allowed the boy to remain in the space while the machine was not stationary. The words "shall not allow" cannot possibly be construed as meaning "shall prevent"; that would amount to striking out the word "allow" altogether.

Sir R. B. Finlay, A.G., replied.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—This case is, in my opinion, one of considerable difficulty, but upon the whole I think the magistrates were right and that we ought not to send the case back to them.

By section 9, sub-section 2, of the Factories and Workshop Act, 1895, a person employed in a factory shall not be allowed to be in the space between the fixed and the traversing portions of a self-acting machine unless the machine is stopped with the traversing portion on the outward run; that is to say, he shall only go in when the machine is stopped in a given position.

The words which have created considerable difficulty in my mind are those at the end of sub-section 3—namely, "any person allowed to be in the space aforesaid shall be deemed to be employed contrary to the provisions of the Act." Sections 83 and 87 of the Act of 1878 are also material. Section 83 provides that the occupier of a factory can be summoned in the event of a person being employed contrary to the Act; and section 87 provides that when the occupier is charged with the offence, and he alleges that there is an actual offender who has caused or committed the offence, he may bring him before the court, and if he shows that the offence was committed without his knowledge, consent, or connivance the other person may be dealt with, and it is also provided that the inspector may, of his own initiative, bring the actual offender before the court if he has reason to think the occupier had nothing to do with the matter and had taken proper steps to avoid the accident.

In this case the magistrates have found that the boy was let in, or went in, when the machine was stopped upon the outward run, and that the accident occurred owing to the man in charge of the machine starting the engine, he thinking that the boy had got clear of the space.

In my opinion if there had been a negligent allowance by any person, servant, or employee of the occupier, primâ facie there would have been an offence within sub-section 2; the offence, in my opinion, is not confined to an act that the occupier has himself allowed, but includes an allowance by a servant or agent of the occupier, otherwise no proper effect could be given to the words in sub-section 3, "a person allowed to be in the space shall be deemed to be employed contrary to the provisions of the Act."

If I had come to the conclusion that there was any evidence that the man in charge of the engine had allowed the boy to be in the space after the machine had been re-started I should have thought that the magistrates ought, if they had decided to acquit the occupiers, to have dealt with the matter under section 87 of the Act of 1878. The case, however, finds that the man in charge of the engine, when he re-started it, thought the boy was clear of the space; in other words, that he did not intentionally or negligently allow the boy to be within the space. The Factory Acts ought to be construed strictly in the interests of human life and limb, but they do not purport to deal with cases of negligence which are inconsistent with a previous breach of the statute. I therefore come to the conclusion that the accident was occasioned by the man starting the engine under the belief that the boy was not in the space, and that being so the boy was not allowed to be within the space by the occupiers of the factory or by any person for whom they were responsible.

I only wish to add that any evidence of allowance by an agent of the occupier, whether negligent or not, or whether intentional or not, would in my opinion create a primâ facie case which would have to be dealt with under section 87 of the Act of 1878. In this case, upon the findings, I think that the magistrates were right, and that their decision ought to be affirmed.

DARLING, J.—I am of the same opinion. It seems to me that the case for the appellant can only be logically put upon the ground on which Mr. Sutton put it—namely, that the words "shall not allow" must be construed as meaning "shall prevent." He went this length, that if the master allowed the boy to get into the space when the engine was stopped, and then the boy himself started the engine and was injured, nevertheless the master was liable under this statute because he did not prevent the boy from starting the engine. I cannot, however, bring myself to think that that is what the statute meant. I think that if the Legislature had meant anything of the kind they would have made use of the words "shall prevent," and not the words "shall not allow."

It seems to me that a man cannot be said to allow that of which he is unaware or which is something he cannot prevent. In the present case the respondents allowed the boy to go into the space behind the machine and to be there while the machine was stationary. That they were perfectly justified in doing. Then their servant negligently, as I assume, having forgotten that the boy was there, started the machine. The respondents only allowed one thing—namely, the boy's presence in the space while the machine was stationary. It is true that they did not prevent the boy from being there after the machine was started, but to this the statute does not apply. They did not prevent the negligence of their servant, but they did not allow it; they merely failed to foresee it, and doing so, to forbid the boy to remain in the space. I do not think their servant "allowed" the boy to remain in the space after the machine was started, because he did not remember that the boy was there. I think it would be straining the words of the statute beyond what the Legislature could have intended to hold that the words "shall not allow" mean "shall absolutely prevent."

CHANNELL, J.—I agree. I base my decision entirely upon the finding that the respondents' servant, when he re-started the machine, thought the boy was clear of the space behind it. I do not think that it is necessary to say whether or not in some places in these Factory Acts it may be right to read the words "shall not allow" as meaning "shall prevent," or as meaning that reasonable care shall be taken to prevent. That may be so; but applying the words of sub-section 2 to the facts that are found, it seems to me quite impossible to say that the respondents' servant allowed the boy to be in the space where he believed him not to be. The very foundation of the complaint is that he, possibly wrongly, thought that the boy had gone away when he had not done so. If he did in fact, however wrongly, think that the boy had gone away, it seems to me quite impossible to say that he allowed him to be there. Consequently, having regard to that finding, it seems to me that there is no evidence upon which we could possibly say that the magistrates could have held that anybody allowed the boy to be in the space at the time of the accident.

I quite agree with what my lord has said about the master and the servant and their liability. The decision of the magistrates must therefore be affirmed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the appellant, Solicitor to the Treasury.

Solicitors for the respondents, Chester & Co.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Darling and Channell, JJ.) — Nov. 12.

SOAMES v. NICHOLSON AND WIFE. (a.)

Landlord and tenant—Lease—"Subject to a three months' notice on either side at any time to terminate this agreement"—Such notice given between dates when rent was payable—Validity.

By an agreement of tenancy dated the 15th of May, 1895, the plaintiff let to the defendants certain licensed premises "from the 1st day of May, 1895, at a yearly rent of £40, payable every three months in advance if required, on the 1st day of May, the 1st day of August, the 1st day of November, and the 1st day of February in each year, the first payment being due and payable on the 1st day of May, subject to three months' notice on either side at any time to terminate this agreement."

Notice to quit was given on the 24th of January, 1901, in the following terms: "I hereby give you three months' notice and require you to quit and deliver up to me or my assigns on the 25th of April, 1901, all that messuage, &c."

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Held, that the notice was good under the terms of the agreement, and that it was not necessary for the validity of the notice that it should be a notice to terminate the tenancy on one of the quarter days named.

Appeal by the plaintiff from a decision of his Honour Sir Horatio Lloyd, sitting at the Wrexham County Court.

The action was brought by F. W. Soames, trading as F. W. Soames & Co., a brewer, at Wrexham, against the defendants, who were tenants of a public-house in Church-road, Southsea, Bereham, Denbighshire, and the question was whether a notice given by the plaintiff to the defendants to quit the said licensed premises were valid or not.

The agreement of tenancy was from the 1st of May, 1895, "at the yearly rental of £40, payable by equal payments every three months in advance if required, on the 1st day of May, the 1st day of August, the 1st day of November, and the 1st day of February in each year, the first payment being due and payable on the 1st day of May, subject to three months' notice on either side at any time to terminate the agreement."

The plaintiff gave notice in writing to the defendants to quit on the 24th of January, 1901, and to deliver up to him or his assigns the premises on the 25th of April.

For the defendant the point was taken that the notice was bad, as to be valid it must end on one of the quarter days mentioned in the agreement when rent was payable. The county court judge held that the notice was not sufficiently clear and explicit as an express stipulation for a notice expiring at any time, and he accordingly entered judgment for the defendants.

The plaintiff thereupon appealed on the ground that the learned judge was wrong in law in deciding that the notice to quit the premises on the 25th of April, 1901, was invalid.

Bryn Roberts, for the plaintiff.—The landlord is entitled to determine the agreement by giving three months' notice at any time. In the lease the words "at any time" are much more explicit than were the words in Kemp v. Derrett, 3 Camp. 510, where the tenant was "always to be subject to quit at three months' notice," and are indistinguishable from the words used in Bridges v. Potts, 17 C. B. N. S. 314, 33 L. J. C. P. 338. Where in an agreement for a lease of iron mines for twenty-one years it was agreed that the lessee was to be at liberty at "any time thereafter to terminate the agreement for lease" by giving six months' notice of his intention to do so: see also Doe d. King v. Grafton, 18 Q. B. 496, 21 L. J. Q. B. 276, 16 Jur. 833.

Ellis Griffiths and Samuel Moss, for the defendant.—We submit that on the true construction of the clause in this agreement the notice is bad. It expressly gives the dates upon which rent is payable and says the tenancy may be terminated by either party giving three months' notice. But there are no words that point to such a notice expiring at any time other than on one of the days upon which rent is payable. The learned judge based his decision on Kemp v. Derrett, and his decision ought to be supported.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—In this case the learned county court judge has decided that a notice to quit on the 25th of April, 1901, given to the tenant by the landlord on the 24th of January, 1901, was a bad notice, because it did not expire on one of the quarter days on which rent was payable. The lease expressly states that rent is to be payable on the 1st of May, the 1st of August, the 1st of November, and the 1st of February in each year. There is no magic in these particular days, they are not recognized as quarter days in Denbighshire, at any rate no argument has been addressed to us to show that in that part of the country they were customary quarter days upon which tenancies usually changed, and therefore we have not to consider what effect evidence of such a custom might have on the minds of the parties. All we have to do is to construe the plain words of the contract itself. It seems to me that we ought to give the words "subject to a three months' notice on either side at any time to terminate this agreement" their ordinary natural meaning, and read in that light the notice must be considered a good notice. There are, no doubt, cases where the court might come to the conclusion looking at the other clauses in an agreement and the surrounding circumstances, that it was only intended to be a three months' notice which should expire either at the date when the tenancy commenced or upon any usual or customary quarter day; but in this case we think the fair deduction from the authorities is that where there is no express stipulation, which proves or from which it can be implied that a yearly tenancy is created—if the parties had contracted that a tenant might quit or be dispossessed at the end of any given notice, there is no reason why they should not contract upon those terms, and if that appears to be the natural meaning of the words effect should not be given to them.

In this case we have not been told of any particular reason why the tenancy should be determined on one of the four days that are mentioned as days when rent became due and payable.

I think, therefore, we ought clearly to come to the conclusion that this was a tenancy to let at so much a year subject to three months' notice to determine it given by either side at any time.

The county court judge ought, therefore, in my opinion, to have held that the agreement was subject to such a notice as I have just indicated. The notice to quit on the 25th of April, 1901, is therefore a valid notice, and this appeal succeeds.

DARLING, J.—I concur.

CHANNELL, J.—I also agree that this appeal must be allowed. I only desire to say that in my opinion it seems quite impossible to give any meaning to the words "at any time" except that which this court has arrived at.

Solicitors, Rooke & Son, for W. Wynn-Evans, Wrexham; Busk & Co., for S. P. Bevon, Wrexham.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Darling and Channell, JJ.) — Nov. 8.

GOODRICH v. TOWN CLERK OF GRIMSBY. (a.)

Election law—Registration—Parliamentary franchise—Misdescription in list—Declaration for correcting—Power of revising barrister to amend—Parliamentary and Municipal Registration Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 26), s. 24.

Where a voter has made a statutory declaration under section 24 of the Parliamentary and Municipal Registration Act, 1878, in order to correct an erroneous description on the list of voters of the nature of his qualification and the description of his qualifying premises, the revising barrister ought to amend the list by making the necessary corrections.

Foskett v. Kaufman, 34 W. R. 90, 16 Q. B. D. 279, applied.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Lord v. Fox, [1892] 1 Q. B. 199, 40 W. R. Dig. 165, distinguished.

Case stated by the revising barrister appointed to revise the list of voters for the borough of Great Grimsby.

On the 24th of September, 1901, the name of Robert Mitchell was duly objected to. The said name appeared on the overseers' list of "occupiers," division 1, for a "dwelling-house" at 84, Watkin-street, and the objection was that he had not occupied the said premises for the full twelve months prior to the 15th of July last. The objection was admitted to be good and was held so by the revising barrister, and the name was expunged from the list. A "statutory declaration for correcting misdescription in list" had been duly filed with the town clerk prior to the 5th of September, of which the following is a copy:

"Declaration for correcting misdescription in list.

"I, Robert Mitchell, of No. 84, Watkin-street, in the parish of Great Grimsby, in the Parliamentary borough of Great Grimsby, and in the municipal borough of Great Grimsby, do solemnly and sincerely declare as follows:

"(1) I am the person referred to in Division 1, in North-West Ward (Polling-station No. 1) of the occupiers' list of Parliamentary electors and burgesses made out for the parish of Great Grimsby by an entry as follows:

Name as described in List.	Place of abode as described in List.	Nature of Qualification as described in List.	Description of Qualifying Property.
Mitchell, Robert.	84, Watkin-street.	Dwelling-house.	84, Watkin-street.

"(2) My correct name and place of abode and the correct particulars respecting my qualification are and ought to be stated for the purposes of the register of parliamentary electors and burgesses for the parish of Great Grimsby as follows:—

Correct Name.	Correct Place of Abode.	Correct Nature of Qualification.	Correct Description of Qualifying Property.
Mitchell, Robert.	Scartho.	Yard and Stables.	Back of 84, Watkin-street.

"Dated this 30th day of August, 1901.

"(Signed) R. MITCHELL.

"Made and subscribed before me this 30th day of August, 1901.

"J. FLETCHER, justice of the peace for the borough of Great Grimsby."

It was proved to the revising barrister's satisfaction that the said Robert Mitchell had for the whole of the twelve months prior to the 15th of July last occupied the yard and stables mentioned in the declaration adjoining the dwelling-house in question, which "yard and stables" were of the requisite value; and it was submitted that the revising barrister ought to correct the list according to the suggested amendment in the declaration, and substitute "yard and stables" for the former qualification of "dwelling-house."

The revising barrister, however, was of opinion that in the circumstances of this particular case the declaration could not be treated as the correction of a "misdescription," or that it dispensed with the necessity for a formal claim with its incidents of timely notices to overseer, publication and possible challenge.

He accordingly held the declaration to be insufficient, refused to accept it as a correction of the former qualification, and expunged the name of Robert Mitchell from the list of occupation voters.

From this decision R. Mitchell, by his authorized agent, appealed.

Percival Hughes, for the appellant.—The declaration made by Mitchell was made by virtue of section 24 of the Parliamentary and Municipal Registration Act, 1878, and in the form given as "Form M" in the schedule to that Act. Section 24 provides that "any person who is entered on any list of voters for a Parliamentary borough . . . and whose name or place of abode or the nature of whose qualification or the name or situation of whose qualifying property is not correctly stated in such list, or in respect of whom there is any other error or omission in the said list, may, whether he has received a notice of objection or not, if he thinks fit, make and subscribe a declaration in the form in that behalf in the schedule to this Act." The section further provides that the revising barrister shall receive the declaration as evidence of the facts declared to, and that the declaration shall be open free of charge to public inspection. The declaration here was quite sufficient and the revising barrister ought to have corrected the list and substituted "yard and stables" for the former qualification of "dwelling-house." In Foskett v. Kaufman, 34 W. R. 90, 16 Q. B. D. 279, the point raised in the present case was not decided, as in that case no declaration had been made, but it clearly appears from the judgment of Lord Esher, M.R. (34 W. R., at p. 92), that where there is a declaration the revising barrister has power to amend. The judgment of the court in the case of Plant v. Potts, [1891] 1 Q. B. 256, 39 W. R. Dig. 142, supports this view. As no one appears for the respondent it is perhaps right that the attention of the court should be called to the case of Lord v. Fox, [1892] 1 Q. B. 199, 40 W. R. Dig. 165.

The respondent did not appear.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J. — We are of opinion that this appeal ought to be allowed. The nature of the appellant's qualification was erroneously stated in the overseers' list as "dwelling-house" instead of "yard and stables." I think that the Court of Appeal have decided that the effect of a declaration made by virtue of section 24 of the Registration Act, 1878, is to give the revising barrister power to make corrections which he could not otherwise make. It should be noted that these declarations when made are exhibited and open to public inspection free of charge. In the case of Foskett v. Kaufman there was no declaration, and for that reason the Court of Appeal held that it was necessary to affirm the decision of the Divisional Court.

Lord Esher, M.R., there says, referring to a statutory declaration: "If the voter acts under section 24 of 41 & 42 Vict. c. 26, then the reason for taking away this power of the revising barrister does not apply, because this declaration must be sent to the clerk of the peace or town clerk, as the case may be, by a certain date, and the objector has the power of seeing that declaration and the opportunity of inquiring whether the new claim and the declaration in support of it are true or not, so that he is not taken by surprise at the hearing; and there is a very good reason why the limitation of the revising barrister's power should not take effect in that case." The particular point raised in the present case has, therefore, been decided by the Court of Appeal. Our attention has very properly been called to the case of Lord v. Fox, where Lord Coleridge, L.C.J., referred to sub-section 13 of section 28 of the same Act, which says: "Nor shall the revising barrister be at liberty to change the description of the qualification as it appears in any list, except for the purpose of more clearly and accurately defining the same"; and he expressed his opinion that where the effect of amending would be to change the description of the qualification by making it applicable to a list to which it did not apply, the revising barrister had no power of amendment.

If that is an authority against anything I have said in this case then I think it is inconsistent with the case of Foskett v. Kaufman, by which we are bound. But it is important to observe that in Lord v. Fox the point of there being a declaration was not pressed upon the attention of the court.

DARLING, J.—I agree.

CHANNELL, J.—I also agree. We express no opinion whether the amendment could have been made if there had been no declaration; but when a declaration can be made under section 24 of the Act of 1878 it has the effect of enlarging the revising barrister's power of amendment, and he ought to amend the list in accordance with the declaration.

Where an amendment cannot in the ordinary course be made without making a new claim, and the time for doing so has passed, the voter is allowed to correct the omission on condition that he makes a statutory declaration. That view is supported by Foskett v. Kaufman and Plant v. Potts, although it is true that the expressions of the learned judges are only dicta, for there was no declaration in either of those cases. Lord v. Fox is the only case in which there was a declaration. That case was only argued on one side, and nothing was said by the court about the effect of the declaration. Consequently that case does not stand in the way of our decision.

Appeal allowed, with costs.

Solicitors for the appellant, Routh, Stacey, & Castle, for Henry Thompson & Sons, Grantham.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Darling and Channell, JJ.) Nov. 8.

HALL v. MICHELMORE. (a.)

Election law—Registration—Parliamentary franchise—Household qualification—Inhabitant occupier as owner or tenant—Wife owner of house—Husband breadwinner—Representation of the People Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 102), s. 3.

A man who lives with his wife in a house of which she is the sole and separate owner, her name appearing on the rate-book as the owner and his name as the occupier, the rates and all expenses of maintaining the house and household being paid by the husband, is not, in the absence of any evidence of a tenancy, entitled to be registered as a voter under section 3 sub-section 2, of the Representation of the People Act, 1867.

Case stated by the revising barrister appointed to revise the list of voters for the Torquay division of the county of Devon.

George William Prideaux Laskey duly objected to the name of the appellant, John Hall, of 13, Laburnum-street, Torquay, being retained in the occupiers' list (division 1) of the voters of the said county.

It was proved or admitted before the revising barrister that the appellant resided with his wife in a house of which the latter was the sole and separate owner, the wife's name appearing on the rate-book as the owner, the appellant's name as the occupier, of the said house. The appellant was the breadwinner, the furniture in the house belonged to him, the rates and all expenses of maintaining the house and household were paid by him, the wife having no means of support save and except the value of her ownership in the said house. No agreement of tenancy had been entered into between the appellant and his said wife, nor had any rent at any time been paid by him to her in respect of the said premises.

The names of forty-seven other persons, being either voters already upon the said list, or claimants to be inserted therein, whose names and descriptions were set out in the schedule attached to the case stated, were objected to under similar circumstances.

The revising barrister decided upon the above facts that there was no evidence that the appellant occupied the qualifying premises as owner or tenant, and that therefore he was not entitled to remain upon the list of voters in respect of the qualification of inhabitant occupier of a dwelling-house; and the revising barrister accordingly expunged the names of the appellant and of forty-five of the said forty-seven other persons from the said list, and disallowed the claims of the other two of such forty-seven said persons.

Due notice of appeal from this decision was given, and the revising barrister ordered the appeal in all the before-mentioned cases to be consolidated.

Percival Hughes, for the appellant.—The question here is whether the husband, the appellant, comes within section 3 (2) of the Representation of the People Act, 1867. That sub-section provides that a person is qualified to vote who has on the 31st of July in any year been an inhabitant occupier, as owner or tenant, of any dwelling-house during the preceding twelve months. No question of rating arises here as the appellant is on the rate-book, and in that respect this case differs from others. Where the husband supports the family and pays the rates this court should presume a tenancy. A tenancy at will during the qualifying period is sufficient to give a right to a vote. In Loveridge v. Gardom, Smith's Reg. Cas. 186, there are reported two cases, Gillo's case and Matthews' case. The present case differs from Gillo's case. In that case the claimant occupied with his wife and family a house of which his mother was owner and in respect of which she was entered in the rate-book as being the occupying owner. In that respect the present case differs from Gillo's case. In Matthews' case the son after the death of his father continued to live with his mother and his wife and family in a house of which his father had been tenant to the landlord, but in respect of which the mother's name had been and remained on the rate-book. The son paid the rent to the landlord and the rates and taxes and maintained the household out of his earnings, but his name was not substituted for his father's on the rent book. Held, that there was evidence to support the revising barrister's decision that the son occupied as tenant; and that he was entitled to a vote.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The respondent did not appear.

Lord ALVERSTONE L.C.J.—We do not think it is possible to reverse the revising barrister's decision. It seems to me that the case is a fortiori as compared with the facts in Gillo's case. In that case Lord Russell of Kilowen, L.C.J., and my brothers Grantham and Wright, JJ., decided that where a son was living with his mother and was the bread winner and there was no evidence of a tenancy, or facts from which a tenancy could be presumed, there was no proper qualification. In Matthews' case, where the claimant was occupying a house, there being a third person—namely, the landlord, the revising barrister came to the conclusion that the claimant's occupation could only be justified on the basis of some tenancy, and that there was evidence from which he could infer a tenancy.

In the present case the house is the property of the appellant's wife, and the appellant lives there with her. No agreement of tenancy had been entered into between them, nor had rent at any time been paid by the appellant to his wife in respect of the premises. On these facts it would be quite impossible for us to overrule the revising barrister's decision—viz., that there were no facts sufficient to justify him in holding that the appellant was an inhabitant occupier of a dwelling-house as owner or tenant. Therefore the appeal must be dismissed.

DARLING, J.—I am of the same opinion.

CHANNELL, J.—I am also of the same opinion. I should think there may be cases where, without any rent being paid, or without any express agreement being entered into, you have to account for the occupation of a person whom you find on the premises, and you may then infer that the person occupies as tenant at will in some way or other; but nothing of that sort arises when you can account for the occupation. In the present case you can account for the occupation. The appellant occupies the house, and is living there with his wife, because she is the owner of it. These circumstances absolutely negative any inference which might have arisen otherwise on account of your not being able to account for his presence there without holding that he was a tenant at will.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for appellant, Brooks, Jenkins, & Co.

K. B. Div.
(Kennedy and Phillimore, JJ.) } May 9, 10, 1901.

In re THE SURREY COUNTY CRICKET CLUB. (a.)

Revenue—Corporation—Duty—Real property—Cricket ground—Principle of assessment—"Annual value"—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 51), s. 11.

The Surrey County Cricket Club, an unincorporated body, were lessees of the Kennington Oval Cricket Ground. Parts of the property comprised in the lease were underlet by the club, but the rest was in their possession. The club had also certain investments of stock from which they received income. The other receipts of the club were members' subscriptions, gate-moneys, and other payments received from the public for viewing cricket and other matches played on the ground.

Held, that the gate-money and other payments received from the public are not "annual value, income, or profits of the property" within section 11 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1885, and that, for the purposes of assessment to duty under section 11, the "annual value" of the real property of the club should be ascertained on the basis of assessments to income tax under Schedule A of the Income Tax Act, 1842, subject to deductions for repairs and ground-rent; and, further, that in respect of income derived from stocks, the club should be assessed under Schedule C, and in respect of their income from land under Schedule B.

In this case a petition by way of appeal was presented by Charles William Alcock, of the Surrey Cricket Club, Kennington Oval, in the county of London, the secretary of the Surrey County Cricket Club, for and on behalf of the said club.

The petition was against an assessment of duty under Part II. of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1885, made by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue on property of the Surrey County Cricket Club.

The Surrey County Cricket Club is an unincorporated body, and is governed by rules, to a printed copy of which the appellant craves leave to refer.

The club is lessee of the ground known as the Kennington Oval at a rent of £750 per annum (the lessee paying all rates and taxes). Certain parts of the property comprised in the said lease are underlet by the club, and the rents received on these underlettings are stated in the revenue account hereinafter set forth under the head of "Rents received." The rest of the ground is in hand and in possession of the club. The club has also certain investments of stocks the income of which appears in the said revenue account.

The only other receipts of the club are (first) the subscriptions and entrance fees paid by members of the club, and (secondly) gate-moneys and other payments received from the public for viewing the cricket and other matches played from time to time on the ground.

Except as hereinbefore stated the club has no property real or personal.

The following is a copy of the revenue account of the club for the year ended the 31st of December, 1898, as printed and issued to the members. [The revenue account of the club for the year ending the 31st of December, 1898, was here set out. It showed a surplus balance of receipts over expenses of £3,735 3s. 7d.]

Having been furnished with the said revenue account the Commissioners of Inland Revenue assessed the duty payable by the club under Part II of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1885, in respect of property belonging to the club during the year ending the 5th of April, 1900, at £102 18s. 6d., being 5 per cent. on £2,058 9s. 1d. The petitioner submitted that this sum of £2,058 9s. 1d. was very largely in excess of the amount in respect of which the club is properly chargeable with duty. The said commissioners by notice of charge dated the 11th of May, 1900, demanded payment of the said sum of £102 18s. 6d.

The commissioners together with the said notice of charge forwarded an account showing in detail how the assessment so made by them was arrived at. The following is a copy of the account so made out by the commissioners:—

(a.) Reported by R. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

CORPORATION DUTY, 1899-1900.—SURREY COUNTY CRICKET CLUB.

Receipts.

	£	s.	d.
Rent of the Surrey Tavern	300	0	0
„ One and All Cricket Club ...	28	0	0
„ Surrey Bicycle Club	25	0	0
„ South London Harriers... ...	20	0	0
„ Printers	157	10	0
Stands	1,129	14	6
Gate-money	6,325	18	0
	7,986	2	6
Interest on Investments ... £151 18 2
Deposit Interest ... ... Nil
	151	18	2
Gross Assessable Income ...	£8 138	0	8

Expenditure.

	£	s.	d.
Match Expenses, as per account for year ended 31st December, 1898	3,650	4	1
General Expenses—
Secretary's Salary	400	0	0
Clerks	107	1	4
Office Wages	35	3	9
Cricket Instructor's Salary	150	0	0
Printing and Stationery	290	5	1
Postages and Telegrams	76	11	6
Law Costs	30	14	11
Accountants	169	4	0
Telephone	22	0	0
Sundries	67	4	10
Ground Expenses, as per account for year ended 31st December, 1898 ...	3,811	18	5
	£8,810	7	11

Total receipts (including subscriptions), £14,316 17s. 8d.
Proportion of assessable income to total receipt — say $\frac{8,138}{14,316}$ say $\frac{8}{14}$ or $\frac{4}{7}$ ths, therefore $\frac{4}{7}$ths of admissible deductions to be allowed.

Deductions admissible, viz —	£	s.	d	£	s.	d.
$\frac{4}{7}$ths of	8,810	7	11	5,034	10	3
„ in full—
Rent, Ground ...	750	0	0
Insurance	4	3	6
Rates	257	10	4
Rent, 61 The Oval	33	6	8
				1,045	0	6
Total deductions				£6 079	10	9

	£	s.	d.
Gross Assessable Income...	8,138	0	8
Less Deductions	6 079	10	9
Net amount assessed...	£2.058	9	11
Duty at 5 per cent. ...	£102	18	6

The following is a summary of the account submitted to the court by the club and shows the principle upon which the club contended they ought to be assessed:

CLUB'S ACCOUNT.

Corporation Duty.—Assessment, 1899-1900, based upon the published accounts to the 31st of December, 1898.

Assessment, 1898, Schedule A:	£	s.	d.
Building (gross)	1,000	0	0
Land	400	0	0
Rent received (Tavern)	300	0	0
Income received from investments in Stocks	151	18	2
	£1,851	18	2

Deductions:	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
Ground-rent	750	0	0
Interest on mortgage of lease	65	7	5
Repairs. 10 per cent. on £1,400 (the gross annual values of the building and land) ...	140	0	0
				955	7	5
				£896	10	9

Five per cent. on £896 10s. 9d. is £44 16s. 4d.

Pursuant to section 50 of the Succession Duty Act, 1853, the petitioner, on behalf of the club, duly gave notice of intention to appeal against such assessment, and furnished to the commissioners the following statement of the grounds of appeal—viz.:

1. The assessment ought to be made and made only on the net annual value of the property of the club in hand and on the net income of property let and of investments.

2. The gate-money and the receipts at the Oval are not annual value, income, or profits of real or personal property belonging to the club within the meaning of the Act 48 & 49 Vict. c. 51.

3. If (which the appellants deny) the receipts at the Oval are as such subject to taxation under the Act, the items a proportion of which are allowed as deductions under the heads of "match expenses," "ground expenses," and "general expenses" ought severally to be allowed in full, and not merely such a proportion thereof as the so called "assessable income" bears to the total receipts of the club, including subscriptions.

4. The assessment is wrong in principle and also in detail, and the amount assessed is very largely in excess of the amount in respect of which the appellants are properly chargeable with duty under the said Act.

The duty has not been paid.

The petition prayed:

That it might be declared that the assessment of duty on the said club under the said Acts ought to be made only on the net annual value of the property of the club in hand and on the net income of property actually let and of investments belonging to the club.

And that the gate-money and other payments received at the Oval as hereinbefore mentioned are not annual value, income, or profits of real or personal property belonging to the club within the meaning of the said Act.

Or if it should be held that the said receipts at the Oval are subject to taxation under the said Act that it might be declared that the several items, part only of which in proportion to the total receipts of the club including subscriptions and entrance fees of members had been allowed by the commissioners as deductions under the heads of "match expenses," "ground expenses," and "general expenses" respectively, and a proportion of the establishment charges ought to be allowed in full, or that it might be declared what deductions ought severally to be allowed in respect thereof.

And that it might be ascertained and declared what is the amount in respect of which the club is properly chargeable with duty under the said Act, and that for that purpose all necessary and proper inquiries might be made, directions given, and accounts taken.

A. T. Lawrance, K.C. (Vaughan Hawkins with him), for the petitioner.

Sir Edward Carson, S.G., and S. A. T. Rowlatt, for the Crown.

The arguments of counsel sufficiently appear in the following judgments.

The following cases were referred to: The Duke of Norfolk v. Lamarque, 38 W. R. 382, 24 Q. B. D. 485; Dobbs v. Grand Junction Waterworks, 32 W. R. 433, 9 App. Cas. 49.

KENNEDY, J.—Upon the whole I am in favour of the petitioner in this case. It is not, to my mind, a matter free from doubt, because it would unquestionably have been very easy to say in the Act itself that with regard to real property duty was to be paid at the rate of 5 per cent. upon the annual value according to Schedule A if the Legislature had so intended. That not having been said one credits the Legislature with having had, for good reasons perhaps, some different intention.

It is contended for the Crown that what ought to be got at is the annual value of the club's property having regard to what is actually earned from this property during the year. It is undoubtedly important if you come to deal with these things upon principle, that both in taxation and in rating matters one sometimes must, in order to maintain a principle, which shall be of general application for the benefit alike of the Crown and the subject, adopt a rule which shall in its working come as nearly as you can get to the intention of the Legislature in taxing the person who has to pay; and on the whole I think it comes much nearer to effecting the real purpose of section 11 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1885, to adopt the principle upon which the club ask to be taxed in this particular case. As regards their real property the club take as the basis of taxation the property tax assessment under Schedule A of the Income Tax Acts. They put the gross estimated value of the building at £1,000 and of the land at £400, and they add the sum of £300 which they receive as rent in respect of the tavern. And in addition to that they add the income derived from their personal property as set out in the scheme which they put forward as the right scheme for taxation. They say they are entitled by the later words of the section to a deduction from what you may call the basis to be found in Schedule A, a deduction in respect of necessary outgoings, including the receiver's remuneration, and costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred in the management of the property. I confess it seemed to me at first as if making that kind of claim was imperilling the view which they wished to be taken with regard to the applicability of Schedule A as the basis of taxation; but Mr. Lawrance has, I think, satisfied me that there is nothing inconsistent in taking the words "properly incurred in the management of such property" as applying to expenses, costs, and charges which have been or may be properly incurred in the management of the property. I think there is a good reason for that view because in the case of property being actually in the possession of the person who is taxed those costs, charges, and expenses must be treated, in a sense, as matters of estimate—just as in getting at what the hypothetical tenant would give you treat as a matter of estimate the calculation for the purpose of taxation under Schedule A. The difficulty of adopting any other plan is this, that as is illustrated by the present case, the Crown have to say, in getting at the annual value of real property you ought to look unquestionably at the use to which that property is actually put by the person who is sought to be taxed under section 11. It is true the land here is used for a business transaction; it is used for the purposes of a club for social enjoyment and also for earning gate-money which goes to maintain the club; expenses are incurred in relation to what one may call business matters—the getting up of matches and the payment of the players, and so on, and a large sum of money in respect of members' subscriptions is brought into the funds of the club.

I do not see how you can separate the annual value of the property, or if you like the income and profits of the property, from the annual value, income, or profits of the undertaking carried on on the property: in other words, from the management of the property, as it is used, with such an item or element as the members' subscriptions, which the Crown admit cannot be taxed. It must be remembered that the club is paying income tax in the usual way under Schedule D. What they are now here asked to pay is a duty imposed by Parliament because they escape liability to probate, legacy, or succession duty. It would be therefore unfair, if they have been taxed in respect of income under Schedule D, to bring at all into a tax upon the property anything which is in the nature of income, and so charge them, as it were, twice over, once under Schedule D of the Income Tax Act, and again under this section of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1885. And, further, upon the face of the account which is presented by the commissioners, and upon which the Crown asks us to act, there arises this question of subscriptions. The Solicitor-General, with perfect frankness, has, from the first, admitted that the question is dealt with in the account upon a principle which rests upon no principle or rule which could be generally applied.

My reading of section 11 is this: I think the tax as to real property was intended to be levied upon the annual value. "Annual value" is a term which has already got an understood meaning in revenue and taxing Acts with regard to real property, and I think that the term "annual value" ought to be taken to mean substantially annual value as assessed under Schedule A. But it may be that a portion of this property is personal property. You then want to get at something which annually accrues to the body taxed from that kind of property. If there is a regular periodical return, that would be covered by the term "income," which is intended to relate to personal property as "annual value" relates to real property; but there may be gains from personal property which cannot properly be called "income." The word "profits," however, is more general. It covers all these incidental advantages of a pecuniary kind which may come from personal property, and, if they do come, are intended to be subject to the duty which this section imposes. I think, therefore, that substantially the scheme which is proposed by the club is the right one to adopt, charging the realty in accordance with the assessment under Schedule A as annual value, and subject to a deduction of some sort in respect of the words at the close of the section. The deduction here is 10 per cent., which seems fair. Then the personal property should be charged, as it is here, in respect of income with 5 per cent. as in the club's scheme. Therefore upon the whole I think the petitioner is entitled to succeed.

PHILLIMORE, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think that, assuming the figures given by the club are correct, and assuming that the Crown does not claim any special rate for repairs, the scheme tendered by it is right. This is a question of corporation duty, which is made analogous to or substituted for the death duties; it is a tax or toll which the corporation pays for the privilege of living; and just as the living man, while he is alive, if he is a landowner, pays under Schedule A; if he is an occupier of land, under Schedule B; if he is a receiver of income from stocks, under Schedule C; if he carries on a business, under Schedule D; and if he fulfils all those conditions, pays under all four; so the corporation, in addition to this toll for the privilege of living, pays that which every living person pays; and every unincorporated association is in the same position—it pays under Schedules A, B, C, and D if it has income derivable from those sources. Then in addition to the income tax there arises this 5 per cent. Now I can see no logical halting-place for the contention of the commissioners short of saying that a portion of the tax which the club pays under Schedule D is to be levied over again upon them as corporation duty—i.e., they are to pay income tax under Schedule D, then they are to pay 5 per cent. on their income derived from the occupation of land in addition. Now that must be wrong, and I think the Solicitor-General so admitted, but I see no logical halting-place between that and the contention of the petitioners. The contention for the club is that in respect of their income from stocks the assessment ought to be under Schedule C, and in respect of their income from land under Schedule B.

Now I entirely agree with my learned brother that the words "annual value" in this Act must be taken to have been intended to mean the same thing as in the other taxing Acts; and it is only reasonable to suppose, as obviously the commissioners did suppose when thay first issued the form of return, that the annual value is that which is ascertained for the purpose of assessing the income tax under Schedule A. The rules for that are clear, and in this case perfectly easy of application, and a Schedule A assessment has been arrived at. In respect of their income from stocks there is no question that they must take their Schedule C assessment or an equivalent. But the Act of Parliament goes further. It has imposed this additional duty on the corporation, and it gives them certain privileges. To begin with, they cannot act except by an agent, so it allows them what other owners are not allowed, the privilege of deducting the salary of the receiver; and secondly, it goes on to allow them to make certain other deductions from the annual value. Now in the metropolis by the operation of the Metropolis Valuation Act, 1869, the annual value is the gross annual value. Then the statute says: From that annual value so obtained certain deductions may be made. The only deductions the club seek to make here are ground-rent, which is unquestionable, and 10 per cent. for repairs and insurance; and, assuming that the commissioners do not complain of that percentage, it seems to me that these deductions are right. Subject, therefore, to any question as to particular figures, the assessment ought to be on the account tendered by the club—that is, on the basis of Schedule A, minus repairs.

Judgment for petitioner.

Solicitors for petitioner, Wilsons, Bristows, & Carpmael.

Solicitor for the Crown, The Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. Divorce. } Dec. 6.

WAUDBY v. WAUDBY AND BOWLAND. (a.)

Divorce—Wife's costs—No security—Disagreement of jury—Second trial—Co-respondent's costs.

A husband petitioned for a dissolution of marriage on the ground of his wife's adultery with the co-respondent. The respondent alleged that the petitioner had been guilty of cruelty and adultery, and the jury were discharged without giving a verdict, as they were not able to agree on all the issues. The wife had not applied for security for costs before the trial, and the court declined to make any order after the trial, on the ground that, as a second trial was pending, the application was premature. The wife then obtained security for her costs of the second trial. The jury at that second trial found that the respondent and co-respondent had committed adultery, and that the petitioner had committed adultery, but that it had been condoned by the respondent.

Held, that the wife was entitled to her full costs of both trials, and that the co-respondent must pay the costs of the issues on which he had failed.

This was a husband's suit for dissolution of marriage on the ground of the wife's adultery with the co-respondent.

The case was first tried in May, 1901, before the President and a special jury and resulted in the jury being discharged without a verdict being recorded as they were unable to agree on all the issues before them.

The second trial resulted in the jury finding (a) the respondent and co-respondent had committed adultery; (b) that the petitioner had committed adultery with a domestic servant in his own house; (c) that the respondent had condoned that adultery.

Bargrave Deane, K.C., and Rayden, for the petitioner, did not press the court to grant a decree under section 31 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85).

Barnard, for the respondent, asked for her costs of the first trial, but no security for the costs of that trial had been obtained. He also asked for the costs of the second trial, for which she had obtained an order for security.

Grazebrook, for the co-respondent, contended that he ought not to be condemned in costs, as the petitioner, knowing that he had committed adultery, ought never to have brought his petition at all.

BARNES, J., in delivering a considered judgment, said that the first question the court had to consider was whether it ought to exercise its statutory discretion in favour of the petitioner. After considering the authorities he had come to the conclusion that this was not a case in which he should exercise his discretion. The question had been already considered in McCord v. McCord, 23 W. R. 684, L. R. 3 P. & D. 237, Storey v. Storey, 36 W. R. 190, 12 P. D. 196, and Grosvenor v. Grosvenor, 34 W. R. 140. It was not, however, necessary for him to review those cases, as Mr. Deane had not pressed him to exercise his discretion in favour of the petitioner. It was, however, urged that there had only been a single act of adultery, that it had occurred a long time ago, and that it had been condoned. The court could not, however, overlook the fact that the act was the seduction of a maid servant during the absence of the wife, and that the girl had given birth to a child. The substantial question, however, which the court had to consider was that of costs. The case had been tried twice; on the first occasion the findings were not recorded, as the jury were unable to agree on all the issues. They, however, did intimate that they were agreed as to the adultery and cruelty of the petitioner, although they could not agree as to whether the respondent had condoned her husband's conduct, nor as to whether the respondent and co-respondent had committed adultery. At that time the respondent had not applied to the court for an order for security for her costs, but she had obtained such an order for £200 before the second trial. It therefore followed that as to the costs of the second trial there was no substantial question to consider, as the wife had not only got her order, but also an extension of it, and according to the usual practice she was entitled to her full costs. At the conclusion of the first trial the wife had applied to President for her costs, relying on the fact that no finding had been recorded against her, but the President declined to make any order on the ground that the application was premature, there being at that time no order for security. The conclusion the court had now come to was that the wife was in a sense successful at the first trial, and that she had succeeded at the second trial in getting the petition dismissed. After giving the matter full consideration, he had come to the conclusion that the wife was entitled to her full costs of both trials, being guided by the principles laid down in Barnes v. Barnes, L. R. 1 P. & D. 572. As to the costs of the co-respondent, the court had been asked to make no order against him, and it had been suggested that he might even be allowed his costs. As to this part of the case, there were many authorities showing that co-respondents had been condemned in costs, even though the petition had been dismissed. The learned judge referred to Bremner v. Bremner, 11 W. R. 687, 33 L. J. Prob. 202; Storey v. Storey, and Morgan v. Morgan and Porter, 17 W. R. 688, L. R. 1 P. & D. 644, and said that he had examined the original records of the court and found that the report of Morgan v. Morgan in the Law Reports was incomplete, as the case had only been reported on the question of the court's discretion under the 31st section of the Divorce Act. He found from the records that in that case the jury had found that the petitioner had committed adultery with one woman, whose name was mentioned in the pleadings, but had negatived a charge with another woman. The court was then asked to exercise its discretion and to grant a decree nisi and to extend the time for applying for a new trial. The court, however, refused to pronounce a decree nisi and gave the wife her full costs, except as to the issue on which she had failed. Subsequently a new trial was granted, and the respondent and co-respondent did not defend, and in the result the second jury negatived the charge of adultery against the petitioner which the former jury had convicted him of. A decree nisi was accordingly pronounced, and the co-respondent was condemned in the full costs. None of these facts, however, appeared in the Law Reports. Again, in Grosvenor v. Grosvenor, the report was silent as to the costs, but in that case he (the learned judge) found from the records that the petition had been dismissed, and the co-respondent, who had not appeared or defended, had been condemned in the costs. Following the authorities, the court now ordered that the co-respondent should pay the costs of the issues on which he had failed.

(a.) Reported by GWYNNE HALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Solicitors, Iliffe & Co.; Long & Gardiner; Ridsdale & Co.

Court of Appeal.

From Chan. Div. (Vaughan Williams, Romer, and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) — Dec. 7, 9, 10.

BAGOT PNEUMATIC TYRE CO. v. CLIPPER PNEUMATIC TYRE CO. (a.)

Company—Contract with third person for intended company — Privity — Adoption—Inferred contract — Right of action.

The plaintiff company entered into an agreement with A. B. to grant to him or a company to be formed by him an exclusive licence to use certain patents. A. B. then entered into an agreement with C. D. to sell the licence to him on behalf of the intended company, and this agreement was adopted by the intended company, the defendants, by another agreement to which A. B., C. D., and the defendant company were parties.

Held, that, there being no privity of contract between the plaintiffs and defendants, and no contract which could be inferred or considered as having been adopted by the conduct of the defendants, the plaintiffs had no right of action against them.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (49 W. R. 265, [1901] 1 Ch. 196), affirmed.

This was an appeal from the decision of Kekewich, J. (reported 49 W. R. 265, [1901] 1 Ch. 196).

The plaintiff company was incorporated in 1896.

By an agreement dated the 3rd of March, 1897, the plaintiff company agreed with one Phelps to grant to him or to a company then in course of formation by him (being the defendant company) an exclusive licence to use certain patents belonging to the plaintiffs. The consideration for the grant was that after setting aside each year a cumulative preferential dividend equal to £8 per cent. on the capital of the proposed company, that company should pay to the plaintiffs in each year "out of their remaining profits available for dividend" a sum equal to 8 per cent. upon a fixed capital of £150,000, and the plaintiffs were to receive a further sum equal to one-half of the balance (if any) of net profits of such company available for dividend in each year.

On the 4th of March, 1897, the plaintiffs granted to Phelps an exclusive licence according to the agreement. This licence, after a recital of the agreement of the 3rd of March, was expressed to be given in consideration of that agreement, and of the payment therein agreed to be made by the licensee to the licensors, and it contained a covenant by the licensee not to assign the licence without the consent of the licensors, except to the intended company.

On the 5th of March, 1897, Phelps entered into an agreement with Ernest Piercy, as a trustee for the intended company (Phelps being therein described as "the vendor"), to sell to him as such trustee (inter alia) the agreement of the 3rd of March and the exclusive licence of the 4th of March for £120,000, of which £60,000 was to be paid in cash, and the balance in cash or shares at the option of the directors of the proposed company.

On the 8th of March, 1897, the proposed company was incorporated with a capital of £150,000 in £1 shares under the title of the defendant company, and the agreement with Piercy was then adopted with the modification that the purchase price of £120,000 was to be paid as to £40,000 in cash and as to the balance in fully paid-up shares. The licence was never actually assigned by Phelps to the defendant company, though they made use of it. In March and September, 1898, the defendant company issued balance-sheets showing a profit, but no amount was placed to reserve fund, and no dividend was declared. In October, 1899, they issued a balance-sheet showing large profits, out of which a sum was carried to reserve fund and a sum of £3,000 was written off as depreciation and towards the extinction of the "cost of licences and contracts." A circular was about the same time sent to the plaintiffs, stating that the year's trading of the defendants allowed a dividend of 6 per cent. to the defendants' shareholders, and that they proposed in future to provide out of profits for the depreciation and ultimate extinction of the item of £138,000, the sum at which, by additions, the licences, &c, stood in the balance-sheet. The plaintiffs then brought this action to have it declared, among other things, that the defendants were not entitled to write off against profits any sums for depreciation, and to have the dividend for the year covered by the balance-sheet ascertained.

(a.) Reported by S. E. WILLIAMS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Kekewich, J., held, following the decision in In re Northumberland Avenue Hotel Co., 33 Ch. D. 16, 35 W. R. Dig. 38, and distinguishing Howard v. Patent Ivory Manufacturing Co., 36 W. R. 801, 38 Ch. D. 156, that the plaintiffs had no cause of action, and on that ground dismissed the action.

The plaintiffs appealed.

Haldane, K.C., Warrington, K.C., and E. F. Spence, for the plaintiffs.

Neville, K.C., and Sargant, for the defendants.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L J., after reading the agreement of the 3rd of March, 1897, the licence grant of the 4th of March, 1897, and the agreement on the 5th of March, 1897, and pointing out that under the latter agreement Phelps was described as "the vendor," said that this agreement treated the grant of the licence and the agreement of the 3rd of March generally as matters carried out by the Bagot Co. with Phelps not as trustee for anybody, but for his own benefit. The main question raised in the present case was whether there was a direct contract between the Bagot Co. and the Clipper Co., and such a privity of contract as enabled the former company to sue the latter. In addition to that a question was raised whether, on the true construction of the agreement of the 3rd of March, there were, prior to the bringing of the present action, any profits available within the meaning of that agreement for payment of any sum to the Bagot Co. which had not been truly paid. Dealing first with the wider question, looking at it merely as a question of law, there was no doubt whatever that there was no direct contract between the Bagot Co. and the Clipper Co. enabling the former company to sue the latter. That was not denied; but it was suggested that though that might be so, though it might be true that the Bagot Co. could not sue the Clipper Co. under the contract of the 3rd of March, yet there might be evidence of a new contract having been entered into between the two companies on the same basis as the agreement of the 3rd of March. It was not suggested that there was any new contract in writing or by resolution communicated to the Bagot Co., but what had been suggested was that there might be a new contract entered into by the implication of a contract between the parties. A suggestion of that sort was made and rejected in In re Northumberland Avenue Hotel Co. But, in the first place, the the statement of claim neither alleged nor suggested any such contract. Even if it did, there was no evidence whatever of any such contract having been entered into. It was quite true that there had been many things done by the Clipper Co. which they might well have done if they had been parties to the agreement of the 3rd of March; but the answer was that all such acts were equally referable to the contract of the 5th of March and to the obligations of the Clipper Co. to Phelps. His lordship thought, therefore, that there was not ground for saying that there was evidence of any such contract. Then, that being so, there was really only one more ground suggested for saying that the Clipper Co. were directly liable to the Bagot Co. It was this: That though it was quite true that they were not liable in law, yet they were liable in equity, because, although the contract of the 3rd of March was not a contract with them, and also the licence of the 4th of March was not a licence to them, yet they had had the benefit of the licence, and that made them in equity directly answerable to the Bagot Co. But there was no law justifying such a proposition, and never had been. In Cox v. Bishop, 8 De G. M. & G. 815, Knight Bruce, L.J., in giving judgment, said this: "The substantial question upon this appeal is whether an equitable assignee of a term of years granted in mines, or mines and other hereditaments, under a reserved rent and certain covenants, is liable to be sued in equity by the lessor for rent which became due and damages in respect of breaches of some of the covenants committed during the time that the assignee was in the possession and enjoyment of the demised property as the equitable assignee of it, which he has now ceased to be. There is not any special or other circumstance in the case that is in my view material. It was properly conceded, on the part of the respondents, that the liability would not have existed but for the possession or enjoyment of the property under the equitable assignment. It appears, however, to me, I acknowledge, that the possession and enjoyment make no difference. They do not, in my opinion, create a contract between the lessor and the equitable assignee which can give the former a title to the relief prayed against the latter." And Turner, L.J.'s, judgment was to the same effect. That principle applied to the present case, and, indeed, to all cases of a similar kind. If that principle had been rightly applied in the case of an equitable assignee of a lease, a fortiori it must apply in a case where that which had been taken possession of or enjoyed was not land the subject of a lease, but was personalty or a chattel. The principle so laid down in Cox v. Bishop was not a new principle, for in Moore v. Greg, 2 Ph. 717, Lord Cottenham expressed an opinion which was in substance the same as that of Knight Bruce, L.J. His lordship then proceeded to comment upon Werderman v. Société Générale d'Electricité, 30 W. R. 33, 19 Ch. D. 246, which he said had been referred to as supporting the proposition that where a person obtains possession of the subject-matter of a contract with notice of the terms of the bargain the person so in possession is liable to perform the contract and may be sued upon it though he was not a party to it. That case, however, did not support the plaintiffs' contention. If it did it would be in direct conflict with the principles laid down in Cox v. Bishop, but it did not assert any such proposition. All that it decided was that if you have a contract whereby a charge is imposed upon property, the person who takes the property takes it subject to the charge. That did not involve the proposition that the person taking the property was liable to be sued on the contract. The utmost that it did was to impose a charge upon the property, not to impose an obligation on the person to perform the terms of a contract to which he was not a party. There was no ground whatever for saying that there was any privity of contract in the present case between the Bagot

Co. and the Clipper Co. That practically disposed of the whole case, but it was necessary, perhaps, to say a word or two upon another matter, and that was that it was conceded that at the time of bringing the action there was no sum of money which under the terms of the contract of the 3rd of March was payable to the Bagot Co. and which had not been paid; and under those circumstances it did seem, quite apart from the question of privity of contract, that this action would have failed as being premature at the moment it was brought. His lordship thought that, if there had been privity of contract, under the circumstances of this case there would have been no immediate cause of action between the Bagot Co. and the Clipper Co. The appeal failed and must be dismissed with costs.

ROMER, L.J., said he would first dispose of what he might call the merits of the case—namely, the pecuniary question involved—and that was whether the Clipper Co. had earned any profits within the meaning of the agreement of the 3rd of March, 1897, or whether that company was dealing with its income in a manner inconsistent with the contract. That resolved itself into the question whether the company was justified in doing what it purported to do in its balance-sheet for the year 1899 in making an allowance of £3,000 for the amount to be written off in respect of licences and contracts. In his lordship's opinion the company was quite justified in doing so. There was in this case no question of bad faith. It was not said that the licences of the company had not depreciated in value below the amounts at which they stood in the books of the company. But it was said that the Clipper Co. was not entitled to make any allowance in writing off the depreciation of its property, as a matter of principle, as against the the Bagot Co. His lordship did not agree that the Bagot Co. had any right, even on the footing suggested, to say that the Clipper Co. could not properly apply out of its income for the year this £3,000 before ascertaining the profits available for dividend. He did not think that the agreement of the 3rd of March was intended to deprive the Clipper Co. of the right of ascertaining in good faith what were the available profits of the company in any particular year. He was of opinion that if the Clipper Co., acting intra vires and in good faith and in the ordinary course of business, made certain payments out of income before ascertaining what was available for dividend, the Bagot Co. would not have any right to interfere with the Clipper Co. Not only had that company a right, before saying what profits in this year 1899 were available for dividend, to write off a sum for depreciation of the value of the licences, but in doing so they were only doing what was honest and proper for them to do. This made the question of law that had been raised merely an academical question.

Upon the question whether there was any contract between the two companies, his lordship was of opinion that there was clearly no direct contract between them; and it was equally clear that there was a contract between Phelps and the Clipper Co. Phelps was not a mere shadow or nominee, but a direct contractual party who entered into a direct contract with the Bagot Co. and also had rights under a direct contract with the Clipper Co.; but there was no contract, by virtue of those contracts, between the two companies themselves. Was there, then, any other sort of contract between them? All that had been done by the Clipper Co. was clearly referable to the contract with Phelps of the 5th of March, and to that contract alone; there was nothing to justify the court in holding that there was any fresh contract between the two companies. But it must be understood that his lordship was not saying that, in an unforeseen case of the Clipper Co. making profits hereafter, the Bagot Co. might not have rights against Phelps or might not have a right of using Phelps's name in any proceedings to recover a share of those profits, or that the Bagot Co. might not in such a case bring proper proceedings, to which Phelps would be a party, to recover certain rights and remedies. This was not a case in which leave to amend should be given to the plaintiff company. There were no merits, for there was no money coming to the plaintiffs, and therefore it would not be right to give them leave to amend for the purpose of raising a mere academical question. Nor did he say that the plaintiffs might not raise any question such as arose in the Werderman case; but the principle of that case, even if it applied, did not, in his lordship's opinion, support the implication of any contract between these two companies, and he could not find any repudiation by the Clipper Co. of any obligation cast upon it by reason of its contract with Phelps. He agreed that the appeal failed. In framing the form of order it must be seen that it carried out the principles of the present judgment of the court.

COZENS-HARDY, L.J., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Capel-Cure & Ball; Beale & Co.

From Chan. Div.
Vaughan Williams, Romer, and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) Nov. 7; Dec. 2.

THURSTON v. NOTTINGHAM PERMANENT BENEFIT BUILDING SOCIETY. (a.)

Infant—Building society—Infant member—Advances—Mortgage—Infants' Relief Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 32), s. 1—Building Societies Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 42), ss. 13, 38.

Though the Building Societies Act, 1874, authorizes an infant to become a member of a building society, it does not authorize him to borrow money by means of advances on his property, as it is not a necessary part of a member's position that he should have advances or mortgage his property.

An infant member of a building society purchased a piece of land by means of a loan from the society, and gave the society a mortgage to secure the loan and further advances which were expended in building houses on the land.

Held, that the society was entitled to a charge on the land for the actual purchase-money, with interest at 4 per cent. thereon, but that by reason of the Infants' Relief Act, 1874, the mortgage was void as against the infant, and must be delivered up to be cancelled

Decision of Joyce, J. (49 W. R. 56, [1901] 1 Ch. 88), varied.

This was an appeal from a decision of Joyce, J. (reported 49 W. R. 56, [1901] 1 Ch. 88).

The plaintiff, Mrs. Thurston, who did not attain the age of twenty-one years until the 25th of March, 1900, was in June, 1898, admitted a member of the defendant society, a building society duly incorporated under the Building Societies Act, 1874. Being desirous of purchasing certain land with the intention of erecting houses thereon, the plaintiff applied on the forms of the society for an advance of £1,200, and offered the land and houses as security.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The application was accepted, the society being ignorant that the plaintiff was then an infant.

The land was conveyed to the plaintiff, as purchased by her by means of her separate estate, by an indenture dated the 21st of July, 1898; and by an indenture of mortgage dated the 22nd of July, 1898, and made between the plaintiff of the one part and the defendant society of the other part, in consideration of £1,200 paid and advanced to her by the society, the plaintiff conveyed unto the society in fee the land therein specified with the six houses then erected or in course of erection, subject to a proviso for redemption, and it was declared that the monthly subscription payable by the mortgagor in respect of the advance of £1,200 amounted to the sum of £10 4s. The plaintiff had also borrowed money from her stepmother for the purposes of the same transaction.

In October, 1898, the defendant society discovered for the first time that the plaintiff was an infant. Up to that time the society had advanced £1,070, which had been spent by the plaintiff partly in the purchase of the land and partly in the erection of houses and purchase of materials.

The last instalment paid by the plaintiff was in September, 1898, and in the following month the defendant society entered into possession of the mortgaged property. Some of the houses were at that date unfinished, and the society expended about £270 in completing them. The society has ever since been in receipt of the rents and profits.

The plaintiff claimed (1) a declaration that the mortgage deed of the 22nd of July, 1898, was void and not binding on her; (2) delivery up of the mortgage deed and of the title deeds to the property comprised therein; and (3) possession of the mortgaged premises.

The defendants did not make any charges of fraud or misrepresentation against the plaintiff.

Joyce, J., held that the conveyance of the land to the plaintiff and the mortgage were really one transaction, and that the plaintiff could not repudiate one part of the transaction and affirm and take the benefit of the other part. On this ground the learned judge dismissed the action, without expressing any opinion upon the question whether the Building Societies Act, 1874, enables an infant member of a building society to execute a valid mortgage as a security for advances made to him by the society.

By section 13 of the Act, "Any number of persons may establish a society under this Act, either terminating or permanent, for the purpose of raising by the subscriptions of the members a stock or fund for making advances to members out of the funds of the society upon security of freehold, copyhold, or leasehold estates by way of mortgage." By section 38, "Any person under the age of twenty-one years may be admitted as a member of any society under this Act, the rules of which do not prohibit such admission, and may give all necessary acquittances; but during his non-age he shall not be competent to vote or hold any office in the society." The rules of this society did not prohibit the admission of infant members.

By section 1 of the Infants' Relief Act, 1874, "All contracts, whether by specialty or simple contract, henceforth entered into by infants for the repayment of money lent or to be lent, or for goods supplied or to be supplied (other than contracts for necessaries), and all accounts stated with infants, shall be absolutely void. Provided always that this enactment shall not invalidate any contract into which an infant may, by any existing or future statute, or by the rules of common law or equity, enter, except such as now by law are voidable."

The plaintiff appealed.

Badcock, K.C., and E. Ford, for the plaintiff.

Hughes, K.C., and Freeman, for the defendants.

Badcock, K.C., replied.

The arguments used and cases cited were similar to those in the court below.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 2.—VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I cannot agree with the conclusion at which Joyce, J., has arrived in its entirety. I think that the mortgage deed is void and not binding on the plaintiff. It seems clearly to come within section 1 of the Infants' Relief Act, 1874, as being a contract for repayment of money lent; and I cannot regard the transaction of the purchase of the land and the advance of the money for building as all one transaction. The transaction of the purchase was a transaction between the vendors and Mrs. Thurston, whereas the transaction of the advance of the money was between the building society and Mrs. Thurston. The former transaction was voidable, and Mrs. Thurston has affirmed it. The latter was void so far as the contract to repay is concerned. I think that the advances of money for building stand on a different footing from the £250 paid by the building society for the purchase of the land and the expenses of conveyance. The money advanced for building was simply money lent, and the society has no security except the mortgage, which, in my judgment, is void as a contract for repayment of money lent; whereas in the transaction of purchase the society acted as the agents of Mrs. Thurston to carry through the purchase for her by paying the purchase-money and obtaining a conveyance to her. In my opinion, Mrs. Thurston could not adopt the act of her agents and claim to have the title deeds and conveyance handed over to her by the building society without paying to them the purchase-money which they paid to obtain the conveyance; and I think that, without any contract to that effect, the society have a lien of charge on the title deeds and conveyance for the money which they paid to obtain the property, which Mrs. Thurston now claims. If Mrs. Thurston adopts the acts done by the society she must discharge the cost and indemnify the society against the same. I thought during the argument that the only security which the building society held for the £250 which they had paid for purchase-money was the lien on and right to retain the title deeds and conveyance until the money had been repaid; but I am satisfied now, after discussing the matter with my brethren, that the society, having paid off the vendor, have a right to the remedies of the vendor—have a right, that is, to enforce the vendor's lien. It is true that the society were not the vendor, but, having paid off the vendor, the society, as against the purchaser, stand in the place of the vendor. It follows, in my judgment, that the plaintiff is entitled to a declaration that the mortgage deed is void and not binding on her, and is entitled to delivery up of the same and to have it cancelled, but is not entitled to have the title deeds given up discharged from any lien or charge of the society unless and until she pays to the society the purchase-money which the society paid for the land. I think, moreover, that the society, the defendants, are entitled to have a declaration that they have a lien or charge on the land for the amount of the said purchase-money and expenses, and that so far as is necessary, the plaintiff is trustee for them of the land conveyed to her.

The only other matter with which I have to deal is an argument put forward on behalf of the defendants that section 38 of the Building Societies Act, 1874, which enables minors to become members of these societies, validates contracts by them to repay moneys which are lent to them by the society. I cannot agree. On this point I take the same view as Joyce, J. The section only validates the contract of membership. Borrowing money is not the necessary consequence of membership. In fact the majority of members do not borrow of the society. The society can only make advances on the security of land mortgage; and I think it would be straining section 38 very much to hold that it authorized an infant to raise money on mortgage of his land. It only remains to deal with costs. I think each party should bear his own costs of this appeal and below.

ROMER, L.J.—The first question is, Whether the Building Societies Act of 1874 enables a minor, by becoming a member of a building society, to borrow money by means of advances on mortgage of his property. I do not think it does. As pointed out by Vaughan Williams, L.J., though the Act enables a minor to become a member, it has not in terms authorized his borrowing while under twenty-one years of age, and it is not a necessary part of a member's position that he should have advances or mortgage his property. Many members never want advances, and many others, even if they desired advances, could not obtain them, by reason of having no sufficient property to give as security. A minor, who cannot legally contract for a loan, or mortgage his estates, is in no worse position than the members I have last mentioned. And to hold that the Building Societies Act has given a minor general power in the shape of advances to borrow, and to mortgage his estates, would practically to a great extent destroy the protection intended to be given to infants by the Infants' Relief Act, 1874. A building society is not bound to see to the application of its advances by the members advanced. All it need look to is the sufficiency of the security. And if the Building Societies Act authorized any infant to take advances, and mortgage his or her estates for the amount advanced, then every infant with an estate might borrow to the extent of that estate as a security, by merely joining a building society. I do not think the Building Societies Act has authorized this, or has the effect contended for by the defendant society. The case then has to be considered according to ordinary principles regulating dealings by infants.

Now, to the extent to which the money advanced by the defendant society went to complete the purchase by the plaintiff, I agree with Joyce, J., in thinking that the plaintiff cannot affirm the purchase and repudiate the advance. But for that advance the vendor would have had a vendor's lien on the estate purchased for the amount, and to that extent I think the defendant society can stand in the shoes of the vendor. But beyond this I do not think we can go with the judgment in the court below. To my mind, it is impossible to treat the advances which were made subsequent to the completion of the purchase as forming one transaction with the purchase, and I think these advances cannot be treated as binding the infant on the ground adopted by Joyce, J. Nor can the mortgage be held on that ground to bind the plaintiff. At first I was inclined to think that some other good ground might be found by which the advances, as binding the estate, and the deed of mortgage might be supported, at any rate to some extent. But I have been unable to find any such ground. The Infants' Relief Act, 1874, is too strong. No doubt the result will be a great hardship on the defendant society, but the Legislature thought it necessary, for the benefit of the community at large, to provide that all contracts by infants for repayment of money lent should be absolutely void. If this results in a hardship to an individual lender, it cannot be helped. He must suffer for the public good. Of course different considerations would arise if the infant had been guilty of fraud. But here no charge of fraud is made. The plaintiff did not represent or induce the building society to believe that she was of full age. On what other ground then can the court hold that a contract that is void gives the lender a charge on the borrower's land? I know of none. Even if the borrower had, as a matter of fact, and for his own purposes only, used the money to buy some chattels or lands, the lender could not have claimed those chattels or lands, or any charge on them. And, if the borrower had chosen to spend the money in building on his land, that fact, in itself, would not give the lender a charge on the land. It occurred to me that as the building society in this case advanced its money by instalments to the infant in order to pay her builder, and, inasmuch as the contract to build, as between infant and builder, was not one of loan, and might not be void under the statute as a contract for goods supplied, the building society might stand in the shoes of the builder. But, even if that were the case, it would not help the society in this case, for the builder had no lien or charge on the land in respect of the building work done. Lastly, it was suggested on behalf of the building society that, inasmuch as it has a charge on the plaintiff's land for the sum paid on completion of her purchase to the vendor, the plaintiff, being obliged to redeem the land from that charge, is bound to do equity, and that it would not be equity to allow the plaintiff to redeem without paying the moneys subsequently advanced by the society, at any rate to the extent to which the land has been benefited by those moneys. But the short answer is that a court of equity cannot say that it is equitable to compel a person to pay any moneys in respect of a transaction which, as against that person, the Legislature has declared to be void. It follows that there must be a declaration that the mortgage is void as against the plaintiff, and the mortgage deed should be cancelled. But it should also be declared that the society was, at the date of the completion of the purchase, entitled to a charge for the limited sum above-mentioned, with interest thereon at 4 per cent., and was entitled to retain the title deeds accordingly. I agree with the Lord Justice in thinking that there should be no costs. The defendant society, having only an equitable charge, was not entitled to take possession of the mortgaged property. The proper remedy of the society was to obtain a receiver. But I do not think it would be right to insist on the plaintiff being at once let into possession, as the defendant society ought to have time to consider its position, and to apply for a receiver if so advised. There should, therefore, only be liberty reserved for the plaintiff to apply for possession. No further relief can be granted in this action.

COZENS-HARDY, L.J.—I agree, and I have very little to add. Two contracts have to be considered. The first was a contract for the purchase of the land. This was voidable only, and not void, and has been adopted and confirmed by the plaintiff since she attained twenty-one. Under this contract, and as a legal consequence of it, there arose a vendor's lien for unpaid purchase-money. The second was a contract for the repayment of money lent and to be lent. This was absolutely void under the statute of 1874 and not capable of confirmation. The defendants are in no better position, and they ought not to be in a worse position, than if the plaintiff had been adult, but the mortgage deed were proved to be forged. Even in that case the defendants would be entitled to stand in the shoes of the vendor to the extent to which their money discharged the vendor's lien: see Brocklesby v. Temperance Building Society, 43 W. R. 606, [1895] A. C. 182. The result is that we must declare that the defendants had a charge for the amount paid by them to the vendors with interest at 4 per cent.

Solicitors, Beyfus & Beyfus; Peacock, Goddard, & Co., for Rothera & Son, Nottingham.

App. Bankruptcy.
(Vaughan Williams, Romer, and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) Nov. 15.

In re A DEBTOR.
Ex parte THE PETITIONING CREDITORS. (a.)

Bankruptcy—Petition—Production of debtor's books—Calling debtor to prove acts of bankruptcy—Practice.

Upon the hearing of a bankruptcy petition, the petitioning creditor is entitled to call for the production of the debtor's books.

Semble, the petitioning creditor is also entitled to call the debtor for the purpose of proving the acts of bankruptcy alleged against him.

This was an appeal against the decision of Mr. Registrar Brougham refusing to allow the petitioning creditors to call for the production of the debtor's books. Upon the hearing of a bankruptcy petition the petitioning creditors' counsel called for the production of the debtor's books for the purpose of proving the acts of bankruptcy which were alleged against him. The learned registrar held that according to the practice in bankruptcy the debtor's books could not be used against him for such a purpose. From this decision the petitioning creditors now appealed. Upon the appeal the question was also argued (though it did not actually arise for decision) whether upon the hearing of a bankruptcy petition the debtor could be called as a witness and be examined as to the alleged acts of bankruptcy in support of the petition.

Herbert Reed K.C., and Carrington, for the petitioning creditors.

Muir Mackenzie, for the debtor.

The following cases were referred to: In re Holloway, 1 Bank. & Ins. Rep. 244; Williams v. Williams 6 M. & W. 170; Udal v. Walton, 14 M. & W. 254; Starkie on Evidence, p. 191; Ex parte Castrique, 10 L. T. Rep. 767, 12 W. R. Ch. Dig. 7.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., said the petition must go back to the registrar. No doubt for a number of years it had been the practice in bankruptcy not to allow a petitioning creditor to call the debtor in support of a petition which was adverse to him. It might not be necessary to go into that question on the present occasion as it was the ground of the appeal that the registrar had not allowed the debtor to be called. But his lordship thought it better that he should say a few words on the point. The mere fact that this had been the practice of the Bankruptcy Court for a long period was not sufficient to make it right that the court should exclude the evidence unless it could recognize the principle of the exclusion. It was said that the practice was founded on the old rule which excluded the evidence of interested persons, but his lordship did not agree with that contention. In the cases cited by Mr. Reed the evidence was excluded on the ground of interest, but that could not apply to a bankruptcy petition. The reason for the practice was that bankruptcy proceedings were regarded as in some sense of the nature of criminal proceedings, and in a common law court you could not call a prisoner to prove his own guilt. That was not always a principle of English law, but the rule had been gradually evolved by the judges on the ground that it would not further the interests of justice to allow an accused person to be called as a witness against himself. The principle was now recognized by statute, for though an accused person could now give evidence, he could not be compelled to do so. The question was discussed in the case of In re Holloway, where counsel was asked why was not the bankrupt examined. That did not mean why did you not call him, but why did you not examine him. It had never been the practice to examine a bankrupt. The only other case was Ex parte Castrique, where it was held that there was no jurisdiction to compel a bankrupt to be examined. That had been acted upon ever since. It was said that there was no ground to support the practice. Since the year 1861 things had been altered. The bankruptcy practice may have been a very wholesome one, but it was difficult to say that proceedings were any longer of a criminal nature now that a debtor could present a petition against himself. His lordship supposed that this bankruptcy practice must now be altered. With regard to the debtor's books, it was quite plain that if they were produced they would be primâ facie evidence against the debtor, and they must be produced. It was said that their production was immaterial, but obviously they might be very material as to the alleged acts of bankruptcy.

ROMER, L.J., agreed. He thought that it was impossible now to say that bankruptcy proceedings were of a criminal nature so as to preclude the petitioning creditor from calling the debtor to prove the allegations in the petition. It had no doubt been the habit of the Court of Bankruptcy not to allow the debtor to be called as a witness. But if the petitioning creditor was legally entitled to call the debtor, no habit of the court could establish a "practice" within the meaning of the bankruptcy rule, which preserved the old practice of the court when not expressly altered. If the petitioning creditor was legally entitled to call the debtor, no habit of the court could prevent him from insisting on his legal right. Of course the debtor when called would be entitled to refuse to answer any question which might tend to criminate himself. His lordship thought there would be very few cases in which a petitioning creditor would run the risk of calling the debtor. But his lordship could not see why the petitioning creditor, if he could establish an act of bankruptcy in the shortest way by calling the debtor himself, should not do so, instead of having to call perhaps a number of other witnesses. His lordship agreed as to the books.

COZENS-HARDY, L.J., concurred.

Appeal allowed; leave to appeal to House of Lords refused.

Solicitors, Michael Abrahams & Co.; Osborn & Osborn.

(a.) Reported by S. E. WILLIAMS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

App. Bankruptcy.
(Vaughan Williams, Romer, and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) Nov. 15.

In re DUNN.
Ex parte THE SENIOR OFFICIAL RECEIVER. (a.)

Bankruptcy—Report of official receiver—Offence under Debtors Act—Consideration by the court—Order to prosecute—Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c 62), s. 16—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 164.

Where an official receiver reports that a bankrupt has been guilty of offences under the Debtors Act, it is the duty of the court to consider the report and to decide whether the bankrupt should be prosecuted; but there is no duty imposed on the court to decide at any particular time as to a prosecution.

This was an appeal against the refusal by Mr. Registrar Hope of an application by the official receiver that the court would consider his report dated the 9th of August, 1901, made in the bankruptcy of Archibald Joseph Dunn, and make such order as to the prosecution of the bankrupt or otherwise as the court might think fit.

The report stated that in the opinion of the official receiver the bankrupt had been guilty of offences under the Act, but it did not say whether, in the opinion of the official receiver, there was a reasonable probability of the bankrupt being convicted if he were prosecuted for the offences, nor whether, in the opinion of the official receiver, it was desirable that the bankrupt should be prosecuted. Nor did the official receiver ask the court to direct a prosecution. In those circumstances the learned registrar made the order declining "to take into consideration the report of the official receiver with a view to making any order for the prosecution of the bankrupt or otherwise, there not being a specific application before the court for an order to prosecute; but without prejudice to any application to be made by the official receiver, if so advised, for an order for the prosecution of the bankrupt."

The senior official receiver, at the instance of the Board of Trade, appealed, ex parte.

By section 16 of the Debtors Act, 1869, "where a trustee in any bankruptcy reports to any court exercising jurisdiction in bankruptcy that in his opinion a bankrupt has been guilty of any offence under this Act, or where the court is satisfied upon the representation of any creditor or member of the committee of inspection that there is ground to believe that the bankrupt has been guilty of any offence under this Act, the court shall, if it appears to the court that there is a reasonable probability that the bankrupt may be convicted, order the trustee to prosecute the bankrupt for such offence."

By section 164 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, "section 16 of the Debtors Act, 1869, shall be construed and have effect as if the term 'a trustee in any bankruptcy' included the official receiver of a bankrupt's estate, and shall apply to offences under this Act as well as to offences under the Debtors Act, 1869."

By section 166, "where the court orders the prosecution of any person for any offence under the Debtors Act, 1869, or Acts amending it, or for any offence arising out of or connected with any bankruptcy proceedings, it shall be the duty of the Director of Public Prosecutions to institute and carry on the prosecution."

(a.) Reported by S. E. WILLIAMS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Sir R. B. Finlay, A.G., H. Sutton, and Muir Mackenzie, in support of the appeal, admitted that it had been the practice of the bankruptcy registrars to make such orders as that made in the present case, but they contended that the practice was wrong, and that it was the duty of the court at some time or other to consider the report and to decide one way or the other whether a prosecution ought to be directed.

They referred to the Debtors Act, 1869, s. 16; Bankruptcy Act, 1883, ss. 66-69, 164, 166; Bankruptcy Rules, 1890, 333-4; Bankruptcy Act, 1890, ss. 3, 8; Ex parte Barnes, 44 W. R. 433, [1896] A. C. 146.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., said he did not quite see what was the substantial reason for this application. Section 16 of the Debtors Act, 1869, provides that where a trustee in bankruptcy reports that a bankrupt has been guilty of offences under the Act, the court shall, if it appears that there is a reasonable probability of conviction, order the trustee to prosecute the bankrupt. There was therefore no doubt that if a report was made by the official receiver that the bankrupt had been guilty of offences under the Act the court must consider whether there was a reasonable probability of the bankrupt being convicted, and, if the court arrived at the conclusion that there was such a probability, it must order the bankrupt to be prosecuted. That being so, a question had arisen as to the practice. It was said that, according to the practice, the report was not considered or filed unless and until the official receiver applied for an order directing a prosecution. If that were so, his lordship entirely agreed that the report ought to be filed. But the practice had been to do nothing upon the report unless the official receiver asked for a prosecution. It was contended that the official receiver was entitled to apply to the court for its directions, and that, if he could not come to a conclusion whether there ought to be a prosecution, it was still the duty of the court to determine, on his application for directions, whether or not the bankrupt ought to be prosecuted. But his lordship said that, although it was the duty of the court to consider the report, no duty was imposed upon it to do this at any particular time. It could do this when it pleased, and if it chose it could decline to give any directions whatever. It was neither convenient nor expedient that the court should determine whether a prosecution should be ordered until all the necessary facts were put together so as to satisfy the official receiver that there was a reasonable probability of conviction. The order which the registrar had made was not in the right form. He ought not to have declined to consider the report, but if he had looked at the report and had come to the conclusion that the facts were insufficient he would have been justified in refusing to give directions. If he had after looking at the report refused to give directions he was entitled to do so. But here the registrar refused to take the report into consideration. That was not the form in which the order ought to have been made. His lordship could not help thinking that in many cases the fact that the official receiver did not think fit to ask for a prosecution ought to be taken into account when the registrar was considering whether he ought to direct a prosecution. It was not necessary to say more upon this, which was an ex parte appeal. The official receiver could go back to the registrar and ask him to consider the report and give directions, and the registrar, on looking at the report, could consider whether there ought to be a prosecution, or he could give no directions at all.

ROMER, L.J., said that under section 16 of the Debtors Act, 1869, as affected by section 164 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, it was clear that when the official receiver reported to the court that the bankrupt had committed offences under the Act it was the duty of the court to consider the report and to determine whether there should be a prosecution or not. Under the Act it was clear that the determination of the question rested with the court and not with the official receiver. So that the court could not refuse to consider the report simply because no application was made to prosecute the bankrupt. The court must at some time or other consider the report, and the registrar was wrong in declining to do so. When a report was sent in it ought to be filed. The official receiver might apply for directions, but the court was not bound at once to decide as to a prosecution, it might postpone its decision or give no directions. It was not in any way fettered as to the time for giving its decision, but it must at some time or other decide the question.

COZENS-HARDY, L.J., concurred.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitor, Solicitor to the Board of Trade.

Appeal.
(Collins, M.R., and Stirling and Mathew, L.JJ.) Nov. 13.

BOARDMAN v. SCOTT & WHITWORTH. (a.)

Master and servant—Employers' liability—"Accident"—Compensation—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1, sub-section 1.

A workman in the course of his employment was removing an empty yarn beam from a loom when a sudden strain, caused by his shifting it in order to get it more evenly balanced on his shoulder, had the effect of tearing some of the fibres of the muscles of his back.

Held, that the injury was caused by an "accident" within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 1, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

Appeal from an award of the judge of the Manchester County Court in an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

The applicant for compensation was a skilled power-loom overlooker, and was employed in the factory of the employers. It was part of his ordinary duty to remove empty yarn beams from looms in the factory. He had removed a beam weighing about 100lb. from a loom, and was carrying it on his shoulder, when, finding that it was not evenly balanced on his shoulder, he shifted it in order to get it more evenly balanced, and he immediately felt something crack in his back, and subsequently discovered that he had sustained an injury. The medical evidence showed that the sudden strain caused by shifting the beam had the effect of tearing some of the fibres of the muscles of his back. It appeared that before this he had been in good health, and that he had often removed similar beams without difficulty.

The county court judge found as a fact that whilst lifting the beam the applicant suddenly tore some of fibres of the muscles of the back, that the muscles were not ruptured, but the fibres were torn. He was of opinion that the injuries sustained by the applicant were caused by an accident, and he made an award for compensation.

The employers appealed.

Arthur Powell, for the employers.—The facts of this case do not show anything in the nature of an accident. An accident implies the happening of some fortuitous and external event: see the three cases of Hensey v. White, Lloyd v. Sugg & Co., and Walker v. Lilleshall Co. (Limited), 48 W. R. 257, [1900] 1 Q. B. 481; Timmins v. The Leeds Forge Co., 16 Times L. R. 521, 49 W. R. Dig. 109; Roper v. Greenwood & Sons, 83 L. T. Rep. 471, 49 W. R. Dig. 113.

Rugg, K.C., and Edmond Browne, for the applicant.

COLLINS, M.R.—I think this was a clear case of an accident. All the authorities are agreed and all are opposed to the contention of the employers. In my opinion both the elements of an accident are found in this case—viz., those of being fortuitous and unexpected. The decision of the county court judge was therefore right, and the appeal must be dismissed.

STIRLING and MATHEW, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the employers, Wm. Hurd & Son, for Payne, Galloway, & Payne, Manchester.

Solicitors for the applicant, Indermaur & Browne, for Gardner & Son, Manchester.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RÜCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div.
Byrne, J. Dec. 9.

FROGLEY v. PHILLIPS. (a.)

Practice—Fund in court—Payment out—Person entitled to take out letters of administration—Fund under £20.

Where a person entitled to a fund in court has died intestate, the court will not allow the fund to be paid out to the person entitled to take out letters of administration to the estate of the intestate, but who has not done so, even although the fund is under £20.

Hinings v. Hinings, 2 Hem. & M. 32, 12 W. R. Ch. Dig. 3, not followed.

Petition.

This was an application to vary an order made upon a petition for the distribution of a sum of about £1,000 New Consols and £35 cash in court, standing to the credit of the above action to a separate account.

The order provided for the payment of various shares to various persons entitled, and to the personal representatives of others who had died. One of these latter was a lady, who had died intestate, and whose husband, a respondent to the petition, had not obtained letters of administration to her estate. Her share amounted to less than £15.

An application was now made on behalf of the husband and of some other respondents that the order should direct that the shares of legatees who had died, being under £20, should be paid to the persons entitled to obtain administration to the estates, and that the necessity of actually obtaining letters of administration might be dispensed with.

G. Welby King, for the petitioners.

S. Leeke, for the husband and other respondents.—It is the practice of the court to allow sums under £20 belonging to a legatee who has died intestate to be paid to the person entitled to take out letters of administration without putting him to the expense of doing so: King v. Isaacson, 9 W. R. 369; In re Cabel, 3 W. R. 280; Hinings v. Hinings, 2 Hem. & M. 32, 12 W. R. Ch. Dig. 3; Dan. Ch. Pr. (7th ed.), vol. 2, p. 1498. [BYRNE, J.—Letters of administration to an estate under £100 can be obtained for 15s.] If the practice is not followed, the result will be that if the legatee dies before the order letters of administration for a fund of £15 or less must be obtained, while if the legatee survives the order for a single day, a fund up to £100 might under the Supreme Court Fund Rules, 1894, r. 62, be paid to the persons entitled without their being required to obtain letters of administration.

(a.) Reported by NEVILLE TEBBUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

BYRNE, J.—I must refuse the application. The judges of the Chancery Division have carefully considered the practice adopted in Hinings v. Hinings, and have decided that it is not to be followed. If the applicant is dissatisfied he must go to the Court of Appeal.

Application refused.

Solicitors, Guedalla & Cross, for Wilkins & Toy, Chipping Norton; Withall, Trotter, & Patteson.

Chan. Div. } Farwell, J. } Nov. 22.

In re HUXTABLE.
HUXTABLE v. CRAWFURD. (a.)

Will—Legacy for charitable purposes agreed upon—Admissibility of evidence.

A testatrix bequeathed £4,000 to C. "for the charitable purposes agreed upon between us."

Held, that there was a limited charitable purpose, and that evidence was admissible to show what were the terms agreed upon.

In re Fleetwood, 29 W. R. 45, 15 Ch. D. 594, followed.

Originating summons.

The testatrix, Mrs. Huxtable, by her will dated the 7th of August, 1899, made the following bequest: "To my friend the Rev. Charles Hubert Payne Crawfurd I leave the sum of £4,000 sterling for the charitable purposes agreed upon between us."

The testatrix died in March, 1901.

This was an originating summons by the plaintiffs, who were the executors of the will, in order to determine the validity of the bequest.

Errington for the executors.

Ashworth James, for the defendant Crawfurd, did not claim any beneficial interest in the fund. He submitted that there was a good charitable disposition of the income of the fund.

Parker, for the Attorney-General.

Butcher, K.C., and C. James, for the residuary legatees.

FARWELL, J., after referring to the will, said: An affidavit has been put in by Mr. Crawfurd, in which he states that the charitable purposes agreed upon were purposes which come to an end with his own lifetime. He does not himself now claim any beneficial interest in the fund, although he states in his evidence that the intention was, that subject to his applying the fund to charitable purposes during his lifetime he was to have the corpus. That is not claimed for him now at the bar. Mr. Parker says, for the Attorney-General, here is a general charitable trust shown, and as I understand him to say, I ought not to regard the evidence, but should direct a scheme for the whole £4,000. I do not think I could do that. I quite agree that the evidence would not be admissible if it were to contradict the will—that is to say, supposing the affidavit had been that the lady was under a misapprehension, and that she never agreed to any charitable purposes at all with him, that would be contradicting the will, and I do not think it would be admissible here. But here we have got by the terms of the will, not a general charitable purpose, but a limited charitable purpose—namely, for those actually agreed upon, and I do not see that there is any contradiction of the will in saying that the charitable purposes agreed upon exhausted the whole income of the fund, but lasted only for a limited time and did not go on for ever. I should have had some little doubt as to the admissibility of the evidence at all if it had not been for the decision of Hall, V.C., in In re Fleetwood; that is a decision more than twenty years old, and I certainly feel bound to follow it. I am not sure that Mr. Parker objected in form to my admitting the evidence. It seemed that if he had, I should have overruled the objection and admitted it. The case he chiefly relied upon was the case of The Commissioner of Charitable Donations and Bequests v. Cotter (which I believe should be read Sullivan), 1 Dr. & War. 501. There this particular question did not arise, because the gift being to two reverend gentlemen "to be by them applied to charitable purposes according to my instructions deposited with the Rev. Andrew O'Connell," it appeared that no written instructions had ever been deposited with Mr. Andrew O'Connell, but his testimony was, "I had instructions given to me, but they were verbal and general for charitable purposes, and with this proviso only, that the money was to be exclusively applied for charitable purposes." Then, says the Lord Chancellor, "here the intention expressed is consistent with the will; whether the Statute of Frauds may or may not interfere with it I do not think myself called upon to say, as I can decide without reference to the statute." If I may respectfully say so, I entirely agree. There was on the face of the will there, a general charitable intent and so far as the parol evidence went it was exactly in accordance with that, and there was no difficulty at all. Here there is not on the face of the will a general charitable intent, but a limited charitable intent—namely, to the extent agreed upon. It seems to me I must admit the evidence on the authority of that case to show what the parties agreed upon. That being so, the scheme will be limited to dealing with the fund during the lifetime of Mr. Crawfurd.

Solicitors, Bridges, Sawtell, & Co.; Waltons, Johnson, Bubb, & Co.; Solicitor to the Treasury; Clutton & Johnson.

Chan. Div. } Buckley, J. } Dec. 4.

In re BOLES AND BRITISH LAND CO.'S CONTRACT. (a.)

Trustee—Trust for sale—Retirement of trustee—Purchase by him of property subject to trust.

Where a trustee of an instrument containing a power of sale has retired from the trust, he is entitled to purchase property subject to the trust, provided there is nothing to show that at the time of his retirement a sale was contemplated or that he is taking advantage of any information which he might have obtained when he was a trustee.

(a.) Reported by PAUL STRICKLAND, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(a.) Reported by H. L. ORMISTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

This was a summons taken out by the purchasers under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, asking for a declaration that their requisitions had not been duly answered and that the vendor had not deduced a good title in accordance with the contract.

The facts of the case were as follows: A testator devised certain lands to four trustees (among whom was the vendor, Boles) upon certain trusts with a power of sale; on the 27th of May, 1885, the testator died; on the 27th of July, 1885, one of the trustees disclaimed the trusts of the will; on the 4th of August, 1885, Boles concurred with the two other trustees in paying off a mortgage on part of the testator's estate; by an indenture of the 11th of November, 1885, Boles, under the power contained in section 32 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, retired from the trust, and the trust property thereby became vested in the two remaining trustees; by an indenture of the 13th of November, 1897, under the power of sale contained in the will Boles purchased some of the lands therein comprised from the remaining trustees for the sum of £5,325; on the 3rd of May, 1901, Boles contracted with the purchasers to sell them the property at the price of £6,000. In their requisitions the purchasers took exception to the purchase by the vendor of the lands in question from the testator's trustees on the ground that he himself had once been a trustee of the testator, and demanded that he should show a proper title thereto. The vendor declined to comply with this requisition and thereupon the purchasers took out the present summons.

T. L. Wilkinson, for the applicants.—The rule which precludes a trustee from buying trust property extends after his retirement; if, therefore, he wishes to buy, he must either obtain the consent of his cestuis que trustent, or, if they are incapable of giving such consent, of the court.

He relied on Ex parte Lacey, 6 Ves. 625; Ex parte James, 8 Ves. 337; and Coles v. Trecothick, 9 Ves. 234.

H. Wace, for the respondent.

Buckley, J., stated the facts, and continued: Apart from any case of doubt or suspicion is there any rule of this court that a man who has ceased to be a trustee of an instrument which contains a power of sale for twelve years cannot be a purchaser of the property subject to the trust? I think there is not. The doctrine as to purchases by a trustee from his cestuis que trustent is founded on this—that a trustee for sale is bound by a duty to his cestuis que trustent to do everything in his power for their benefit, and may not, irrespective of any question of undervalue, purchase their property; and further, he may not purchase their property if he has retired from the trusteeship with that end in view. But if he has retired, and there is nothing to show that at the time of his retirement there was any idea of sale, is there anything to prevent him from becoming a purchaser? I have to see whether Boles was taking advantage of any information which he might have obtained when he was a trustee; so far as I can see, he was not. I have discovered a case which is not exactly in point, but which is illustrative of the principle on which I have to decide this case. In Clark v. Clark, 9 App. Cas. 733, 33 W. R. Dig. 88, there were two executors, one of whom had not proved but had not disclaimed; it was held in the supreme court of the colony that until he had absolutely disclaimed he could not buy from his co-executor. Sir Arthur Hobhouse, in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council reversing this decision, said: "Their lordships cannot agree that a sale is to be avoided merely because when entered upon the purchaser may, at his option, become the trustee of the property purchased, though in point of fact he never does become such. A man so placed might possibly use his power in such a way as to raise a case for setting aside the transaction.... But that is a different thing altogether from the absolute disability attaching to one who would at the same moment be a vendor in trust for others and a purchaser on his own behalf." That is not this case; it was the case of a man who might become a trustee; but in my opinion the same principle must prevail—the mere fact that a man was a trustee for sale of property twelve years before, does not preclude him from purchasing it.

Summons dismissed.

Solicitors, Russell & Russell; E. F. & H. Landon.

Chan. Div. } Nov. 23, 26.
Joyce, J. }

Poisson and Woods v. Robertson and Turvey. (a.)

Trade secret—Medical prescription—Secret recipe—Joint ownership—Right of one joint owner to demand inspection of recipe in the hands of another joint owner.

Where A. and B., each claiming under assignments from C., had been held at the trial of an action between A. and B. to be joint owners of a secret remedy, and each entitled to make and sell the remedy, but the paper upon which the secret recipe was written had been destroyed,

Held, that A. (to whom the recipe had never been communicated) was not entitled, upon an application made under the liberty to apply given at the trial, to demand from B. either a copy or an inspection of the secret recipe.

This was a motion in the above-named action by the plaintiff Poisson that he might be at liberty to inspect (and take copies of) the original recipe for the manufacture of the secret specific or remedy known as "Tacquaru" handed by George Rowland Edwards to the defendant Robertson, and then in the possession, custody, or power of the defendant Turvey, and that the defendant Turvey might be ordered to produce the said recipe for such inspection.

The subject-matter of the action was a secret specific for the cure of drunkenness.

By an agreement dated the 2nd of March, 1896, George Rowland Edwards, the former owner of "Tacquaru," entered into partnership with the defendant Robertson for the purpose of dealing with the said remedy, and under that agreement Robertson became entitled to one-half the profits, he undertaking the whole business management, and Edwards being in the position of a sleeping partner.

By an indenture dated the 11th of March, 1896, Edwards assigned his interest in the remedy to one Woods, who, however, was not to be entitled to know the secret of the remedy.

On the 23rd of March, 1896, Woods, by an indenture, assigned to the plaintiff Poisson one-half of his half interest in the remedy.

On the 6th of July, 1897, the defendant Robertson, by a document in writing, assigned one quarter of his half interest to the plaintiff Poisson, but without communicating the secret to him, though there was no covenant to the effect that it should not be communicated to him.

(a.) Reported by H. Claughton Scott, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Subsequently, on the 1st of August, 1900, Robertson affected to sell to the defendant Turvey the sole rights in the said remedy, and he thereupon communicated the secret to Turvey, handing to him the original paper upon which it was written.

The plaintiffs thereupon sought a declaration that the last-mentioned assignment was a fraud on their rights and void, and an order that the defendant Turvey should deliver up the recipe and other documents handed to him by the defendant Robertson. They further asked for an injunction to restrain the defendant Turvey from manufacturing, selling, or dealing with the remedy or from disclosing the secret to any person other than to the plaintiff Poisson; a declaration that the plaintiff Poisson was entitled to have the remedy communicated to him; an order directing the defendant Robertson to deliver to the plaintiff Poisson a true copy of the recipe; and an account of all dealings with the remedy by the defendant Turvey.

Upon hearing the action Kekewich, J., in his judgment decided that, there being no fraud in the sale of the 1st of August, 1900, the effect of the various assignments was to vest three-eighths in Turvey, three-eighths in Poisson, and two-eighths in Woods. But his lordship further held that this did not entitle the plaintiffs to an account. Each was entitled to make the remedy and to sell it for his own benefit. His lordship gave no decision upon the question of the right of the plaintiff Poisson to inspect the recipe or to have the documents handed over to him.

This motion was brought on by the plaintiff Poisson under the liberty to apply given in the action.

It appeared in the evidence that the original paper upon which the recipe was written had become worn out, and was consequently, since the hearing of the action, destroyed by the defendant Turvey, who, however, had taken and kept a copy of it.

Hughes, K.C., and Harman, for the applicant.—The result of Kekewich, J.'s, judgment is that we are interested in the recipe to the extent of three-eighths. Under the assignment of two-eighths our client Poisson is not entitled to know the recipe; but as owner of the remaining one-eighth he entitled to know it. This is so whether we are in the position of joint owners or partners.

Wright Taylor, for the defendant Turvey.—In the first place, this is an application which cannot be made under the liberty to apply which appears in the order of Kekewich, J. But assuming that he can do so, the applicant has no right to ask me to divulge the secret to him. The original piece of paper is no longer in existence and there is nothing in which he can claim any property.

JOYCE, J.—This is a most extraordinary case, and I regret that I do not see my way to make the order asked for. My present impression is that the plaintiff could only succeed by showing that he had some property, legal or equitable, in the piece of paper upon which the specific was written, or some contract, express or implied, for the production of it. It is not like the case of a title deed or copyright. Under the assignments prior to one dated the 6th of July, 1897, Poisson and Woods had shares in what was called the secret remedy, but only under documents which provided that they should not know the secret. It was only under the document of that date that Poisson became entitled to know the secret. The truth is that Poisson ought not to have paid his money until he had seen the document, or he should have had inserted a covenant for its production.

Robertson affected to assign the whole remedy to Turvey, who took without notice of the earlier assignment. Then at the trial of the action before Kekewich, J., Poisson asked by his pleadings for an order for the delivery of the recipe to him, and by amendment that Turvey should shew it to him. Notwithstanding that the judgment gave no such relief, but merely a declaration as to the interests of the parties in the remedy. So the plaintiff is in a difficult position in coming to ask the court now for a remedy which he failed to obtain on that occasion. For these reasons I do not see my way to make a positive order on Turvey to shew the paper. This is, however, without prejudice to any subsequent application.

Solicitors, J. A. Maxwell; Maurice Moseley.

Chan. Div.
Swinfen Eady, J. } Dec. 6, 7.

In re THE SPIRAL GLOBE (LIMITED). (a.)

Company—Debentures—Extension of time for registration—Companies Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 48), s. 15 —Application subsequent to resolution for voluntary winding up—Form of order.

An application for an order under section 15 of the Companies Act, 1900, extending the time for registration of debentures was not made until after the passing of a special resolution for the voluntary winding up of the company and the appointment of a liquidator.

Held, that the principle of Crew v. Cummings, 36 W. R. 908, 21 Q. B. D. 420, and In re Parsons, Ex parte Furber, 41 W. R. 468, [1893] 2 Q. B. 122, extended to cases in which the rights of third parties had actually accrued and might be prejudicially affected if registration were allowed without protecting those rights. The order was consequently made "without prejudice to the rights of parties acquired prior to the time when such debentures shall be actually registered."

This was an application under section 15 of the Companies Act, 1900, by the holders of debentures in the Spiral Globe (Limited) for an extension of the time within which such debentures might be registered.

Mark Romer, for the debenture-holders.

Harold Simmons, for the voluntary liquidator.

The facts and arguments adopted by counsel appear sufficiently in the judgment.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 7.—The following written judgment was delivered by

SWINFEN EADY, J.—This was an application of Messrs. William Watson & Co., bankers, and Thomas Edward Vickers, made under section 15 of the Companies Act, 1900, to extend the time for registration of ten debentures of £100 each, numbered 11 to 20 inclusive, and forming part of a series of twenty like debentures created by the company, on the ground that the omission to register was due to inadvertence. The company was incorporated in the year, 1897, and by a resolution of the board of directors passed on the 28th of August, 1900, it was determined to authorize the issue at par of debentures of £100 each to the amount of £2,000. At a meeting of the board on the 31st of August, 1900, the form of debenture was submitted and approved, and it was resolved that the seal be affixed to twenty debentures of £100 each bearing interest at 6 per cent., and the same were sealed accordingly, such debentures all ranking pari passu and being charged upon the whole of the assets and undertaking of the company by way of floating charge. On the 24th of September, 1900, the company issued to Messrs. William Watson & Co. ten of the debentures, but the balance—those numbered 11 to 20—which are the subject of the present application, were not then issued. On the 3rd of January, 1901, it was resolved that the remaining ten debentures be deposited with the company's bankers, Messrs. William Watson & Co., and this was done on the 5th of January, 1901, the debentures being so deposited as security for an overdraft. Subsequently in February, 1901, it was arranged that Mr. Thomas Edward Vickers should advance to the company £500 in part discharge of the company's overdraft and receive in respect thereof five of the ten last mentioned debentures, and this was done. On the 18th of April, 1901, the company passed a special resolution for winding up voluntarily and a liquidator was appointed. On the 3rd of July, 1901, Messrs. William Watson & Co., on behalf of themselves and all other holders of mortgage debentures, commenced an action for the purpose of enforcing all the debentures, and on the 30th of July, 1901, judgment was pronounced in the matter directing the usual accounts and inquiries. In prosecuting the inquiries under the judgment it transpired that the debentures issued on the 5th of January, 1901, had not been registered pursuant to section 14 of the Companies Act, 1900.

(a.) Reported by L. W. BYRNE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

I am satisfied that the omission to register was due to inadvertence and am willing to make an order extending the time, but with the addition of the words "This order to be without prejudice to the rights of parties acquired prior to the time when such debentures shall be actually registered." Mr. Romer, for the applicants, said that an order in this form would probably be of little use to him, having regard to the winding up and the appointment of a liquidator, and asked to have those words omitted, and contended, further, that the omission to register could only have prejudiced the position of creditors who had become such since the issue of the debentures, and that at all events the order should only preserve the rights of such creditors, and should not extend to persons who were creditors of the company when the debentures were issued, or to the liquidator. In support of his argument he referred to Crew v. Cummings, 36 W. R. 908, 21 Q. B. D. 420, and In re Parsons, Ex parte Furber, 41 W. R. 468, [1893] 2 Q. B. 122, cases decided under the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, and which did not appear to have been referred to in the recent case before Buckley, J., of In re Joplin's Brewery Co. (Limited), ante, p. 75, [1901] W. N. 216. These cases, he contended, showed that the object of section 14 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (which is in pari materia with section 15 of the Companies Act, 1900), was only to protect the rights of persons in whom any property of the mortgagor had actually vested before the registration of the debentures. I am unable to accept this view. It is true that on the winding up of a company the property does not become vested in the liquidator as it does become vested in the trustee of a bankrupt on the bankruptcy of an individual. But the principle of the cases before referred to is not limited in its application to those cases in which the ownership of or property in goods or chattels has actually changed; it extends, in my judgment, to cases in which the rights of third persons have actually accrued and in which they would be prejudicially affected, if registration were allowed without saving and protecting those rights. Upon a winding up the rights of the whole body of the company's creditors have intervened, and this position of the liquidator, and through him, of all the general creditors of the company, would now be very much prejudiced if the time for registration were unconditionally extended; the company being now in liquidation, the difficulty cannot be avoided by issuing fresh debentures. The order will therefore be made, but with the addition of the words before mentioned.

Solicitor, J. J. Hands, for all parties.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Darling and Channell, JJ.) — Nov. 20.

REX v. JUSTICES OF ESSEX. (a.)

Poor law—Rating—Appeal—Valuation list—Appeal against subsequent rate—Second notice of objection to assessment committee—Union Assessment Committee Amendment Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 39), s. 1.

By 27 & 28 Vict. c. 39, s. 1, it is enacted that before any appeal shall be heard by any special or quarter sessions against a poor rate, the appellant shall give twenty-one days' notice in writing previous to the special or quarter sessions to which such appeal is to be made of the intention to appeal, and the grounds thereof, to the assessment committee: provided, that no person shall be empowered to appeal to any sessions against a poor rate made in conformity with the valuation list approved by the committee, unless he shall have given the committee notice of objection against the list, and shall have failed to obtain such relief in the matter as he deems just.

The appellants, having been assessed in May, 1900, to a poor rate in conformity with a valuation list, gave notice of their objection to the list, and the committee reduced the assessment but refused to do so to the extent claimed by the appellants. The appellants then appealed to special sessions, when the assessment was still further reduced, but not to the extent claimed by the appellants. A subsequent rate was made in October, 1900, which was not appealed against. In May, 1901, another poor rate was made, under which the appellants were assessed on the valuation decided by the justices in special sessions. The appellants appealed to quarter sessions against this rate, but gave no fresh notice to the committee, of objection to the valuation list upon which this rate was made. The justices refused to hear the appeal, on the ground that no proper notice had been given to the committee.

Held, on a rule for a mandamus to the justices, that no proper notice of objection to the valuation list had been given to the assessment committee before the second appeal was brought, and therefore such appeal could not be heard. Under section 1 of the Act of 1864 it is a condition precedent to an appeal that the appellant shall make an objection before the committee to the valuation list.

Where there is a second rate and a second appeal a second notice of objection to the valuation list must be given.

Reg. v. Great Western Railway Co., 17 W. R. 670, L. R. 4 Q. B. 323, followed.

Rule calling on the justices of Essex to show cause why a writ of mandamus should not issue to them commanding them to enter continuances and hear and determine an appeal of Messrs. F. & B. Tolhurst & Cox against a rate or assessment made for the relief of the poor of the parish of Prittlewell, in the

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Rochford Union, in the county of Essex, on the 4th of May, 1901.

The following facts appear from the affidavit on which the rule was granted:

In June, 1900, the appellants' premises were assessed, under a poor rate made on the 8th of May, at the gross estimated rental of £180 and at the rateable value of £160.

Being dissatisfied with this assessment the appellants on the 23rd of June, 1900, duly gave notice of their objection to the list, and on the 5th of September, 1900, the assessment was reduced to £150 gross estimated rental and £135 rateable value, but the assessment committee refused to reduce the assessment to the extent claimed by the appellants—namely, to £90 gross estimated rental and £81 rateable value.

Being still dissatisfied they appealed to the justices in special sessions, assembled in pursuance of section 6 of 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 96, against the above rate, and on the 6th of November, 1900, the appeal was heard, and the justices determined not to reduce the assessment of the premises to the extent claimed by the appellants, but they amended the rate by reducing such assessments to £130 gross estimated rental and £117 rateable value.

A poor rate made the 26th of October, 1900, was the rate which was current at the date this appeal was heard, and the next poor rate made thereafter was dated the 4th of May, 1901, the rate now appealed from.

By this rate the appellants were assessed in respect of their premises as follows: gross estimated rental, £130; rateable value, £117.

On the 12th of June, 1901, they gave notice of appeal against this rate on the grounds that their premises were assessed at sums exceeding the true gross estimated rental and rateable value thereof; that there were certain other specified premises in respect of which the respective occupiers were assessed in the said rate unfairly and incorrectly, and at sums less than the true gross estimated rentals and rateable values thereof, and that certain other rateable hereditaments, in respect of which the occupiers were liable to be rated were omitted from the said rate.

On the 3rd of July, 1901, at the general quarter sessions, the appeal came on for hearing, when the following preliminary objections were made on behalf of the respondents: (1) That as regards the first of the said grounds of appeal, the appellants were concluded by the finding of the special sessions on the 6th day of November, 1900, that finding not having been appealed against, and being, therefore, binding and conclusive under section 6 of 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 96. (2) That, as regards the same ground of appeal, the appellants were not entitled to appeal to quarter sessions against the said rate without again objecting before the assessment committee to the valuation list on which the rate was based, the appellants not having so objected since they made an objection on the 23rd of June, 1900. (3) That, as regards the second and third of the grounds of appeal, the appellants could not be heard, because they had not at any time objected to the valuation list on any of such grounds.

The court of quarter sessions allowed the objections and dismissed the appeal.

No alteration in the premises or in the value thereof had taken place, or had been alleged by the overseers to have taken place, since the appellants objected to the assessment. The appellants did not object before the assessment committee to the assessments of the premises which they alleged were insufficiently rated, or to the omission from the valuation list of the hereditaments which they alleged were liable to be rated, because they considered they were not required by section 1 of the Union Assessment Committee Amendment Act, 1864, to make such objection before appealing to quarter sessions against a poor rate on the ground of the inadequacy of the assessments of other persons, or the omission from the rate of the premises of other persons, and that the committee would not be authorized to grant the appellants the relief they claimed in relation thereto.

Avory, K.C. (J. C. Earle with him), for the assessment committee, showed cause.—The rule should be discharged. This was a second appeal against a second rate, and no notice has been given in respect thereof to the assessment committee. Section 1 of the Union Assessment Committee Amendment Act, 1864, enacts that "no person shall be empowered to appeal to any sessions against a poor rate made in conformity with the valuation list approved of by such committee unless he shall have given to such committee notice of objection against the said list, and shall have failed to obtain such relief in the matter as he deems just." The justices at quarter sessions were therefore right in refusing to hear the appeal on that ground. In the case of Reg. v. The Great Western Railway Co., 17 W. R. 670, L. R. 4 Q. B. 323, the appellants, having been assessed to a poor rate in conformity with a valuation list, gave notice to the committee of their objection to the list, but the committee refused to alter the list, and on appeal the rate was confirmed, subject to a case. While the case was pending a second rate was made in conformity with the list which remained unaltered as to the appellants, and the appellants having given the twenty-one days' notice of appeal against the rate to the committee, applied to the quarter sessions to enter the appeal against the second rate, without having given a fresh notice to the committee of objection to the list, and it was held by the court (Cockburn, C.J., Mellor, Lush, and Hayes, JJ.) that a fresh notice of objection to the list was a condition precedent to the right to enter the appeal against the second rate. That is a decision which governs the present case and should be followed. It is true that in subsequent cases some doubt has been thrown upon that decision, but it is still a binding authority on this court. In Reg. v. The Justices of Wiltshire, 4 Q. B. D. 326, 27 W. R. Dig. 151, it was held that an appellant who has given notice of objection to the valuation list and failed to obtain relief before a rate is made in conformity with the list is not bound by section 1 of 27 & 28 Vict. c. 39 to give a fresh notice of objection to the list after the rate is made in order to be entitled to appeal. That case is distinguishable from the present case. In The Queen v. The Justices of Derbyshire, 19 W. R. 934, the appellants objected to the valuation list, a rate was made, the objection was subsequently heard, and a deduction made. The appellants, however, were dissatisfied with the deduction and gave notice of appeal against the original rate, but did not give the assessment committee any notice of appeal or further objection, and it was held that they were entitled to have their appeal heard. That, again, is not the present case. In the case of Reg. v. Justices of Denbighshire, 33 W. R. 784, 15 Q. B. D. 451, the Great Western Railway case was discussed, and to an extent doubted; but that case is distinguishable from the present one: see also Reg. v. Justices of Kent, 19 W. R. 205, L. R. 6 Q. B. 132. None of those cases, however, go so far as to say that Reg. v. Great Western Railway Co. was wrongly decided. It has never been overruled and is still good law.

Mackenzie, K.C. (Alex. Glen with him), in support of the rule.—The magistrates at quarter sessions should have heard the appeal. Notice of objection to the valuation list had already been given to the assessment committee, and that one notice is sufficient. This is an attempt to set the case of Reg. v. Great Western Railway on its legs again. That case has long been doubted, and the cases already cited on the other side go to show that it should not be relied on. Reg. v. Justices of Denbighshire is a clear authority in support of such contention. There it was held that a person who has once given to the assessment committee notice of objection against a valuation list and failed to obtain such relief as he deems just, may appeal to quarter sessions against any subsequent poor rate made in conformity with the list, and section 1 of the Act of 1864 does not make it a condition precedent of such appeal that previously thereto he should repeat his application to the committee for relief. Thus the solitary authority on the other side is disposed of. In Reg. v. Justices of Essex, 43 W. R. 183, [1895] 1 Q. B. 38, Lopes, L J., at p. 42, referring to Reg. v. Justices of Denbighshire, says: "It was a decision under section 1 of the Act. Speaking for myself, I think that case was rightly decided on that section." As to the point that the justices could not listen to the appeal because the appellant had not taken the third parties before the assessment committee there was no need to do so as the committee have no jurisdiction to deal with them, and, therefore, the justices were wrong in refusing to hear the appeal on that ground: Reg. v. London and North-Western Railway Co., 25 W. R. 59; Reg. v. Price 62 L. J. M. C. 71, 41 W. R. Dig. 165. The answer to the last point is to be found in section 18 of the Union Assessment Committee Act, 1862. That section is not repealed by the Act of 1864: see also Reg. v. Langriville, 33 W. R. 213, 14 Q. B. D. 83; Reigate Union v. South-Eastern Railway Co., 42 W. R. 585, [1894] 1 Q. B. 411.

Alex. Glen followed.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—This rule was moved upon three grounds: firstly, because there had been an appeal to special sessions, which was final in the sense of binding the value for the purpose of that particular valuation list, whatever rates might be made under it. That point is not and could not be insisted upon, because it is quite clear there may be subsequent proceedings. The second ground was that no proper notice had been given; and the third ground was that the notice which was given included the undervaluation of other people, and the omission of certain hereditaments which, it was admitted, had not been before the assessment committee at all.

I think that the objection that no proper notice was given is a good objection and that the rule ought to be discharged, because there was not a proper notice of objection to the assessment committee before the second appeal was brought.

I think that when the authorities are carefully considered it will be seen that there is really no discrepancy between them. The substance of them is that under section 1 of the Union Assessment Committee Amendment Act, 1864, if you have been before the assessment committee and have failed to obtain relief in respect of the matter which you are making the subject of the appeal, then you need not go before the assessment committee again; but unless that is the real state of things it is a condition precedent to the appeal that you shall have gone before the assessment committee and have failed to obtain relief, and you shall not be empowered to appeal unless you have done so.

The case of Reg. v. The Great Western Railway Co. is a distinct authority that where there is a second rate, and a second appeal, a second notice shall be given. It is said that that case has been doubted and is no longer to be regarded as law and is inconsistent with Reg v. The Justices of Denbighshire. Of course if that were the true view we should be bound by it, but I do not think that any of the criticisms upon Reg. v. The Great Western Railway touch the substance of it.

It is true that in the case of Reg. v. The Justices of Wiltshire Cockburn, C.J., said that the discussion in that case had somewhat shaken his confidence in the correctness of his decision in Reg. v. Great Western Railway Co., but in each of those cases the real question was entirely different from that in the Great Western Railway case.

In Reg. v. Justices of Wiltshire it was decided that you need not go a second time before the assessment committee on the same rate; that is to say, where you have been before the assessment committee, and a rate is made and you determine to appeal, you having een before the assessment committee with regard to the valuation on which that rate is founded, need not go before them a second time. The case of Reg. v. Justices of Denbighshire went a little further, and said that where you have been before the assessment committee and have got a certain amount of relief, but you are not satisfied, and you intend to appeal, you need not go a second time before them because you have not got the relief which you asked for, and to which you think you are entitled.

Then came the case of Reg. v. The Justices of Denbighshire, and the real decision there was, I think, this and this only, that where a rate is made, which is the first effective rate after any relief which you have obtained from the assessment committee, then you can appeal without going before them a second time. In other words, that case is only a development under slightly different circumstances of the two cases of Reg. v. Justices of Wiltshire and Reg. v. Justices of Denbighshire. That being so I think the case of Reg. v. Great Western Railway Co. is applicable to a second appeal, and the subsequent cases show that persons must fulfil, with regard to that state of circumstances, the conditions of section 1 of the Act of 1864. This seems to me to be most reasonable. Valuation lists in the country are not like valuation lists in London. They last for a considerable number of years until someone is minded to have the parish re-valued. Circumstances may alter. A man goes before an assessment committee immediately after the rate is made and he either gets relief or he does not. If he does not get relief he need not appeal; he may pay and years may go on, and then the circumstances in the parish or the character of the land alters and he thinks that he ought to be rated at a lower rate. Under those circumstances it would be a monstrous thing that that man should not go before the assessment committee again, especially when that committee may be responsible for and made to pay the costs.

I think the present case is a much stronger case for saying that where there is a subsequent rate and a subsequent set of proceedings the formalities of section 1 must be fulfilled.

In this case everything with regard to the May rate of 1900 was over. There was an October rate, against which there might possibly have been an appeal, but which was paid. Then in May, 1901, after a period of twelve months, the appellant is minded to raise the question again in respect of a subsequent rate. In my opinion, as poor rates are made from year to year and you have a right to appeal if you think fit, you must, having that right, fulfil the provisions of the section. With regard to the third point—namely, that the notice which was given included the undervaluation of other people and the omission of certain other hereditaments from the rate, I propose to express no opinion, beyond saying that I think it is an extremely difficult point, and one which will have to be argued in some case where it is necessary to decide it. There are authorities which assume that the only means of raising other persons valuations and including omitted hereditaments is by a proceeding under section 18 of the Union Assessment Committee Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 103), and there are authorities which follow the view that the Act of 1864, by necessary implication, gives the assessment committee power to summon the people before them and deal with the matter on a representation by a person who is going to appeal. I think there is a great deal to be said for both views. It is not, however, necessary to decide the point, and I must not be supposed to be expressing any opinion upon it in this particular case. I decide this case on the ground that no proper notice of objection was given to the assessment committee, and, in the words of the section, that there was no failure to obtain relief. I think the rule should be discharged.

DARLING, J.—I am of the same opinion.

CHANNELL, J.—I agree.

Rule discharged with costs.

Solicitors for the Assessment Committee, Kingsford, Dormer, & Co., for W. & F. Gregson, Southend-on-Sea.

Solicitors for the appellants, Sismay & Cook, for B. & F. Tolhurst & Cox, Southend-on-Sea.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Darling and Channell, JJ.) Nov. 10.

JONES v. HUMPHREY. (a.)

Practice—Assignment of debt—Moneys to become due—Salary—Unascertained amount—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 25, sub-section 6.

By a document in writing entered into between one J. Kerr and the plaintiff it was stated that Kerr did thereby assign to the plaintiff "so much and such part of my income, salary, and other emoluments" from the defendant and other sources "to which I am now or may at any time hereafter become entitled, as shall be necessary and requisite for payment to you of the sum of £22 10s., or for any further or other sums in which I may at any time hereafter become indebted to you, to hold the same for your own use absolutely."

In an action by the plaintiff as assignee of a chose in action under the Judicature Act, 1873, to recover the sum of £24, being two months' salary alleged to be due by the defendant to the said Kerr,

Held, that the document could not be sued upon, as it was not a sufficiently absolute assignment within the meaning of section 25, sub-section 6, of the above Act, there being no definite or ascertained sum thereby assigned.

Appeal from county court.

This was an appeal from his Honour Judge Lumley Smith, K.C., sitting at the Westminster County Court.

The action was brought by the plaintiff as assignee of a chose in action under the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25, sub-section 6, to recover the sum of £24, being two months' salary alleged to be due by the defendant, a schoolmaster, to one James Kerr, an assistant schoolmaster in his employ.

On the 24th of May, 1900, the said James Kerr made the following assignment to the plaintiff:

"In consideration of £15 this day advanced by you to me I do hereby assign, sell, and transfer to you, the said Julius Jones, so much and such part of my income, salary, and other emoluments from Leonard Humphrey, of 101, Windsor-road, Forest Gate, the proprietor of the Commercial College, Forest Gate, and from the East Ham School Board, or from any other source whatsoever to which I am now or may at any time hereafter become entitled as shall be necessary and requisite for payment to you of the sum of £22 10s. or for any further or other sums in which I may at any time hereafter become indebted to you, to have, hold, receive, and take the same for your own use absolutely. (Signed) James Kerr."

Notice of the assignment was duly given by the plaintiff to the defendant on the 30th of October, 1900, since which date the said sum, and upwards, was alleged to have accrued due from the defendant to Kerr for salary earned, and it was alleged that Kerr, at the date of the writ, was indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of £28 0s. 6d. Kerr was not a party to the action.

The learned county court judge was of opinion that under the assignment the defendant could not, without taking the account between Kerr and the plaintiff, know for certain what was assigned and how much he ought to pay to the plaintiff and how much to Kerr; and that to bring a case within section 25, sub-section 6, of the Judicature Act, 1873, there must be something definite and ascertained, and not fluctuating and requiring the taking of accounts, and he therefore gave judgment for the defendant.

From that decision the plaintiff now appealed.

R. Bray, K.C. (Montague Lush with him), for the appellant.—The question here is whether this assignment is a good equitable assignment within section 25, sub-section 6, of the Judicature Act, 1873. It is submitted that it is so. Notwithstanding that one part might be bad as being against public policy—which is not admitted—yet the remainder of the assignment is not necessarily bad. It is a good assignment so far as the defendant is concerned, and the amount assigned is sufficiently defined and ascertained. In Tailby v. Official Receiver, 37 W. R. 513, 13 App. Cas. 523, it was held that an assignment of future book debts was sufficiently defined, and that it passed the equitable interest in all book debts incurred after the assignment. In Brice v. Bannister, 26 W. R. 670, 3 Q. B. D. 569, it was held that there might be a valid assignment of moneys to become due in the future, and that decision is referred to by Chitty, L.J., at p. 773, in his judgment in the case of Durham Brothers v. Robertson, [1898] 1 Q. B. 765, 46 W. R. Dig. 9. This court is bound by the decision of Coleridge, L.C.J., and Lindley, J., in the former case, that part of a future debt is assignable. In the present case there was an absolute assignment and not a mere charge on the salary. As regards the point whether this assignment is bad as against public policy, an assignment may be good in part and bad in part, and yet be held good. An assignment is divisible both as an absolute assignment or an equitable assignment: In re Clarke, Coombe v. Carter, 36 W. R. 293, 36 Ch. D. 348.

Counsel also referred to Clements v. Matthews, 11 Q. B. D. 808, 31 W. R. Dig. 23, and Mercantile Bank of London (Limited) v. Evans, [1899] 2 Q. B. 613, 48 W. R. Dig. 145.

The respondent.—In this case the plaintiff has obtained judgment against Kerr, therefore the original debt is altogether gone, and another debt, the judgment debt, substituted. Further, there was no absolute assignment, but only a charge. You cannot in law or equity assign that which does not exist. Jessel, M.R., in Collyer v. Isaacs, 30 W. R. 70, 19 Ch. D. 142, at p. 151, says, "A man cannot in equity, any more than at law, assign what has no existence." A sum that is not due cannot be assigned; there can only be a contract to assign it: see also Ex parte Nicholls, In re Jones, 31 W. R. 661, 22 Ch. D. 782. Lastly, it is against public policy to assign a weekly salary in such a case as this, where there exists a duty to the state on the part of the man to support a wife and family.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Montague Lush, in reply, referred to Walker v. Bradford Old Bank (Limited), 32 W. R. 644, 12 Q. B. D. 511, and Comfort v. Betts, 39 W. R. 595, [1891] 1 Q. B. 737.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—I think there is no doubt that an absolute assignment of future debts, and also an assignment of so much out of future debts may both be good assignments under the Judicature Act, 1873, but in order to bring a case within that Act you must be able to find from the document an assignment of a definite debt so that the debtor may know how much he has to pay to the assignee, on receiving notice of the assignment. We have been asked to say that the assignment is good as to the £22 even if the rest of the document is bad, but I have great doubt whether the argument as to divisibility applies to this document at all; but, looking at the document as a whole, I agree with the learned county court judge that it is not a sufficiently absolute assignment under the statute. It is clear, on looking at the document, that it cannot be said to be an absolute assignment of any definite sum; it says, "I do hereby assign to you so much and such part of my salary as shall be necessary for payment to you of the sum of £22 10s." In my opinion the legal purport of this document is much more in the nature of a charge than an assignment. It does not purport to assign any definite thing, but only so much as may be necessary to pay a certain debt, and I have come to the conclusion I have arrived at on that ground—namely, that nothing definite is assigned. I therefore think this appeal should be dismissed.

DARLING, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think it is impossible to say exactly what was purported to be assigned by this document. It appears to me that no ascertained debt has been assigned by it. The sum affected might be any part of what the defendant owed to Kerr—or it might be more. I do not know of any authority for saying that the assignment of part of a debt comes within the Judicature Act of 1873.

CHANNELL, J.—I agree. I am clearly of opinion that by the document in question there was not an assignment of an entire debt nor of any ascertained part of a debt.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors for the appellant, Ralph Raphael & Co.

Solicitors for the respondent, Emmanuel & Simmonds.

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. Probate. } Dec. 5.

BIRCH v. BIRCH AND ANOTHER. (a.)

*Probate—Grant of—Allegation of fraud—*Res judicata —Parties having interest in suit.

Although fraud be not alleged against any party to a probate suit in which judgment has been given, nevertheless an action may be maintained to set aside the judgment, on the ground that it was obtained by fraud by a person interested under the suit.

Motion.

This was a motion by the defendants to dismiss the action on the ground that the subject-matter thereof was res judicata.

Bargrave Deane, K.C., and Pritchard, in support, cited Wytcherley v. Andrews, 19 W. R. 1015, L. R. 2 P. & D. 327; Priestman v. Thomas, 32 W. R. 842, 9 P. D. 70, 210; Barnesley v. Powell, 1 Ves. Sen. 119.

Inderwick, K.C., and Willock, contra.—The only way that a judgment, alleged to have been obtained by fraud, can be called in question after the time for appealing against it has gone by is by an action. They cited Flower v. Lloyd, 25 W. R. 793, 6 Ch. D. 297, 27 W. R. 496, 10 Ch. D. 327; Cole v. Langford, [1898] 2 Q. B. 36, 46 W. R. Dig. 133; Wyatt v. Palmer, 47 W. R. 549, [1899] 2 Q. B. 106.

Richards, for Henry Guise, followed.

BARNES, J., in delivering judgment, said that it appeared that two actions had been brought in this court, the first one on the 12th of December, 1899, by Ada Rose Guise, and a second one on the 16th of December, 1899, by Edwin Birch against Walter George Birch, and these actions had been consolidated. On the 14th of June, 1899, letters of administration of the estate of the deceased, Arthur Birch, had been granted to Walter George Birch, Jesse Joseph Birch, and Edwin Birch, the brothers of the intestate, he having died on the 18th of April, 1899. The plaintiff claimed revocation of the letters of administration, and set up a will of the 8th of December, 1897. The defendants set up a will of the 18th of December, 1897. On the 20th of February, 1900, Ada Rose Guise delivered a defence supporting the claim of the plaintiffs in the second action for revocation of the grant. Walter Birch pleaded that the alleged wills of the 8th and 18th of December, 1897, were not duly executed, and were not signed by the deceased or by anyone at his direction. The plaintiffs, in the second action, in their reply, traversed the allegations of the defence, and on the 22nd of June, 1900, the case was tried by the President. The witnesses to the will were not called because they could not be found, but Henry Guise, the husband of Ada Rose Guise, was called, and gave evidence to the effect that he had found a certain man who was a witness to the instructions of the will. That man was also called as a witness. It appeared that when Henry Guise was making his inquiries he was acting on behalf of his wife, Ada Rose, and was taking care of her interest. He also was an executor under the will of his wife's sister. The President pronounced for the will of the 18th of December, 1897, and ordered the letters of administration which had been granted on the 14th of June, 1899, to be revoked. On the 26th of June, 1901, a writ was issued by Walter George Birch, and he alleged in his statement of claim that the judgment had been obtained by fraud, and that, at the instigation of

(a.) Reported by GWYNNE HALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Henry Guise, the will of the 18th of December, 1897, had been forged. He went on to say that the man who had been a party to the fraud had gone to America and had written from there describing the circumstances under which the pretended will was executed, and he claimed that the judgment should be set aside. A motion was then made to dismiss the action, but it was twice adjourned, first to enable the plaintiff to file his statement of claim, and, secondly, because the court directed that what was asserted in the statement of claim should be put on affidavit. The plaintiff had now sworn that the originals of the letter and confession were, as he was informed and believed, in the hands of the commissioner of the police, and investigations had been and still were being made with reference to them by the authorities at Scotland-yard, and it was upon information and evidence collected and obtained by them and by his solicitor that he had commenced the action, and that he was informed and believed that the contents of his statement of claim were true. It appeared also that Henry Guise was a party to an action in Chancery in connection with the administration of the estate in which the plaintiff, Walter George Birch, was a defendant, and he submitted that Henry Guise should be made a defendant in this suit as he was materially interested in supporting the will. Now the counsel for the defendants in this action contended that such a suit would not lie, but the court thought that from the cases of Barnesley v. Powell, Wyatt v. Palmer, and Priestman v. Thomas, the suit could be maintained. The substance of the case in Barnesley v. Powell was summed up in a marginal note thus—"There may be relief against a decree obtained by fraud. Against a probate obtained by fraud relief must be here"—i.e., in Chancery. The learned judge also referred to Mitford on Pleadings, where the following passage occurs: "If a decree has been obtained by fraud, it may be impeached by original bill without the leave of the court" (5th ed., p. 112). It should, of course, be clearly borne in mind that fraud in obtaining a will was one thing and fraud in obtaining probate of it was another. It was argued that where no fraud had been alleged against a party to the suit, the matter could not be reopened, but that was certainly not so in probate suits, for many persons who were not parties to the suit were bound by the decree: Wytcherley v. Andrews. It followed that a number of persons might be interested who were not parties to the suit, and it followed from that that if someone interested was guilty of fraud it affected the whole litigation, for, to take a hypothetical case, if a will was to be put forward and executors named in it and witnesses were procured the executors might propound the will in all innocency although it had been obtained by fraud. It would be absurd to allow that document to stand. It was undoubtedly clear that Mr. Guise had an interest in the suit and was acting in his wife's interests and she had left the matter in his hands. If fraud was established then they would not be entitled under the will, but the court particularly wished not to express an opinion one way or the other on the merits of the case and desired to confine itself simply to observing that, the plaintiff having sworn to the facts that he had, the the case must be allowed to proceed, and this motion must be refused, the question of costs being reserved, and Henry Guise must be added as a defendant.

Leave to appeal was given.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, E. W. Reeves.

Solicitor for the defendant, McKie Sharp.

Solicitor for parties cited, J. W. Reid.

Court of Appeal.

From K. B. Div. (Collins, M.R., and Stirling and Mathew, L.JJ.) — Nov. 28, 29.

HAMILTON-RUSSELL v. COMMISSIONERS OF INLAND REVENUE. (a.)

Inland revenue—Stamp duty—Settlement—Instrument of appointment—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 6, sub-sections 1 and 2—First Schedule, "Settlement"—Exemption.

By a deed of settlement dated the 26*th of June*, 1895, the settlor granted to trustees certain funds, and by a deed dated the 12*th of December*, 1896, certain other funds, upon trust for his five children, but so nevertheless that the share of each child should be held by the trustees upon trust to pay the income thereof to such child during his or her life, and after his or her death upon trust for such one or more of the others as such child should by will appoint, and in default of appointment for the other children in equal shares. It was further provided that the trustees should have power, on or subsequent to the marriage of any of the children, to revoke the trusts of the settlement and to declare, as they thought fit, new trusts by way of resettlement for the benefit of such child, or any wife or husband of such child, or such child's children or remoter issue, or the next-of-kin of such child, but not in favour of any other person or persons, and to transfer the funds to the trustees of such settlement. These deeds were stamped with ad valorem duty as settlements.

By two deeds, both dated the 10*th of April*, 1899, the trustees of the settlements of the 26*th of June*, 1895, and the 12*th of December*, 1896, revoked the trusts of those settlements so far as they concerned the share of C. E. H.-R., one of the children, who was then about to be married, and declared that such share should, from and after the solemnization of the intended marriage, be held upon trust to pay the income thereof to C. E. H.-R. during his life, and after his decease to transfer such share to the trustees of the marriage settlement of C. E. H.-R., to be held by them upon the trusts declared in the marriage settlement. These deeds were each stamped with a duty of ten shillings.

By the marriage settlement, a deed of even date with the two last-mentioned deeds, it was provided that after the death of C. E. H.-R. the trustees of the settlement should stand possessed of his share of the funds comprised in the settlement of the 26*th of June*, 1895, and the 12*th of December*, 1896, upon the trusts of the settlement, which were, as regards the husband's fund, after the death of the husband, to pay the income to the intended wife during her life, and after her death upon trust for the children or remoter issue of the intended marriage as the intending husband and wife jointly, or the survivor of them, should appoint, and in default of appointment in trust for the children in equal shares.

Held, that the marriage settlement was not, as regards the share of C. E. H.-R. in the funds comprised in the settlements of the 26*th of June*, 1895, and the 12*th of December*, 1896, exempt from the payment of settlement duty, either under the exemption under the heading "Settlement" in the First Schedule to the Stamp Act, 1891, or under section 106, sub-section 1, of the Act.

Decision of the Divisional Court, 49 W. R. 569, affirmed.

This was an appeal by Claud Eustace Hamilton-Russell from the decision of the Divisional Court on a case stated by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue.

(a.) Reported by R. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The facts of the case fully appear in the court below: see 49 W. R. 569.

Ingpen, K.C. (A. Dunham with him), for the appellant.

Sir R. B. Finlay and S. A. T. Rowlatt, for the respondents.

The arguments of counsel sufficiently appear in the following judgments.

COLLINS, M.R.—I am of opinion that this appeal should be dismissed. The question arises out of a settlement made in 1895 whereby property was given to trustees in their absolute discretion "at the request of any of the said five children either in contemplation of marriage or subsequently to marriage, to revoke the trusts hereinbefore declared concerning such child's settled share, and by way of settlement to declare such new or other trusts of and concerning the same as the trustees or trustee may think fit for the benefit of all or any to the exclusion of the others or other of the following persons—namely, such child or any wife or husband of such child or such child's children or remoter issue or the next-of-kin of such child, but not in favour of any other person or persons, and on any such resettlement such child's settled share may be transferred to trustees appointed by any such resettlement."

In 1899 another instrument was executed whereby the last-named instrument was revoked, and, by way of resettlement, it was declared that the one-fifth share of the appellant, in view of his intended marriage, "should from and after the solemnization of the said intended marriage be held upon trust to pay the income thereof to the said Claud Eustace Hamilton-Russell during his life and after his decease to pay or transfer at such time and in such manner as is hereinafter agreed and declared the capital of the said one-fifth share or the investments for the time being representing the same to the trustees or trustee for the time being of a deed already engrossed bearing or intended to bear even date with these presents and made or intended to be made between the said Claud Eustace Hamilton-Russell of the first part, the said Maria Lindsay Wood of the second part, the said Sir Lindsay Wood of the third part, and the marriage settlement trustees of the fourth part, being the settlement made . . . in contemplation of the said intended marriage to be held by such trustees or trustee upon the trusts, and with and subject to the powers and provisions declared and contained concerning the same in the said deed."

There was an execution of the power by the trustees under the settlement of 1895, and an appointment in favour of the trustees of the marriage settlement. The marriage settlement was executed upon the same day—viz., the 10th of April, 1899, and the question now arises whether that document is one to which the exemption in the schedule of the Stamp Act, 1891, applies. The provision as to stamping a settlement contained in that schedule is as follows: "Any instrument, whether voluntary or upon any good or valuable consideration, other than a bonâ fide pecuniary consideration, whereby any definite and certain principal sum of money (whether charged or chargeable on lands or other hereditaments or heritable subjects or not, or to be laid out in the purchase of lands or other hereditaments or heritable subjects or not), or any definite and certain amount of stock, or any security, is settled or agreed to be settled in any manner whatsoever" shall bear a stamp duty of five shillings for every £100 or fractional part of £100 of the amount or value of the property settled or agreed to be settled.

It seems to me on the face of it that this marriage settlement is clearly an instrument whereby property "is settled or agreed to be settled in any manner whatsoever," and it, therefore, falls within the definition of "settlement," and becomes liable to the stamp duty imposed. It is said that rightly considered it falls within the exemption, which is in the following terms: "Instrument of appointment relating to any property in favour of persons specially named or described as the objects of a power of appointment, when duty has been duly paid in respect of the same property upon the settlement creating the power or the grant of representation of any will or testamentary instrument creating the power."

It seems to me that for an instrument to be an appointment it is necessary that the appointors—that is, the donors of the original power of appointment—should be parties to the instrument and should make the appointment; but in this case they are not parties to the settlement at all. The appointment that was made was effected by the deed of revocation which passed the property in question from the trustees of the original settlement to the trustees of the marriage settlement. In the marriage settlement there is no appointment at all, but there are provisions declaring what is to be done and what is to happen to the fund after the death of the tenant for life, provisions which are not to be found in terms in the deed of revocation.

Mr. Ingpen contended that if you want to find out what the terms are on which the trustees of the marriage settlement are to hold the fund, then you have only to look at that settlement to see what those terms are. But the power of appointment has been made, and the deed of revocation being an appointment made and executed, is itself under the exemption and is not to be stamped. The marriage settlement does not become the subject of stamp duty merely because in the deed of revocation its terms are referred to as the terms upon which the fund is held in trust by the trustees of the marriage settlement. But when we come to look at the settlement, we find that it is itself, as Mr. Rowlatt has pointed out, an instrument, and it unquestionably falls within the language of the provision as to "settlement" and the stamping of "settlement" in the schedule to the Act.

The parties have chosen for their own convenience to put into the form of a solemn instrument under seal the terms which prescribed what they were to do with the fund. They were not content with having the whole thing, the deed of revocation and the terms of the marriage settlement, all put into one instrument. Possibly if they had done that they would have been excused from the second stamp duty, and might have brought it under the provisions of the exemption; but they have not chosen to do so. They have had a marriage settlement drawn up in the ordinary way and embodied in a separate instrument, and unless they can bring it within the express terms of the exemption they must fail. That instrument is not, and cannot be, an appointment, for the appointors are not parties to the deed at all. It cannot be treated as a mere sheet of paper to be referred to, because they have chosen to embody it in a solemn instrument, and that instrument does not fall within the exemption, whereas it does, primâ facie, fall within the provisions of the Act. Upon that point, therefore, I am of opinion that the decision of the court below was perfectly right.

Another point was taken by Mr. Ingpen on section 106 of the Stamp Act. He says that by virtue of that section this instrument is relieved from taxation. That section says: "When several instruments are executed for effecting the settlement of the same property, and the ad valorem duty chargeable in respect of the settlement of the property exceeds ten shillings, one only of the instruments is to be charged with the ad valorem duty." Mr. Rowlatt has answered that point, it seems to me, effectually. He says that that section clearly contemplates one settlement dealing with the same property, to take place at the same time, not a series of instruments extending over years, and that it cannot have been intended to embrace a settlement carried out by instruments creating powers in the first instance and instruments executing those powers later on, otherwise there would be no need for the special exemption. On these grounds I think this appeal must be dismised.

STIRLING, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. It is sought by the Crown to charge the marriage settlement of the 10th of April, 1899, with stamp duty upon the ground that it is a settlement within the meaning of the Stamp Act, 1891. A settlement, shortly, is any instrument by which property "is settled or agreed to be settled in any manner whatsoever." Reading this document by itself do we find that it is an instrument by which the property in question "is settled or agreed to be settled"? It recites that the parties are the intended husband and wife, the father of the wife, and the trustees of the marriage settlement; it refers to a previous settlement of 1895 and to certain deeds made supplemental to this settlement, and it recites that "one-fifth share of the trust funds in the said settlement of 1895 . . . is held upon trust after the solemnization of the said intended marriage to pay the income thereof to the intended husband during his life and after his decease to pay or transfer the capital of the said one-fifth share or the investments for the time being representing the same to the trustees or trustee for the time being of these presents to be held upon the trusts and with and subject to the powers and provisions hereinafter declared and contained concerning the same." Then it goes on to recite that "upon treaty for the intended marriage it was agreed that such settlement should be made as is hereinafter contained"; and then it says: "This deed witnesseth that in pursuance of the said agreement and in consideration of the intended marriage the intended husband, the intended wife, and the said Sir Lindsay Wood do hereby respectively direct and the trustees do hereby declare and agree with the other parties hereto in manner following." Then clauses 9, 10, and 16 contain declarations of trust with respect to the fund in question.

Now upon the face of that document, reading it by itself it seems to me that it is an instrument by which this property is "agreed to be settled"; therefore, primâ facie, it is brought within the meaning of "settlement" in the Stamp Act, 1891; but from such "settlement" there is an exemption—viz., an "instrument of appointment relating to any property in favour of persons specially named or described as the objects of a power of appointment, where duty has been duly paid in respect of the same property upon the settlement creating the power or the grant of representation of any will or testamentary instrument creating the power." In order to see whether this property falls within that exemption we must look back to see what the deed of 1895 gave power to do and what has been done in the execution of that power. That settlement was for the benefit of five children, of whom the appellant was one, and there was contained this stipulation: "That it shall be lawful for the trustees or trustee in their, his, or her absolute discretion, at the request of any of the said five children either in contemplation of marriage or subsequently to marriage to revoke the trusts hereinbefore declared concerning such child's settled share, and by way of resettlement to declare such new or other trusts of and concerning the same as the trustees or trustee may think fit for the benefit of all or any to the exclusion of the others or other of the following persons—namely, such child or any wife or husband of such child or such child's children or remoter issue or the next-of-kin of such child."

Upon the occasion of this marriage the trustees thought fit to execute this power by a deed of the 10th of April, 1899, to which there are parties, firstly, the trustees of the settlement of 1895; secondly, the intended husband; and thirdly, the trustees of the marriage settlement; but not either the intended wife or her father, the latter of whom brought into the settlement a considerable sum of money. By this deed they revoked the trusts by the settlement of 1895 declared concerning the appellant's share "and by way of resettlement do hereby declare that the said one-fifth share of the trust funds in the settlement of 1896 comprised and thereby settled shall from and after the solemnization of the said intended marriage be held upon trust to pay the income thereof to the said Claud Eustace Hamilton-Russell during his life and after his decease to pay or transfer at such time and in such manner as is hereinafter agreed and declared the capital of the said one-fifth share or the investments for the time being representing the same to the trustees or trustee for the time being of a deed already engrossed bearing or intended to bear even date with these presents"—namely, the marriage settlement.

Then there comes an agreement on the part of the trustees to the deed of 1896 to transfer this property of the marriage settlement to trustees upon trust within six months after the death of the intended husband to be held by the trustees of the marriage settlement upon the trusts of the said deed of even date.

It appears to me that that document was an effectual resettlement of the share of the intended husband in those funds.

It is true that it does not in itself state all the trusts, but it refers to an existing written document in which those trusts are declared; and if nothing more had ever been done to that instrument it would still have been an effectual declaration of trust, and the deed engrossed and intended to be executed might have been referred to for the purpose of ascertaining what the trusts were. But matters did not rest there. The document which is referred to as the deed already engrossed and intended to be executed was executed, and we have to look and see what the effect of it is. In my opinion the effect of it is that it is brought within the definition of a "settlement" and that it does not fall within the exemption. It is an effective instrument of appointment relating to the appellant's share, and, therefore, it is quite right that it should not bear the ad valorem stamp, but that does not bar the claim of the Crown to the proper ad valorem stamp duty on the marriage settlement, which, in my judgment, is an instrument by which this property is "agreed to be settled." It was very fairly admitted by Mr. Rowlatt that if the trusts had been stated in full in the deed of revocation and resettlement the ad valorem stamp duty could not have been charged, but, nevertheless, the parties have seen fit to enter, in a separate instrument, into a solemn agreement under seal as to the trusts upon which this property is to be held, amounting to a resettlement, and having done so I think they cannot escape from the duty.

I have nothing at all to add as regards section 106, and I agree that the appeal ought to be dismissed.

MATHEW, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I think that the parties here intended that this marriage settlement should be a settlement within the meaning of the Stamp Act, 1891. It is agreed that if they had thought fit they might have inserted in the deed of revocation and new appointment all the limitations and all the provisions contained in the marriage settlement; and it is said that in that case no additional duty would be chargeable; but they elected not to take that course, and took what was clearly, I think, a convenient course under the circumstances—a course which probably was contemplated from the very first—viz., that when the marriage took place there should be a marriage settlement and trustees appointed under it who should know from that document alone what their duties were in reference to the property. Having, as it appears to me, elected to have this separate and independent instrument, they must pay the tax upon it. It is not within the terms of the exemption contained in the statute.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors for the appellant, Tarry, Sherlock, & King.

Solicitor for the respondents, Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

From K. B. Div. (Collins, M.R., and Stirling and Mathew, L.JJ.) — Nov. 27.

In re A SOLICITOR (a.)

Solicitor — Certificate — Registrar of Solicitors — Discretion of registrar to refuse certificate—Discretion of judge—Undischarged bankrupt—Solicitors Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73), ss. 23, 24.

The Registrar of Solicitors has no discretion to refuse to issue an annual practising certificate under section 23 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, on the ground that the solicitor applying for it is an undischarged bankrupt. Neither has the judge such a discretion under section 24 of that Act.

In re An Application under the Solicitors Act, 1843, 47 W. R. 575, overruled.

Appeal by a solicitor from a decision of a Divisional Court (Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Darling and Channell, JJ.) dismissing an appeal from the refusal of Jelf, J., to order the Registrar of Solicitors to issue to the appellant an annual practising certificate in pursuance of section 23 of the Solicitors Act, 1843.

The appellant was admitted a solicitor in 1871, and from that year until the year 1900 inclusive he had taken out continuously his practising certificate. He was still on the roll of solicitors, and no application had ever been made for his removal from it.

On the 11th of November, 1901, he applied to the Incorporated Law Society, who are by section 21 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, constituted the Registrar of Solicitors, for a renewal of his practising certificate, but the society refused the application on the ground that he was an undischarged bankrupt. The appellant applied to Jelf, J., at chambers under section 24 of the Solicitors Act for an order directing the Registrar of Solicitors to issue the certificate. He contended that the society had no discretion to refuse the renewal on the ground stated, or on any other ground than that stated in the Act, which, by section 23, provides that the registrar is to deliver the renewed certificate "unless he shall see cause and have reason to believe that the party applying for such certificate is not upon the said roll of attorneys or solicitors." Jelf, J., dismissed the application on the authority of the case of In re An Application under the Solicitors Act, 1843, 47 W. R. 575.

The Divisional Court affirmed the decision of Jelf, J. The appellant appealed to the Court of Appeal.

Page, K.C. (Muir Mackenzie with him), for the appellant.—The registrar has no discretion as to whether he shall issue a certificate or not. By section 23 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, he is bound to grant a certificate as a matter of course, except in the one case specified. The words of the exception evidently point to the case of some difficulty arising on a question of identity. If in consequence of any such difficulty the registrar refuses to issue a certificate, the solicitor may apply to a judge under section 24, and the judge may make such order in the matter as shall be just. But under that section the judge is bound to have regard to what the law is, and cannot refuse a certificate merely because the solicitor is an undischarged bankrupt. There is no law disqualifying bankrupts from practising. If one judge could withhold a certificate on the ground that a solicitor was an undischarged bankrupt, another judge might withhold a certificate on the ground that a solicitor was a divorced person. The Divisional Court followed a decision of Wills and Ridley, JJ., given in 1899 in the case of In re An Application under the Solicitors Act. This case is in effect an appeal from that decision. From 1843 to 1899 it was the invariable practice to renew certificates to all solicitors who applied for them, notwithstanding that they were bankrupts. Since the decision in 1899 the Incorporated Law Society have refused to issue certificates in all cases where applicants were undischarged bankrupts. The appellant's view of the meaning of sections 23 and 24 is supported by the consideration of what the Legislature has since enacted on the subject. Section 16 of the Solicitors Act, 1888, which is substituted for section 25 of the Act of 1843, expressly says that the registrar shall have a discretion to grant or refuse a certificate in the case where a solicitor, after neglecting for twelve months to obtain a certificate, subsequently applies for a fresh certificate. And section 2 of the Solicitors Act, 1899, makes the last mentioned section applicable to the case of a solicitor who has been struck off the roll or suspended from practice.

Asquith, K.C. (F. W. Hollams with him), for the respondents, the Incorporated Law Society.—By section 23 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, the registrar is to grant the certificate unless he has reason to believe that the applicant is not upon the roll. But by section 24, if he declines to issue the certificate which he is by the Act directed and required to give—that is to say, if he declines to issue a certificate to a person who is upon the roll—the applicant may go to the court and ask for such order in the matter as may be just. Section 24 imposes on the court the duty of entering upon a judicial inquiry. If the construction of section 23 contended for by the appellant were right, there would be no object in enacting section 24. The Law Society do not suggest that the registrar has a discretion to grant or refuse a certificate. Section 23 does not confer any judicial power on him, but the combined effect of sections 23 and 24 is that the registrar has power to send the matter to the court. Section 24 does not give an appeal from a judicial decision of the registrar, it gives a simple right of application to a judge. The registrar is entitled, if he thinks fit, to hold his hand and tell the applicant to go to the judge.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RÜCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Page, K.C., replied.

COLLINS, M.R.—In my opinion this appeal must be allowed. Jelf, J., at chambers considered himself bound by a decision of Wills and Ridley, JJ., and the Divisional Court also followed the same decision. The question is whether there is a discretion in the Registrar of Solicitors—that is to say, the gentleman who represents the Incorporated Law Society for that purpose—to refuse to issue an annual practising certificate to a person who has conformed with the conditions and satisfied the requirements of section 23 of the Solicitors Act, 1843. Section 21 of that Act appoints the Incorporated Law Society to be the Registrar of Attorneys and Solicitors. Section 22 enacts that the Commissioners of Stamps shall not grant a practising certificate to any attorney or solicitor until the registrar has certified that the applicant is entitled thereto. Then section 23 provides that for the purpose of obtaining such registrar's certificate a declaration in writing of certain particulars signed by the attorney or solicitor shall be delivered to the registrar; "and the said registrar shall, after the expiration of six days after the delivery of such declaration (unless he shall see cause and have reason to believe that the party applying for such certificate is not upon the said roll of attorneys or solicitors), deliver to the said attorney or solicitor, or to his agent, on demand a certificate in the form set forth in the third schedule to this Act annexed." That section constitutes a peremptory mandate to the registrar. He is bound to issue a certificate subject to one qualification—viz., unless he sees cause and has reason to believe that the party applying for the certificate is not on the roll of solicitors. It is admitted that the obligation is absolute, except in the case of there being any difficulty as to identity. That is the limit and measure of the registrar's jurisdiction. Then we come to section 24, and it is argued that the effect of that section is that, though the registrar's jurisdiction was originally limited, as I have stated, the right to apply to a judge to deal with the matter in accordance with considerations of what seem to him to be just enlarges the area of the registrar's jurisdiction. Section 24 is as follows: "And be it enacted that in case the said registrar shall decline to issue such certificate as he is hereinbefore directed and required to give, the party so applying for the same, if an attorney, shall and may apply to any of the said courts of law at Westminster, or to any judge thereof, or, if a solicitor, to the Master of the Rolls, who are hereby respectively authorized to make such order in the matter as shall be just, and to order payment of costs by and to either of the parties if they shall see fit." The argument is that this section modifies the peremptory nature of the mandate originally given to the registrar, and that at any rate the judge's jurisdiction is not limited to dealing with questions of identity. But how can the judge have under section 24 a general jurisdiction to come outside the registrar's mandate for the purpose of taking into consideration matters which could not have been considered by the registrar under section 23. On one matter—viz., on any question of identity—the registrar has jurisdiction to inquire into facts. If he does so, and makes a mistake in doing so, the judge has jurisdiction to review his decision. It seems to me to be clear that that is the jurisdiction given to the judge by section 24. I see nothing in the words of the section to bring me to the conclusion that, when once the judge has seisin of a case of this sort, it is open to him to inquire at large into any matters connected with the case for the purpose of arriving at a determination based upon considerations of justice. It would be impossible to know where to stop. To hold that section 24 confers on the judge a general jurisdiction to refuse the issue of a certificate would be tantamount to saying that he had power under this section to suspend a solicitor from practice. But the law has provided quite a different procedure for the obtaining of an order for suspension from practice.

This appeal is in substance an appeal from the decision of Wills and Ridley, JJ., to which I have referred. In that case Wills, J., held that the registrar had a discretion to refuse to issue a certificate under circumstances like the present, and that the court was not bound to order it to be granted, and his judgment was based on considerations founded on the word "just" in section 24. He thought that the expression "just" there ought not to be restricted to the narrower meaning it would have if the controversy were as to private rights between parties, but that it must mean what was right and fitting with regard to the interests of the public. With the greatest deference to Wills, J., I cannot agree with that judgment.

In this case counsel for the Law Society refrained from arguing that the registrar had a discretion to refuse to issue a certificate as held by Wills, J. On the contrary he admitted that the registrar had no jurisdiction to refuse to issue a certificate, but he argued that the registrar might hold his hand and send the applicant to the judge. In my opinion, however, his argument was substantially identical with the argument on which the judgment of Wills, J., was based. I think that section 16 of the Solicitors Act, 1888, and section 2 of the Solicitors Act, 1899, afford strong arguments against the view of Wills, J. In my opinion the registrar had no power to excercise a discretion to refuse a certificate, as he has done in this case, and the appeal must be allowed.

STIRLING and MATHEW, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitor for the respondents, E. W. Williamson.

Appeal.
(Collins, M.R., and Stirling and Mathew, L.JJ.) — Nov. 12.

PRYCE v. PENRIKYBER NAVIGATION COLLIERY CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Master and servant—Employer's liability—Accident—Compensation—Death of workman—"Wholly dependent on his earnings"—Sum coming to applicant on death of workman—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), Schedule I., clause 1 (a) (i.).

A workman's sole means for the support of himself and his wife and family were his weekly earnings. He was killed by an accident, and his widow applied for compensation as being "wholly dependent on his earnings," within Schedule I., clause 1 (a) (i.), to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. It appeared that the workman was possessed of a sum of money of which the applicant received on his death the sum of £100. There was no evidence that this sum ever produced any income during his lifetime.

Held, that the applicant was "wholly dependent on his earnings," as the £100 which came to her after his death ought not to be taken into consideration.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Appeal from an award of the judge of the Aberdare County Court in proceedings to assess compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

The applicant was the widow of a workman who was killed by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. The only question was whether the applicant was "wholly dependent" upon the deceased man's earnings within Schedule I., clause 1 (a) (i.), to the Act. The deceased man's wages were £3 a week, and he died possessed of personal property of the value of £190. There was no evidence that this sum produced any income during his life, nor was there any evidence that there was any other source of income for his or his wife's maintenance except his wages. His widow was his personal representative and took out administration to him, and it was admitted that upon his death she benefited to the extent of £100 out of £190.

The employers contended that the widow was not wholly, but only partly dependent upon his earnings, as by his death she became entitled to £100, and that the Act meant that a person, to be wholly dependent, must be left entirely destitute; and they paid £275 into court. The county court judge decided that he could not take the £100 into account in seeing whether the applicant was wholly dependent or not. He accordingly adjudged her to be wholly dependent and awarded her £300. The employers appealed.

Ruegg, K.C., and Anton Bertram, for the employers.—A person is "wholly dependent" upon a deceased workman's earnings when he or she is left entirely destitute by his death. The applicant here was therefore only partly dependent upon his earnings, as she received £100 through his death. No doubt the county court judge may, under Schedule I., clause 1 (a) (ii.), in his discretion give the same amount of compensation where the applicant was only partly dependent as where she was wholly dependent. But the judge in this case did not exercise his discretion in that way. He held that the applicant was wholly dependent, and assessed the compensation on that basis. In that he was wrong. Where a widow sues for compensation under Lord Campbell's Act (9 & 10 Vict. c. 93), the jury, in awarding compensation, must take into account the provision made by the husband for her maintenance after his death: Grand Trunk Railway Co. v. Jennings, 37 W. R. 403, 13 App. Cas. 800. That rule ought to be applied here.

S. T. Evans, K.C., and W. D. Benson, for the applicant.—The words "wholly dependent on his earnings" mean wholly dependent at the moment of the workman's death. A workman cannot gain earnings after his death. If the applicant's means after the death of the workman had to be considered, then the arbitrator would have to take into account moneys coming to the applicant under a policy of insurance, or a legacy left to her by another person. The Legislature wished to avoid all these difficulties and to shut out any inquiries as to the applicant's income after the workman's death No question of dependency can arise under Lord Campbell's Act, as the amount recoverable is the actual pecuniary loss sustained by the death. No attempt is made by the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, to give full pecuniary compensation. Therefore the cases under Lord Campbell's Act do not apply. The county court judge was right in refusing to take the £100 into consideration.

Ruegg, K.C., replied.

COLLINS, M.R.—I am of opinion that this appeal must be dismissed. The deceased man had been earning £3 a week, and when he died from the accident a certain sum came to his widow as his administratrix, of which sum it was admitted that she benefited to the amount of £100. The question is whether she was "wholly dependent on his earnings" within the meaning of Schedule I., clause 1 (a) (i.), of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. The county court judge found that the widow was wholly dependent upon his earnings at the time of his death and made an award accordingly. It is said that the judge ought to have taken into consideration the fact that the widow received upon his death the sum of £100. That, it seems to me, would be introducing into the consideration of the question something which the Act did not intend should be introduced. The words mean dependent upon his earnings during his life, because no man can "earn" anything after he is dead. There was no evidence that there was any other source of income for the support of himself and his family than his weekly earnings. That was all they had to depend upon. The Act gives the arbitrator no discretion as to the sum he shall award, if the applicant was wholly dependent upon the deceased man's earnings. It is a condition precedent that the applicant should have been wholly dependent upon his earnings, and I take that to mean that there is no other source of income whatever. We are asked to say that the Act means that the applicant must be wholly destitute after the workman's death. The Act has not said so, and if we were so to hold we should be imposing very serious difficulties in the way of the adjustment of the scale of compensation. The amount of compensation in such a case is, by the Act, taken out of the discretion of the arbitrator, and the Act has fixed an arbitrary sum as the amount of compensation, which may or may not be a complete compensation. That is made even more clear by clause 1 (b). No one can tell what means of income may come to an applicant after the death of the workman, and so the Legislature has disregarded any sum which might arise from the small savings of the deceased man, knowing that the applicant would have to pay certain expenses consequent on his death, and has given her a lump sum, thereby getting rid of all inquiries as to her means of livelihood afterwards. The case of a legacy coming to the applicant after the death of the workman is an illustration of the difficulties that would arise upon any other view. The only logical time to take is the moment of the death. The words of the Act are clear, and we should be legislating if we departed from their plain meaning. I again repeat that in this case there was no evidence that there was any other income than the deceased man's earnings for the support of himself and his family during his lifetime. The case might be different if there had been. The appeal must therefore be dismissed.

STIRLING, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The deceased man seems to have saved £190, which, so far as they knew, was yielding no income at all. The words "wholly dependent on his earnings" means that what the workman earns is the sole source to which the applicant can look for her maintenance at the time of the workman's death.

MATHEW, L.J.—We are asked to translate this enactment into different phraseology, and to say that the applicant cannot be said to be wholly dependent on the deceased man's earnings unless she has been reduced to absolute poverty by his death; and that she is not wholly dependent if anything comes to her out of the deceased man's estate after his death The truth is that Parliament saw that this class of case would not be likely to arise, and so it legislated for the general class of cases, and put aside any inquiry as to whether the deceased man had left any savings and whether the expenses consequent on his death had absorbed those little savings. If we adopted the view contended for by the employers, why should we not have to take into account money arising from a policy of insurance, or a legacy coming to the applicant from another source after the death?

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the applicant, Riddell & Co., for Walter Morgan, Bruce, & Nicholas, Pontypridd.

Solicitor for the employers, H. P. Becher, for Vaizie Simons, Pontypridd.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } Nov. 20; Jan. 15.
Byrne, J. }

In re ALDAM'S SETTLEMENT. (a.)

Settled land—Mining lease—Mines and minerals—Varying minimum rent—Way-leave—Settled Land Acts, 1882-1890.

The court will not sanction in a mining lease, under the Settled Land Acts, 1882-1890, a varying minimum rent nor the grant of a way-leave free of rent.

Summons.

This was an application under the Settled Land Acts, 1882 to 1890, by Mr. William W. W. Aldam, tenant for life of certain real estates situate at Wickersley, in the county of York, asking for the approval of the court to a certain mining lease.

The respondents were J. R. Ford one of the trustees for the settlement and an infant remainderman.

The facts of the case were as follows:

By the will of William Aldam, bearing date the 18th day of December, 1884, the settled estate stood limited to the use of the said William W. W. Aldam for life without impeachment of waste, with remainder to the use of such one or more of the sons or daughters of the said William W. W. Aldam for such estates or estate in tail or such lesser estates as the said William W. W. Aldam should appoint, and in default of such appointment and in so far as such appointment should not extend, to the use of the said infant remainderman for life without impeachment of waste, with remainder over as there mentioned.

The applicant and Mr. Ford were trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts.

By an agreement bearing date the 13th of February, 1901, and made between the said William W. W. Aldam of the one part, and the Dalton Main Collieries Co. of the other part, the said William W. W. Aldam as tenant for life entered into an agreement with the said company to lease to them a seam of coal under the said estates known as the Barnsley thick seam for a term of sixty years from the 1st of January, 1898.

The agreement so far as it is relevant for the present report was as follows:

Clause 3. The royalty or accruing rent shall be at the rate of £30 per foot per annum, but due allowance shall be made for bad, faulty, or unworkable coal, and coal so thin or cut off by such magnitude that it cannot be worked without loss. The lessees shall also pay a similar royalty rent for all coal and slack other than the Barnsley thick seam got in the drifting and sold off.

4. The minimum or certain rent is to be: For the first year, nil; for the second year, 2s. 6d. per acre; for the third year, 5s. per acre; for the fourth year, 10s. per acre; and for the fifth year and each succeeding year, £1 per acre. The minimum rent shall begin to be paid as from the 1st of January, 1899, &c.

6 Undergetting may be made up at any time during the term.

7. When all saleable coal, except such parts (if any) as are not to be worked or paid for, shall have been worked or paid for, a nominal rent of 10s. shall be paid for the remainder of the term in substitution for the royalty or minimum rent.

9. No way-leave rent is to be paid for any other part of the Barnsley thick seam of coal under any other land in the parish of Wickersley.

10. The lessees are to commence working the coal with all reasonable diligence, and bring to the surface as much coal as can be reasonably got with proper diligence.

The questions at issue between the applicant and respondents were:

(1) Whether a yearly minimum rent not commencing until the second year of the said term and increasing year by year until the fifth year of the said term could be legally reserved.

(2) Whether a lease could be granted containing a proviso for the cesser of the said minimum rent after all the demised minerals had been worked and paid for.

(3) Whether a way-leave for foreign coal could be reserved free of rent.

Dixon, for the applicant.

L. S. Bristowe, for the respondents.

In re Lowther, before Stirling, J. (see MacSwinney on Mines (2nd ed.), p. 178), was referred to.

The arguments will be found summarized in the judgment.

Nov. 20.—BYRNE, J., delivered a reserved judgment, which after stating the agreement of February, 1901, as above, continued as follows: The first question raised by the summons is whether or not the tenant for life has power, under the provisions of the Settled Land Acts, to grant a mining lease as proposed for sixty years, reserving a minimum yearly rent not commencing until the second year of the term, and increasing year by year until the fifth year of the term. A mining lease may be granted for sixty years, under section 6 of the Act of 1882. By section 7, sub-section 2, every lease shall reserve the best rent that can reasonably be obtained, regard being had to any fine taken and to any money laid out or to be laid out for the benefit of the settled land, and generally to the circumstances of the case. Section 9, sub-section 2 clearly authorizes the reservation of a fixed or minimum rent, but there is no provision in terms authorizing a varying minimum rent. Under the Settled Estates Act, 1877, there is a provision for the reservation of the best rent or reservation in the nature of rent, either uniform or not, that can be reasonably obtained, to be made payable half-yearly or oftener without taking any fine or other benefit in the nature of a fine, provided always that in the case of (amongst others) a mining lease a peppercorn rent or any smaller rent, than the rent to be ultimately made payable may, if the court shall think fit so to direct, be made payable during all or any part of the first five years of the term of the lease. No similar provision is contained in the Settled Land Acts, so far as regards mining leases, and apart from section 10 of the Act of 1882, giving the court power to sanction leases on special terms, the question turns upon the meaning of section 9, having regard especially to the provisions of section 7 of that Act, and to section 4 of the Settled Land Act, 1884, which provides that a fine received on the grant of a lease under any power conferred by the Act of 1882 is to be deemed capital money arising under that Act. Now, although there are no words expressly authorizing any varying fixed or minimum rent, there are no words negativing the reservation of such a rent, and an unreported case before Stirling, L.J. (when Stirling, J.), of In re Lowther's Settled Estate, referred to in MacSwinney on Mines and Minerals, at p. 178, is relied on as justifying it. I have been furnished with a copy of the summons, affidavit in support, and order made in In re Lowther, and it appears that the order contains, first, a declaration following the terms of the amended summons to the following effect: "This court doth declare that Sir Charles Hugh Lowther, the tenant for life under the above-mentioned settlement, has power to grant a lease to Bolckow, Vaughan, & Co. (Limited), of the ironstone and iron ore within and under the lands forming part of the above-mentioned estate for a term of sixty years from the 1st day of January, 1892, at a certain yearly rent, until the 1st day of July, 1900, of £6,000, and after that day at the yearly rents of £6,000, £5,000, £4,000, £3,000, £2,000, and £1,000, according to the quantity for the time being remaining ungotten under the demise to be thereby made." Then follows a declaration in reply to paragraphs 2 and 3 of the amended summons: "And this court doth declare that in every year during the life of the said Sir C. H. Lowther there ought to be set aside as capital money arising under the above-mentioned Acts one-fourth part of the certain yearly rent and royalties for the time being payable under the said lease, and that in every year during the life of the said Sir C. H. Lowther in which the workings under the said lease shall be or exceed those thereby authorized in satisfaction of the certain yearly rent for the time being payable thereunder, the said Sir C. H. Lowther is entitled to receive for his own benefit the residue (after setting aside one-fourth part thereof as aforesaid) of the said certain yearly rent, and also of the royalties payable thereunder, in respect of such excess workings, if any. And that in every year during the life of the said Sir C. H. Lowther in which the workings under the said lease shall be less than those thereby authorized in satisfaction of the certain yearly rent for the time being payable thereunder, but would at the rates thereby prescribed amount to or exceed £1,000 in value, the said Sir C. H. Lowther is entitled to receive for his own benefit the residue (after setting aside such one-fourth part thereof as aforesaid) of so much of the said certain yearly rent as at the said rates would be equivalent to such workings, and that the remainder of the said certain yearly rent in the same year ought to be set aside as capital money arising under the said Acts. And that in every year during the life of the said Sir C. H. Lowther in which the workings under the said lease shall be less than those hereby authorized in satisfaction of the certain yearly rent for the time being payable thereunder, and would also at the said rates be less than £1,000 in value, the said Sir C. H. Lowther is entitled to receive for his own benefit the residue (after setting aside such one-fourth part thereof as aforesaid) of the sum of £1,000 out of or by means of the said certain yearly rent, and that the remainder, if any, of the said certain yearly rent in the same year ought to be set aside as capital money arising under the said Acts."

(a.) Reported by J. ARTHUR PRICE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

I think that the effect of that decision is that the fact that a varying minimum rent is reserved does not invalidate the lease, if it can be ascertained how much of such rent is in the nature of, and properly capable of being treated as, fine, but that so much as ought to be considered fine must be dealt with as capital money arising under the Act, and the way this is worked out in In re Lowther appears to be by treating so much of the varying fixed rent as exceeds the lowest amount of such rent as fine, and, therefore, capital money; no question arising where the royalty is in excess of the fixed rent for the time being. As I understand it, the tenant for life is entitled to receive what he would have received had a uniform minimum rent at the lowest rate of those mentioned been reserved, the balance being treated as fine.

There are several difficulties in applying the principle apparently applied in In re Lowther to the case now under consideration. In the first place the agreement provides for no rent being paid during the first year, and I cannot find any authority for such a provision. If a peppercorn rent may not be reserved, I fail to see what justifies absence of rent. It is not a sufficient answer to say that such absence of rent cannot affect the remaindermen to their injury, if it be something unauthorized by the Act. It is said that the case of In re Lowther was the case of reservation of a diminishing fixed rent, and consequently one which may obviously be detrimental to remaindermen, while the present is the case of a rising minimum rent, apparently to the advantage of the remaindermen, and consequently it is argued the principle acted upon in In re Lowther ought not to be applied. If this were a simple case between tenant for life and persons absolutely entitled in remainder, I might see my way to holding that no part of the rent received during the first four years ought to be treated as fine, inasmuch as the rent during those years is lower than the rent subsequently reserved, and consequently favourable to the remaindermen; but in the present case there is an infant tenant for life in remainder (whose estate is, it is true, subject to be defeated by an appointment), but whose estate unless so defeated is a present vested interest, and the present tenant for life might die in a year without appointing, in which case the infant tenant for life would apparently, until the maximum fixed rent becomes payable, be in receipt of less than he would have received had a uniform minimum rent been reserved. Passing by the objection that there does not appear to be any authority for non-reservation of rent for the first year of the term, I do not think that I can hold that the tenant for life is justified in granting the lease he proposes. If, however, a small though substantial rent were reserved for the first year, and if the greatest minimum rent—i.e., the £1 per acre, were made payable as from the beginning of the fifth year, or from the death of the present tenant for life, whichever shall be the earlier, I think that might be justifiable. In my opinion, there is no objection to the reservation of a rising minimum rent if such rent is so reserved as to be equal (or in the simple case of tenant for life and remaindermen absolutely entitled upon his death so as to increase) after the determination of his life interest, nor is there any valid objection to the reservation of a diminishing rent where, as in In re Lowther, what is truly a fine can be separated from what is truly rent, and be dealt with accordingly. This is, of course, where the rent proposed is the best rent that can reasonably be obtained, regard being had to any fine taken. The case of Doe dem. Sutton v. Harvey, 1 B. & C. 426, relates to leases of surface. There was in that case a power to lease —"so as that in every such lease there be reserved to be payable during the continuance of the term and estate thereby to be granted the best and most beneficial yearly rent or rents to be incident to the immediate reversion of the premises that, considering the nature of the case, can be reasonably had or obtained for the same at the time of making such lease without taking any fine, income, premium, or foregift for or in respect of making such demises or leases." There the leases had been granted upon terms and at rents which were found to be the most beneficial rents that could be obtained, but the court pointed out that, though that might be so as between lessor and lessee, it was not so between tenant for life and reversioner. Holroyd, J., says (1 B. & C., at p. 435): "As to the finding of the jury that the rents reserved under the two leases made under one bargain were the most beneficial that could be obtained, that may be so as between the person making the lease and the lessee; but in order to see whether it be so between the tenant for life and the reversioner we must look to the facts of the case independently of the opinion of the jury. Now, it is perfectly clear that as between them this was not the most beneficial rent. The former cannot make a bargain by which a larger rent is reserved at the first part of the term and a less at the latter." I do not read this as intending to decide that a lease may not be granted with a varying rent if it be so reserved as to be for the benefit of the remaindermen at the expense of the tenant for life.

The second and third questions asked by the summons are—(2) whether or not the tenant for life has power to insert in the lease a power for the cesser of the minimum rent when all the coal demised by the lease, except such parts thereof, if any, as in accordance with the lease are not to be worked or paid for, shall have been paid for at the acreage rate reserved by the lease; and (3) whether the lease may contain a way-leave for foreign coal to continue after cesser of the minimum rent at a nominal rent, or whether a substantial rent must be reserved for such way-leave. These questions are directed to the propriety of clauses 7 and 9 of the agreement. Under section 17, sub-section 1, of the Act of 1882 there is power, I consider, to grant such a way-leave as is proposed, assuming that a proper rent is reserved; but it is objected that there is no stipulation for a cesser of the term or determination of the lease when all the coal is gotten, and the proposal for a nominal rent of 10s. would in fact be for an indefinite part of the term, during which undergettings might be made up and for a way-leave until quite the end of the term. It will be further observed that no separate rent is reserved in respect of the way-leave proposed to be granted, although no doubt it forms a substantial element in considering the rent actually payable under the lease. It appears to me that after the undergettings, if any, were made up, there would be a free way-leave for the rest of the term, payment for which would actually have been made in the rents paid during the earlier years of the term. I think that this cannot be justified, as I have no means of ascertaining what portions of the rent ought to be treated as in the nature of fine or prepayment for the free way-leave. If a separate and properly ascertained rent were reserved for the way-leave for the whole time during which it is to be enjoyed, there might be no objection, but suppose the tenant for life were to live until all the coal is exhausted, the remaindermen would for the residue of the term be subject to the burden of the way-leave without getting anything but a nominal payment for what might have been granted for a very substantial rent.

For these reasons I do not think that the lease proposed can be granted, nor do I think that I can sanction the lease under the special power conferred upon the court, although I think it is probable that, after what I have said, the parties may be able to reform or mould the agreement in such a way as to substantially carry out what is desired, while avoiding the objections to its present terms.

Jan. 15.—Some difficulty having arisen in drawing up the order, the case was mentioned to his lordship on this date; and the following order was made:—

This court doth declare (1) that the applicant as such tenant for life has no power to grant a lease as aforesaid reserving a minimum yearly rent not commencing until the second year of the said term and increasing year by year until the fifth year of the said term as proposed. (2) Assuming there is no other objection to the proposed lease, the applicant has power to insert in such lease a proviso for the cesser of the minimum rent when all the coal demised by the lease, except such parts thereof, if any, as, in accordance with the provisions of the lease, are not to be worked or paid for, shall have been paid for under the terms of the lease; and a proviso permitting undergettings to be made up notwithstanding the determination of the term, but so that the term shall determine at the period of the cesser of the minimum rent. (3) That if the way-leave for foreign coal continues after the cesser of the minimum rent, a substantial and proper rent must be paid for such way-leave after such cesser.

Solicitors, F. & C. L. Smith, for Ford & Warren, Leeds.

Chan. Div.
Farwell, J. } Nov. 20, 21.

In re KENSINGTON (BARON).

LONGFORD (EARL OF) v. KENSINGTON (BARON). (a.)

Will—Administration—Beneficial and onerous property devised together—Aggregate gift—Onerous leaseholds settled to same uses as freeholds—Incidence of burden—Right to disclaim.

A testator devised freehold estate to his brother for life, with remainders over in strict settlement, and bequeathed his leaseholds to trustees to be settled to the same uses; his personal estate was insufficient to pay his legacies. Before his death he had contracted to purchase a freehold estate which proved to be worth less than the purchase-money remaining unpaid after his death. Among his leaseholds was a house which was sold after his death for a sum less than the sum charged on it by mortgage. On a summons to determine whether the excess of the purchase-money over the value of the one estate and the mortgage debt upon the other were chargeable upon the residue of the real estate or upon the personalty,

Held, that all the real estate and the leaseholds must be taken to be comprised in one gift, and the devisees could not reject the onerous part and accept the beneficial, and that both charges must therefore be paid out of the real estate.

Frewen v. Law Life Assurance Society, 44 W. R. 682, [1896] 2 Ch. 511, followed.

This was an adjourned summons under the will of the late Lord Kensington, who died on the 24th of June, 1900, in South Africa, of wounds received on active service, for the determination (inter alia) of questions which had arisen under the following circumstances.

Early in 1900 the testator had agreed to purchase for £60,000 the New St. Bride estate in Pembrokeshire, but he paid only £4,000 on account during his lifetime. In March, 1901, his executors completed the purchase, it being agreed with the vendor that £35,000 should remain on mortgage. The balance of the purchase-money, £21,000, was paid out of the deceased's personal estate. It had subsequently appeared that the property was worth somewhat less than the price agreed to be paid, and the question for determination was how the £56,000, being the amount remaining unpaid at the date of the testator's death, should be borne as between the testator's real and personal estate.

(a.) Reported by WARWICK H. DRAPER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The testator was also entitled at the date of his death to a leasehold house in Portland-place, subject to a mortgage for £10,350. His executors had sold this house for £8,750 and paid the balance of the mortgage money out of his general personal estate. Thus a similar question arose as to how this balance was to be borne.

By his will, dated the 5th of August, 1898, the testator gave his Pembrokeshire freeholds (including the New St. Bride estate) and all other his real estate upon certain uses in strict settlement. He also bequeathed his leaseholds to trustees on trust to pay the rents and hold the leaseholds on trusts corresponding to the freeholds, so far as the law allowed. He also left large legacies. His residuary personal estate was very small.

Austen Cartmell, for the trustees, stated the facts.

Butcher, K.C., and C. Ashworth James, for the present Lord Kensington, the first tenant for life. —The liability in respect of the onerous property is to be borne by the residuary personalty. The testator has not so aggregated the estates as to throw on the tenant for life the burden of paying the unpaid purchase-money in the one case and the mortgage debt in the other see: Syer v. Gladstone, 34 W. R. 565, 30 Ch. D. 614.

Jenkins, K.C., and Gurdon, for the residuary legatees. —The testator has aggregated the estates and shown an intention to have them kept together. The tenant for life is bound to keep the whole of the property together, and cannot accept the beneficial part and reject the onerous: Guthrie v. Walrond, 31 W. R. 285, 22 Ch. D. 573; In re Hotchkys, Freke v. Calmady, 34 W. R. 569, 32 Ch. D. 408; Frewen v. Law Life Assurance Society, 44 W. R. 682, [1896] 2 Ch. 511; Green v. Britten, 42 L. J. Ch. 187, 21 W. R. Dig. 273.

Bramwell Davies, K.C., and E. Beaumont, for the second tenant for life; and Phipson Beale, K.C., and J. D. Rogers, for a portionist under the settlement, did not argue this question of the summons.

FARWELL, J.—Under Locke-King's Acts a devisee of land is not entitled to have a lien or mortgage on the property devised discharged out of the personalty, but the land is primarily liable, the mortgagee, of course, being unaffected by the Acts. In this case the testator gave his Pembrokeshire freeholds, and all other his real estate, to certain uses in strict settlement. He also bequeathed his leaseholds to trustees on trust to pay the rents and hold the leaseholds on trusts corresponding to the freeholds, so far as the law allowed. Now in order to decide whether the deficits on the New St. Bride estate and the Portland-place leasehold are to be borne by the residuary personalty or by the devisees of the freeholds, I must construe the will and see whether the estates are given as one aggregate or as separate gifts.

It is well settled that where the gifts are separate a donee may disclaim the onerous and accept the beneficial gift, but if they are given in one aggregate he cannot do so. The question, therefore, is whether the gifts are here aggregated. There is really no question as to the New St. Bride estate. It passes under the devise of the Pembrokeshire freeholds, and clearly forms part of an aggregate mass. Further, as the leaseholds are given on the same trusts, they are as far as possible aggregated with the freeholds. The separate bequest is a mere conveyancing device in order to aggregate the leaseholds with the freeholds as far as the law allows. It is impossible to hold that the gift of the leaseholds is a separate gift here unless I hold that leaseholds and freeholds can never be aggregated in one gift. This is a complete answer to Mr. Butcher's point that the freeholds and leaseholds may ultimately descend to different persons. Now, do the authorities prevent my holding that there is an aggregate gift in this case? In In re Hotchkys Cotton, L.J., says that it does not depend on the question whether the gift is contained in one or two sentences, nor do I consider it can depend on the fact that one property is freehold and the other leasehold. I have looked up many authorities since yesterday, and one of the strongest cases is Talbot v. Lord Radnor shortly reported in 3 My. & K. 252, but fully set out in Fairtlough v. Johnstone, 16 Ir. Ch. Rep., 442, the Irish Master of the Rolls (the Right Hon. Cusack Smith) having sent for the papers therein. In In re Talbot v. Lord Radnor the testator, whose will was dated before the Wills Act, gave a leasehold to his sister and devised his realty to trustees on certain uses in strict settlement, including an annuity of £200 to his sister. Wood, V.C., held that the sister could not accept the annuity and disclaim the leasehold. This is a strong authority that, though the gifts are in different parts of the will, and of such diverse nature as a leasehold and an annuity, the court can on construction find an intention to make an aggregate gift. In the Irish case there was a gift of all debts due to the testator and his personal estate to his wife absolutely, his freeholds being given to his wife for life, and she was in possession. The testator was the lessee of a house which was underlet at a lower rent at his death. The Irish Master of the Rolls held that the wife must keep down the head-rent out of the freeholds. It is true that he put his decision on the ground that the testator, through not specially mentioning the house, must have known it was an onerous lease, and thus might have been so. But he also inferred that the testator in Talbot v. Lord Radnor knew that the leasehold was let at an undervalue. After a careful study of Talbot v. Lord Radnor, I am unable to discover any ground for that inference. It was no doubt stated that the house was let at a lower rent at the testator's death, but that was not material as to the testator's intention at the date of his will. If the fact was material it must be shown that the testator knew at the date of his will that the house was let at a lower rent. There was no such finding in Talbot v. Lord Radnor, and the fact that it was underlet at a lower rent at his death was irrelevant. Syer v. Gladstone was simply a case of construction. Pearson, J., there construed the gift as two distinct gifts. One will case offers little assistance in another will case, but I can see possible grounds for Pearson, J.'s, decision. The testator gave a house, furniture, &c., to trustees on trust to permit his sisters, life tenants under his will, to have the use of the house and furniture or to receive the rents. Pearson, J., may well have considered that as the testator was giving a house subject to a mortgage, and furniture producing no income, he did not intend an aggregate gift so as to throw the liability on the furniture; and on construction he held it was two gifts. He further held that Locke-King's Acts imposed no personal liability on the donees to indemnify the personal estate against the mortgage debt. That is not material in this case as the gift is one aggregate. I may add that the reporter's note in 75 L. T. Rep. 21 bears out my view of Syer v. Gladstone. Then I come to Frewen v. Law Life Assurance Society. It is very much in point, and puts the whole matter on an intelligible basis. If there is an aggregate gift, the net beneficial interest of the donee is the net amount of the property. It can be ascertained by an account. The beneficial interest is the net balance. This is the result of Frewen v. Law Life Assurance Society. An aggregate gift is the exact opposite of a gift item by item. I have not got to consider whether Locke-King's Acts impose any personal liability on a devisee. That question does not arise, as in this case enough is given in the way of benefit to more than counterbalance any liability. There is an aggregate gift of unincumbered and incumbered property. Locke-King's Acts say that the incumbered property must bear its own incumbrances. It is really immaterial whether the incumbrance or lien exceeds the value of the property. The testator has chosen to give it with the burden, and the devisee takes it with the burden, whatever it is. Fortunately for the devisee the other property devised to him more than counterbalances the burden on the onerous property. Otherwise, of course, he would disclaim the whole. Short of that he must take the benefit and burden together. The same rule applies in the case of the Portland-place leasehold house, which is subject to a mortgage. The devisee of the aggregate must take it with its whole liability, and that liability must be brought into account in the one aggregate gift.

Solicitors, Fladgate & Co.; Gadsden & Treherne.

Chan. Div. Buckley, J. — Nov. 21, 22; Dec. 7.

In re DIXON.

PENFOLD v. DIXON. (a.)

Inland revenue—Estate duty—Incidence—Settled fund—Will—Exercise of general power of appointment over reversionary interest—Direction to pay testamentary expenses out of residue—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30).

Where a fund is held in trust for A. for life, and after his death for B. for life, and after B.'s death for A., either absolutely or by way of general power of appointment; on A.'s death estate duty becomes payable in respect, not of the reversionary interest, but of the whole settled fund; and inasmuch as this does not pass to A.'s executors, B. or the trustees of the fund, and not A.'s executors, are accountable for the duty, and it is payable out of the settled fund and not out of the residue.

The duty in these circumstances is not a testamentary expense.

Adjourned summons.

By a settlement dated the 30th of December, 1890, a fund which now amounted to £13,199 10s. 10d. was settled on a testator for life, after his death on his widow for life, and after her death, in the events which happened, as he should appoint.

By his will and codicils he appointed that the trustees of the settlement should, after his wife's death, hold the fund in trust for such persons as his wife should by will appoint, and in default of appointment upon trust to transfer the fund to the trustees of his will as part of his residuary estate. The will contained a direction for payment of his testamentary expenses out of his general estate.

The testator died in 1900, leaving his widow him surviving. The question raised by the present summons was whether the estate duty payable upon the death of the testator in respect of the £13,199 10s. 10d. ought to be paid out of that fund or out of the residuary estate.

Astbury, K.C., and S. O. Buckmaster, for the persons entitled to the residue.—If the duty is claimed in respect of the cessor of the life interest, under section 2 (1) (b), it is assessed on the whole capital value of the estate and would amount to the sum now in question; in that case the property would not pass to the executors as such, and the duty would be charged on the appointed fund under section 9 (1). If the duty is claimed under section 2 (1) (a), as property of which the deceased was competent to dispose, the only interest which can have passed to the executor as such is the reversion over which the testator had a power of appointment. The test of whether it did so pass is whether the executors, as executors, can recover. Prior to the passing of the Act 23 Vict. c. 15 property over which the deceased had a power of appointment was not subject to probate duty; the reason was that the mere exercise of the power by his will did not make the property his own: Platt v. Routh, 3 Beav. 257; Drake v. Attorney-General, 10 Cl. & F. 257. Neither 23 Vict. c. 15 nor the Finance Act have converted equitable assets into legal assets. The reason why creditors have a right as against the appointee to have the fund administered for their benefit is that the law presumes an intention by the testator that the appointee shall only take subject to the prior right of creditors. Property appointed, therefore, does not pass through the executor, but he has a right to intercept it if required for payment of debt. That is why he is able to give a receipt for it: In re Boyd, 45 W. R. 648, [1897] 2 Ch. 232. On this point we rely on In re Treasure, 48 W. R. 696, [1900] 2 Ch. 648; In re Maddock, ante, p. 54, [1901] 2 Ch. 372; In re Power, 49 W. R. 678, [1901] 2 Ch. 659. This duty is not a testamentary expense because the property never came into the executors' hands. The duty should, therefore, be borne by the appointed fund.

They also referred to In re Clemow, 48 W. R. 541, [1900] 2 Ch. 182; Jenney v. Andrews, 6 Madd. 264; and Lord Townshend v. Windham, 2 Ves. sen. 1, at p. 11.

H. Terrell, K.C., and Horace White, for the widow.—The dicta of old authorities are not the true criteria for construing a modern statute. The true view of section 9 (1) is that it is machinery for apportioning the duty among the various classes of people who are ultimately liable to pay it. Under section 6 (2) the executor is bound to pay the duty on property coming within section 2 (1) (a); section 9 (1) creates a charge in respect of property the duty on which the executor is not bound to pay. We say also that, on the authorities, property over which the deceased exercised by will a general power of appointment does pass to the executors as such: Lord Townshend v. Windham; In re Philbrick's Settlement, 13 W. R. 570, 34 L. J. Ch. 368; Hayes v. Oatley, L. R. 14 Eq. 1, 20 W. R. Ch. Dig. 4; In re Hoskin's Trusts, 25 W. R. 779, 6 Ch. D. 281. The reason why creditors can take the benefit of an appointed fund is that the exercise of the power renders the property part of the testator's assets. We rely on In re Moore, 49 W. R. 573, [1901] 1 Ch. 691.

They also cited Attorney-General v. Hope 2 Cl. & F. 84; Wilday v. Barnett, 16 W. R. 961, L. R. 6 Eq. 193; In re Wilkinson, 17 W. R. 839, L. R. 4 Ch. App. 587.

Buckmaster replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

(a.) Reported by H. L. ORMISTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

BUCKLEY, J., after stating the facts, continued: I am of opinion that the "estate duty" must be borne by the settled fund. To state the grounds for this decision I must state shortly some of the provisions of the Finance Act, 1894. Under that Act (section 1) estate duty is payable on the principal value of all property which passes on a death. Apart from any definitions contained in the Act, it is obvious that this necessarily includes as well property in which the deceased had an absolute interest, or an interest not determining with his own life—which necessarily must pass to someone else when he by reason of death can no longer enjoy it — as also property in which the deceased had no interest at all, but which stood limited in such manner as that upon his death it passed from one person to another. With the latter class of property his estate has no concern; but it bears duty none the less. The definitions contained in the Act expand this obvious view so as to include within "property passing on the death" not only property of the two classes above mentioned, but also property of which the deceased was at the time of his death competent to dispose. To make that which follows the more intelligible I will assume a concrete case and suppose a sum of £10,000 Consols held by trustees upon trust for A. for life, and after his death for B. for life, and after his death for C. absolutely. First, upon A.'s death his interest will determine, and there will be nothing passing so far as his estate is concerned. But within section 2 (1) (b) of the Act the £10,000 Consols will be property passing, and by virtue of section 7 (7) the value of the property so passing is the £10,000 Consols. Upon this sum of £10,000 Consols there will be payable estate duty at a rate to be determined under the scale in section 17—dependent, that is, upon the principal value of the estate aggregated for this purpose in manner provided by section 4. This £10,000 Consols does not pass to A.'s executor; his executor has nothing to do with it; all interest of A. ceased on his death. The persons accountable are, under section 8 (4), either B. as the person to whom the property passes for a beneficial interest in possession, or the trustees in whom the fund is vested. A.'s executor may, if so minded, and if requested by the person so accountable as aforesaid, pay the duty under the latter part of section 6 (2). Whether the persons accountable as above pay the duty or the executor pays the duty, they or he are, under section 9 (5) and (6), entitled to a charge upon the £10,000 Consols for the amount of the duty. The effect of this, of course, is that the corpus of the settled fund bears the duty, and each person interested in succession bears it according to his estate or interest. Secondly, suppose that C. dies. In this case that which passes is a reversionary interest in £10,000 Consols expectant upon the deaths of A. and B. This is property of C., and his executor under the earlier words of section 6 (2) is the person liable to pay the estate duty on delivering the Inland Revenue affidavit. The value, for the purposes of the duty, is what the reversionary interest would fetch if sold in open market: section 7 (5). But, thirdly, suppose that A. and C. are the same person, so that the trusts are for A. for life and after his death for B. for life, and after B.'s death for A. absolutely, and suppose that A. dies. Upon his death the £10,000 Consols is property passing under section 2 (1) (b) as in the instance first above given, and the reversionary interest of A. expectant upon B.'s death is property, part of A.'s estate, passing upon his death within the instance secondly above given. This reversionary interest is within the definition in section 22 (1) (j) an "interest in expectancy," and under section 7 (6) estate duty in respect of that interest may be paid at the option of the person accountable for the duty, either with the duty in respect of the rest of the estate, or when the interest falls into possession. The case with which I have here to deal is one falling within the instance last or thirdly above given, except that A.'s interest in the reversion is by way of general power to appoint the reversion and not by way of property in the reversion itself. What is the duty of £924 with which I have to deal? The trustees of the settlement, upon a Form C 1, returned the property which is included in it at a value of £13,199 10s. 10d. The duty in question is 7 per cent upon that sum. The Inland Revenue affidavit contains in account No. 1 two items, of which one is "Personal property over which the deceased had and exercised an absolute power of appointment," and the other is "The deceased's interest expectant upon the death of A. B. under the will of, &c.," in property. The interest here in question is a power to appoint a reversion so that the interest would fall under a combination of these two heads. To the latter of them is appended, at p. 4, a marginal note as follows: "M. But where the deceased was entitled to the interest expectant upon his own death or upon the death of another person who survives him, and estate duty is payable upon the corpus of the property on the deceased's death, the interest in expectancy is not also chargeable with estate duty on the deceased's death as part of his free estate although as it is in fact part of his free estate its value must be looked at for the purposes of the Probate Court. The interest in expectancy should be brought into this affidavit and be taken out again in the summary on p. 7." The summary at p. 7 contains the following: "viii. Deduct value of interests in expectancy in the property on the corpus whereof estate duty is payable on the deceased's death under the earlier disposition, provided that the property is itself part of the aggregated one estate, but not otherwise." The duty, therefore, of £924 which is here in dispute is not the duty, and does not include the duty or any part of the duty in respect of the deceased's interest in the reversionary interest expectant upon his wife's death, but is the duty upon the settled fund of £13,199 10s. 10d. This duty is, in my opinion, for the reasons stated in the first instance above given, a duty for which the widow as tenant for life in possession, or the trustees of the settlement, and not the executor, is the person accountable, and is a duty for which the person who pays it, whether he be the party accountable or the executor at the request of the party accountable, will be entitled to a charge upon the fund. It follows that in my opinion this duty is to be borne by the settled fund and not by the residue. For the purpose of what precedes it it is immaterial that the reversionary interest of the testator was not a reversionary interest in property, but only a general power of appointment of a reversionary interest. If he had been entitled to the reversionary interest itself by way of property and not of power, the same result would have ensued, for the duty in dispute is not that in respect of the reversionary interest, but that in respect of the whole settled fund. In the view which I take of the case, therefore, the question does not arise as to the meaning of the words "executor as such" in section 9 (1), and it is unnecessary for me to express any further opinion upon a point on which an unfortunate difference of opinion has arisen. I may add, however, that, having had the advantage of reading the considered judgment of my brother Byrne in In re Power, I should, if I had to consider that question again, still be of opinion that it lies at the root of the matter to ascertain whether the property included in the power becomes assets for payment of debts under or adversely to the beneficial disposition made by the donee of the power; in other words, whether fictionally the donee of the power is supposed to appoint first to his executor to such extent as is necessary for the payment of his debts in a due course of administration, and then to the appointees, or whether the appointment, as a beneficial disposition, is taken to be what it is on its face—viz., an appointment to certain appointees, and the executor's right is a right to recover, not as an appointee, but as executor adversely to the appointees by virtue of his right as executor to avoid pro tanto the beneficial disposition of the property which the appointor in fact makes. The latter seems to have been the view taken by Lord Hardwicke in Lord Townshend v. Windham, 2 Ves. sen., at p. 11. Lord Hardwicke, I see, refers to the case in 2 Rolles Reports 173 as showing the origin of the right to treat as general assets for payment of debts property included in a general power exercised by the donee. Further, it would, I think, be necessary to consider the decision of Lord Romilly in Hayes v. Oatley, which was a decision upon the point, on which James, L.J.'s, words in In re Hoskins' Trusts were but dicta. It is unnecessary for me in the present case to reconsider the point.

Being, then, of opinion that this duty is payable out of the settled fund and not out of residue, does the testator cast it upon residue by the provision in his will for payment of his testamentary expenses out of his general estate? I think not. For if I am right in thinking that the executor is not accountable for this duty and has no concern with it, then the amount is not a testamentary expense. I hold, therefore, that the £924 must be paid out of the settled fund.

Solicitors, Merriman, White, & Thompson.

Chan. Div. Joyce, J. } Oct. 25.

In re LEVERIDGE.
SPAIN v. LEJOINDRE. (a.)

Will—Construction—Direction to pay "estate duty" out of residue—Settlement estate duty.

A direction in a will to pay estate duty out of a particular fund will be taken to refer to settlement estate duty as well, unless a contrary intention is shown to exist.

Adjourned summons.

Catherine Hayes Leveridge by her will dated the 11th of January, 1899, inter alia, devised certain freehold property to her trustees upon trust to pay the annual rents and profits thereof to or permit the same to be received by the defendants Hilaire Raphael Lejoindre and Emma Carter Smith for and during the term of their natural lives in equal shares as tenants in common, and after the death of either of them to pay the whole of the rents and profits to the survivor for his or her natural life, and after the death of the survivor upon certain other trusts for the benefit of other persons. The residuary estate of the testatrix was bequeathed upon trust to pay her just debts and funeral and testamentary expenses and legacies, and also the estate duty upon the whole of the real and personal estate, as well as the legacy, succession and annuity duties, and to invest the residue and out of the income to pay the costs, charges, and expenses of the trustees and apply the remainder to such charitable purposes as the trustees should think fit.

The testatrix died on the 27th of December, 1899.

The summons, which was taken out by the trustees and executors of the will, asked for the determination of the question whether the settlement estate duty payable on the above-mentioned settled property ought to be paid out of her residuary personal estate or out of the settled property on which it was payable.

F. McMullan (A. E. Balfour with him), for the plaintiffs.

Austen Cartmell, for the defendants Lejoindre and Smith.—The only places in the Finance Act, 1894, in which settlement estate duty is expressly mentioned are sections 5, 17, and 21; in the parts of the Act which deal with the incidence and recovery of the duty the term "estate duty" includes settlement estate duty, as, for example, in sections 6, 8, 9, and this is so throughout the general parts of the Act. This view was taken by North, J., in In re Webber, 44 W. R. 489, [1896] 1 Ch. 914, and though the actual decision in that case was overruled by the Court of Appeal in In re Maryon-Wilson, 48 W. R. 338, [1900] 1 Ch. 565, there was nothing in the latter case which destroyed the force of the observations of North, J., in the former.

R. J. Parker, for the Attorney-General, on behalf of the charities.—Though for Inland Revenue purposes settlement estate duty is estate duty, yet the incidence of the two duties is different, and therefore this will should not be read as including settlement estate duty in the term "estate duty."

JOYCE, J.—This is a question of the intention of the testatrix as shown by her will. The question is whether the estate duty spoken of in the residuary gift includes settlement estate duty or not, as well as the estate duty simply so called. I have been referred to various sections of the Finance Act, 1894, in which it is clear that "estate duty" is a comprehensive term, including not only estate duty in the narrower sense, but also settlement estate duty. Counsel for the Attorney-General admits that this is so for revenue purposes; but he points out that there is a difference in the incidence and collection of the settlement estate duty. I do not agree with him that in ordinary parlance settlement estate duty is not spoken of as estate duty; the expression "estate duty" is usually used both of settlement estate duty and also of the ordinary estate duty. Primâ facie I see no reason why the testatrix in this will should make any difference between the duties. The settlement duty is estate duty for the purposes of the Act, and in my opinion it is estate duty for the purposes of this will, and therefore it must be paid out of the residuary personal estate.

Solicitors, Mackrell, Maton, Godlee, & Quincey; Solicitor to the Treasury.

(a.) Reported by J. F. ISELIN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Darling and Channell, JJ.) } Nov. 8; Dec. 16.

KIRKHOUSE (Appellant) v BLAKEWAY, TOWN CLERK OF GLOUCESTER (Respondent). (a.)

Election law—Registration—Parliamentary franchise—Parochial relief—Medical relief—Maintenance of voter's wife as pauper lunatic—Disqualification—Representation of the People Act, 1832 (2 Will. 4, c. 45), s. 36—Medical Relief Disqualification Removal Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 46).

In all cases in which relief is given, partaking more or less of the nature both of medical relief and of ordinary relief, it is a question of fact for the revising barrister to decide what is the real character of the relief.

The appellant claimed to have his name inserted in Division I. of the occupiers list of voters; he was qualified in all respects except for the fact that his wife had, during the whole of the qualifying period, and for nine months previously to that period, been maintained out of the poor rates in the county lunatic asylum, the appellant contributing nothing towards her maintenance. The revising barrister, in these circumstances, held that the maintenance of the appellant's wife was not "medical assistance" within the meaning of that expression in the Medical Relief Disqualification Removal Act, 1885, and that the appellant was disqualified by virtue of section 36 of the Representation of the People Act, 1832.

The Court affirmed the barrister's decision.

Case stated.

This was an appeal from a decision of the revising barrister for the city of Gloucester rejecting the claim of the appellant to have his name inserted on the Occupiers' List (Division I.) for the parish of Gloucester.

The case stated by the revising barrister was as follows: "At a court held before me for revising the list of voters for the city of Gloucester the appellant claimed to have his name inserted on the Occupiers' List (Division I.) for the parish of Gloucester. He was qualified in all respects to be placed on the said list except for the fact that his wife had been during the whole of the qualifying period maintained out of the poor rate of the said parish as a pauper patient of the Gloucester County Lunatic Asylum. She was removed to the asylum in September, 1899, under a justice's order. The certificate was signed by a medical officer of the Gloucester Union. Nine shillings a week was paid to the county authority by the overseers of Gloucester out of the poor rate for her maintenance, and it must be taken that nothing had been contributed by the claimant towards her maintenance. It was contended on behalf of the claimant that the maintenance of the wife in the asylum was medical assistance within the meaning of the Medical Relief Disqualification Removal Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 46), and that he was not thereby deprived of his right to be registered as a Parliamentary voter or as a burgess. I thought that the permanent maintenance of a lunatic or imbecile, which was this case, was distinguishable from the medical treatment of a patient under a temporary attack of mental disease, and that such maintenance was not medical assistance within the meaning of the said statute. I thought it analogous to the maintenance of a disabled or crippled pauper in the workhouse, and that such medical assistance, if any, as was rendered to the patient was an incident additional to the maintenance."

The revising barrister accordingly disallowed the claim, and, on the application of the appellant, stated the above case for the opinion of the court.

H. Terrell, K.C. (Percival Hughes with him), for the appellant.—The disqualifying section is section 36 of the Representation of the People Act, 1832 (2 Will. 4, c. 45), as extended by the Representation Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 102), s. 40. The first-mentioned section enacts "that no person shall be entitled to be registered in any year as a voter . . . for any county, city, or borough who shall within twelve calendar months next previous to the last day of July" (now the 15th) "in such year have received parochial relief or other alms which by the law of Parliament now disqualify from voting. . . ." In this case there was no receipt of "relief" within the meaning of that section. A person is removed to a lunatic asylum for the safety of the public and not for the purpose of relieving a husband or other person from supporting the patient. There can be no distinction between temporary and permanent confinement. Parochial relief is relief received as alms. Gray's case, Wolferston's Election Reports, p. 174, is against the appellant's contention, but that case is not an authority. In the case of leprosy or small-pox a wife may be removed by the public authorities and kept in an isolation hospital, the husband still maintaining his home and children. The husband cannot be said to be receiving parochial relief. The wife is removed for the safety of the public just as much as in the case of lunacy. No distinction should be drawn between mental and physical disease for this purpose. Further, maintenance of a wife in a lunatic asylum is medical assistance within the meaning of the Medical Relief Disqualification Removal Act, 1885, and therefore the appellant is not disqualified. Medical treatment may in certain cases include maintenance: see Lawson's Notes of Decisions in Registration Cases, 1885-1893, at p. 256. The above statutes should receive a wide rather than a narrow treatment. The onus is on the part of the objector to prove that there has been a real relief so as to disqualify.

The respondent was not represented.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 16.—CHANNELL, J., read the following judgment of the court: This is an appeal on a case stated by the revising barrister for the city of Gloucester, and the question we have to consider is whether the barrister was right in disallowing the claim of the voter on the ground of his having received "parochial relief or other alms which by the law of Parliament disqualify." The voter's wife had been maintained for a period of about two years in the county lunatic asylum, at the expense of the union, and he had not paid anything towards her maintenance and support. It was contended on behalf of the voter that this was medical relief within the meaning of the Medical Relief Disqualification Removal Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 46). The revising barrister stated that he thought that the permanent maintenance of a lunatic or imbecile, which was this case, was distinguishable from the medical treatment of a patient under a temporary attack of mental disease, and that such maintenance was not medical assistance within the meaning of the said statute. He thought it analogous to the maintenance of a disabled or crippled pauper in the workhouse, and that such medical assistance, if any, as was rendered to the patient was an incident additional to the maintenance.

We think that this is a finding of fact and that there was evidence to support it, and that we cannot and ought not to disturb it. It seems to us that in all cases in which relief is given which is more or less of the nature both of medical relief and ordinary relief, a question of fact arises for the decision of the revising barrister. Where in consequence of illness (and insanity is undoubtedly illness) a voter or a member of his family whom he is bound to support is given medical relief, it is not the less medical relief within the statute because a certain amount of ordinary sustenance is given as well as medicine. And so, on the other hand, where a pauper in a workhouse is removed to the infirmary in consequence of his illness, he would whilst in the infirmary still be receiving relief other than medical relief within the meaning of the statute. It would be a question of fact for the revising barrister in all such cases what the real character of the relief was and which kind was merely incidental to the other. Where a member of a voter's family is attacked with insanity and is in consequence removed to an asylum at the expense of the union, we should have no doubt, and the revising barrister in this case seems to have had no doubt, that the case was, in the first instance, one of medical relief. But where the insane person (being a person for whose support the voter is liable) remains permanently in the asylum and no payment is made by the voter, we think a question of fact arises as to whether the relief has not become ordinary relief as distinguished from medical. Where any payment is made, even although it is not as great as the cost to the union of the maintenance of the lunatic in the asylum, the inference might fairly be drawn that there is no ordinary relief, but this is for the barrister. Where the maintenance has continued for a long time without any payment whatever, we cannot say that the barrister is wrong in coming to the conclusion that the voter is in receipt of relief other than medical relief. There appear to be no authorities in this country bearing on this question, but the view we have expressed appears to be that taken by the courts in Ireland: see Holland v. Porter, Lawson's Notes of Registration Cases, [1898] 220, and Crossan v. Holland, Lawson's Notes, [1899] 304.

(a) Reported by E. G. SHIELDS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The appeal must be dismissed, but as there is no appearance for the respondent there will be no costs.

Appeal dismissed; leave to appeal given.

Solicitors for appellants, Ayrton, Biscoe, & Barclay.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Darling and Channell, JJ.) Nov. 6.

LESTER (Appellant) v. QUESTED (Respondent). (a.)

Gaming—Betting slips—Horse-races—Wagering on a game of chance—Vagrancy Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 83) —Vagrant Act Amendment Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 38), s. 3.

The appellant was charged and convicted under the Vagrancy Acts of unlawful betting by way of wagering in a public place.

It was proved that several persons had on the day of the charge handed him sums of money and slips of paper with the names of the horses and the amount of their bets written thereon, and that the appellant accepted the money and placed the slips of paper in his pocket, and that he did not remain standing in one place in the recreation ground, but walked about within certain limits.

Held, quashing the conviction, that the slips of paper were not tokens of gaming within the statute, nor was the betting in respect of a game of chance.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Case stated upon an information charging the appellant under the Vagrancy Act, 1824, as amended by 36 & 37 Vict. c. 38, s. 3, with unlawfully betting by way of wagering in a certain place with tokens—to wit, certain pieces of paper—at a game of chance.

The appellant was a bookmaker living at Sheerness, and on the 17th of May, 1901, was seen by the respondent on the recreation ground at Sheerness, While the appellant was there several persons approached him, and were seen to hand him certain pieces of paper and sums of money. Only one person approached him at a time, and the appellant did not remain standing, but walked about within certain limits.

The respondent then arrested the appellant, and took him to the police station, and on searching him found slips of paper with different names of racehorses thereon, and with various amounts of money set opposite their respective names, and a sum of money —£10 13s. 3½d.—on him.

The appellant admitted that several persons separately approached him, and that he received such slips of paper from such persons. It was contended on behalf of the appellant that what the appellant had done was not an offence under the statute upon which the information was preferred; that the pieces of paper handed to the appellant by the persons were not tokens, and therefore not instruments of gaming within the meaning of the statute; that the transactions were not a game of chance within the statute; that it was essential for a conviction to prove that the betting was at some game or pretended game of chance; that horse-racing was not game of chance, and that there was no evidence before the court to prove that it was.

The appellant referred to the following cases in support of his contentions: Tollett v. Thomas, 19 W. R. 890, L. R. 6 Q. B. 514; Hirst v. Molesbury, 19 W. R. 246, 23 L. T. Rep. 555; and Ridgeway v. Farndale, 41 W. R. 128, [1892] 2 Q. B 309.

For the respondent Tollett v. Thomas; Ridgeway v. Farndale; Bew v. Harston, 26 W. R. 915, 3 Q B D. 454; Jenks v. Turpin, 13 Q. B. D 505, 32 W. R. Dig. 84; Dyson v. Mason, 22 Q. B. D. 351, 37 W. R. Dig. 108; and Reg. v. Stoddard, 49 W. R. 173, [1901] 1 Q. B. 177, were relied on.

The magistrate upheld the contention of the respondent, that the pieces of paper were tokens and instruments of gaming within the meaning of the statute, and that the wagering was at a game of chance, and holding that the facts and circumstances as above stated proved an offence within the meaning of the Acts, he convicted the appellant as a rogue and vagabond and sentenced him to fourteen days' imprisonment without the option of a fine.

Sentence was, however, suspended pending an appeal to this court.

Lincoln Reed, for the appellant.

H. Sutton and G. S. Robertson, for the respondent.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—I am sorry we cannot take the view of this bad practice come to by the stipendiary magistrate. The cases which have been cited to us and the statute show that mere betting on a horse-race is not intended to come within section 3 of the Vagrant Act Amendment Act, 1873. That section enacts that "every person playing or betting by way of wagering or gaming in any street, road, highway, or other open and public place, or in any open place to which the public have or are permitted to have access, at or with any table or instrument of gaming, or any coin, card, token, or other article used as an instrument or means of such wagering or gaming, at any game or pretended game of chance, shall be deemed a rogue and vagabond" within the meaning of the principal Act, and punished as therein enacted. Therefore to bring an offence within the true intent and meaning of the Act of 1824 there must be some game of chance or some instrument or token whereby a game of chance is being carried on. In this case all that the appellant did was to put down the bets on a piece of paper and put them in his pocket. Reprehensible, no doubt, as this mode of making bets is, I do not think the appellant can properly be convicted under these Acts. The conviction cannot, therefore, stand, and it must be quashed.

DARLING, J.—I entirely agree. It seems to me that the difficulty might be met in public places such as these recreation grounds to which the public have or are permitted to have access, by a bye-law.

CHANNELL, J., concurred.

Conviction quashed.

Solicitors, Crossman, Prichard, & Co.; The Treasury Solicitor.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Darling and Channell, JJ.) Nov. 6.

BOWDEN v. TOLL. (a.)

Vaccination—Order for vaccination of child—Notice—Proceedings under section 29 of the Vaccination Act, 1867—No further notice—Proceedings under section 31—Child over six months old.

In December, 1900, notice was served on the appellant to have his child vaccinated, and in February, 1901, he was summoned under section 29 of the Vaccination Act, 1867, for neglecting to cause the child to be vaccinated. This summons was dismissed. No further notice was served on the appellant. A summons was then issued under section 31 of the Act, and an order made for the child to be vaccinated. The child was then between the age of six and eighteen months. The public vaccinator had previously visited the appellant's house in accordance with section 1 (3) of the Vaccination Act, 1898, but had failed to serve notice of his intention so to do.

Held, that the order for vaccination was properly made.

Case stated by justices for the county of Herts sitting at Welwyn, who had made an order under section 31 of the Vaccination Act, 1867, directing the vaccination of the appellant's child.

The appellant was charged on the 13th of May, 1901, under section 31 of the Vaccination Act, 1867, that the respondent, being the vaccination officer duly appointed, having reason to believe that the appellant's child, being more than six months old, had not been successfully vaccinated, and that the respondent had given notice to the appellant, the parent, to procure its vaccination, disregarded such notice contrary to the Vaccination Acts, 1867 and 1898.

On the hearing it was proved and admitted that notice had been given to the appellant to procure the child to be vaccinated, and that the child was still living and was under the age of fourteen, and had not been vaccinated, nor had had the small-pox. The respondent admitted this notice was anterior to the issue of a summons under section 29, and that no subsequent notice had been given, and that no notice of intention to visit the home under section 1 (3) of the Vaccination Act, 1898, had been given since the child's birth, though such visit had been paid. It was alleged by the appellant, and not disputed by the respondent, that at petty sessions on the 18th of February, 1901, proceedings had been taken by the respondent against the appellant in respect of the same child under section 29 of the Act of 1867 and that the summons had been dismissed, and it was contended that it was not competent for the justices to deal with a complaint under section 31 in respect of the same child on the same facts. It was further contended by the appellant that whether or not they were competent to deal with the matter the fact of non-compliance with the requirements of section 1 (3) of the Act of 1898 in respect of the notice of the public vaccinator's visit precluded an order under section 31 of the Act of 1867 in regard to a child born since the passing of the Act of 1898; that proceedings in regard to children resident from birth in the district should be taken under section 29 and not under section 31 of the Act of 1867 unless the child is eighteen months and upwards.

The justices were of opinion that the remedies given by sections 29 and 31 of the Act of 1867 were independent of each other and that the dismissal of a summons under the former was no bar to proceedings under the latter, although no further notices were given between the summonses; that the fulfilment of the provisions of section 1 (3) of the Act of 1898 was not a condition precedent to proceedings under section 31, and that section 31 was not only applicable to children of the age of eighteen months and upwards. They accordingly made an order directing that the child should be vaccinated within twenty-eight days.

Schultess Young, for the appellant.

R. D. Muir, for the respondent.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—We do not think it necessary to hear counsel for the respondent in this case, because we think that the objections raised by the appellant against the order appealed from are ill-founded. We have really three points to consider. First it is said that the notice is not a good notice which was given in December because it was not given in contemplation of proceedings under section 31 of the Act of 1867, and was not therefore available as the foundation of such proceedings. I can see no reason why the notice was not good. It was given by the vaccination officer, it pointed out that the appellant was in default and stated that he was required to cause the child to be vaccinated within a given time. Then the appellant said the order was bad because proceedings under section 31 could not be taken in respect of a child in the case of whom a summons under section 29 had already been dismissed; and on that ground the magistrates could not entertain the proceedings. But section 29 is a section punishing the parent for not of his own motion getting the child vaccinated, and there was to be no penalty under that section if the parent had a reasonable excuse. Section 31, on the other hand, is a section providing that where, whether owing to neglect or otherwise, a child had not been vaccinated it could be ordered to be vaccinated. I can see no reason why an excuse which would afford a defence under section 29 should prevent the making of an order under section 31. Lastly, the appellant said that proceedings under section 31 could not be taken in respect of a child under the age of eighteen months, since in respect of such a child proceedings under section 29 were still open. He pleaded, moreover, that he had had no notice that the public vaccinator intended visiting his house. I fail to see how neglect on the part of a public vaccinator can be used as a defence to proceedings under section 31. Such neglect might be an answer to proceedings under section 29, but there is nothing in the Act which prevents justices from ordering a child to be vaccinated because there has been a neglect on the part of the public vaccinator in the discharge of his duties under the Act of 1898. Then it was said that the child being between six months and eighteen months of age, section 31 did not apply. I think there is no substance in that contention. For these reasons the appeal fails.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Appeal dismissed.

DARLING and CHANNELL, JJ., concurred.

Solicitors, H. T. Nicholson; A. E. Passingham, Hitchin.

Court of Appeal.

From Chan. Div. (Vaughan Williams, Romer, and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) } Dec. 11, 12, 20.

In re MARTEN.
SHAW v. MARTEN. (a.)

Power—Will—General power of appointment—Exercise by will—Residuary gift—Lapse—Blending of funds.

A testatrix having, under her marriage settlement, a general testamentary power over certain securities, appointed by her will that the trustees of the settlement should hold the securities for certain appointees. She empowered the trustees to appropriate any security or investment subject to her power of appointment or belonging to her at the time of her decease towards payment of legacies, and as to the residue of her real and personal property she devised, bequeathed, and appointed the same, subject to payment of debts, to H. S., one of the said appointees, absolutely. H. S. died in the lifetime of the testatrix.

Held (Vaughan Williams, L.J., dissenting), that the testatrix intended to blend the settlement fund with her own property for all purposes, and that the lapsed share in the appointed fund passed under the gift of residue in her will.

This was an appeal from a decision of Byrne, J.

By a settlement of October, 1880, made on the marriage of Martha Marten with her late husband, certain securities specified in the first schedule thereto and a sum of £5,000 in money were vested in or paid to the trustees of the settlement upon trust to invest and pay the income to the wife and husband for their respective lives and then upon trust for the children, and in default of children, which event happened, then as to the securities specified in the first schedule in trust for such persons as the said Martha Marten should appoint, and in default of appointment upon trust as to one-sixth for her executors, administrators, and assigns; and as to the remaining five-sixths for certain persons therein named absolutely; and as to the said sum of £5,000 in trust for such persons as the said Martha Marten should appoint, and in default of appointment upon trust for her executors, administrators, and assigns.

By her will dated the 1st of March, 1893, the said Martha Marten, after reciting the said settlement and her desire of making appointments of the funds comprised in the said first schedule to the settlement and of the said sum of £5,000, appointed that the trustees of the said settlement should stand possessed of the said sum of £5,000 and such part of the securities comprised in the first schedule of the said settlement as would, with the sum of £5,000, make up the sum of £9,000, in trust for certain appointees, and the testatrix directed the said trustees to stand possessed of the residue of the said scheduled securities in trust as to £1,000, part thereof for W. P. Shaw and as to the residue thereof in trust for Henry Shaw. The testatrix then bequeathed some pecuniary legacies, and empowered the trustees of the said settlement and her executors, at their discretion respectively with the consent of the respective appointees and legatees, to appropriate any security or investment subject to her powers of appointment or belonging to her at the time of her decease in or towards payment or satisfaction of the legacies thereinbefore appointed or bequeathed, and continued: "As to all the rest and residue of my real and personal estate I devise, bequeath, and appoint the same subject to the payment thereout of my debts and funeral and testamentary expenses" to the said Henry Shaw.

Both W. P. Shaw and Henry Shaw died in the lifetime of the testatrix.

The testatrix died in the year 1900 possessed of considerable real and personal property in her own right.

The trustees of the settlement took out an originating summons to determine whether the residue of the scheduled securities (after providing what was necessary for making up the £9,000) was validly appointed by the will or whether the same went as in default of appointment, and whether the said fund now belonged to the next-of-kin of the testatrix or to the persons who would take in default of appointment.

Byrne, J., held that the testatrix had not by her will sufficiently blended the settlement funds with her own property so as to make it her own for all purposes, and held that the residue of the scheduled securities belonged to the persons entitled in default of appointment under the settlement.

The next-of-kin appealed.

Renshaw, K.C., and Buckmaster, for the next-of-kin, referred to In re Boyd, Kelly v. Boyd, 45 W. R. 648, [1897] 2 Ch. 232.

Levett, K.C., and Chester, for the persons entitled in default of appointment.

J. M. Stone, for the trustees.

A. Underhill, for the executor of the testatrix.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 20.—VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., who dissented from the judgment of the court, said: The question in this case is whether the residue of the securities appointed by the testatrix goes under the settlement as in default of appointment, or whether it passes under the gift of residue in her will. Byrne, J., held that the fund went as in default of appointment, and did not pass under the residuary gift, and I think the judgment of Byrne, J., ought to be affirmed. There was, in my opinion, no intention on the part of the testatrix to appoint the fund as residue, and I think the residuary clause in her will does not include settled property over which she had a power of appointment. The question in all these cases, as shown by In re De Lusi's Trusts, 3 L. R. Ir. 232, 27 W. R. Dig. 9, and In re Pinède's Settlement, 28 W. R. 178, 12 Ch. D. 667, is one of intention, and the meaning must be gathered from the terms of the will itself. The question is one of construction of the residuary clause. In my opinion there would be no doubt as to the construction of that clause if it did not contain the word "appoint." [His lordship then read the clause, and proceeded:] But I do not think much weight ought to be given to the word "appoint." I see nothing in the will to show that the testatrix had any intention to include settled property. On the contrary, she did not appoint trustees of her own, and this alone, to my mind, primâ facie negatives any such intention. I find an indication in the will of an intention to keep her own property distinct, and none of an intention to mass the properties. The case of Oke v. Heath, 1 Ves. Sen. 135, does not compel me to come to a different conclusion. I think, therefore, the judgment of Byrne, J., ought to be affirmed.

(a.) Reported by S. E. WILLIAMS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

ROMER, L.J., said: The question in this case is a difficult one, but I think the appellants' contention is right. The key to the difficulty is to be found in the residuary clause. Was the residuary gift a residuary appointment? I think it was. The testatrix used apt words to include everything—namely, "devise, bequeath, and appoint." I do not think there could be any doubt on the point if the residuary gift stood by itself. Now is there anything in the prior part of the will to cut down the residuary gift? I think not. It is reasonably clear that the prior appointment would not have that effect, because there might be, as indeed there was, a lapse. It is true that a testator does not usually contemplate a lapse, but the object of a residuary gift is to include all undisposed-of property. The fact that the previous appointments in the will were made in the form of directions to the trustees of the settlement instead of directly to the appointees was not sufficient to cut down the gift of residue. It was said that an intention to exclude was shown from the fact that Henry Shaw was both an appointee and residuary legatee. But the answer to that was that he was not appointee of the whole of the settlement fund and therefore there would still be a reason for the residuary gift. There was nothing in the present case to prevent the ordinary meaning being given to the residuary clause. The question also arose whether the testatrix had blended the settlement funds with her own property. I think the two properties were so blended. Both were massed together subject to the payment of debts and legacies. Both were made one for all purposes. The case of In re Davies' Trust, 20 W. R. 165, L. R. 13 Eq. 163, assuming that it was rightly decided, did not cover the present case. And in In re De Luisi's Trusts there was no such blending of the funds as there was here. The appeal ought, therefore to be allowed.

COZENS-HARDY, L.J. — The residuary gift in the present case was a true residuary clause and included all undisposed-of property. The appointed fund was blended with the testatrix's own property for all purposes. The decision of Stirling, J., in Coxen v. Rowland, 42 W. R. 568, [1894] 1 Ch. 406, was directly in point.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, A. Toovey, for Bennett, Boycott, Orme, & Goodman, Buxton; J. & R. Gole, for Dixon & Syers, Liverpool; Ullithorne, Currey, & Jennings, for Neve, Cresswell, & Sparrow, Wolverhampton.

From K. B. Div. (Collins, M.R., and Stirling and Mathew, L.JJ.) } Nov. 27.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. EARL OF SELBORNE. (a.)

Inland Revenue — Succession duty — Acceleration of succession—Power of appointment—Extinction of prior interest—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 18—Succession Duty Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 51), ss. 2, 15.

By a settlement made in 1883 the Blackmoor Estate was settled upon such trusts and with and subject to such powers as the then (first) Lord Selborne and Viscount Wolmer should by deed appoint, and in default of or until appointment to the use of Lord Selborne for life, and after his death to the use of Viscount Wolmer in fee simple, if he should survive Lord Selborne, and, if not, then to the use of the first son of Viscount Wolmer who should attain twenty-one, and in default of such son to the use of the first Lord Selborne in fee simple.

In 1894 the first Lord Selborne and Viscount Wolmer by deed appointed that from and after the date of the deed the Blackmore Estate should go and remain to the use of Viscount Wolmer in fee simple for his own absolute use and benefit.

The first Lord Selborne died in 1895, and the Crown claimed succession duty under the Succession Duty Act, 1853, on the principal value of the Blackmoor Estate.

Held (reversing the judgment of the King's Bench Division). that the title to the succession created by the settlement of 1883 was not accelerated "by the surrender or extinction" of the prior life estate by the exercise of the power of appointment in 1894 within the meaning of section 15 of the Succession Duty Act, 1853, and that succession duty was not payable.

Appeal by the Earl of Selborne against a claim by the Crown for succession duty which had been upheld by the Divisional Court.

The claim was made under the following circumstances:

By a settlement executed on the 26th of October, 1883, the Blackmoor Estate was settled upon the then Earl of Selborne, his heirs and assigns, until the intended marriage of Viscount Wolmer with Lady Maud Cecil, and after the marriage upon such trusts and with and subject to such powers as the first Earl Selborne and Viscount Wolmer should by deed appoint, and in default of or until such appointment to the use of the said earl and his assigns for life, and upon his decease to the use of Viscount Wolmer in fee in case he should survive the earl, and, if Viscount Wolmer should die in the lifetime of the earl then to the use of the first son of Viscount Wolmer who should attain twenty-one and in default of such son then to the use of the first Earl Selborne in fee simple.

By an indenture dated the 29th of September, 1894, the then Earl of Selborne and Viscount Wolmer, with the consent of his wife Lady Maud Wolmer, jointly appointed that from and immediately after the date of the indenture the above-mentioned estate (with certain exceptions) should go and remain unto the use of Viscount Wolmer, his heirs and assigns, for his own absolute use and benefit

The first Earl of Selborne died in May, 1895.

In these circumstances the Crown claimed succession duty at the rate of 1½ per cent. under the Succession Duty Act, 1853, and the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888, and section 18 (1) of the Finance Act, 1894, and temporary estate duty under section 6 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1889, on the principal value of the Blackmoor Estate.

By section 2 of the Succession Duty Act, 1853, it is enacted that "every past or future disposition of property by reason whereof any person has or shall become beneficially entitled to any property . . . upon the death of any person . . . either immediately or after any interval, either certainly or contingently, and either originally or by way of substitutive limitation, and every devolution by law of any beneficial interest in property . . . upon the death of any person . . . to any other person, in possession or expectancy, shall be deemed to have conferred or to confer on the person entitled by reason of any such disposition or devolution a "succession"; and,

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Section 15 provides that "where the title to any succession shall be accelerated by the surrender or extinction of any prior interests, then the duty thereon shall be payable at the same time and in the same manner as such duty would have been payable if no such acceleration had taken place."

The Attorney-General filed an information against Viscount Wolmer, who had become by the death of the first earl, the second Lord Selborne, claiming succession duty, and it was contended on behalf of the commissioners that the settlement of 1883 created a succession within the meaning of section 2 of the Act of 1853, which succession had been "accelerated" by the execution of the deed of 1894 within the meaning of section 15 of the Act.

It was argued that the Act must be construed broadly, and not limited to its strict technical meaning, and that so construed the title enjoyed by the defendant came within the purview of the statute.

For the defendant it was submitted that neither section 2 nor section 15 of the Act of 1853 applied to the present case at all, since no title had accrued to the defendant on the death of the late earl. The deed of 1894 revoked all the limitations under and destroyed the settlement of 1883, and a new title was given him by the deed of 1894. That disposition did not create a new succession; it did not accelerate the defendant's title; it gave him a new title and accelerated the possession. The old title under the deed of 1883 having gone, there was nothing to accelerate.

The question came before Kennedy and Phillimore, JJ., when their lordships differed, Kennedy, J., holding in favour of the Crown, while Phillimore, J. (who as the junior judge withdrew his judgment), thought the claim of the Crown could not be supported.

From the decision of Kennedy, J., the Earl of Selborne appealed to this court.

Butcher, K.C., C. G. O. Bridgeman, and Austen Cartmell appeared for the appellant.

Sir Robert Finlay, A.G., and Vaughan Hawkins appeared for the Crown.

In addition to the cases considered in the judgment the following were referred to during the argument: Lord Braybrooke v. Attorney-General, 9 W. R. 601, 9 H. L. Cas. 150; Ex parte Sitwell, 37 W. R. 238, 21 Q. B. D. 466; Attorney-General v. Chapman, 40 W. R. 79, [1891] 2 Q. B. 526; Attorney-General v. Robertson, 41 W. R. 241, [1893] 1 Q. B. 293.

COLLINS, M.R., read the following judgment: This case raises the question whether the present Earl of Selborne is liable to pay succession duty in respect of an estate called the Blackmoor Estate, comprised in a deed of the 26th of October, 1883, and afterwards dealt with by another indenture of the 29th of September, 1894, under the circumstances stated in the information. The learned judges in the court below differed in opinion, Kennedy, J., holding, in favour of the Crown, that the duty was payable. Phillimore, J., being of the contrary opinion. Phillimore, J., having withdrawn his judgment, the appeal is now brought by the present Lord Selborne. The question arises in this way. By an indenture, dated the 26th of October, 1883, and made in view of the marriage of the now Earl of Selborne, then Viscount Wolmer, with Lady Maud Cecil, the first Earl of Selborne conveyed to trustees an estate called the Blackmoor Estate to hold the same on such trusts as the first Earl of Selborne and Viscount Wolmer should jointly appoint, such appointment during the joint lives of Viscount Wolmer and Lady Maud Cecil to be subject to her consent in writing, and in default of or until such appointment to the use of the first Earl of Selborne for life, and after his decease to the use of Viscount Wolmer in fee simple in case he should survive the Earl of Selborne, and if the said Viscount Wolmer should die in the lifetime of the said Earl of Selborne and should leave a son or sons who should have attained or should attain the age of twenty-one years then to the use of the son of the said Viscount Wolmer who should first or alone attain that age; but if the said Viscount Wolmer should die in the lifetime of the said Earl of Selborne and leave no son who should have attained or should attain the age of twenty-one years then to the use of the said Earl of Selborne in fee simple. By indenture dated the 29th of September, 1894, in exercise of the above power of appointment, the Earl of Selborne and Viscount Wolmer, with the consent of Lady Maud Wolmer, jointly appointed the estate in question (except the capital mansion and certain other lands) to Viscount Wolmer in fee.

It is contended by the Crown under these circumstances that the present Earl of Selborne, then Viscount Wolmer, is liable to pay succession duty. They contend that under section 2 of the Succession Duty Act, 1853, a succession was created by the settlement of 1883 in Lord Wolmer upon the death of his father, the first Earl of Selborne, and that under section 15 of the same Act the title to that succession was accelerated "by the surrender or extinction of prior interests" as a result of the exercise of the power of appointment by the deed of 1894. It is incumbent on the Crown, therefore, to show that the effect of the execution of the power was to accelerate the succession in the manner described by the section—viz., by the surrender or extinction of the prior interest—i.e., the life interest of the first Lord Selborne. Unless they can show this they fail. The law as to estates created by the execution of a power is beyond controversy, and is thus stated in Sugden on Powers (8th ed.), at pp. 470 and 479. At p. 470: "The estates created by the execution of a power take effect precisely in the same manner (with the exception which will shortly be noticed) as if created by the deed which raised the power. Thus, suppose a general power of appointment to be given to a man by deed, and he by virtue of his power limit the estate to A. for life, with remainder to his children in strict settlement, these limitations will take effect as estates limited by the original deed, and in exactly the same way as they would have done had they been limited in that deed by the grantor of the power, in lieu of the power of appointment by force of which they were created." And at p. 479: "Secondly, as to powers with estates limited in default of their being exercised. Immediately upon the execution of such a power the estates limited in default of appointment cease, and are defeated; and the estates limited under the power take effect from the time of the execution of the power, in the same manner as if they had been contained in the deed creating the power." The execution of the power, therefore, in 1894 was, in the words just quoted, that the estates limited by the settlement of 1883 in default of appointment "ceased and were defeated, and the estates limited under the power took effect from the time of the execution of the power in the same manner as if they had been contained in the deed creating the power." The execution of the power, therefore, could not have the effect of accelerating the succession created by the settlement of 1883, since its effect was to annul and defeat that succession altogether, and substitute for it the estate created by the execution of the power. Lord Wolmer did not take the fee as upon an acceleration of the estate conferred by the settlement, but by a new title under the appointment. For the same reason there was no acceleration by virtue of the surrender or extinction of any prior interest. The execution of the power, no doubt, extinguished the life interest of the first Lord Selborne under the settlement. But it equally extinguished the succession under that disposition, and the estate given to Lord Wolmer by the execution of the power was not only an estate given by a different title—viz., under the power and not under the settlement in default of appointment, but was also in itself a different interest; for, whereas under the settlement Lord Wolmer took only a fee subject to defeasance on his predeceasing his father and with certain limitations over to his children in that event, he took under the appointment an absolute fee simple. It is clear, therefore, that the Crown failed to bring this case within the words of the Succession Duty Act. They contend, however, that the words must not be strictly construed, but that a popular and non-technical meaning must be given to them, and they say that there has in substance here been an acceleration of a succession inasmuch as before the execution of the power Lord Wolmer had only a remainder after a life interest, and upon the execution of the power became entitled to the fee. They argued further that a succession was created by the settlement, and that it was not competent for Lord Wolmer to defeat it, so as to avoid paying duty, by executing the power in favour of himself. On the question of the rule of construction to be applied to the statute I think the passage cited by Mr. Butcher from the judgment of Lord Cairns in Partington v. Attorney-General, L. R. 4 H. L. 100, at p. 122, 17 W. R. H. L. Dig. 1, is important. He there says: "I am not at all sure that, in a case of this kind — a fiscal case — form is not amply sufficient; because, as I understand the principle of all fiscal legislation, it is this. If the person sought to be taxed comes within the letter of the law he must be taxed, however great the hardship may appear to the judicial mind to be. On the other hand, if the Crown, seeking to recover the tax, cannot bring the subject within the letter of the law, the subject is free, however apparently within the spirit of the law the case might otherwise appear to be. In other words, if there be admissible, in any statute, what is called an equitable construction, certainly such a construction is not admissible in a taxing statute, where you can simply adhere to the words of the statute." Therefore, if the Crown fail to bring the case within the words of the statute, interpreted according to their natural meaning, they must fail; and if there is a case which is not covered by the statute so interpreted it must be cured by legislation, and not by an attempt to construe it benevolently in favour of the Crown. As to Lord Wolmer being a party to destroying the succession by an appointment to himself, the learned counsel did not seriously dispute that if the power had been executed in favour of a stranger the succession would have been destroyed and no duty payable (see In re Warner's Settled Estates, 29 W. R. 726, 17 Ch. D. 711, per Jessel, M.R.), though they preferred not to admit it in view of certain observations of Lord Herschell in Lord Wolverton's case, nor were they able to point out anything in the wording of the statute which suggested that a different result must follow if the appointment was in favour of one of the appointors. Mr. Vaughan Hawkins indeed contended that the power was not an overriding power, but was really intended to be ancillary to the carrying into effect of the provisions of the settlement, and must, therefore, be construed, as far as I understand him, as bringing into operation at an earlier date the succession of the settlement rather than as substituting for it a new estate created by the execution of the power. But it seems to me that, having regard to the undisputed law as to estates created by the execution of powers, and to the conditions under which succession duty becomes payable by the terms of the 15th section, as upon an acceleration of title to a succession, his argument really amounts to an invitation to us to ignore the legal effect of what was actually done, or to strain the words of the statute to cover something that does not fall within them. With respect to the illustration put by the Attorney-General of an estate limited to such use as A. and B. should appoint, and in default of appointment to A. for life, remainder to B. in fee, and his contention thereon that it would be absurd to hold that though there would be a succession accelerated if A. surrendered his interest to B., yet that there would be no acceleration if they appointed the whole to B. under the power, I can only say that if this result follows logically from the wording of the section it is for the Legislature and not for us to alter it. But, however that may be where the estates that can be created under the power and those limited in default of appointment are co-extensive, that is not this case. No dealing with their interest in default of appointment under the settlement of 1883 by Lord Selborne and Lord Wolmer could have effected that which was brought into existence by the appointment under the power, with the consent of Lady Maud Wolmer, and in the case of Charlton v. Attorney-General, 27 W. R. 921, 4 App. Cas. 427, at pp. 444 and 447, Lord Selborne has himself emphasized this distinction. For these reasons I think this appeal must be allowed.

STIRLING and MATHEW, L.JJ., delivered judgments to the same effect.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Longbourne, Stevens, & Powell; Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

Appeal.
(Collins, M.R., and Stirling and Mathew, L.JJ.) — Nov. 14, 15.

FIELD v. LONGDEN & SON. (a.)

Master and servant—Employers' Liability—Accident—Compensation—Arbitration—Question as to liability to pay compensation or amount or duration thereof—Jurisdiction of arbitrator—Condition precedent to—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1, sub-section 3.

In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, it is a condition precedent to the jurisdiction of a county court judge to act as arbitrator under section 1, sub-section 3, of the Act, that a question should have arisen between the parties as to the liability to pay compensation under the Act or as to the amount or duration of such compensation.

A workman having met with an accident arising out of and in the course of an employment within the scope of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and being thereby incapacitated for work, was, from a fortnight after the accident, regularly paid by his employers weekly sums of the full amount that could be recovered under the Act—viz, fifty per cent. of his average weekly earnings, and this they promised to continue to do during his incapacity.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Held, on the workman taking arbitration proceedings under the Act, that the county court judge had no jurisdiction to hear the case, as no question within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 3, had arisen between the parties.

This was an appeal from an award of the judge of the Sheffield County Court in an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

On the 29th of October, 1900, the applicant, who was in the employment of the present appellants within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, sustained personal injury by an accident arising out of and in the course of such employment.

At the time of the accident the applicant's average weekly wages were thirty shillings. From a fortnight after the accident the employers made regular weekly payments to the applicant of fifteen shillings, being 50 per cent. of his average weekly earnings.

On the 10th of April, 1901, the employers received from a solicitor acting on behalf of the applicant a letter containing, inter alia, as follows: "My client is still unable to follow any employment, and I shall be glad to hear from you with regard to any offer of settlement of the matter. Please treat this letter as notice of my client's accident and claim to compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897." To this letter the employers replied on the 12th of April, 1901, stating that they would be pleased if the claim could be finally disposed of, and that having regard to the payments already made they desired to know what would be accepted in lieu of further allowances and they would consider the same.

Further correspondence passed between the parties. On the 17th of April the applicant's solicitor wrote that the applicant would be willing to take £75 with £5 5s. for the solicitor's costs in settlement of the matter. On the 19th of April the employers replied that having regard to the allowances already made they could not agree to pay so large a sum, and that they would arrange for a medical examination and would continue weekly payments during incapacity.

On the 24th of April a request for arbitration was filed in the county court on the applicants' behalf, a copy of which was served on the employers. The amount claimed as compensation was fifteen shillings per week during incapacity.

At this time the employers were still paying the applicant fifteen shillings a week.

On the 25th of April the employers wrote to the applicant's solicitor as follows: "We have now received a medical report upon this man's condition, and learn that, while he has recovered from the effects of the fractured skull, his right leg is still weak. He will no doubt be ready for full work in three months' time. Up to the present nearly £20 allowances have been paid him, and we suggest that a further sum of £15, £5 5s. your costs, will fairly meet this case. This we are willing to pay provided that the matter can be ended forthwith."

On the 26th of April the applicant's solicitor replied that his client would not accept the offer, and he suggested that the employers should make an offer of £50, and £5 5s. costs. The employers replied that they were unable to offer so much.

On the 30th of April, 1901, the employers wrote expressing their surprise that having regard to the previous correspondence the reference should have been filed, and they stated that they were quite prepared to have a memorandum (see clause 8, Schedule II.) filed, but reminded the applicant's solicitor that an effective agreement to pay the applicant compensation under the terms and provisions of the Act was in force, and they suggested that the reference should be withdrawn.

On the 21st of May, 1901, the employers by their answer to the request for arbitration stated that the applicant was not entitled to an award upon the ground that at the date of the filing of the request for arbitration no question had arisen as to the liability to pay compensation under the Act or as to whether the employment was one to which the Act applied or as to the kind or duration of the compensation under the Act. In the alternative they stated that all questions between the parties had been settled by agreement prior to the date of the request for arbitration.

On the 29th of May, 1901, at the hearing before his Honour Judge Waddy, K.C., the applicant was the only witness called, and he said that there had been no agreement to settle the matter either by a lump sum or a weekly payment; that he had received from the employers a fortnight after the accident until the 9th of April fifteen shillings per week; and that they never either disputed or admitted liability.

On behalf of the employers it was submitted that there was no question to arbitrate upon inasmuch as the applicant had been regularly and fully paid ever since the accident.

The learned county court judge was of opinion that the applicant was entitled to an award, and to have the same recorded in his favour, and on the 6th day of June, 1891, after having considered the matter, he made his award by which the applicant was to receive fifteen shillings a week during incapacity.

From this decision the employers now appealed.

Manisty, K.C. (H. W. W. Wilberforce with him), for the appellants.—The judge had no jurisdiction to make the award as no question has arisen within the meaning of sub-section 3 of section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. A county court judge has no jurisdiction under that provision to entertain an application for arbitration under the Act and to make an award thereon unless—firstly, a "question arises" as to, either, "the liability to pay compensation under this Act" or as to the amount or duration of compensation under this Act; or, secondly, unless the question is "not settled by agreement." In this case there was no such question. The judge was wrong in holding that any such question had arisen, and there was no evidence to support such finding. The employers never disputed their liability to pay compensation or as to the amount thereof or that it should be paid during the incapacity of the applicant. The employers ought not therefore to have these arbitration proceedings thrust upon them. Even if any "question" within the meaning of sub-section 3 ever arose between the parties it should be inferred upon the facts and the correspondence that such question was settled by agreement; there was no evidence upon which the judge could find that such question had not been settled. The employers offered to have a memorandum recorded under clause 8 of Schedule II. of the Act which would have been enforceable as a county court judgment and this would have fully secured the applicant and saved the employers all the expense of an arbitration.

Danckwerts, K.C. (Arthur Sims with him), for the respondent.—The judge had jurisdiction to make the award. As soon as the workman filed his request for arbitration there was a question arising within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 3, between the parties, and he was entitled to have his claim settled by arbitration. It was necessary for his own protection that the applicant should take arbitration proceedings, because after the lapse of six months from the date of the accident the employers, although they had made the weekly payments, might say that a claim for compensation was out of time: Rendell v. Hill's Dry Docks and Engineering Co., 48 W. R. 530, [1900] 2 Q. B. 245. There was no agreement between the parties, and so there was nothing of which a memorandum could be registered under section 8 of Schedule II. The employers were not prejudiced by the fact that the workman took arbitration proceedings, for they might have avoided further costs by filing a notice that they submitted to an award under rule 18 (1) of the Workmen's Compensation Rules, 1898, and there would have been an end of the question; but this was not done. The point that there was an agreement was never taken at the trial, and the appellants are not entitled now to raise it.

Manisty, K.C., was not called upon to reply.

COLLINS, M.R.—I am of opinion that this appeal should be allowed. In this case a workman sustained personal injury by an accident in the course of an employment to which the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, applies. Thereupon the workman's employers, a fortnight after the accident, began to pay him one-half his weekly wages—that is to say, the maximum amount he could possibly obtain under the statute by way of compensation in such circumstances. The employers continued to make these payments for a period of between five and six months, when a letter was written to them stating that the workman claimed compensation under the Act. Correspondence followed for some time, and then a request on behalf of the workman for arbitration was filed, and a copy was served upon the employers, and they filed an answer, and the matter in due course came before the county court judge, when the point was raised that there was no question between the parties for arbitration, and that, therefore, the county court judge had no jurisdiction to hear the case. The point raised arises under section 1, sub-section 3, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, which provides that "if any question arises in any proceedings under this Act as to the liability to pay compensation under this Act . . . or as to the amount or duration of compensation under this Act, the question, if not settled by agreement, shall . . . be settled by arbitration in accordance with the second schedule to this Act."

It is thus, by the terms of this sub-section, made a condition precedent to the right to proceed to arbitration that, first of all, there must be a "question" arising, and secondly, the further condition that that "question" has not been "settled by agreement." If there be a "question," and if that "question" be "settled by agreement," then the jurisdiction of the county court judge under this provision is ousted. In the present case it was contended before the county court judge that there was no question arising between the parties, and therefore that there was no subject-matter for arbitration. I think that contention was well founded. It seems to me that, upon the admitted facts of the case, no "question" ever did arise between the parties, because on the workman sustaining the injury the employers paid him weekly all that he could possibly obtain by way of compensation under the Act. No question or dispute was raised on the part of the workman or of the employers. I think, therefore, that no point really arises for discussion as to whether the question had been settled by agreement to pay compensation, because there never was any question arising between the parties, though I think there was a clear agreement between the parties.

In clause 8 of Schedule II. to the Act there is a provision whereby the workman who is not content to rest upon the fact that there is no dispute between the employer and himself, but desires that there should be a memorandum of the position of affairs between them may have such a memorandum recorded in the county court. Having regard to the fact that the Act was designed to give to the injured workman, who falls within its scope, compensation with as little expense as possible the terms of this provision are important, let us consider what was the position of the parties, while the employers were paying to the workman 15s. a week, the maximum amount he could be entitled to, there being no question raised by them as to their liability, or as to the amount or duration of compensation. I will assume, for the purpose, that there was no binding agreement by the employers to pay compensation. Suppose the workman were to propose to send in a memorandum of an agreement to be recorded in the county court, and the employers were to refuse to agree to this, alleging that there was no agreement, then it appears to me there would have been a dispute, and a question would have arisen which the workman would have been entitled to have had settled by arbitration under the Act. On the other hand, if the parties were really treating the practice of making these weekly payments as an agreement to pay compensation, then the employers would, of course, have consented to the memorandum being recorded, which would have been done without any expense being incurred. That being so, was the workman justified in taking proceedings for arbitration? In my opinion he clearly was not. I think that to hold that he was justified would be in effect to invite the parties to incur unnecessary expenses which it was the policy of the Legislature to prevent. But apart from that I think that the workman had no right to go to arbitration, because there was no question arising or dispute existing between the parties at the time the request for arbitration was filed. The filing of the request for arbitration did not create a question or dispute, because, according to the terms of section 1, sub-section 3, of the Act, the question which is to be settled by arbitration must be a question either as to liability to pay compensation, or as to the amount or duration of the compensation. In this case no such question arose.

Alternatively it has been contended on behalf of the employers that if there were any question between the parties it was settled by agreement, and that the jurisdiction of the county court judge had been ousted, it being only in the event of the question not having been settled by agreement that recourse can be had to arbitration. I do not think it is necessary to decide that point. If it were necessary I should be of opinion, having regard to the correspondence and the conduct of the parties, particularly that of the employers in having a medical examination of the workman under Schedule I., s. 11, which amounts, as it seems to me, to a clear admission on their part of their liability, and the submission of the workman to that examination, that there was conclusive evidence of an agreement between the parties. But in the present case it is not necessary to decide whether there was an agreement or whether the county court judge was entitled to treat it as an open question. I rest my judgment in this case upon the ground that no question within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 3, of the Act had arisen between the parties, and that the existence of such a question is a condition precedent to the right to invoke the jurisdiction of the county court judge to arbitrate between the parties.

STIRLING, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. At the hearing before the county court judge it was submitted on the part of the employers that there was no question for the judge to arbitrate upon, and the allegation that there was no question to arbitrate upon was not denied by counsel on behalf of the workman, but it was submitted on his behalf that he, nevertheless, was entitled to have a formal finding recorded in his favour. The question therefore arises whether the county court judge was right in proceeding to hear the case and make an award. It seems to me that, having regard to the words in section 1, sub-section 3, of the Act, it is a condition precedent to the jurisdiction of the county court judge to arbitrate that there should be such a question arising as is indicated by those words. I cannot agree with the contention that the moment a request for arbitration is made a "question" is necessarily raised. The words of sub-section 3 show that there may be proceedings without any question having arisen. Proceedings begin when notice of the accident and of a claim is given. It is, however, contended that the workman is entitled to go on and have resort to proceedings which were only intended as a mode of solving difficulties where a question arises during the proceedings either as to the lability to pay compensation or as to the amount or duration of compensation. The correspondence, in my opinion, clearly shows that the liability to pay compensation was admitted, and by the letter of the 19th of April the employers offered to continue payment weekly to the workman of half the amount of his wages during the period of his incapacity. Therefore all the points are covered which are involved in the sub-section. This being so, the county court judge ought, in my opinion, to have held that he had no jurisdiction.

I desire to add that the Workmen's Compensation Act was intended for the benefit of workmen, and not for that of the legal profession, and I do not think we ought, unless actually compelled by the language used, to put such a construction upon it as to convert it into a perennial source of litigation and needless expense.

MATHEW, L.J.—I am entirely of the same opinion, and particularly I agree with the last observations of my brother Stirling. The grounds on which I rest my judgment in this case are short and simple. Looking at section 1, sub-section 3, of the Act we ascertain the conditions under which the arbitrator's jurisdiction arises, and we have to ask ourselves whether those conditions existed in the present case. In my opinion it is clear that they did not exist, and that no such question as is mentioned in the sub-section arose. It seems to me impossible to say that there was no agreement here, and I think the county court judge clearly ought to have held, if necessary, that there was an agreement; but apart from that, it is quite sufficient for the purpose of deciding the case to say that the learned judge's jurisdiction was ousted, inasmuch as there was not before him any question such as is contemplated by sub-section 3. I agree that the appeal should be allowed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Steadman & Van Praagh, for Arthur Neal, Sheffield.

Solicitors for the respondent, Halse, Trustram, & Co., for A. Muir Wilson, Sheffield.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. (Buckley, J.) — Nov. 5.

In re JONES.
ELGOOD v. JONES.
In re JONES.
ELGOOD v. KINDERSLEY. (a.)

Administration—Costs of administration—Real and personal estate — Apportionment of costs — Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), s. 2, sub-section 3.

The rule that the general costs of an administration action are borne by the personal estate, and that the costs are borne by the real estate only so far as they have been increased by the administration of the real estate, remains unaltered by the Land Transfer Act, 1897.

Further consideration.

The above-named testatrix died in March, 1899, intestate as regards her residuary estate, and the plaintiff in the above actions had obtained letters of administration with the will annexed to the estate.

The actions were for the administration of the real and personal estate, one being brought against one of the next-of-kin only, the other against that defendant and the co-heiresses of the testatrix also; and the two actions had been consolidated by order. His lordship treated them as one action.

A question arose upon the minutes as to how the costs, charges, and expenses of the plaintiff relating to the administration of the estate should be apportioned between the real and personal estate.

R. J. Parker, for the plaintiff.

Mitchell, for one of the co-heiresses.—The rule is settled that the personal estate bears the general costs of administration, and that the real estate bears them only as far as they have been increased by the administration of it: Patching v. Barnett, 51 L. J. Ch. 74, 30 W. R. Dig. 54; In re Middleton, Thompson v. Harris, 30 W. R. 293, 19 Ch. D. 552; In re Roper, 39 W. R. 101, 45 Ch. D. 126.

Edward Ford, for the other co-heiress, supported this view.

C. E. Bovill, for some of the next-of-kin.—The cases cited were before the Land Transfer Act, 1897. Since that Act the real estate vests in the administrator, and cannot be dealt with except by means of a grant of letters of administration (see sections 1 and 2), and now these costs should be borne by the real and personal estates according to their respective amounts.

BUCKLEY, J.—The rule laid down in the cases of Patching v. Barnett and In re Middleton was the established practice of the court up to the Land Transfer Act, 1897. It is said that the Act has made a difference in this practice, and that now the costs of an administration action should be borne by the realty and the personalty rateably. The case falls within section 2, sub-section 3, of the Act. But by the proviso of that sub-section it shall not "alter or affect the order in which real and personal assets respectively are now applicable in or towards the payment of funeral and testamentary expenses," and consequently the above rule of practice remains as before. The personal estate will bear the general costs of the administration and the real estate only the costs so far as they have increased by it.

Solicitors, Arkcoll, Cockell, & Chadwick; Blyth, Dutton, Hartley, & Blyth; Lawrence, Graham, & Co.

(a.) Reported by NEVILLE TEBBUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Darling and Channell, JJ.) Nov. 18.

GEUTEL v. RAPPS. (a.)

Local government—Tramway—Bye-law—Validity.

A tramway company, in a town where the Town Police Clauses Act, 1847, was in operation, made the following bye-law: "No person shall swear or use obscene or offensive language whilst in or upon any carriage."

Held, that the bye-law was not invalid because it did not contain the words "to the annoyance of the passengers"; and that a local authority has the power of defining what shall be deemed a nuisance under particular circumstances, and can deal with such by means of a bye-law.

Kruse v. Johnson, 46 W. R. 630, [1898] 2 Q. B. 91, followed.

Strickland v. Hayes, 44 W. R. 398, [1896] 1 Q. B. 290, distinguished.

Special case.

This was an appeal from a decision of the justices of Bristol, who had dismissed an information charging the respondent with the breach of a bye-law made in pursuance of the Tramways Act, 1870.

The bye-laws were duly made, allowed, and published in 1877, and were proved and put in evidence before the justices.

No. 6 was as follows: "No person shall swear or use obscene or offensive language whilst in or upon any carriage, or commit any nuisance in or upon or against any carriage, or interfere with the comfort of any passenger."

It was proved by the conductor of the tramway company that on the 29th of July last, when his tramcar was near Ashton Gate, the respondent got on the carriage, and when asked for his fare uttered the words complained of. The uttering of the words was not disputed. The conductor also proved that there were two other passengers on the car on the front seat who did not hear the words, and who made no complaint.

The justices found as a fact (so far as it was a matter of fact) and as a matter of law (so far as it was a matter of law) that the words were obscene, and were actually "offensive language" considering to whom they were spoken. The justices came to the conclusion that they were bound by the decision in Strickland v. Hayes, 44 W. R. 398, [1896] 1 Q. B. 290, and as no such words as "to the annoyance of passengers" were embodied in the bye-law, it should for that reason be held ultra vires. Section 46 of the Tramways Act, 1870, enacts, inter alia, that bye-laws must not be repugnant to the general law, whereas this bye-law was repugnant to the Towns Police Clauses Act, 1847, s. 28, which was in operation in Bristol, and which forbids the use of obscene or profane language to the annoyance of fellow passengers. It was contended by the appellant that the statute of 1847 did not cover the same state of facts as the bye-law, and that the latter was, therefore, not repugnant to the former.

Macmorran, K.C., and H. H. Gregory, for the appellant.

F. P. M. Schiller, for the respondent.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J., in giving judgment, said: I think that the magistrates ought to have held the bye-law valid, and have convicted the respondent. If Strickland v. Hayes is to be read as deciding more than this—that a bye-law cannot make the same offence which has been dealt with by a public Act a different offence—I doubt if it is now law. Certainly Kruse v. Johnson, 46 W. R. 630, [1898] 2 Q. B. 91, which was decided before a specially-constituted Divisional Court, recognized the right of the authority to define what shall be a nuisance in particular circumstances. I think the argument of the appellant was right, that the Town Police Clauses Act, 1847, was not dealing with the case of a local authority making bye-laws, and therefore the bye-law we are now considering cannot be held repugnant to any enactment made under that statute.

For these reasons the case must go back to the magistrates to be reheard.

DARLING and CHANNELL, JJ., delivered judgment to a like effect.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Thos. White & Sons, for Stanley, Wasbrough, & Doggett, Bristol.

Solicitors for the respondent, Hare & Co., for E. J. Watson, Bristol.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Darling and Channell, JJ.) Nov. 9.

MAYHEW v. SUTTON. (a.)

Highway—Locomotive—Motor-car—Excessive speed—Driven "to the common danger of passengers"—Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 36), s. 4—Light Locomotives on Highways Order, 1896, Art. IV., s. 1.

Article IV., s. 1, of the Light Locomotives on Highways Order, 1896, provides that a person shall not drive a light locomotive on a highway at any greater speed than is reasonable and proper, having regard to the traffic on the highway.

The appellant drove a motor-car at a high rate of speed through a village. The justices convicted the appellant under the above section of the order, on the ground that the speed was "to the common danger of the passengers" using the road, although there was no evidence that anybody was on the road at the time in question.

Held, that the justices were right in convicting the appellant.

Appeal by Mark Mayhew from a conviction by the justices sitting at Iver, Buckinghamshire.

The conviction was under the Light Locomotives on Highways Order, 1896, which was made by the Local Government Board under section 4 of the Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 36), which provided that no light locomotive should be driven "to the common danger of passengers."

The appellant was summoned under this provision, and at the hearing of the charge it was proved that he was at seven o'clock on a Sunday morning driving a locomotive along the highway at a tremendous pace. It was also proved that he did not pull up within sixty yards. No evidence, however, was given that there were any passengers on the road at the time he was so driving.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The magistrates convicted the appellant, but stated a case in which they set out that the information charged that on the 28th of April last, the appellant, being a person driving a light locomotive on a highway in the parish of Denham, called the Oxford-road, unlawfully drove his motor-car to the common danger of passengers contrary to the Locomotives on Highways Act. Police-constable Payne stated at the hearing that he saw the motor-car coming down Red-hill at a terrific pace. He walked into the centre of the road and held up both arms and that although the driver could see him some 340 yards from where he stood he did not stop until he had passed him some 60 yards. No further evidence was given for the prosecution, and on behalf of the appellant it was contended that, in the absence of affirmative evidence that at the time in question there were passengers on the highway who were endangered by reason of the speed at which the motor-car was being driven the offence charged was not made out. The justices convicted the appellant, and fined him 10s. and 8s. 6d. costs.

Roger Wallace, K.C., and Fleming.—There can be no breach of the Order unless the motor-car was so driven as to be a danger to passengers. There could be no danger to passengers unless there were passengers on the highway at the time when the motor-car was driven along it. The prosecution to prove their case must show that there were passengers on the highway at the time, and that they were endangered. Here there was no evidence that there was anyone about this Sunday morning except the police-constable, and as he was not endangered the case for the prosecution fails.

They cited Stinson v. Browning, 14 W. R. 395, 35 L. J. M. C. 152; Hill v. Somerset, 51 J. P. 742; Smith v. Boon, 49 W. R. 480, 17 Times L. R. 472.

No one appeared for the respondent.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—It has been held in Smith v. Boon that under the first part of this regulation order of 1896, Art. IV., s. 1, it was not necessary to prove that any other vehicle was in motion at the moment, and that the justices could properly convict having regard to the traffic which used the highway, although there was no evidence before them that at the time any vehicle or person using the highway was interrupted, interfered with, incommoded, or affected by reason of the speed the defendant was driving his motor tricycle. In the argument which has been addressed to us it was attempted to be said that the same rule was not to apply to the words in the latter part of the same order—the words "to the common danger of passengers." We have nothing to do in this case with the reasonableness of the regulation, nor have we to pass an opinion whether these regulations should or should not be amended for the benefit of persons who drive motor-cars. The consideration of the rule really shows that, at any rate the justices, upon evidence before them of a high rate of speed, might say, as they did say, that such a high rate of speed was to the common danger of passengers, though no particular passenger was shown to have run out of the way, or to have fled for his life, or to have taken steps to have avoided being run down. On the uncontradicted evidence it was open for the justices to say that in this case the defendant had been guilty of driving to the common danger.

DARLING and CHANNELL, JJ., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Frith & Co.

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. Divorce. } Nov. 12.

BOSWORTHICK v. BOSWORTHICK. (a.)

Divorce—Rape—Indecent assault—Conduct amounting to cruelty.

Where in a suit for dissolution of marriage on the ground of rape the respondent was proved to have been convicted at the quarter sessions of a series of indecent assaults upon children.

The Court granted the petitioner a decree nisi on the ground of the respondent's having committed rape;

And held further, that such conduct of the respondent, causing nervous shock to the petitioner, amounted to cruelty.

Thompson v. Thompson, 17 Times L. R. 572, and Coffey v. Coffey, [1898] P. 169, 46 W. R. Dig. 51, followed.

This was the petition of Catherine Bosworthick for a dissolution of her marriage with the respondent, Charles Henry Bosworthick, on the ground that he had committed rape, and she alternatively asked for a judicial separation on the ground of cruelty.

BARNES, J., upon the petition coming on for hearing, said: "Although the court has no power to try the case in camerâ, it is clearly one in which no one should remain in court except those engaged in the case."

The public then left the court.

It appeared from counsel's opening statement that the parties were married on the 12th of October, 1897, at the parish church of Atherton, Lancs, the respondent being in the merchant service.

There had been no children of the marriage.

It appeared that in September, 1898, two little girls came on a visit to the petitioner and the respondent at their house at Twickenham, and the children afterwards complained that while there the respondent indecently exposed himself to them. Their father on learning this taxed the respondent with it. He at first denied it, but subsequently admitted it. In consequence of this the petitioner and respondent separated and a deed was executed on the 28th of September, 1898, it being arranged that the respondent should go abroad for four years. However, the following year the petitioner forgave the respondent and lived with him again. They then went to live at Ivy Bridge, in Devonshire, and while there the respondent committed a series of indecent assaults on six female children whose ages varied from eight to twelve years. In October, 1900, he was prosecuted at the Exeter Quarter Sessions and was convicted of committing such indecent assaults and sentenced to twenty months' hard labour, he having already been in prison for four months awaiting trial. In consequence of this conduct on the respondent's part the petitioner's health greatly suffered, and both in September, 1898, and in October, 1900, she consulted her medical advisers, who would prove that she was an "absolute wreck" and suffered from sleeplessness, apparently caused by mental shock. Evidence substantiating counsel's opening was given, and two little girls aged twelve and ten years respectively gave evidence of indecent conduct committed on them by the respondent, and they repeated the evidence which they had deposed to prior to the trial at the quarter sessions. The elder child proved attempted penetration.

Inderwick, K.C., and Harvey Murphy, for the petitioner.

(a.) Reported by GWYNNE HALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The respondent was not represented.

BARNES, J., said that he thought that a case of rape had been sufficiently established, and though he had some difficulty in accepting the elder child's evidence [counsel had great difficulty in inducing the witness to say what occurred] the whole outline of the case was such that he thought the court might properly act as it had acted previously in the case of Coffey v. Coffey, [1898] P. 169, 46 W. R. Dig. 51. But if he could not have come to the decision that he had, he thought the case of cruelty was made out, and was covered by the case of Thompson v. Thompson, 17 Times L. R. 572. There would, therefore, be a decree nisi with costs.

Solicitor, Woodcock Ryland.

House of Lords.

From C. A. (England). Aug. 5, 1901.

WHITECHURCH (LIMITED) v. CAVANAGH. (a.)

Company — Estoppel — Certification — Transfer — Secretary — Director.

A company is not estopped by the certification of its secretary if he gives a receipt or an acknowledgment for certificates which have not been lodged with him. Those who deal with a company must be cognizant of the company's memorandum and articles of association; and a managing or other director of a company cannot bind the company by estoppel or otherwise in contravention of the regulations in the memorandum or articles of association.

Where the secretary of a company falsely certified that certificates of shares had been deposited, and this was done for the purpose of enabling a fraud to be carried out,

Held, in an action for damages for refusing to place the name of the respondent on the register of a company, that the company were not estopped by the action of their secretary from setting up the true state of facts, and, as his conduct was unauthorized and outside the scope of his employment, the company were justified in not registering the respondent as transferee.

Grant v. Norway, 10 C. B. 665, followed.

Decision of the Court of Appeal reversed.

Appeal by George Whitechurch (Limited), from a judgment of the Court of Appeal (Smith, Collins, and Romer, L.JJ.), which affirmed that of Bigham, J.

The facts as given by Lord Brampton were as follows:

In May, 1899, the Innox Tannery Co., whose tanning works were at Longjumeau, near Paris, was indebted to the respondent Cavanagh, a hide merchant in Paris, in upwards of £14,000 for raw hides sold and delivered. This debt had been guaranteed by one Raymond, the managing director of the company, whose offices were in Tokenhouse-yard, London.

The leather manufactured by the Innox Co. was for the most part consigned to the appellant company, George Whitechurch (Limited), leather merchants at Gentilly, near Paris, for sale on commission, that company making advances to the Innox Co. on such goods to the amount of 80 per cent. of their invoiced value. The registered office of the Whitechurch Co. in London was in the same house as Raymond's, and a clerk of Raymond, named Wells, was on his recommendation appointed secretary.

Having become dissatisfied with the conduct of the Innox Co. respecting his debt, Cavanagh, on the 23rd of May, 1899, lodged against the goods and moneys of that company (as well those in their own possession as those in the possession of the Whitechurch Co. for sale) a French legal process called an opposition, which operated as an attachment, stopping so long as it existed all dealing with the property affected by it. Knowledge of this step was telegraphed by Mr. George Whitechurch to Raymond in London, and he, with a view of bringing about a withdrawal of it, had an interview with Cavanagh in Paris on the 27th of May, when he arranged the heads of a proposed agreement between Cavanagh, the Innox Co., and himself for the withdrawal of the opposition on terms that the Whitechurch Co. should pay over to Cavanagh from time to time, in part discharge of his debt, one-half of the 80 per cent. of the advances which, under their existing arrangements, were payable to the Innox Co., and that for ensuring to Cavanagh the remainder of his debt Raymond should deliver to him 10,350 shares in the appellant company. This arrangement, however, was made subject to the acquiescence of the Whitechurch Co., without which it was to be a nullity.

As regards the shares, it was stipulated that they should be represented by "a certified transfer" of 1,100 preference shares, described in the agreement by specific numbers, and "a certified transfer" of 9,250 ordinary shares, similarly described. A meeting was appointed in Paris on Wednesday, the 31st of May, to complete this agreement. It was further arranged with Raymond that the certificates for those shares should be forthcoming on that day. Cavanagh in his evidence stated that Raymond promised to send him the transfer for the shares with the certificates for them by that time, and Mr. C. Smith, Cavanagh's London solicitor, who attended the meeting on his behalf, deposed that before leaving London for Paris on the 29th he saw and arranged with Raymond that he should hand to him the "original certificates" in order that he might take them with him. Smith endeavoured to make it appear that by "original certificates" he meant the "original transfers," but he ultimately admitted that he appreciated the difference between a certified transfer and a certificate for shares, and that the latter were to be furnished to him so that he might be in a position to produce them in Paris, and that he never supposed that he would have to deal with certified transfers at all. Neither certified transfers nor share certificates, however, were furnished either to Cavanagh or Smith, but on calling on the morning of Tuesday, the 30th of May, at the office of Mr. Maugham, Raymond's solicitor in Paris, they learned from that gentleman that he had that morning received by post from Raymond certified transfers of the shares (which he produced) without any share certificates.

The certified transfers were two in number—the 1,100 preference shares were comprised in one, the 9,250 ordinary shares in the other. Each set of shares was described by specific numbers. Each transfer purported to be a transfer by Raymond to Cavanagh, and each was dated the 29th of May, 1899, and signed and sealed by Raymond and attested by Wells. In the margin of each transfer was the certificate in question. On that of the preference shares it was as follows:

Coupon for 1,100 preference shares in the company's office. George Whitechurch (Limited) [affixed by rubber stamp].—RICHARD G. WELLS, Secretary [in Wells' handwriting].

On that of the ordinary shares it was similar in words, with the substitution of "9,250 ordinary" instead of "1,100 preference."

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Later in the same day Cavanagh and Smith called on Mr. George Whitechurch and told him that they had seen the certified transfers, and that Maugham had expressed his opinion that they were in order.

Whitechurch said that he had heard from Raymond, and knew all about it, and as regarded the certified transfers, he said, "they would be all in order if he was satisfied that the signatures on them were the genuine signatures of the secretary." "Then," said Smith, "I put it to him expressly that if he required the original certificates or scrip to be annexed to the certificate, the appointment for the next day would have to go off." He replied, "I shall be quite satisfied if it is Wells' signature."

No transfers were shown to Whitechurch on that day, and the letter above referred to was not calculated to excite any suspicion in his mind.

On the following morning, the 31st of May, the meeting appointed for the execution of the agreement was held, when Mr. Whitechurch was present, but only for the purpose of giving his acquiescence, if, after seeing the certified transfers, he found that they were, on the face of them, in order. There was no question as to the willingness of Cavanagh to sign it. The great object was to get Whitechurch to sign his acquiescence, though he was not a party to the agreement.

Cavanagh's account of this meeting was as follows: Mr. Maugham produced the certified transfers; Mr. Whitechurch looked at them, and having done so said they were all right, and addressing him (Cavanagh), "and all you have to do is to give the certificates to me, and I shall send them to London, and you will get the fresh certificates." The agreement was then signed by the parties to it, and Whitechurch signed his acquiescence. Subsequently the transfers were signed by Cavanagh as transferee, and he took possession of them.

He then withdrew his opposition and sent the transfers to the office of the Whitechurch Co. in London for registration, and for the issue of new certificates. These were refused upon the ground that Raymond was not the registered owner of the shares, and that the old certificates had not been produced for cancellation as required by the articles of association of the company.

For this refusal this action was commenced. At the trial it was contended for the plaintiff, upon the authority of Carr v. London and North-Western Railway Co. 23 W. R. 747, L. R. 10 C. P. 307, that the defendant company was estopped by the certification of the transfers signed by Wells, the secretary, and by the language of Whitechurch, the managing director, from denying that Raymond was the registered holder of and entitled to transfer the shares.

Bigham, J., and the Court of Appeal adopted this contention.

The company appealed.

Lawson Walton, K.C., Swinfen Eady, K.C., and W. Wills appeared for the appellants.

Rufus Isaacs, K.C., and L. Ryland, for the respondent.

The Earl of HALSBURY, L.C.—I am about to read the judgment of Lord Macnaghten, in which I entirely concur, and I may add that Lord Shand, who has read it, concurs also.

Lord MACNAGHTEN (read by the Lord Chancellor).—This case has been argued very fully and very ably. Many interesting points have been discussed most of which, I am happy to think, are not at all necessary for the determination of the matter in hand. The real question may be stated very shortly. Has the appellant company, George Whitechurch (Limited), incurred any, and, if any, what, liability by reason of representations made by its secretary, Richard G. Wells, in London, and by its managing director, George Whitechurch, in Paris? The claim as originally presented was founded on alleged misrepresentation by the company. The action, however, was treated by the Court of Appeal and by the learned counsel for the respondent at your lordships' bar as an action to recover damages from the company for refusing to place the respondent Cavanagh on its register of shareholders. It was held by the Court of Appeal, and it was strenuously argued at the bar, that the appellant company was estopped by the representations of Wells and Whitechurch from denying Cavanagh's right to be placed on the register. I quite agree with Smith, L.J., in thinking that it is necessary to keep the two alleged estoppels distinct and to deal with them separately. Whatever difficulty there may be in ascertaining the precise scope and effect of the representations made by Whitechurch, there can be no doubt as to the scope and effect of the representations made by Wells. They are in writing and in a common form. There can be no question as to the meaning of the written words, except, perhaps, in regard to one point which in the view that I take of the case is not material. It seems that one Raymond had undertaken to transfer to Cavanagh, by way of security, a large number of shares in George Whitechurch (Limited), which were of considerable value. On the 29th of May, 1899, at Raymond's bidding, Wells, the secretary of the company, certified two transfers, one of 1,100 preference shares, and the other of 9,250 ordinary shares, in the company. The shares were each £1 shares, fully paid, and worth about 15s. a-piece. The transfers were executed by Raymond as transferor. They were intended to be executed by Cavanagh, who was named as transferee. The certification on the transfer of the preference shares was in these words; "Coupon for £1,100 preference shares in the company's office. George Whitechurch (Limited). — Richard G. Wells, Secretary." The certification on the transfer of the ordinary shares was in similar terms. It was common ground that the word "coupon" stood for "certificate" or "certificates," and it was not disputed that the certification was a representation that there had been lodged in the company's office certificates for the shares specified in the bodies of the transfers, such certificates being either in the name of Raymond himself, as registered owner, or in the names of registered owners who had executed in favour of Raymond transfers which had been lodged with the certificates. In the present case the jury found that the certification given by Wells imported that the shares in question were standing in Raymond's own name. It was contended that this finding was not supported by the language of the certification, or by anything in the evidence. In my opinion, the point is immaterial. It turned out that no certificates had been lodged in the company's office by Raymond, nor were any certificates ever forthcoming to answer the transfers which Raymond had executed. As far as Raymond was concerned, the whole thing was a fraud. Wells was Raymond's secretary and servant, as well as secretary to the company. He was Raymond's instrument in carrying out the fraud. He lied purposely for Raymond's benefit. The jury have found that Wells joined in the fraud for the benefit of the company as well as for the benefit of Raymond. There is not, however, a shadow of evidence to support this conclusion. The finding, so far as the company is concerned, must be disregarded. It only shows how little the jury appreciated the facts of the case.

Then comes the question: Is the company bound by the representations of their secretary? That must depend upon what authority the secretary had or was held out as having. Now, the duties of a company's secretary are well understood. They are of a limited and of a somewhat humble character. "A secretary," said Lord Esher, M.R., "is a mere servant. His position is that he is to do what he is told, and no person can assume that he has any authority to represent anything at all": Barnett v. South London Tramways Co., 35 W. R. 640, 18 Q. B. D. 815. In the present case the secretary was not even in the pay of the company, at least, not directly. The company, it seems, was provided with an office, and a secretary too, for £50 a year by another company, which appears to have been under Raymond's control and management. No doubt the practice of certifying transfers is a convenient one. It facilitates dealings in shares on the Stock Exchange, and so tends indirectly to increase the value of shares as a marketable commodity. But in permitting its secretary to certify transfers, it cannot be supposed that a company authorizes the secretary to do more than to give a receipt for certificates which are actually lodged in the office. I cannot think that a company is estopped by the certification of its secretary if he gives a receipt or an acknowledgment for certificates which have not been lodged with him. If authority be wanted for this proposition, it seems to me that there is ample authority to be found in the case of Grant v. Norway, 10 C. B. 665. Grant v. Norway was a much stronger case than the present. There it was held that a shipowner is not bound by bills of lading signed by the master for goods not received on board. The court declared that it could not "discover any ground upon which a party taking a bill of lading by indorsement would be justified in assuming that" the master "had authority to sign such bills whether the goods were on board or not." Having regard to the authority which the master undoubtedly possesses, and the important part which bills of lading play in the commerce of the country, there was much to be said in favour of an opposite view. It was argued in Grant v. Norway that the doctrine for which the shipowner was contending would go far to destroy the negotiability of bills of lading, and that as the master had an unlimited authority to sign bills for goods received, and was for some purposes regarded as the general agent of the owner, it was but just that the owner should be responsible if the master exceeded his authority or deceived third persons. But, for all that, the principle of the decision was accepted in Coleman v. Riches, 3 W. R. 453, 16 C. B. 104, and the decision itself has been recognized in this House as sound law in McLean v. Fleming, L. R. 2 H. L. Sc. 128, 19 W. R. H. L. Dig. 18; and the commerce of the country has not suffered, nor has the credit of bills of lading been impaired in consequence. There is a marked difference between a certificate and a certification. A certificate is under the seal of the company. By the Companies Act, 1862, a certificate is made primâ facie evidence of title. If faith were not given to the solemn assertions of a company under its common seal, "it would," as Lord Cairns, L.C., observed in Burkinshaw v. Nicolls, 26 W. R. 819, 3 App. Cas. 1004, "paralyze the whole of the dealings with shares in public companies." A certification stands on a different footing altogether. Transfers are never certified under the company's seal. There is no obligation on a company to certify transfers at all. The certification is not passed by the directors or brought before the board. A certification, in fact, is only required for a temporary purpose, to meet the exigencies of business on the Stock Exchange, which has stated days and fixed periods for the different stages of a business transaction intended to be carried out under its rules. In dealings in shares not under the rules of the Stock Exchange certification is really out of place. In such dealings, in the case of a purchase, the price would only be paid in exchange for the transfer and share certificate—on the completion of the transaction and not before. Still less would a certification be required if the shares were merely intended to form a security. A good equitable charge may be created by the deposit of certificates, and if the certificates happened to include shares which were not intended to be the subject of the security, there would be no very great difficulty in defining the extent of the proposed charge in the memorandum of deposit. It seems to me that it would be most unreasonable in any case, whether the transaction takes place on the Stock Exchange or not, to hold a company estopped by the certification of its secretary if the secretary certifies a transfer without having received the certificates. The supposed estoppel, therefore, founded on Wells' certification, in my opinion, fails altogether, and for the same reason the case founded on alleged misrepresentation by the company fails also.

I now come to the estoppel founded on representations made by George Whitechurch. The position of the parties was this: Cavanagh dealt in raw hides; George Whitechurch (Limited) were leather merchants. There was an English company called the Innox Tannery (Limited), which had a tan-yard near Paris, not very far from the place of business of the Whitechurch Co. The Innox Co. was in the habit of buying hides from Cavanagh, and consigning them when tanned to George Whitechurch (Limited) for sale, receiving an advance of 80 per cent. on the invoice value. The Innox Co., which practically was Raymond under another name, became largely indebted both to Cavanagh and George Whitechurch (Limited). George Whitechurch (Limited) seems to have had some security; Cavanagh apparently had none. Cavanagh kept pressing for payment. In May, 1899, Raymond made an arrangement with Cavanagh for the liquidation of his debt by a series of bills for £500 each, accepted by the Innox Co., indorsed by Raymond, and falling due in weekly succession. The first two bills fell due and were dishonoured. The next step of importance was that Cavanagh, thinking that he was being tricked, obtained from the French courts a process known as an opposition, together with a "protective seizure." The effect of such a process is to lay an embargo on the debtor's business without, however, giving the creditor who obtains it any priority. Then Raymond undertook to carry out another arrangement which had been suggested or proposed when the two bills were dishonoured. He agreed to give Cavanagh as security shares in George Whitechurch (Limited) to the nominal value of £10,350, and it was part of the arrangement that George Whitechurch (Limited) should in future pay half of their advances on consignments from the Innox Co. to Cavanagh until his debt was liquidated. George Whitechurch, of course, was anxious to see the opposition removed, and was ready to fall in with the proposed arrangement if the matter was put on a satisfactory footing that promised continuance of the business. A formal deed was to be drawn up between the Innox Co., Raymond, and Cavanagh, and George Whitechurch was to add his signature in order to testify the acquiescence of his company in the arrangement. That being the position of affairs, we now come to the two meetings on the 30th and 31st of May, 1899, at which representations are said to have been made by George Whitechurch, which created an estoppel against his company. The interviews took place between Cavanagh, his solicitor, Mr. Charles James Smith, and Mr. George Whitechurch. Other persons were present, but it is not necessary to mention them. Raymond was not present. He ought to have handed to Smith or brought over or sent over the certificates of the shares which he had promised to give in security. Instead of that he sent to Mr. Maugham, who was his solicitor in Paris, the two certified transfers to which I have already referred. Mr. Maugham received them by post on the morning of the 30th of May. He explained to Cavanagh and also to Smith, who probably knew quite as much about certified transfers as he did, that certified transfers were recognized on the Stock Exchange, and that by the rules of the Stock Exchange payment was made on the production of a certified transfer. Then the parties adjourned to the office of George Whitechurch (Limited). The certified transfers were not produced on that occasion. But they were mentioned, and Whitechurch said that he knew all about it, and that it was all right, and that he was satisfied. Whitechurch had that morning received a letter from Raymond, stating that he had sent to Maugham certified transfers of preference and ordinary shares which ought to make Cavanagh quite safe, and that he had to get them from his family and intimate friends, who held them. There was nothing in the letter calculated to excite suspicion in the mind of Whitechurch, and it seems to me that he was quite justified in saying what he did at the interview on the 30th on the strength of Raymond's letter. Smith says: "I put it to him expressly, if he required the original certificates to be annexed to the certificate"—meaning, I suppose, the transfers—"the appointment for the next day would have to go off. He said: 'I shall be quite satisfied if it is Wells' signature.'" The interview of the 31st is more important. It took place at the office of a gentleman who was Cavanagh's French counsel, and he read over the deed of arrangement which he had drawn up in the interval. Here the certified transfers were produced, and George Whitechurch looked at them. There is a dispute about what he said and what Smith said. Whitechurch and Smith contradict each other undoubtedly. Of the two I am disposed to think that Whitechurch was probably more accurate in his recollection. I do not think the contradiction at all material, because it seems to me that the respondent's case fails, whether you take the account that Smith gives, or the finding of the jury, or the interpretation which the Court of Appeal placed upon that finding. Smith says: "Mr. Whitechurch looked at the transfers and said, 'Yes, these transfers are in order. The secretary, I see, has certified them. Mr. Cavanagh will sign this, send them back to London, and fresh certificates will then be signed and sent to Mr. Cavanagh.' . . . I said, 'Mr. Whitechurch, if there is any doubt about it let this appointment go off, and we will have these certificates attached.'" That is Smith's statement. The jury found that George Whitechurch "allowed the plaintiff to think that it was all right in order to induce the plaintiff to withdraw 'the opposition.'" It is not very clear what the jury really meant. Smith, L.J., thinks that they meant to say that Whitechurch represented that "the certified transfers were as good as transfers plus certificates." Collins, L.J., held that "the jury meant that Whitechurch led Cavanagh to believe that nothing more was required by the company to entitle the plaintiff to receive a certificate giving him the right to be registered as the transferee of the shares." I must confess that I am utterly at a loss to see any ground upon which an estoppel can be raised against the company. To begin with, what authority had George Whitechurch to make any representation in regard to these certified transfers which could bind the company? He was no doubt the managing director. The commercial business of the company was intrusted to him. But nobody can suppose that this was commercial business. I put that aside. Then I have always understood that a representation to bind anybody as an estoppel must be a representation of an existing fact, or rather a representation as to some fact alleged to be in existence, and not to promises de futuro. What was it that Whitechurch represented as an existing fact? That Wells was the secretary of the company, and that the certification on the transfers was signed by him? Well, that was perfectly true. That Wells had actually received the necessary certificates? It is absurd to suppose that Whitechurch was asked to guarantee that. He had no reason to doubt Wells' honesty, and naturally took it for granted that Wells would not have given a receipt for that which he had not received. Smith, L.J., seems to think that the representation attributed to Whitechurch was a representation to the effect that the company or the board of directors would act on the certified transfer without requiring anything more. That seems to be the view of Collins, L.J., also. That is not a representation of an existing fact. If it is anything it is a promise de futuro, which cannot be an estoppel. The doctrine of estoppel by representation is a very old head of equity. It has been discussed not unfrequently in this House, notably in the case of Jorden v. Money, 5 H. L. Cas. 185, to which Lord Selborne was constantly in the habit of referring. It is founded upon a broad principle which enters so deeply into the ordinary dealings and conduct of mankind that I sometimes rather doubt whether any great advantage is to be gained by endeavouring to reduce it to rules such as those which have been formulated in the case of Carr v. London and North-Western Railway Co. Perhaps some of the difficulties which have gathered round the present case have come from clinging to rules rather than attending to principles. There are two points which seem to me to be material, and I think that the learned judges in the Court of Appeal have overlooked them. In the first place, it is obvious that the purpose of the interview which Cavanagh and Smith had with George Whitechurch was to find out whether he was satisfied in the then position of affairs to acquiesce in the proposed arrangement and to sign the proposed deed in testimony of that acquiescence. That was all that Whitechurch had to do with the matter. As Mr. Smith told Mr. Whitechurch, in a letter dated the 30th of June, only a month after this interview, it was not for him or his board, so far as creditors were concerned, to be informed of dealings and transactions taking place between shareholders in his company and their creditors. That is a pertinent remark if not a self-evident proposition, and there is a touch of humour about it, coming as it does from a man who now declares that in this very matter with which at the time he thought Whitechurch had no concern, he really and truly took Whitechurch into his confidence, and really and truly relied on his advice and assurances. In the next place, it is, in my opinion, most important to bear in mind that Cavanagh and his solicitor must be taken to have been cognizant of the articles of association of George Whitechurch (Limited), which deal with the transfer of shares in that company. Cavanagh was, or had been, a shareholder in the company, and Smith only a few days before had asked for a print of the articles which Raymond had promised him, and I presume that he obtained it. But whether Cavanagh and Smith were in fact acquainted with the regulations of the company or not, they must be taken to have had notice of them. "Every joint stock company," said Lord Hatherley in this House in Mahony v. East Holyford Co., L. R. 7 H. L. 869, 24 W. R. Dig. 10, "has its memorandum and articles of association . . . open to all who are minded to have any dealings whatsoever with the company, and those who do deal with them must be affected with notice of all that is contained in those two documents." To my mind it is absurd to suppose that Smith, a solicitor carrying on business in the City of London, a trained lawyer, as Smith, L.J., describes him, could have imagined that one director could set at nought the articles of his company and bind his company by estoppel or otherwise to act in contravention of its regulations. And I have some difficulty in believing that any man of business, whether a trained lawyer or not, could imagine that any board of directors would alter the register of their shareholders on the faith of a certified transfer without the production and cancellation of the old certificate. As regards the other points which have been discussed, I do not propose to add anything beyond saying that even if there were an estoppel, the respondent, in my opinion, would have some difficulty in proving damage. For the reasons I have given, I think that the appeal must be allowed, and the action dismissed with costs both here and below.

Lord JAMES OF HEREFORD.—I have entertained considerable doubt as to the judgment that should be given in this case, but after consideration I have come to the conclusion that the action cannot be maintained, and that therefore the appeal should be allowed. As it appears to me that Lord Macnaghten has very correctly and fully stated the facts of the case in his judgment, I do not repeat them. The action is based upon two alleged grounds of estoppel. As to one I have no doubt. It may be accepted that on the 30th and 31st of May, 1889, interviews took place in Paris between Mr. Cavanagh, his solicitor Mr. Smith, Mr. Maugham, and Mr. G. Whitechurch, the managing director of the defendant company. During these interviews Mr. Whitechurch was told by Cavanagh or Smith that certified transfers of certain shares proposed to be transferred to Cavanagh were in the hands of Mr. Maugham, who thought that they were in order. On hearing this Mr. Whitechurch observed that if the signature of the secretary was genuine they would be in order. It should be observed that no inquiry by Mr. Whitechurch appears to have been made in the interests or on behalf of Cavanagh. The discussion related to the question whether Mr. Whitechurch would require the original certificates to be produced—and it was rather in respect of his own interests that Mr. Whitechurch made the remark which is relied upon as an estoppel. I think that in fact there was no representation of a non-existent fact, at most only an opinion was expressed, and certainly there was no intention to deceive the plaintiff or to cause him to rely upon a supposed state of facts which did not exist. I also think that Mr. Whitechurch, when taking part in this conversation, was not acting as the agent of the company, so as to render it liable for misstatements of fact by him. It is true that he was managing director of the company and had very extensive powers conferred upon him as such by the articles of association, but these powers refer to the carrying on of the commercial business of the company and would not cover such a transaction as the transfer of shares. Under this head of the case I think that no estoppel is established. But the second alleged estoppel presents a question more difficult of solution than the one above dealt with. On the 29th of May, 1899, Wells, as secretary of the defendant company, gave two "certifications" of transfer—one "Coupon for £1,100 preference shares in the company's office. George Whitechurch (Limited). Richard G. Wells, Secretary." The second certification was in the same form and dealt with 9,250 ordinary shares. Both "certifications" were indorsed on transfers executed by Raymond. "Coupon" is identical in its meaning in the above documents with "certificate." At the time that Wells wrote such certifications he knew that they were false statements. Raymond possessed no such shares and no certificates had been lodged in the office of the company. Wells was acting fraudulently in collusion with Raymond and in no way for the benefit of the company. In determining the liability of the company it is necessary to determine the extent of Wells' agency. He was secretary of the company, and as such it would be his duty to give "certifications" of certificates of shares being deposited in his hands. So far he would be acting within his agency, but if he acknowledges the receipt of certificates which never were in his hands, he is doing that which his principals never intended or authorized him to do, and an act which is, I think, outside and beyond his agency either express or implied. I quite feel the force of the argument that the public who act upon these certifications have to deal with an agent appointed by a company to transact its business, and, within his duty to give certifications. It is said, how can persons receiving the certifications test the honesty of the agent or the truth of his statements? I do not think that they can, and it is a risk that must be run, for the apparently truthful statements may be false. But on the other hand, can it be reasonable that an agent who is empowered to acknowledge the receipt of certain documents is to bind his principal by fraudulently and criminally giving acknowledgments of documents never in his hands? There is on the one hand a risk cast on the members of the public who rely upon the honesty of the agents; but how far greater would be the risk of the principal if he were to be liable for the frauds of the agent which might be effected to an unlimited extent, ruinous to the principal. It appears to me to be impossible to hold the company bound by the act of Wells, without over-ruling the judgment in the case of Grant v. Norway. In that case the master of a vessel had authority from the shipowner to give bills of lading for goods received on board. The master fraudulently gave bills of lading for goods not received by him. It was held, and the judgment has since been acted on and approved of in your lordship's House, that the master, not having acted within his agency, the shipowner was not liable on the fictitious bills of lading. By this decision a great risk is thrown upon indorsees of bills of lading who may find their securities valueless through the fraud of the masters of vessels, and this inconvenience was pressed in the argument of the case but without avail, and apparently the commercial world has not found such inconvenience to be so great as was suggested in argument. I have only to add that the judgment now given must not be supposed to extend to certificates made evidence of title by the Act of 1862, which are passed under the seal of the company. I am of opinion that the appeal must prevail, and that the judgment of the courts below should be reversed with costs.

Lord ROBERTSON (read by Lord Davey).—The case of the respondent is one of estoppel, and it is an essential element in such cases (as is clearly expressed in the case of Carr v. London and North-Western Railway Co.) that the person to whom the representation was made has suffered loss by acting upon it; or, to put it in another way, has altered his position to his detriment by acting on the representation. In my opinion the respondent has completely failed in this essential matter. This is not, be it observed, merely a question of damages; there is no estoppel, unless the apellants now averring the truth about the shares in question would—to use the words of James, L.J., in Ex parte Adamson, 26 W. R. 890, 8 Ch. D. 807—"work some wrong" to the respondent. Now this question is on the facts by no means a complicated one, although it occurs in a very complicated case; and indeed its very simplicity seems to have led to its receiving less attention than its controversial importance demands. The respondent's case, put shortly, is that because the appellants told him that he was getting a good transfer, therefore he gave up the opposition and the saisie. His case is not, and could not possibly be, that because the appellants called the transfer good, whereas it was bad, therefore he lost the shares said to be transferred. The respondent lost the shares not because of anything the appellants said about them, but because his transferor had them not to transfer. What the respondent has to make out is that by dealing as he did with the opposition and the saisie he suffered prejudice. Now whether he did so or not depends on what good the opposition and the saisie were doing to him, which he lost by the way in which he was induced to deal with them. In the courts below, although the point was raised sharply before Bigham, J., it has got the go-by; as the case stands, there is, in my opinion, no evidence of prejudice; and on the contrary it is perfectly plain that the cessation of the Innox business was all that the opposition and the saisie were adapted to procure, and that this would have done the respondent harm and no good. Your lordships doubtless remember (and it is important to do so) that the opposition prevented those debtors of Innox who received notice from paying to them, while the saisie prevented Innox from disposing of the goods in their hands, an officer being put in possession. But by these precautions no preference was obtained over other creditors; and this is a very material point in the case. Now, when the shares were supposed to have been transferred, what was done was that the opposition was withdrawn simpliciter, but the saisie was only partially withdrawn, so as to allow the dealing by the appellants with such goods as the respondent sanctioned; and the man in possession remained there to enforce the saisie in other respects. The practical result was that, with his grip maintained on the operations of Innox, the respondent allowed them to trade to such an extent as he deemed fit. This being the simple state of the facts, it is not surprising that no one has sworn or said that the respondent by relaxing the saisie and giving up the opposition lost money which he would have got if he had retained them. This matter was so dealt with at the trial that Bigham, J., does not distinguish between the saisie and the opposition, or in any way estimate the utility of either or both to the respondent Yet this was the essence of the respondent's claim. As things stand, I think it has been proved that no loss was caused to the respondent by acting as he did, and that no wrong is now wrought him by the appellants averring the truth as to the shares. On this ground I am in favour of allowing the appeal, and as in this view the plaintiff's case has really no merits, I am indisposed to enter on the other questions which have been argued. As to these, I may say in a word that the case of representation by Whitechurch seems to me to entirely break down, but that as regards the representation by the secretary, I have grave doubts. It seems to me extremely doubtful whether Grant v. Norway can be held or has ever been held to represent the general law, or to do more than determine the law about shipmasters and bills of lading; and whether, assuming it to have the wider bearing, it is reconcilable with the doctrine of Lord Selborne in Houldsworth v. City of Glasgow Bank, 28 W. R. 677, 5 App. Cas. 317. I find it extremely difficult on principle to hold that the scope of an agent's employment can be limited to the right performance of his duties, or to say that an agent within whose province it is truly to record a fact is outside the scope of his duties when he falsely records it, when the question of liability to be decided is whether a loss is to be borne by the principal who placed him there, or by an innocent third party who had no voice in selecting him.

Lord BRAMPTON.—[After going through the facts as set out above, his lordship continued as follows:] I take it to be common knowledge of all intelligent men of business that there is a wide and well-recognized difference between a certificate of shares under the seal of the company, which by section 31 of the Companies Act, 1862, is made primâ facie evidence of the title of the person named in it to the shares therein specified (see In re Bahia and San Francisco Railway Co., 16 W. R. 862, L. R. 3 Q. B. 584), and a transfer certification such as that which appears on the margin of the transfers in question; the latter is not recognized at all by the Companies Acts, nor is it even mentioned in the articles of association, and it is useless as evidence of the title of the transferor to the shares which he proposes to transfer. It is in fact merely a voucher under the hand of the secretary, in the name of the company, that certificates, or other documents, showing in his judgment a primâ facie title in the transferor to such shares, have been lodged in the office of the company; the object being to enable the transferor to give to the transferee a reasonable assurance that he has, or will have, the power to make a good title to the shares when the necessity for doing so arises. This necessity always arises when the company is called upon to register a transfer. When such a certification bears the genuine signature of the secretary it is commonly said to be "all right" or "in order," and the making of the contract for transfer proceeds, but always subject to this, that before the title of the transferee can be completed by placing his name as owner on the register, it is essential that the certificate of the transferor's ownership of the shares to be transferred shall be left at the office of the company with the transfer in order that it may be cancelled so far as relates to the transferred shares, and the register corrected by substituting the name of the transferee for that of the transferor; for until this is done the transferor is to be deemed to remain the holder of the shares. The case of Bishop v. Balkis Consolidated Co., 39 W. R. 99, 25 Q. B. D. 512, if rightly decided, as I am satisfied it was, seems to me to dispose of this part of this part of the case, and to establish beyond all question that a transfer certification amounts to no warranty or representation of title. Of course every purchaser of shares is entitled, by himself, or his solicitor, before the final completion of his bargain to investigate, if he desires to do so, the title of his transferor, and he is entitled to search for himself the register of shareholders to see the share certificates or other documents relied on, and to peruse the articles of association of the company, just as a purchaser of real property may require the vendor to certify his abstract of title; and if he omits to take any of the means at his command to satisfy himself of his transferor's title, he cannot reasonably complain that the company require proof of it before they alter their register or issue him new certificates. Were they not to do so, most serious frauds would be comparatively easy to commit. An inspection of the register of shares in this case or a request to see the coupon mentioned in the certification would have at once disclosed the fact that Raymond had no shares such as those specified to transfer. In the present case the appellant company dispute their liability so far as it is based upon Wells' conduct upon several grounds: (1) Upon the ground that the certifications were not made by him in the ordinary course of his duty to the company. (2) That he signed the certifications fraudulently and contrary to his duty. (3) Because even if it was so made as to constitute it the certificate of the company, it does not amount to such a representation as alleged in the claim. (4) That if it amounts to such a representation it is ultra vires. (5) That it is not a representation made to Cavanagh or his solicitor, nor with any intention to induce them to act in a particular way, but was simply made for Raymond to use as he pleased without knowledge of or inquiry as to the purposes for which he intended to use it. I entirely agree in the views expressed by Lord Macnaghten as to the limited authority of such a secretary as Wells. I do not intend to say that it was no part of the duty of Wells, on occasions when a certificated transfer was required for shares in the appellant company, to exercise an honest discretion to grant it, and to certify to the truth, as he knew or believed it to be, and if in framing such a certificate he by mere negligence made an erroneous statement causing injury to the person to whom it was handed that he might act upon the faith of it, I do not say that an action might not be sustained against the company, his employers, to recover such damages as might be occasioned by such negligence. But the charge made against Wells was in no sense one of negligence, but one of deliberate fraud, utterly unconnected with the course of his duty as secretary. He simply lent himself to Raymond, in whose service he still was as clerk, and became a mere tool in his hands. Raymond in arranging with Cavanagh to give him 10,350 shares, "to be represented by certificated transfers," knew that he did not possess one single share of those he intended to include in his transfer, and that he could only even colourably fulfil his agreement and get rid of the opposition by handing false transfer certificates to Cavanagh. These he could only obtain by the assistance of Wells, who made them, knowing that he was uttering deliberate falsehood, without even a semblance of excuse. Having done so, he allowed Raymond to take them away, not knowing or even inquiring for what purpose they were to be used. This jury, rightly as I think, found Wells' action to be fraudulent, but they found also that it was committed for the benefit of the company as well as for Raymond. How they could have arrived at such a conclusion passes my understanding; there was not, in my opinion, a scintilla of evidence to support it. They also found that it was in the ordinary course of Wells' business as secretary to give certificates of this character. That may have been so on occasions when he honestly believed the facts certified to be true, and when he was dealing with persons in the ordinary course of a business transaction; but this was no business transaction at all, nor was it intended to be; Wells was not even colourably discharging a duty. The facts which I have stated stamp both Wells and Raymond as having been a pair of fraudulent knaves, acting without authority and in disregard of duty. In my opinion the appellant company is not responsible for that fraud, and to argue that such certificates so prepared should operate to create estoppels against the company, preventing it from asserting and proving the truth, requires some courage. I am content to adopt in its integrity the judgment of Willes, J., in Barwick v. English Joint Stock Banking Co., 15 W. R. 877, L. R. 2 Ex. 259, defining the liability of a master for the wrongful acts of his servant: "The master is liable for every such wrong of his servant or agent as is committed in the course of his service, and for the master's benefit, because although the master has not authorized the particular act, he has put the agent in his place to do that class of acts, and he must be answerable for the manner in which that agent has conducted himself in doing the business which it was the act of his master to place him in." This is very forcibly illustrated by Limpus v. London General Omnibus Co., 11 W. R. 149, 1 H. & C. 526, where the driver was actually doing the work he was employed to do, but was doing it in a wrongful manner. The Court of Appeal in British Mutual Banking Co. v. Charnwood Forest Railway Co., 35 W. R. 590, 18 Q. B. D. 714, defines, I think accurately, when a master may repudiate the wrongful act of a servant fraudulently committed. Bowen, L.J., commences his considered judgment by saying that "except in the overruled case of Swift v. Winterbotham, 21 W. R. 562, L. R. 8 Q. B. 244, he is aware of no precedent for holding that a principal is liable in an action of deceit for the unauthorized and fraudulent act of a servant or agent committed not for the general or special benefit of the principal, but for the servant's own private ends." I think for the reasons and upon the authorities I have cited, that if this case rested solely upon the transfer certificate, signed in the name of the company by Wells, the misconduct which I have discussed would afford the company a complete answer to the action so far as it is based on his actions.

But I have yet to deal with other matters beyond those arising out of Wells' misconduct. I think it will be convenient now to call your lordships' attention to the specific claim made against the appellant company as it is set forth in paragraph 6 of the "points of claim," to which I think the respondent should be strictly confined. This claim is thus stated:

"In consequence of the $\frac{\text{representations}}{\text{wilful misrepresentations}}$ of the defendant company to the plaintiff that the said Anthony Raymond was the registered holder of and entitled to transfer the shares in the defendant company specified in the writ, the plaintiff accepted from the said Anthony Raymond transfers, certificated by the company, of the said shares to himself . . . as security for the same debt and withdrew the opposition." I will assume for the moment that Wells was guilty of no such misconduct as is alleged against him, and even that he intended to act for the benefit of the company. This directly raises the question: What is the true construction of the language of the transfer certificate? for Wells said nothing and did nothing except issue it, and unless that amounted to such a representation as is relied on by the pleadings the whole case fails. As to this, it seems to me that it is only necessary to refer back to what I have already said as to the meaning and object of such certifications. If I am correct in what I then said, it follows that the certification did not amount to a positive representation or assertion of title in Raymond. Nothing short of that would suffice to support the estoppel claimed. I think, therefore, that upon this ground also the appellant company is entitled to the judgment of this House. The third ground of defence is that even if, contrary to the view which I have taken, the certification could be held to amount to such a representation, it was made ultra vires; for neither Whitechurch, the manager, nor Wells, the secretary, had even a semblance of authority to issue a document of title equivalent to a share certificate. A certificate of shares is by the 31st section of the Companies Act, 1862, made primâ facie evidence of the title of the person named to such shares as are comprised within it, but such a certificate can only be made under the seal of the company, and the seal can only be affixed by order of a resolution of the board, and in the presence of a director and of the secretary, who are both to sign the instrument to which the seal is so affixed in their presence. It is impossible to suppose that a managing director or a secretary could by his own signature and the use, by means of a rubber stamp, of the company's name, dispense with the order of the board and the seal, and the requisite attestations, and create an instrument which practically should have the same effect, and should estop the company from disproving a title which did not exist, and they had no authority to create, by giving a new interpretation to the language of an instrument different from that which it had already acquired amongst men of business accustomed to deal with instruments of that class. Nor can it be that any secretary has power to give, or a manager to sanction, a certificate which could have the effect of abrogating the article of association requiring the transfer, accompanied by the certificates of shares to be transferred, to be left at the offices of the company. I may here observe that the great power given to the managing director is conferred only in relation to the commercial business of the company, and I am at a loss to see how the sale and purchase or the transfer and acceptance of shares can be treated as any part of the commercial business of a company established for carrying on the business of leather merchants.

I will now deal with that which Mr. Whitechurch did and said, touching the questions at issue. The sole object of the interviews between Cavanagh and his solicitor Smith and G. Whitechurch of the 30th and 31st of May was to procure his signature as managing director of his company to the few words of acquiescence in the agreement, so far as it affected his company. This acquiescence he was willing to give, if satisfied that the arrangement made was bonâ fide and the proceeding was in due order; but the company was under no obligation, and he might have refused to acquiesce if he had thought fit without assigning any reason at all. At the first of these interviews the certified transfers, being in Mr. Maugham's possession, were not shown to him, but he was told by Cavanagh or Smith that Maugham had two certified transfers of the shares proposed to be handed to Cavanagh, and had expressed an opinion that they were in order. On this Mr. Whitechurch, having no reason to suspect that anything was wrong, with perfect truth and honesty made the remark that they would be "in order" if he were satisfied that the signatures to them were the genuine signatures of the secretary. This seems to have been the opinion of Mr. Smith himself. The special question put to Mr. Whitechurch by Mr. Smith was whether he required the original certificates to be annexed, and this inquiry was accompanied by what appears to me to be a threat that if he required more the appointment for the next day would have to go off, obviously for the purpose of putting pressure upon him, by intimating that the responsibility of any postponement would rest upon him. There is no semblance of inquiry by Cavanagh or Smith of Mr. G. Whitechurch whether Cavanagh might safely or with prudence accept the transfers. Indeed Cavanagh had in fact got in such certified transfers all that he had bargained for in the agreement. The reply of Mr. G. Whitechurch before he had seen the documents, that he should be quite satisfied if the signature to the certification was Wells' signature, cannot fairly be construed to convey any more than this: that he would not, if satisfied on that point, be an obstacle to the completion on the following day as appointed. The same observations apply to his conduct and words on that day when he, having seen the certificates, and recognized the signature of Wells, expressed himself satisfied, and signed the acquiescence. His expression of satisfaction that the opposition was about to be removed, knowing how much it was desired, and how vitally important it was to the Innox Co. and Raymond, was a very natural one. Believing, as he undoubtedly did, that it was in order, and having no reason to suspect a fraud, his conduct and language were just what one would have expected from him. If, on the other hand, at that time Mr. Smith intended his question to convey, what it certainly did not express —namely, a doubt whether the certified transfers were in that case of equal value with certificates of shares—I can only say I marvel that he should have felt justified in inviting Mr. G. Whitechurch to express an opinion without telling him that Raymond had so recently as the afternoon of the 29th of May promised to give him the certificates of the 10,350 shares, that he might have them ready to produce at the meeting to execute the agreement, and that he had broken his promise and had neither handed over nor sent a certificate for a single share, knowing, as he admitted he did, the wide difference between share certificates and transfer certifications. If this had been told to Mr. G. Whitechurch he would have had good reason to suspect that something was wrong, and would no doubt have suggested further inquiry. But believing all to be right and in order he had no reason for interfering. The finding of the jury that Whitechurch allowed Cavanagh to think it was all right in order to induce him to withdraw the opposition was wholly unwarranted by the evidence if it meant more than that he did not interfere to prevent him from acting, as he was advised by his solicitor, because he saw no reason to do so. I do not find in all this evidence anything to support the claim to the estoppel contended for; far from it. To support an estoppel the evidence ought to be clear and unambiguous, as was stated by Lindley, L.J., in Low v. Bouverie, 40 W. R. 50, [1891] 3 Ch. 82, in which many previous cases on the subject were carefully reviewed. Bowen, L.J., said that "the language upon which an estoppel is founded must be precise and unambiguous." That does not necessarily mean that the language must be such that it cannot possibly be open to different constructions, but that it must be such as will be reasonably understood in a particular sense by the person to whom it is addressed; and in deciding the case before him against the then plaintiff, he said: "I think his (the defendant's) language would be reasonably understood as conveying an intimation of the state of his belief, without an assertion that the fact was so apart from the limitation of his own knowledge." To the same effect was the judgment of Kay, L.J. To this I would add that, in my judgment, no representations can be relied on as estoppels if they have been induced by the concealment of any material fact on the part of those who seek to use them as such; and if the person to whom they are made knows something which, if revealed, would have been calculated to influence the other to hesitate or seek for further information before speaking positively, and that something has been withheld, the representation ought not to be treated as an estoppel. Mr. Whitechurch had no reason to doubt, and therefore believed, the certificates to be genuine and true when he recognized Wells' signature. Beyond that he knew nothing, and suspected nothing. When, therefore, he said that they were in order or appeared in order, he ought not to be considered as pledging himself to anything beyond this: that according to ordinary usage and practice the certificate was in due form and order, and that he was satisfied and content to acquiesce as he did. In my opinion, it is clear that the failure of Raymond to produce or hand the certificates to Smith ought to have been quite sufficient to put that astute solicitor on his guard, and had he used the most ordinary precaution, either by searching the register or demanding an inspection of the coupon, or insisted upon Raymond showing him the certificates, the fraud must have been instantly discovered. I think this appeal ought to be allowed, and that the judgments of the Court of Appeal and Bigham, J., should be reversed, and judgment entered for the appellant with costs.

Order appealed from reversed. Respondent to pay to the appellants the costs both here and below.

Solicitors for the appellants, S. M. & J. B. Benson.

Solicitors for the respondent, C. J. Smith & Hudson.

Court of Appeal.

From K. B. Div.
(Collins, M.R., and Romer and Mathew, L.JJ.) — Jan. 13.

DUNLOP PNEUMATIC TYRE CO. (LIMITED) v. ACTIEN GESELLSCHAFT FÜR MOTOR UND MOTOR FAHRZEUGBAU, VORM. CUDELL & CO. (a.)

Practice—Writ—Service—Foreign corporation carrying on business within the jurisdiction—Stand at an exhibition—"Head officer"—Ord. 9, r. 8.

A foreign corporation, who were manufacturers of motor-cars, rented for their exclusive use a stand at an exhibition in England for nine days for the purpose of exhibiting their goods, and sent over a person in their employment as their representative to look after the exhibits and to take orders for their goods.

Held, that the foreign corporation carried on business at the stand at the exhibition so as to be resident within the jurisdiction, and they could be sued in this country and the writ could be served on their head officer here.

Appeal by the defendants from the refusal of Channell, J., at chambers to set aside the writ of summons and the service thereof.

The defendants, who were manufacturers of motor-cars, were a foreign corporation registered under German law and carrying on business in Germany.

In November, 1901, they rented for their exclusive use a stand at the Crystal Palace during the National Cycle Show, which lasted nine days, where they exhibited, among other things, specimens of their motor-cars. The defendants' name was on the stand, and they sent over a Mr. Struck, who was in their employment, to be their representative at the stand, whose business it was to look after the exhibits and to take orders for and push the sale of the defendants' manufactures.

The plaintiffs alleged that the tyres which were on the wheels of one of the motor-cars were an infringement of their patent, and they issued a writ claiming an injunction, and served it on Struck at the stand at the Crystal Palace.

The defendants entered a conditional appearance, and applied to set aside the writ of summons and the service thereof on the ground that the defendants were a foreign corporation resident out of the jurisdiction.

Channell, J., refused the application, holding that the defendants were at the time of the issue of the writ and of the service carrying on business in this country.

The defendants appealed.

Danckwerts, K.C., and R. B. D. Acland, for the defendants.—The defendants are a foreign corporation and were not at the time of the service of the writ carrying on business in England so as to be resident here. A foreign corporation is not intended primâ facie be sued here. Newby v. Von Oppen, 20 W. R. 383, L. R. 7 Q. B. 293, was the first decision allowing such a corporation to be sued here. There the defendants had a place of business in England. Residence in this country is the test of the liability of a foreign corporation to be sued: Haggin v. Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris, 37 W. R. 703, 23 Q. B. D. 519; Badcock v. Cumberland Gap Park Co, 41 W. R. 204, [1893] 1 Ch. 362; La Bourgogne, [1899] P. 1, [1899] A. C. 431. The foreign corporation must have something in the nature of a domicil or something approaching a permanent home here. There must be an intention to permanently carry on business here. The mere taking of a stand at an exhibition for a few days is not sufficient. Further, part of their business was that of manufacturing motor-cars, and this was carried on entirely abroad. The mere fact that they took orders in England for their motor-cars at a stand which they only rented for nine days was not sufficient to make them resident here. The writ and service ought therefore to be set aside.

R. M. Bray, K.C., and A. J. Walter, for the plaintiffs, were not called upon.

COLLINS, M.R.—In my opinion this appeal should be dismissed. The defendants, who are a foreign corporation, hired certain premises at the Crystal Palace for the purpose of exhibiting their wares at a cycle show. The defendants are vendors of motor-cars, and they exhibited at the show a motor-car supplied with tyres which the plaintiffs alleged were an infringement of their patent. The plaintiffs accordingly issued a writ against the defendants for infringement of patent, and the question we have to determine is whether the defendants are amenable to the jurisdiction of the courts of this country. If the defendants are amenable to the courts here, in my opinion Struck was the proper person to serve under ord. 9, r. 8. He was sent over to this country by the defendants to do everything which they could have done with regard to the exhibition and sale of their goods. They hired a stand for the purpose of exhibiting their goods, and they employed Struck to conduct their business there, by taking orders for their goods and doing his best to push the sales. He was the "head officer" of the corporation here within the meaning of ord. 9, r. 8.

The important question is whether this foreign corporation can be served as resident in this country. There is no question about serving a foreign corporation residing out of the jurisdiction. The claim to serve the defendants is based upon the ground that at the time of service they were resident within the jurisdiction. If they were resident here they were in the same position as an English corporation. It has been held over and over again that the real test in these cases is whether the defendants are carrying on their business here at some defined place. If that is so, then they are resident here. If a trading corporation carry on their business by an agent at a particular place in England, they reside here. The difficulty in some of the cases arises through the employment by the foreign corporation of an agent to conduct their business here, the agent in addition carrying on an independent business of his own. No such difficulty arises here. The defendants did not employ an agent here who carried on an independent business of his own. If they had done so, that would have given rise to a difficult question of fact similar to that which arose in the case of La Bourgogne. In that case the French company employed to conduct their business in this country an agent who was carrying on here an independent business of his own. In the present case the defendants had themselves rented the premises at the Crystal Palace for their own exclusive use, and had sent over their own servant to conduct their business at those premises. The only real difficulty was occasioned by the fact that the premises were rented for a period of nine days only, and it was argued that time is essential to constitute residence. I agree that we cannot exclude the element of time. It is clear that if the defendants had expressly announced their intention of carrying on their business here for a period of nine days, and had done so, that would have amounted to a residence in this country. Nine days is a substantial period of time. Those nine days were chosen during an exhibition, the purpose of which was to bring together people interested in the articles exhibited with the view of their giving orders for goods and making purchases, and it might well be that as much business would be transacted in those nine days as in nine months under ordinary circumstances. Therefore I cannot say that nine days constituted so short a period as to negative residence in this country, the defendants having fulfilled all the other requisites of residence. It was suggested that one element to show that the defendants could not be said to carry on business so as to reside in this country, was that they did not carry on all the branches of their business here. The defendants were said to be manufacturers of motor-cars. Assuming that to be so, they gave facilities for the sale of their motor-cars at their stand at the Crystal Palace, and orders were accepted here. They did everything here in the way of selling their goods which they could have done abroad. The mere fact that, in addition to being vendors, they were also manufacturers cannot alter the case. In my opinion the order of the learned judge was right.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

ROMER and MATHEW, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, J. B. & F. Purchase.

Solicitors for the defendants, Cruesemann & Rouse.

From Chan. Div. (Vaughan Williams, Romer, and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) — Dec. 2, 3, 20.

HOME AND COLONIAL STORES (LIMITED) v. COLLS. (a.)

Easement—Light — Prescription — Extent of right — Light for ordinary purposes—Substantial interference —Substantial damage—Rule as to 45 degrees.

(a.) Reported by S. E. WILLIAMS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

If ancient lights are interfered with substantially and real damage thereby ensues to tenant or owner, then that tenant or owner is entitled to relief. "Substantial" does not indicate any particular percentage.

Without substantial interference there is no right of action, and in addition, in order to obtain an injunction, the plaintiff must establish substantial injury suffered or threatened. There is no standard or fixed amount of light to which alone a plaintiff is entitled.

There may be real damage to the owner or occupier of a building used for particular purposes or reasonably adapted for particular purposes, although there would be no real damage if the building were not used or reasonably adapted for such purposes.

There is no rule of law that a man may always build up to an angle of 45 degrees.

This was an appeal from the decision of Joyce, J., of the 21st of December, 1900.

The plaintiffs were entitled for the residue of a term, having about seventeen years unexpired, to a considerable block of buildings situated on the east side of Paul-street, at the corner between that street and Worship-street, which runs westwards from Paul-street, so that the plaintiffs' building had a west front to Paul-street and a south front of about 150ft. in length to Worship-street. Worship-street is a tolerably broad thoroughfare, being 41ft. or thereabouts across.

Opposite a portion of the south front of the plaintiffs' premises in Worship-street was the site of some buildings recently removed, which was about 36ft. in width and numbered 44 in the street. The buildings which formerly stood on this site were 19ft. 6in. in height, and the defendant had entered into a building agreement to erect on this site a building which, if and when completed, would be 42ft. in height.

On the west of the defendant's premises and at the corner between the south side of Worship-street and the east side of Wilson-street there was a public-house 33ft. in height, and none of the buildings in Worship-street on the east of the defendant's premises exceeded that height.

His lordship thought it tolerably clear, and he found as a fact, that the defendant's building, if erected to the height of 42ft. as proposed, would not materially interfere with the access of light to any window on the first floor of the plaintiffs' premises, or with any light to which the plaintiffs were entitled in respect of their basement. The real and only question, in his lordship's opinion, was with respect to apprehended injury to the third and fourth floor windows—counting from Paul-street—on the ground floor of the plaintiffs' building. Those windows were of large size, but, although the top light was said to be the most valuable and important, the uppermost part of each of the windows was filled with coloured glass to a depth of 20in. from the top, and there were wire blinds fixed at the bottom of each window. The portion of the ground floor of the plaintiffs' building which was opposite the defendant's premises was used as an office. It consisted of a large room 11ft. 10in. high and of unusual depth, the back wall being upwards of 50ft from the Worship-street front, and it had no window nor source of natural light at the back. This room contained several desks used by about 90 clerks in the employment of the plaintiffs for the purpose of their business.

Joyce, J., held upon the evidence that the plaintiffs' premises would still, after the erection of the defendant's building, be well and sufficiently lighted for all ordinary purposes of occupancy as a place of business and that the action therefore failed. He also came to the conclusion, though after considerable hesitation, that the decision of Wright, J., in Warren v. Brown, 49 W. R. 206, [1900] 2 Q. B. 722, if not reversed by the Court of Appeal, ought to govern the present case. The decision in Warren v. Brown has since been reversed as reported ante, p. 97.

Immediately after his lordship's judgment the plaintiffs gave notice of appeal, whereupon the defendant proceeded with the completion of his building.

Hughes, K.C., and W. E. Vernon, for the plaintiffs, relied on the judgment of the Court of Appeal in Warren v. Brown, ante, p. 97.

Bray, K.C., O. Leigh Clare, and A. B. Nutter, for the defendant, contended that the defendant's building caused no such substantial diminution of light to the plaintiffs' windows as entitled them to relief. They also relied on the 45 degrees rule as leaving sufficient light to the plaintiffs' premises, a rule which was found by architects and surveyors to be a good working rule.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 20.—COZENS-HARDY, L.J., read the judgment of the court, which was as follows: This appeal raises a question as to the nature and amount of evidence required to entitle a plaintiff to relief by way of injunction for the protection of ancient lights. The action was tried by Joyce, J., in December, 1900. This is important because at that date it had been laid down by Wright, J., in Warren v. Brown, 49 W. R. 206, [1900] 2 Q. B. 722, that the owner or occupier of a house has no legal right of action so long as he has left to him as much light as is ordinarily required for habitation or business, even though he has been deprived of a substantial amount of light and has thereby suffered substantial damage. This view of the law was accepted by defendant's counsel in the cross-examination of the plaintiffs' witnesses and in the examination of the defendant's witnesses, and, as we read the judgment, was adopted by Joyce, J. The decision of Wright, J., has recently been reversed by this court, and the true rule of law with reference to the interference with ancient lights has been authoritatively laid down thus: "If ancient lights are interfered with substantially, and real damage thereby ensues to tenant or owner, then that tenant or owner is entitled to relief." In this sentence "substantial" does not indicate any particular percentage. In Back v. Stacey, 2 C. & P. 465, an issue was directed by the Lord Chancellor whether the ancient lights of the plaintiff in his dwelling-house had been illegally obstructed by the defendant's building. Evidence having been given that the quantity of light previously enjoyed had been diminished, it was contended that the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict; but Best, C.J., directed the jury, in language which has been often cited with approval, thus: "It was not sufficient to constitute an illegal obstruction that the plaintiff had, in fact, less light than before, nor that his warehouse, the part of his house principally affected, could not be used for all the purposes to which it might otherwise have been applied. In order to give a right of action and sustain the issue, there must be a substantial privation of light, sufficient to render the occupation of the house uncomfortable and to prevent the plaintiff from carrying on his accustomed business (that of a grocer) on the premises as beneficially as he had formerly done. And in Parker v. Smith, 5 C. & P. 438, Tindal, C.J., directed the jury as follows: "It is not every possible, every speculative exclusion of light which is the ground of an action, but that which the law recognizes is such a diminution of light as really makes the premises to a sensible degree less fit for the purposes of business." Without substantial interference there is no right of action, and in addition, in order to obtain an injunction the plaintiff must establish substantial injury suffered or threatened. There is no standard or fixed amount of light to which alone a plaintiff is entitled. He must not be fanciful or fastidious. He must recognize the necessity of give and take in matters of this nature. But there may be real damage to the owner or occupier of a building used for particular purposes, or reasonably adapted for particular purposes, although there would be no real damage if the building were not used or reasonably adapted for such purposes. The application of these principles is far more easy when the building which is complained of has been erected and damages only are claimed; but they have to be applied when the plaintiff comes for an injunction before the building has been erected. It is the duty of the court to arrive at the best conclusion it can upon the effect which the proposed building if erected would produce, and if the court is satisfied that in that event the plaintiff would have a good cause of action, the plaintiff is entitled, as a matter of right, to an injunction to prevent the defendant from interfering with his ancient light; or, in other words, to restrain the defendant from committing a wrongful act. The difficulty of applying the rule in a quia timet action may well induce the court to scan the plaintiff's evidence with severity, especially where an angle of 45 degrees is left. It is settled that there is no rule of law that a man may always build up to an angle of 45 degrees, but, in judging of the probable effect of a proposed building the court may not unreasonably regard the fact that an angle of 45 degrees will be left as primâ facie evidence that there will be no substantial interference, and may require this presumption to be clearly rebutted by satisfactory evidence. This seems to be the result of the authorities. It remains to apply these general principles to the present case. We propose to accept all the findings of fact by Joyce, J., where they are clear without demur, and only to refer to the evidence where there is no finding, or where, as it seems to us, there are inconsistent findings. The Lord Justice then proceeded to state the facts as found by Joyce, J., in his judgment, and, after reading the following passage from that judgment—"Various expert witnesses were examined, and as the result of their evidence I am of opinion that the proposed new building would not affect the selling or letting value of the plaintiffs' premises"—continued:] If that means that an ordinary purchaser or lessee would be content to get a building having the usual amount of light enjoyed by similar houses in this part of London we see no reason to doubt it; but it is not a relevant statement. The plaintiffs are neither vendors or lessees. They are occupiers; and their only desire is to use this room [the large room on the ground floor occupied by about ninety clerks] for the same purposes as heretofore and with the same advantages. And it seems to us impossible to hold that they will not suffer "real damage" if they have to consume and pay for more electric light than hitherto. Joyce, J., at the end of his judgment, refers to Wright, J.'s, decision in Warren v. Brown, and says: "After considerable hesitation I have come to the conclusion that this decision, if it remains unreversed by the Court of Appeal, ought to govern the present case; and I think, sitting as a judge of first instance, I must follow it. Assuming, therefore, that I am right in this, I am of opinion that the action fails and must be dismissed." As we read the judgment, it is a finding in favour of the plaintiffs that real damage would result, though light enough would be left for ordinary purposes of occupancy as a place of business, and there is no finding that the interference is not substantial. Now there was, immediately opposite the windows in question, what I may call "a gap," in width 36ft. and in height 13ft. 6in. The direct light which passed through this gap penetrated to a considerable depth into the plaintiffs' room. The interference with this light is "substantial" within the meaning in which the word is used. There being some obscurity on this point, it seems right to examine the evidence. [His lordship then went through the evidence, and proceeded:] If we consider the judge's notes of the evidence, as we have done, the conclusion at which we have arrived from reading his judgment is confirmed. In our opinion, on the balance of evidence, substantial interference and "real damage" will result; and the proper judgment would have been to grant an injunction in the settled form known as the Yates v. Jack form. But immediately after the action was dismissed with costs the plaintiffs gave notice of their intention to appeal. Notwithstanding this, the defendant has proceeded with and completed the erection of his building. Under these circumstances there is only one course open to us. We must reverse Joyce, J.'s, judgment and give the plaintiffs the judgment to which, according to our view, they were entitled. And we must grant a mandatory injunction requiring the defendant to pull down anything erected in breach of the terms of our injunction. This point was really decided by the Court of Appeal in Parker v. First Avenue Hotel Co., 32 W. R. 105, 24 Ch. D. 282. The defendant must pay the costs here and below.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—The judgment which has just been read is the judgment of the court; but I wish to add, speaking for myself, that, so far as the rule of 45 degrees is concerned, I doubt very much whether that rule, as the law is now settled, can be regarded even as a rough measure of the right of the owner or occupier of ancient lights.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Slaughter & May; Hyde, Tandy, Mahon, & Sayer.

From Chan. Div.
(Vaughan Williams, Romer, and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) Dec. 20.

In re E. A. B. (a.)

Bankruptcy—Scheme of arrangement—Declaration of trust—Withdrawal of proofs—Debts provable—Conduct of debtor—Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 71), s. 3, sub-section 9.

"Debts provable" under the Bankruptcy Act, 1890, s. 3 (9), means debts provable at the time when the scheme of arrangement comes before the court for approval, and not when the receiving order is made.

Rash and hazardous speculation on the part of the debtor is not of itself necessarily a ground for refusing to sanction a scheme of arrangement.

Misconduct of a debtor does not make it against public policy to sanction a scheme unless the misconduct is of a gross character.

This was an appeal from the decision of Mr. Registrar Linklater, sanctioning a scheme of arrangement approved of by the creditors other than Mr. Seal.

(a.) Reported by S. E. WILLIAMS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The scheme provided in effect for security being given for the payment of 7s. 6d. in the pound to the creditors not withdrawing or releasing their claims, and for the vesting of the debtor's estate (if any) in a trustee with a view to the payment (inter alia) of dividends in excess of 7s. 6d. in the pound, should the realization so permit.

The debtor's unsecured liabilities at the date of the receiving order, which was made on the 21st of May, 1901, were estimated by the official receiver at £69,967, and the assets, which consisted of the debtor's interest in certain concessions obtained from the Turkish Government, were estimated by the debtor to produce £27,500.

The trustee under the scheme was to be at liberty to join in a sale of these interests to a company in consideration of the allotment of shares, which shares he might transfer or cause to be allotted to the creditors in satisfaction of the unpaid balances of their claims. So far, however, as the official receiver could ascertain, the debtor had for valuable consideration parted with his interests in the concessions by two indentures dated respectively the 3rd of December, 1898, and the 10th of August, 1899.

Absolute and unconditional withdrawals under seal had been executed by the following creditors: Mr. Burdett-Coutts, £42,662; Mr. W. F. D. Smith and another, £5,900; the executors of C. H. Wainwright and another, £1,722; and the executors of T. Fielden (deceased), £2,783; making in all £53,068.

Sums of £5,000 and £1,800 had been deposited to secure the payment of 7s. 6d. in the pound to the creditors not withdrawing or releasing their claims, and these sums were reported to be sufficient for the purpose.

With regard to the releases of £2,783 and £1,722 mentioned above, it appeared that the debtor's brother had executed a declaration of trust under which the creditors having those claims might derive some pecuniary benefit from him.

Mr. Seal appealed from the registrar's decision on the grounds that the scheme was not reasonable and not calculated to benefit the general body of creditors within the Bankruptcy Act, 1890, s. 3 (9), that it did not provide for payment of not less than 7s. 6d. in the pound on all the unsecured debts provable against the debtor's estate, that the conduct of the debtor was not such as to justify the exercise of the registrar's discretion in his favour, he having got into difficulties through embarking on rash and hazardous speculations, and that the withdrawals of debts had been obtained by alleged secret promises of the debtor to pay the withdrawing creditors, or some of them, sums in excess of the composition payable to each creditor under the scheme.

Macaskie, K.C., and Thorn Drury, for the appellant.

Reed, K.C., and Muir Mackenzie, for the debtor.

G. F. Hart, for creditors opposing the appeal.

Sir E. Carson, S.G., and Sutton, for the official receiver.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., said: In this case the scheme was submitted to the creditors and the creditors approved of it. It then came before Mr. Registrar Linklater and he has approved of it. A good many points have been mentioned by Mr. Macaskie, but there were really only two which on the facts of this case require to be dealt with at all. The first, and indeed, to my mind, the only serious point which has been suggested in this case is that this scheme ought not to be approved because of the declaration of trust which was given to the two creditors who withdrew their proofs—that is, released their debts. It is said that in effect to give this declaration of trust to these two creditors who were withdrawing their proofs was to place them in a better position than the other creditors because they suggested that really the realizable value of these two declarations of trust would have given in each case the creditor something more than 7s. 6d. in the £. It is said that for that reason we ought not to allow this scheme to be sanctioned. I will at once say that if upon the evidence one had to come to the conclusion that the debtor for the purpose of getting this scheme approved had in secret offered two creditors in consideration of their withdrawing their proofs better terms than were being submitted to the creditors, or terms which might be better than those which were submitted to the creditors, I should say that if those creditors accepted those terms and withdrew their proofs that was a very good reason indeed for refusing to sanction this scheme. But on the facts I am not satisfied that that is so at all. It is quite true, and one ought to mention it, that as soon as those creditors knew that exception was taken to what had been done, they gave up the benefit of the declaration of trust. I do not think that that would get rid of the objection based on this transaction if it once was an objectionable transaction and one which the debtor ought not to have entered into. But really in my judgment the point where this objection fails in this, that it would not be a good reason for refusing to sanction the scheme if that which was done in respect of these two creditors was in no sense a bargain made by the debtor. When I speak of a "bargain" I do not mean only a bargain which in form is a bargain with the debtor. If in substance an arrangement was made with the creditor with the knowledge and on behalf of the debtor, whereby a creditor or creditors were to get advantages over the other creditors, I should say that would be quite a sufficient reason for not sanctioning the scheme. But in this case I am not satisfied that this arrangement which was made through the debtor's brother was one which he had knowledge of at all. There was no question asked about it at the time when the application was made for the approval of this scheme and when the sanction was given. But the point having been raised, the public examination which had been closed was reopened for the very purpose of dealing with it. The matter does not seem to have been even then very fully gone into, but it was dealt with. The debtor was asked the question: "Had you been any party to the promise being given to them?" that is, to these two creditors, and the answer was: "No, I had nothing to do with it." The learned registrar, who saw the debtor, and had, no doubt, in the course of this matter opportunities of judging what his conduct and demeanour was, came to the conclusion that he might in this matter rely upon the evidence and statement made by the debtor, and under those circumstances it seems to me we ought not to review the decision of the learned registrar. That disposes of the really principal point and the only serious point to my mind in the matter. But another point was made under section 3 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1890. That section provides that "if any facts are proved on proof of which the court would be required either to refuse, suspend, or attach conditions to the debtor's discharge were he adjudged bankrupt, the court shall refuse to approve the proposal unless it provides reasonable security for payment of not less than seven shillings and sixpence in the pound on all the unsecured debts provable against the debtor's estate." Now, the facts in this case, making the earlier part of sub-section 9 apply—that is, such facts as are mentioned there which would require the application for a discharge to be dealt with as there mentioned, exist. Then we come to the latter part of the section: "Unless it provides reasonable security for the payment of not less than seven shillings and sixpence in the pound on all the unsecured debts provable against the debtor's estate." Now, on the official receiver's report, if you exclude these released debts, as they have been called, there is ample security for the payment of seven and sixpence in the pound. But it is said that we ought to read those words as meaning, not the liabilities and debts which are now provable, but to those which were provable at the moment of making the receiving order. I do not think so. I think that would be to put a very unnatural meaning on those words. I cannot leave out of consideration what the security is to be for. It is for the payment of this amount on all the unsecured debts provable against the debtor's estate. Nothing is payable in respect of those debts at all. They have been released and have gone, and I think it would be a very unnatural construction of the latter part of the section to say that it applies to any debts whatever except those which still continue provable at the moment when the scheme comes up for the sanction of the court. I only wish to deal with one other matter which is much more general. It was said by Mr. Macaskie that in this case we ought to refuse to sanction the scheme because of the debtor's conduct. I am far from saying that a debtor may not have been guilty of such misconduct, misconduct, it may be, leading to his failure and to the receiving order being made against him, and that it would be contrary to public policy to allow a scheme to be sanctioned even though particular creditors of the debtor guilty of the misconduct might be willing to do so. One does not wish to give unnecessary pain, but there have been cases in the past, cases of gross misconduct of that sort, but in my judgment no misconduct comes within the rule that I have been speaking of—that is, misconduct which would make it against public policy to sanction the scheme unless the misconduct is of a gross character. Now, what is the misconduct which is suggested here. In substance it is only that the debtor has been guilty of rash and hazardous speculations leading to his insolvency, but to say that that is a ground upon which the court should refuse to allow the scheme to be sanctioned would in effect be to say that in cases where that is reported by the official receiver there can be no scheme. That cannot be so, for the very terms of the sub-section show that in cases where the facts are such that the discharge might be suspended or refused, one of those cases being the report of the official receiver that the insolvency was brought about by rash and hazardous speculations, then the scheme is not to pass unless the condition is present that 7s. 6d. in the pound shall be secured on all the provable unsecured debts, but it does not say that there is to be no scheme sanctioned at all. To my mind though there might be a case where the rash and hazardous speculations were so continued or of such a character as to make it against public policy that a man who might be described as a confirmed gambler should get a scheme sanctioned at all, I think this is not a case of that sort at all. I think that the court should dismiss this appeal and that the learned registrar exercised a proper discretion in the matter.

ROMER, L.J.—I agree.

COZENS-HARDY, L.J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Seal & Edgelow; Needham, Tyer, & Barrow; Watson & Watson; Solicitor to the Board of Trade.

From Chan. Div. (Vaughan Williams, Romer, and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) Nov. 13, 14.

LISLE v. REEVE. (a.)

Mortgage—Redemption—Option to lender to enter into partnership with the mortgagor upon terms affecting the mortgaged property—Option to be exercised within time limited for redemption—Independent agreement.

Prior to July, 1898, the plaintiffs advanced to the defendant £5,000 upon the security of a ship and other property, upon the terms of an agreement made between them on the 23rd of April, 1896, whereby the money was not to be called in or paid for two years, and the plaintiffs might at any time within the two years elect to enter into partnership with the defendant upon the terms of their releasing the mortgage debt, and the ship and other property becoming partnership assets.

On the 27th of June, 1898, the defendant mortgaged to the plaintiffs certain wharves at Norwich to secure £2,000, part of the £5,000 then owing. The mortgage deed gave time for payment of this sum of £2,000 until the 27th of December, 1898.

On the 9th of July, 1898, another agreement was entered into between the plaintiffs and the defendant. It recited the agreement of 1896; that the plaintiffs had not entered into partnership; that the plaintiffs had applied for and the defendant was unable to pay the £5,000, and had requested the plaintiffs to extend the term of two years for a further period of five years; and it was thereby agreed (1) that the plaintiffs might, within five years, elect to enter into partnership with the defendant; (2) that the plaintiffs should in that event release the defendant from the payment of the £5,000, and transfer the mortgaged property for the purposes of the partnership; (3) that the capital of the partnership property should belong to defendant and plaintiffs in equal shares.

In February, 1900, the plaintiffs exercised their option and communicated to the defendant their intention to enter into partnership with him. The defendant refused to comply, alleging that the effect of the agreement was to render the property irredeemable, and that it was an illegal clog on the equity of redemption.

Held, that the agreement of the 9th of July, 1898, was subsequent to and independent of the original mortgage bargain; and that there being nothing unconscionable or unfair in the agreement in itself, the fact that the parties to it stood at the time in the relation to each other of mortgagor and mortgagee, did not prevent the agreement being enforceable.

Decision of Buckley, J. (49 W. R. 188), affirmed on different grounds.

This was an appeal from a decision of Buckley, J. (reported 49 W. R. 188).

The following statement of the facts is taken from the judgment of Buckley, J.: By an agreement dated the 23rd of April, 1896, and made between the plaintiffs, G. Lisle and others, trading as J. H. Bentham & Co., of the one part, and the defendant, H. Reeve, trading as Clarke & Reeve, of the other part, the plaintiffs agreed to lend the defendant £3,000 and such further sums, not exceeding £2,000, as the defendant should require, and these sums were to be a first mortgage on the defendant's steamship The Norfolk. The further advances to be made within two years from the 23rd of April, 1896. The £3,000 and further advances to be secured by the mortgage were to be made payable at six months from the date of the mortgage (which was, in fact, the 4th of July, 1896). The £3,000 was to bear interest at 5½ per cent. from that date. The further advances were to be free of interest. The plaintiffs were not to call in, and the defendant was not to compel the plaintiffs to receive, the principal moneys before the expiration of two years from the date of the mortgage, if interest was regularly paid. If at any time within two years from the making of the agreement (the 23rd of April, 1896) the plaintiffs should elect to enter into partnership with the defendant they were to be at liberty to do so upon the terms that, inter alia, the plaintiffs should relieve the defendant from the payment of the £3,000 and further advances, if made, and if the whole £2,000 had not been advanced should make up the £2,000 and the plaintiffs should transfer the ship, free from the mortgage, for the purposes of the partnership. The capital of the partnership was to be represented by The Norfolk and some other property described in the schedule to the agreement, and the ship and property were to belong to the defendant and the plaintiffs in equal shares. They were to share the profits and losses of the partnership equally, and the partnership was to continue until determined by six months' notice on either side.

On the 4th of July, 1896, the defendant executed to the plaintiffs a statutory mortgage of The Norfolk to secure an account current, the particulars of which were therein stated to be described in a receipt and agreement of even date. No date for payment was named in the mortgage. The receipt and agreement were introduced by reference. There was a receipt or memorandum not of even date, but dated the 16th of July, 1896, showing that £3,783 was the amount in fact then advanced and secured by the mortgage. The receipt bore internal evidence that although dated the 16th of July, 1896, it was the receipt stated in the mortgage of the 4th of July, 1896, to be of even date with the mortgage, for it spoke of the 4th of July, 1898, as being "two years from the date hereof." This was, therefore, apparently the receipt referred to in the statutory mortgage. It named the 4th of July, 1898, as the date for repayment. There was also a deed of the 4th of July, 1896, between the defendant of the one part and the plaintiffs of the other part, which, after a recital that the defendant, there called "the mortgagor," was the owner of The Norfolk, and that he had applied to the plaintiffs, there called "the mortgagees," for £5,000, to be secured on the ship and her freight and insurances, and that he had by a deed-poll of even date mortgaged the ship, it was witnessed that the mortgagor assigned to the mortgagees all charter-parties, bills of lading, and documents under which freight might be earned, and all policies of insurance of the ship by way of security, and he covenanted for payment of the £5,000 on demand.

On the 23rd of April, 1898, the two years within which the plaintiffs were under the agreement of the 23rd of April, 1896, entitled to elect to enter into partnership with the defendant expired. They had not elected to enter into partnership. The whole sum of £5,000 had been advanced, but no part of it had been repaid. Under these circumstances, in the opinion of Buckley, J., there clearly existed after the 23rd of April, 1898, the relation of mortgagor and mortgagees between the parties, so far as the transaction of 1896 was concerned. On the 4th of July, 1898, there existed a legal, and subsequently there was an equitable, right in the defendant to redeem the plaintiffs.

In this state of facts further transactions took place between the parties in 1898. There was executed on the 27th of June, 1898, an indenture between the defendant, therein called "the mortgagor," of the one part, and the plaintiffs, therein called "the mortgagees," of the other part, which contained a recital that the mortgagees had advanced to the mortgagor £2,000, in consideration of which the mortgagor covenanted for payment of that sum on the 27th of December, 1898, with interest at 5 per cent., and conveyed to the mortgagees by way of security some wharves at Norwich and at Great Yarmouth, subject to a proviso for redemption on payment of the £2,000 on the 27th of December, 1898. This sum of £2,000 was part of the above-mentioned sum of £5,000. The last-mentioned deed was a further security for part of the above-mentioned debt of £5,000, and it gave time until the 27th of December, 1898, for payment of that sum of £2,000. On the same 27th of June, 1898, the defendant executed to the plaintiffs a mortgage of a policy of assurance for £3,000 by way of security to them against a guarantee which they had given to the defendant's bankers for a sum of £1,000, part of the defendant's overdraft.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

It was in this state of things that the instrument was executed upon which the contention in the present case arose. It was an agreement dated the 9th of July, 1898, made between the plaintiffs of the one part, and the defendant of the other part. It recited the agreement of the 23rd of April, 1896, shortly, but although it stated that under that agreement the further advances were to be made within two years from April, 1896, and that the election to enter into partnership was to be made within the same time, it did not say that under that agreement the loan was for a period of two years from the 4th of July, 1896. It then stated that the plaintiffs had advanced to the defendant £5,000, which had been secured by the first mortgage on The Norfolk, and by a second mortgage on the wharves, dated the 27th of June, 1898 (a statement which was inaccurate), and by an assignment of the life policy for £3,000 (which was not, in fact, the case), and that the plaintiffs had not up to date entered into partnership with the defendant. It then proceeded as follows: "And whereas the said term of two years so fixed by the said agreement having on the 23rd of April last expired, and Bentham & Co. having made an application to Reeve for the repayment of the said sum of £5,000, with interest thereon, and Reeve not being in a position to comply therewith, has requested Bentham & Co. to extend the said term of two years for a further period of five years, which they the said Bentham & Co. have agreed to do upon Reeve entering into this agreement and paying interest upon the said sum of £5,000, or any further sums, at £5 per cent. per annum and upon the terms hereinafter appearing." And by the operative part it was agreed and declared as follows: "(i.) If at any time within the said further period of five years from the making of this agreement Bentham & Co. shall elect to enter into partnership with Reeve in the said business carried on by him under the style of Clarke & Reeve, as aforesaid, they shall be at liberty to do so, and the partnership shall be upon the terms hereinafter appearing; (ii.) Bentham & Co. shall release Reeve from the payment of the said sum of £5,000 and shall transfer the said ship, free from the said mortgage, for the purposes of the said partnership. And, in consideration of Bentham & Co. doing these things, Reeve shall undertake and satisfy all liabilities, mortgages, and otherwise in connection with the wharves and plant of the said business of Clarke & Reeve, and Reeve shall be entitled to all accounts and book debts of the said business outstanding at the time of such partnership being entered into, but all current contracts existing at that time shall be apportioned between Reeve and the new partnership; (iii.) the capital shall be represented by the ships and other property set out in the schedule hereunder written and at present used by Reeve in the said business of Clarke & Reeve, or other the ships and property used by him in the said business at the time of such election as aforesaid, and the said ships and property shall belong to Reeve and Bentham & Co. in equal shares; (iv.) the profits and losses of the new partnership shall be divided and borne between Reeve and Bentham & Co. in equal shares; (v.) the new partnership shall continue until determined by six calendar months' notice on either side or shall be for such term as the parties mutually agree upon . . . ; (viii.) Reeve shall not during the said period of five years from the date hereof in any way incumber or dispose of the said property used by him in the said business of Clarke & Reeve without the consent of Bentham & Co. in writing."

Notwithstanding the form of the recital as to the two years, the learned judge held that the agreement of the 9th of July, 1898, extended the period of the loan for a further five years, and that the second mortgage of the 27th of June, 1898 (which had given six months from that date for repayment of the £2,000), and this agreement of the 9th of July, 1898, which gave time for the whole £5,000 for five years—i.e., until the 9th of July, 1903—and contained the terms of the new arrangement between the parties, formed in reality parts of one transaction.

On the 24th of February, 1900 (during the currency of the five years), the plaintiffs exercised the option reserved to them by the agreement of the 9th of July, 1898, and elected to enter into partnership with the defendant. He refused to enter into partnership.

The plaintiffs brought this action for the specific performance of the agreement of the 9th of July, 1898, or, alternatively, for damages for the breach of it, and in the latter case for payment also of the £5,000 and interest, and claiming in default of payment to enforce their securities by foreclosure or sale.

The defendant, by his defence, pleaded as follows: "The effect of the agreement of the 9th of July, 1898, taken with the other securities mentioned in the statement of claim, was to render the property comprised in the latter irredeemable, and was an illegal clog on the equity of redemption"; and by his counterclaim he asked for a declaration that the agreement of the 9th of July, 1898, was not binding on him, and that the same might be delivered up to be cancelled. And he also claimed to redeem the mortgage of the 4th of July, 1896, and the mortgage and assignment of the 27th of June, 1898, upon the footing that they stood as security only for £5,000 and interest at 5 per cent. from the 31st of December, 1899.

The sum of £5,125 was paid into court by the defendant in satisfaction.

Buckley, J., held that on the 24th of February, 1900, the plaintiffs became entitled to enter into partnership with the defendant upon the terms of the agreement of the 9th of July, 1898; and that the defendant had committed a breach of that agreement. And an order was made for the payment to the plaintiffs of the sum of £5,125 which the defendant had paid into court.

An inquiry as to damages for the breach of contract was directed, and it was ordered that the plaintiffs should reconvey to the defendant the properties comprised in the mortgage of the 4th of July, 1896, and in the mortgage of the 27th of June, 1898.

The defendant appealed.

Warmington, K.C., and Martelli, for the appellant.

Astbury, K.C., and R. J. Parker, for the respondents.

The arguments used and cases cited were similar to those in the court below, but, having regard to the grounds on which the court in the present instance based their decision, it is unnecessary to set them out at length.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—This case, as I understand it, turns upon, I was going to say, a question of fact, but there is no question inasmuch as it turns upon a state of facts which, in substance, is not in dispute at all. It was not disputed that a mortgagee can enter into an agreement to purchase from the mortgagor the equity of redemption. Only such a transaction must not be part and parcel of the original loan or mortgage transaction. It must not be part and parcel of that bargain. The mortgagee cannot at the moment when he is lending money and taking security enter into an agreement which is in effect an agreement that the mortgagor shall have no equity of redemption; but there is nothing to prevent that being done if it is done by an agreement which in substance and in fact is subsequent to, and independent of, the original bargain.

Now in this particular case it certainly is found by Buckley, J., that the mortgage transaction of the 27th of June and the transaction of the 9th of July, which is the transaction under which the option to purchase the equity of redemption by coming into a partnership arrangement was contained, were one and the same transaction; but here it is common ground that there was no evidence excepting the documents themselves; and if one looks at the documents themselves there is nothing to show that the arrangement contained in the document of the 9th of July was contemplated by, or was part and parcel of the agreement of the 27th of June. Therefore I come to the conclusion that that finding of Buckley, J., cannot be supported. One has to observe that it does not seem that it was part of the case really presented by the defendant here that those two transactions of the 27th of June and the 9th of July were part and parcel of one transaction, because if one looks at the pleadings it is quite plain that it is not so alleged even upon the face of the pleadings. Taking it, then, that really those two transactions were not part and parcel of the same transaction, and taking it really I may say as an admitted fact (because in spite of a contention with which I will deal presently there is not in substance any dispute on the point) that the two transactions were separate, what is the objection which is made here to the agreement come to by the document on the 9th of July? It really cannot be urged that there is anything against it whatsoever if it is really to be treated as separate and independent from the agreement on the 27th of June. Under those circumstances it seems to me that really there is nothing to say against it. It is an agreement for the purchase of an option to come into partnership, and to buy in that way the equity of redemption by including the property the subject of the mortgage—namely, the property in the proposed partnership to be entered into by the mortgagor and mortgagees. There is one observation which I should like to make, and that is this, I do not myself quite understand the observations of Buckley, J., in his judgment about the time when an equity of redemption is first to be recognized. His lordship says at p. 191 of 49 W. R.: "Now an equity of redemption is a right upon equitable terms to redeem after the legal time for redemption has expired and after the estate has become absolute at law. An equity of redemption is an equity of a right additional to and superimposed upon the legal right to redeem. When the estate has become absolute at law equity intervenes and says that even then the estate which has become absolute at law is meant to be and ought to be treated as being a security only. If, however, there is no legal right of redemption there is no right which equity can extend. In other words, an equity of redemption can never exist unless there exists a legal right of redemption. To ascertain, therefore, whether there is an equity of redemption the first step is to ascertain whether, according to the contract, and having regard to all the terms of the contract, there is a legal right to redemption. If there is not, then the transaction is not a mortgage for the purpose of the maxim "once a mortgage always a mortgage." I can only say, speaking for myself, I do not accept that proposition. It is not necessary for the purpose of the present judgment to go further into the matter, but I thought right to say I do not agree with the proposition of law there laid down, and we have not in the course of these two long days had any authorities cited to support it.

ROMER, L.J.—I agree in thinking that in this case the appeal should be dismissed. The question turns entirely upon the agreement of the 9th of July, 1898. Now it is to be noticed it is not even alleged that that agreement is unconscionable or unfair in itself, and the sole question is whether there is any principle of law which prevents it being enforceable in this court. In my opinion, under the circumstances and looking at the provisions of the agreement, there is no rule which prevents it being enforceable here. I do not think that the cases which have been referred to, and the principles which have have been cited as to clogging the equity of redemption, or as to once a mortgage always a mortgage, really apply to this case. Now what is the agreement between the parties? It is true the parties occupy the position of mortgagor and mortgagee. That does not in itself of necessity render unfair or impeachable a contract bonâ fide made between them if in other respects unobjectionable. Here the agreement, as I understand its terms, amounts to this. It appears that the mortgagors carry on a business. As between the parties to this agreement, the mortgagee has had given to him an option of becoming a partner with the mortgagors within a period of five years from the date of the agreement. If the option is exercised within that period then the mortgagee is to pay a sum to the mortgagor as his part of the capital of the business, and that sum is fixed at £5,000, which is the amount due on the mortgage. The £5,000 so to be brought in, if it be brought in, and if the partnership is established, will be applied in discharging the mortgagor from his liability under the mortgage. The agreement then further provides that pending the completion of the partnership transaction, if the partnership transaction be entered into and carried out—that is, pending the option—the mortgagee will not call in the mortgage money. Now admitting that that is a bonâ fide transaction and is not merely a colourable transaction to prevent the mortgage debt being paid off and the mortgage property redeemed (and there is nothing in the facts to justify us in coming to any such conclusion) is there any rule of law to prevent the parties occupying such a position, from making such a contract as that? In my opinion there is nothing. Putting aside, of course, the provision as to the mortgagee not insisting upon being paid his mortgage debt for the fixed period, there would be nothing obviously on the face of the agreement as to which a word could be said in opposition to the agreement. Is an agreement like that made bad because the person occupying the position of the mortgagee contracts that pending the exercise of the option and the consideration whether the partnership transaction will be carried out, he, the mortgagee, will not call in his money, or that that forms part of the consideration upon which the partnership agreement was entered into? I think not, and having here to deal with a transaction which, as I have pointed out, is not impeached as being unconscionable in itself, or unfair, it seems to me impossible for us to say that there is a rule such as that which has been urged on behalf of the appellants which would enable us to say that this agreement, honestly come to, and fair on the face of it, should be invalidated. On this ground I think the appeal should be dismissed. I only desire to add for myself that it must not be understood that in affirming the decision I am to be taken as endorsing everything that has been said by the learned judge in the court below.

COZENS-HARDY, L.J.—I agree. I desire to adopt the language of Kindersley, V.C., in the case of Gossip v. Wright, 11 W. R. 632, 32 L. J. Ch. 648, where he says: "In that which is to be a mortgage transaction—that is, a security, the court will not allow the right of redemption to be crippled and hampered by an arrangement between the parties at the time. That is well established as a general rule. I need not say, like any other general rule, that even that broad rule is liable to some exception. For example there are one or two cases of this sort—one where the object of the transaction was not merely a loan of money, but one party meant to benefit the other. It was a sort of settlement between relations, and then the court, although it did cripple the right of redemption, upheld the transaction. However, there is no doubt that the broad rule is this. The court will not allow the right of redemption in any way to be hampered or crippled in that which the parties intended to be a security either by any contemporaneous instrument with the deed in question or by anything which this court would regard as a simultaneous arrangement or part of the same transaction. That the court will allow the parties by a subsequent agreement to enter into a transaction by which the mortgagor sells, or releases, or conveys, or gives up (call it what you will) his equity of redemption and makes the estate out and out the estate of the mortgagee is clear."

Now applying that principle, and in the absence of a particle of either allegation or evidence to show that the two deeds of June and July, 1898, were part of the same transaction, it seems to me to come simply to an arrangement made after a mortgage between a mortgagor and mortgagee, and, so far as I know there is no authority for saying that there is any disability in having a contract for an option made between mortgagor and mortgagee, not as part of the mortgage transaction, but at a subsequent period. That being so, I only desire to say for myself that I entirely adopt the expression of Vaughan Williams, L.J., and also that, subject to the effect of any further argument which Mr. Parker might have adduced if I had come to the conclusion that it was all part of one transaction, I should not be able to adopt the result at which Buckley, J., has arrived.

Solicitors, Cattarns & De Vesian; Rowcliffes, Rawle, & Co., for Appleby, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. Byrne, J. — Jan. 17, 22.

In re W. KEY & SON (LIMITED). (a.)

Company—Memorandum upon register of members—Lien of company—Trustee in bankruptcy of shareholder—Form of certificate—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), Table A, article 13.

The trustee in bankruptcy of a shareholder in a company applied to be registered as owner of shares standing in the bankrupt's name. The company had, under their articles, a lien upon shares for debts due to them from their members. The company alleged that there were debts due to them from the bankrupt, and they registered the trustee as owner of the shares, but they put upon the register a memorandum of their claim to the lien, and claimed to put a note to the same effect upon the certificate of the shares.

Held, that the company were not entitled to put such a memorandum upon the register, and that it must be removed therefrom.

Semble, that the certificate of the shares must be granted in accordance with the register, and the company were not entitled to place any such note or memorandum upon it.

Motion.

This was a motion under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1900, on behalf of A. E. Preston, the trustee in bankruptcy of one T. H. Norris, asking that the register of members of the above company might be rectified by entering thereon the name of Preston in respect of 4,000 ordinary shares in the place of Norris, in whose name the shares were standing.

Norris had become bankrupt in January, 1901, and the company alleged that he was at the time of his bankruptcy indebted to them for certain sums of money.

The articles of association of the company provided that the company should have a first and paramount lien upon all the shares registered in the name of each member for his debts, liabilities, and engagements to the company; that the directors might decline to register any transfer of the shares upon which the company had a lien, and that, save as provided by the articles, the regulations of Table A of the Companies Act, 1862, should apply to the company. There was no special article as to transmission of shares.

The company had commenced an action against Preston to establish and enforce their lien upon the shares for the above-mentioned sums of money. Preston was resisting the claim, and did not admit that the bankrupt was indebted to the company, or that the company were entitled to any lien upon the shares. Preston had applied to be registered in respect of the 4,000 shares. The company were willing to register him, but they claimed the right to enter upon the register a memorandum to the same effect as a note they proposed to put at the foot of the certificate granted for the shares. This note was "The shares comprised in this certificate are a portion of 10,000 shares numbered 1 to 10,000 inclusive, on all of which the company claim a lien under the company's articles of association for the debts, liabilities, and engagements of the said T. H. Norris to the company." The certificate, apart from the note, was in the ordinary form, certifying that the shares in the company were held "subject to the memorandum and articles of association thereof." Preston refused to accept these conditions and claimed to have a "clean" certificate and to be registered without any qualification. Subsequently to the notice of motion, and before the motion, the company had in fact registered Preston, and had put the memorandum in question upon the register.

(a.) Reported by NEVILLE TEBBUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Levett, K.C., and Frank Evans, for the applicant.—The company are bound to place the applicant upon the register in respect of these shares. Their power to decline to register a transfer does not apply to a transmission of the title: In re Bentham Spinning Mills Co., 28 W. R. 26, 11 Ch. D. 900. They have no right to put a memorandum on the register which will be detrimental to the title of the trustee. What they may put on the register is defined by section 25 of the Companies Act, 1862, and what they may put upon the certificate is defined by article 2 of Table A.

They also referred to In re Sovereign Life Assurance Co., 14 W. R. 1, [1892] 3 Ch. 279.

J. F. Norton, K.C., and Muir Mackenzie, for the company.—The trustee in bankruptcy can only take subject to all equities: per Bacon, V.C., in Ex parte Harrison, 32 W. R. 1011, 26 Ch. D. 523, at p. 526; per Selborne, L.C., on appeal, 28 Ch. D. 363, at p. 368, 33 W. R. Dig. 43. Unless this memorandum is placed upon the certificate the company may be estopped from saying they have their lien upon the shares: see observations of Lord Fitzgerald in Bradford Banking Co. v. Briggs, 35 W. R. 521, 12 App. Cas. 29, at p. 39.

Jan. 22.—BYRNE, J.—This application is made with reference to the register of members; but that involves the nature of the certificate to be granted, as I do not think that it will be disputed that the certificate ought to be in accordance with the register, and much argument has been addressed to me as to the effect of a certificate in the form proposed. As there is no special article as to the transmission of shares otherwise than by transfer, we are thrown upon Table A. Now, Norris was registered in respect of these 4,000 shares and held a certificate for them in the ordinary form—that is, "subject to the memorandum and articles of association, and the rules and regulations of the company." I think that primarily the right of a person taking by transmission is to be entered upon the register in the same way as his predecessor in title was entered, and to have the certificate in the same form as his predecessor had. It is said in effect that the company may put anything upon the register which is not absolutely mischievous to the shareholder, and which is put on in good faith. There is nothing in the Act to prevent their using the register for memoranda, but in this case, if they may put this memorandum upon it, I do not see how their claim to put it upon the certificate can be resisted. The memorandum does not seem to me to be necessary for the protection of the company. It is suggested that there might be new directors of the company, or a new secretary, who might forget that there was an accrued right, or claim to an accrued right, to a lien. That argument does not appeal to me. It would apply equally during the time that the bankrupt was upon the register. Nor is the memorandum upon the register justified for the sake of altering the form of the certificate of the shares, for it is not essential for the protection of the company that the certificate should be granted in that form. The company are entitled to a lien, if at all, under the memorandum and articles, and the certificate is only granted as "subject to the memorandum and articles of association." The only reason suggested for the certificate being in the form proposed is that, there now being a claim to a specific lien, the company might be estopped hereafter if they did not mention on the certificate that there was such a claim, and that the lien had ripened into an immediate charge for a sum of money. I should be sorry to say anything to suggest that they could be under any such liability. It appears to me that the proposed memorandum would be detrimental to the trustee in bankruptcy. Why should he be in a worse position in this matter than the bankrupt was? The certificate is evidence of the legal title, and the trustee is entitled to be registered as the legal owner of these shares, and to have a "clean" certificate, as it has been called. If there was any probability or prospect of a fraudulent or wrongful dealing by the applicant with the shares when he came into possession of the certificate the company could apply in the pending action for an injunction to restrain him from dealing with the certificate. If the proposed statement is put upon the certificate it might lead to serious inconvenience. It may turn out, if the action goes on, that the company have no lien on the shares, and yet the applicant will have a certificate stating that the shares are subject to a claim for one. And if he applies for a new certificate, he may be told he is only entitled to one if the old one is worn out or lost. I think that the company have no right to put on the certificate a memorandum which will make out the certificate to be subject to some special right which interferes with the legal title—for that is what the meaning of it would appear to be. I do not think that the company are entitled to put this memorandum upon the register, and I think that the register ought to be rectified by striking out any reference upon it to the specific claim of the company. That is all I have to do now, but I intimate that it seems to me that the form of certificate must follow the form of the register.

Application granted.

Solicitors, Ward, Perks, & McKay; W. H. Court, for Albin, Hunt, & Fourmy, Chesham and Berkhampstead.

Chan. Div.
Buckley, J. } Dec. 12.

In re JACKSON'S SETTLED ESTATE. (a.)

Settled land—Will—Future trust for sale—Trust arising after death of trustee—Trustee tenant for life—Trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts, 1882 to 1890—Settled Land Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 69), s. 16 (ii.).

Trustees for the time being of a "settlement" with a future trust for sale are trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts, 1882 to 1890, under section 16, sub-section (ii.), of the Act of 1890, and it is immaterial that one of them is a person who cannot in fact ever exercise the trust for sale by reason that he will necessarily be dead before the trust takes effect.

One of two trustees of a "settlement" with a future trust for sale is a trustee for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts, notwithstanding that he is tenant for life of the "settlement."

A. and B. were trustees of settled land with a trust for sale to take effect after the death of A., who was the tenant for life.

Held, that, under section 16 (ii.) of the Settled Land Act, 1890, A. and B. were trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts, 1882 to 1890.

(a.) Reported by NEVILLE TEBBUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Originating summons.

This was a summons for the purpose of determining whether the applicant, Mrs. Constance H. Jackson, together with her co-trustee, W. H. Adams, were trustees of a "settlement" for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts.

By his will in 1886 the testator, W. Jackson, devised his freehold estate called "Town Thoms," near Rugby, in the county of Warwick, to his wife, the plaintiff, and another person, upon trust to permit his wife to occupy the estate during her life and after her decease (in the events which happened) upon the same trusts as were thereinafter declared concerning his residuary estate. His residuary estate was devised and bequeathed to his trustees upon trust for sale and conversion. By a codicil in 1890 the testator declared that if his wife declined to occupy the house the trustees were to pay her the income thereof. He executed another codicil in 1891 which did not affect the will as stated.

The testator died in 1895. The second trustee disclaimed. In 1898 the widow appointed W. H. Adams to be a trustee of the will and codicils in the place of the disclaiming trustee, and conveyed and assigned the estates to herself and him. Subsequently Mrs. Jackson contracted to sell part of the Town Thoms estate to the London and North-Western Railway Co. The question was then raised whether she and Adams were trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts, and Mrs. Jackson took out this summons against the company and Adams for the determination of the question.

W. E. Vernon, for the plaintiff (after referring to the cases mentioned in the judgment).—Mrs. Jackson and Adams are trustees for the time being of the will and codicils, with a future power of sale, and they come within the words of section 16, sub-section (ii.), of the Settled Land Act, 1890. It is said that they do not because Mrs. Jackson cannot exercise the trust for sale; that if so you must say that if a trust for sale were given to trustees to be exercised, say, after twenty years, and one of them was ninety years old, he would not be a trustee for the purposes of the Acts under section 16.

A. Underhill, for the London and North-Western Railway Co.—The general purpose of the Acts is that the trustees shall safeguard the interests of the remaindermen, and check and control the tenant for life: see judgment of Lindley, M.R., and Chitty, L.J., in In re Mundy and Roper's Contract, 47 W. R. 226, at p. 227, [1899] 1 Ch. 275, at p. 288. This is also shown by sections 35, 36, and 44 of the Act of 1882, and by sections 10 and 12 of the Act of 1890, and the trustees should be independent persons. Mr. Adams may die first, and then Mrs. Jackson will be sole trustee, and also tenant for life, with no one to check her. She is not "under a future trust for sale," for there is no trust for sale which can arise in her lifetime or be exercised by her. To bring the trustees within the section it must be shown that the testator has confided a trust for sale to their charge. This cannot be said with regard to Mrs. Jackson. It cannot be said that the testator has shown that he intended them to be trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts by giving them a future trust for sale, because the will was made before the Act of 1890. The confirmation of the will by the codicil of 1891 would not alter this.

BUCKLEY, J.—The point to be determined here is one of very general importance. Mrs. Jackson is tenant for life under the will. She and Mr. Adams are trustees of the will. The will contains a trust for sale, but it is a trust for sale which does not take effect until after the decease of Mrs. Jackson—a future trust for sale. Section 16, sub-section (ii), of the Settled Land Act, 1890, provides that certain persons shall for the purposes of the Settled Land Act be trustees of the settlement—namely, reading the words relevant here—"the persons (if any) who are for the time being under the settlement trustees under a future trust for sale of the land to be sold." It is argued, on the one side, that Mrs. Jackson and Mr. Adams are not such trustees, because the trust takes effect only after Mrs. Jackson is dead, so that she can never be a person to carry the trust into effect. It is argued, on the other side, that as Mrs. Jackson and Mr. Adams are for the time being trustees of this settlement, and as it contains a future trust for sale they are therefore trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts. I think the latter contention is correct. The words of the sub-section are "the persons (if any) who are for the time being under the settlement trustees." There is no difficulty so far. These two persons are "for the time being"—that is, at present—"under the settlement trustees." Then what is meant by "under a future trust for sale." I think it must be read as meaning either "subject to" or "bound by" a future trust for sale, or "trustees of a settlement which contains a future trust for sale." I do not find it says that the persons must be those who would execute the trust for sale. Such a reading of the sub-section would render it utterly unworkable. A trustee may die any day. He may die before the future trust for sale becomes exercisable, and he will never exercise it. The age of the trustee may be such, and the date at which the future trust for sale is to take effect may be such, that a particular person in all human probability will not be alive when it comes to be executed. You would be introducing a series of difficulties unless you looked simply at this question, who are now the trustees, and does the settlement contain a trust for sale? It appears to me those are the only two things you have to look at. It has been pointed out forcibly and truly that the object of having trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Act is to check and control the tenant for life. Ought I to give effect to that object by saying that the tenant for life cannot be trustee for the purposes of the Settled Land Act? Plainly not. The testator certainly could have said that his widow and somebody else should be trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Act. It is a mere question of expediency. It is also pointed out that Mr. Adams may die, and Mrs. Jackson may be sole surviving trustee, and may have to check herself. The answer to that, I think, is that if that state of things should arise, then it will be necessary and right that there should be appointed some other person to act with her. For instance, under section 45, sub-section 2, of the Act of 1882 there must be two trustees at the date when the notice starting the proceedings is given; and in any case it would be competent to the remainderman to apply to the court upon the ground that the tenant for life was so placed as that she ought to be controlled by the action of others to act with her. I cannot find anything in that possibility sufficient to control the construction of the simple language of sub-section (ii.). The state of the decisions upon this section is rather singular. There appear to have been three cases in chambers, none of which were reported, but for such knowledge as we have of them we are indebted to the gentlemen who make communications to the legal newspapers. In one case, In re Cox and Seadon's Contract, commented upon in 91 Law Times 241, Chitty, J., apparently decided in chambers as I am now deciding. Subsequently, in 1892, it would appear that the same learned judge arrived at a conclusion which is said to be the contrary of his previous decision. That case is the subject of articles in 37 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL, p. 109, and 43 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL, p. 326, where the name of it, In re Nieuwenhuys, is given, the reference to the record being 1892—N.—1788. The order is set out in the latter article, and I am not at all clear that that was a decision to the contrary of what the learned judge had previously decided, but there is some doubt about it. The third case is In re Earp, before Stirling, J., apparently in chambers in 1899. It is stated in Wolstenholme's Conveyancing and S. L. Acts (8th ed.), p. 423, and the decision was in the same direction as that in which I am now deciding. Therefore it appears to me so far as authority is to be found or traced at all, it is in favour of the view which I take. I hold that under section 16, sub-section (ii.), of the Act of 1890 the persons who are for the time being trustees of a settlement which contains a future trust for sale are within the definition of that sub-section, and that it is immaterial that some or one of them are persons who in all human probability will not, or in fact cannot, ever exercise the trust, as for instance that one of them is a person who necessarily will be dead before the trust takes effect. I think, therefore, that Mrs. Jackson and Mr. Adams are trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts.

Solicitors for the applicants, Ashurst, Morris, Crisp, & Co.

Solicitor for the London and North-Western Railway Co., C. H. Mason.

Chan. Div. Joyce, J. } Oct. 30.

In re FREAKE'S SETTLEMENT. LORD KINNAIRD v. FREAKE. (a.)

Settled land—Capital money—Improvements in leasehold houses with a view of letting—Electric light installation—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), s. 25—Settled Land Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 69), s. 13 (ii.).

An electric light installation may, under special circumstances, be so necessary to enable a house to be let as to be payable out of capital moneys under the Settled Land Acts.

This was an adjourned summons under the Settled Land Acts, which was taken out by the trustees for the purposes of the Acts of a settlement made on the marriage of Sir Thomas Freake in 1868.

By the settlement certain property, which included the leasehold houses, No. 6, Cranley-place, No. 9, Sumner-place, and No. 36, Onslow-gardens, to which the summons related, were vested for the residues of long terms of years in the trustees upon trust for sale. The trusts of the property were for Sir Thomas Freake during his life, or until he should assign, charge, or incumber the same, and subject thereto for the benefit of his wife during her life or widowhood, and subject thereto for the benefit of the issue of the marriage.

The houses were old-fashioned and had been unlet for some time, and the evidence showed that a considerable sum of money would require to be expended on each house in order to meet the requirements of intending tenants of houses in that part of London.

The summons asked, inter alia, for the determination of the question whether the costs of a proposed new system of electric lighting (the houses having at present only an imperfect gas service) would be properly payable out of capital.

Hughes, K.C., and A. L. Ellis, for the trustees, stated the facts.

G. R. Northcote, for the tenant for life in possession.—The proposed installation is an "addition" to the houses "reasonably necessary or proper to enable the same to be let" within section 13 (ii.) of the Settled Land Act, 1890.

B. Farrer, for the remaindermen.—The substitution of the electric light for an old system of gas lighting is rather of the nature of repairs, and therefore, like the heating apparatus in In re Gaskell's Estates, 42 W. R 219, [1894] 1 Ch. 485, should not be paid for out of capital money.

R. Feetham, for the second tenant for life.

JOYCE, J.—The heating apparatus in the case cited was not necessary, but some system of lighting is necessary. The proposed electric light installation will in fact be a new system of lighting the house, and I therefore think it will be an "addition to the building" within the meaning of the Act cited. I shall therefore sanction payment out of capital moneys of the expense of the wiring and of so much of the installation as is not usually supplied by the tenant.

Solicitors, Pears, Ellis, & Co.

Chan. Div. Joyce, J. } July 2, 3, 4, 27, 1901.

TURNER v. MOON. (a.)

Vendor and purchaser—Covenant for title—Implied covenant—Breach—Measure of damages—Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 7.

If a vendor purport to convey land to a purchaser free from a right of way belonging to a third person, which in fact still exists and is not extinguished, this existence of the right of way is a breach of the covenant for good right to convey implied by the use of the words "as beneficial owner."

The proper measure of damages in such a case is the difference between the purchase price and the value of the land as the vendor had power to convey it.

Witness action.

One of the questions at issue—to which alone this report relates—had reference to the proper measure of damages for the breach of an implied covenant for title. The covenant was implied by the use of the words "as beneficial owner" in the conveyance (dated the 9th of December, 1891) by the defendant to the plaintiff of a portion of the Westbrook estate at Godalming. The portion of the estate conveyed to the plaintiff included a strip of land forming part of the Westbrook-road, and this strip was expressed to be subject to rights of way previously granted by the defendant to persons called Cooper, Fleming, and Parry. The plaintiff subsequently discovered that a right of way over the strip had also been granted to the Countess of Meath, who had previously purchased a portion of the estate, including the house called Westbrook House, to be used as a home for epileptic women and girls.

Thereupon the plaintiff brought this action, alleging that the right of way possessed by the countess would seriously affect the value of the residence which he had built upon the portion of the estate purchased by him, by destroying its privacy and amenity, and claiming damages for breach of the implied covenant for good right to convey by the concealment of the right of way. The defendant denied liability, but paid £50 into court.

(a.) Reported by J. F. ISELIN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(a.) Reported by J. F. ISELIN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Younger, K.C., and G. Cave, for the plaintiff.—In considering the proper measure of damages, it is right to take into account the fact that the land has been built upon. Damages arising after action brought can also be given, if they are the natural and necessary consequences of the breach of the covenant.

Hughes, K.C., and Manby, for the defendant.—In the case of damages which arise after action brought a distinction must be made between the case of a breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment and that of a breach of the covenant for title. The true measure of damages is the difference between the value of the property as it purports to be conveyed and its value as it actually passes.

Cave replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 27.—JOYCE, J., after stating the facts, and referring to section 7 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, proceeded as follows: By an unfortunate accident the right of way was omitted to be mentioned in the conveyance to the plaintiff, though no fraud or deceit on the part of the vendor is suggested. Undoubtedly, however, there was a breach of that part of the implied covenant for title whereby the vendor covenants that the estate is to be "freed, and discharged from, or otherwise by the person who so conveys sufficiently indemnified against all such estates, claims, incumbrances, and demands other than those subject to which the conveyance is expressly made." There has been no breach of any other part of the implied covenant, for the plaintiff has not been evicted or disturbed in any way—in fact, the plaintiff has not sustained any actual damage at all. There is no evidence that the Countess of Meath, or any occupier or inmate of her institution, has ever sought to exercise the right of way which was granted to the countess by the deed of 1891. In other words, there has been no actual interference with the enjoyment of what the deed of the 9th of December, 1898, purported to convey to the plaintiff. Such breach as there has been of the part of the covenant for good right to convey, in my opinion, occurred and was complete upon the execution of the conveyance of the 9th of December, 1898. It was single, entire, and perfect in the first instance. From the moment of the delivery of the conveyance the Statute of Limitations in respect of this breach commenced to run: see Preston's edition of Sheppard's Touchstone, p. 170, and especially the judgment of Lord Bramwell in Spoor v. Green, 22 W. R. 547, L. R. 9 Ex. 99, in which he said (see p. 110), "Assuming the breach to be correctly stated and proved, I am of opinion that the Statute of Limitations is a bar to it. It was completed, if it ever existed, at the time the deed was executed. If Jamieson had recovered on it, or released it, no further action on it could have been maintained by him, nor, consequently, by his assignee. It is not what is called a continuing breach, any more than not paying money is a continuing breach. The covenant remains broken indeed, but broken once for all. In the case of a covenant to repair the breach is continuing, because the covenant is broken afresh every day the premises are out of repair, and when an action is brought for breach of such a covenant, the plaintiff does not recover the value of the repairs, because he may recover again if the want of repair still continues. Nothing like that exists as to this covenant. If the words of the breach are looked at, it will be seen that they are, that neither the defendant nor Pearson had good title, but on the contrary (and this is the breach) Smith and Sharp at the time of making the deed, and thence continually, had good title, &c. It is true that the court in Kingdon v. Nottle, 4 M. & Sel. 53, speak of the breach as a continuing breach. Oddly enough the breach thus assigned is express, that the defendant at the time of the indenture was not seised, &c. But the court, having in the previous case of Kingdon v. Nottle, 1 M. & Sel. 355, held that the executor could not maintain an action on the covenant, now held that the real representative could, and it is in reference to this that they use the language I mention."

With this judgment of Lord Bramwell I desire respectfully to express my entire concurrence. The concluding sentence of the passage I have read supplies the key to the true explanation of the judgment of Lord Ellenborough in Kingdon v. Nottle, which has been a good deal discussed in this country, and has been vigorously assailed on the other side of the Atlantic: see Rawle on Covenants for Title, pp. 324, 599 (4th ed.). Fortunately the plaintiff, Mr. Turner, is still living, and we have not to consider who could have sued, or how the case would have stood, in the event of his decease before action brought or pending the action: see Williams on Executors (9th ed.), pp. 599, 712. In my opinion the proper measure of damages in the present case is the difference between the purchase-money or price paid upon the purchase of the 9th of December, 1898, and the value of the premises as conveyed, such difference being caused by the defect in the title to the strip of road in question, or, in other words, to the existence of the Countess of Meath's right of way over that strip—that is to say, the difference between the value of the property as purported to be conveyed and that which the vendor had power to convey: see Gray v. Briscoe, Noy. 142; and Dart V. & P. (6th ed.), pp. 599, 892. In Bunny v. Hopkinson, 27 Beav. 565, 8 W. R. Ch. Dig. 90, there had been eviction and a breach, not only of the covenant for title, but also of the covenant for quiet enjoyment, and the claim made and adjudicated upon in that case was upon the covenants for title generally, including the covenant for quiet enjoyment.

Solicitors, G. R. Fletcher; Crowders, Vizard, & Oldham, for R. H. Mellersh, Godalming.

K. B. Div. (Mathew, J.) — June 12, 13, 17, 1901.

MARITIME INSURANCE CO. (LIMITED) v. STEARNS. (a.)

Insurance (Marine)—Reinsurance—Delay in commencement of voyage—Alteration of risk.

The plaintiffs, by an open cover, insured all shipments of a firm of merchants for twelve months from the 11th of May at premiums varying with the date of sailing and the port of destination. On the 30th of July a declaration of a proposed shipment from the Tyne to Lulea was made under the cover, the premium for which was 12s. 9d. if the ship sailed in August and 15s. in September. The plaintiffs effected a reinsurance with the defendant at

(a.) Reported by F. O. ROBINSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Lloyd's by a slip dated the 2nd of August, the premium payable to the defendant being 6s. 8d. The vessel was named in the slip, which contained also the reinsurance and deviation clauses. The vessel did not sail till the 25th of September, and, with her cargo, was totally lost on the 2nd of October. The plaintiffs' original policy under the cover was issued on the 25th of September, and the reinsurance policy was signed by the defendant on the 5th of October.

Held, that the delay in the commencement of the voyage constituted a material alteration in the risk, and that the defendant was not liable on the reinsurance policy.

Action in the commercial list tried by Mathew, J., without a jury.

The plaintiffs claimed to recover under a policy of reinsurance subscribed by the defendant, who was an underwriter at Lloyd's. The facts were as follows:

On the 11th of May, 1900, the plaintiffs issued an open cover to Pyman & Co. to cover for twelve months all shipments of coal at and from east coast ports to, amongst other ports, Lulea. The premium varied according to the date of shipment, the premium for Lulea from the 1st of April to the 31st of August being 12s. 9d., and from the 1st of September to the 30th of September, 15s.

It was also provided that risks were to be reported provisionally by Pyman & Co. to the plaintiffs' agent as soon as possible after the chartering of each vessel and the insurance was to be closed by them immediately on the receipt of the shipping documents.

On the 28th of July, 1900, Pyman & Co. chartered the steamship Brenttor to carry a cargo of coals from Blyth to Lulea, and on the 30th of July provisional notice of this engagement was given under the cover to the plaintiffs.

On the 1st of August the plaintiffs sent instructions to a firm of insurance brokers in London to effect a reinsurance for £1,500 upon coals by The Brenttor from Blyth to Lulea at 6s. 8d. per cent.

The brokers prepared a slip giving these particulars, and containing also the reinsurance and deviation clauses, which was submitted to an underwriter at Lloyd's, the representative of the defendant. He ascertained that the ship was then on the east coast, and initialled the slip on the 2nd of August.

On the 11th of August, The Brenttor sailed from Blyth to Cronstadt, and proceeded thence to Lulea, but this voyage was not made under Pyman & Co.'s charter-party.

The vessel arrived back at Blyth on the 20th of September, and then proceeded to load a cargo of coal under Pyman & Co.'s charter-party. The bills of lading were signed, and the vessel sailed for Lulea, on the 25th of September, on which day Pyman & Co. gave the plaintiffs closing instructions for the insurance of £2,600 so valued upon their cover.

On the 26th of September the plaintiffs issued to Pyman & Co. two policies for £2,600 upon coals so valued by The Brenttor from Blyth to Lulea at a premium of 15s. These policies contained a clause: "Warranted to sail on or before the 30th of September, or held covered at a rate to be arranged."

On the 2nd of October the plaintiffs instructed their broker to put forward policies for the reinsurance for £1,500 effected on the 2nd of August, and a policy was prepared accordingly. The policy was for £1,270 (the balance of the £1,500 having been underwritten by a company) upon coals "valued as per original policy or policies." The premium was at the rate of 6s. 8d. per cent., and the policy contained the following clauses: "Being a reinsurance policy or policies of the Maritime Insurance Co., and subject to the same terms, conditions, and clauses as the original policy or policies, and to pay as may be paid thereon." "In the event of any deviations or change of voyage it is hereby agreed to hold the assured covered at a premium to be arranged." This policy, which was the one sued upon, was signed by the defendant's representative on the 5th of October, who, at the time of signing, had ascertained the fact that The Brenttor had sailed from Blyth on the 11th of August and had arrived at Lulea on the 29th of August.

On the 2nd of October The Brenttor had gone ashore, and subsequently, with her cargo, became a total loss.

The plaintiffs paid Pyman & Co. as for a total loss upon their policies, and claimed in this action to recover a total loss from the defendant.

The defence to the action was that the policy of the 5th of October was issued by the defendant in fulfilment of the engagement entered into by the slip of the 2nd of August; that it was an implied condition of the contract that the insured voyage should begin within a reasonable time after the 2nd of August; that the delay in sailing until the 25th of September was a material alteration in the risk, and that in consequence the policy had never attached. Alternatively, it was alleged that there had been a concealment upon the 2nd of August of a material fact—viz., that the voyage insured was not to begin or might not begin until the 25th of September.

Joseph Walton, K.C., and Simey, for the plaintiffs.

J. A. Hamilton, K.C., and F. D. MacKinnon, for the defendants.

The following cases were cited: Joyce v. Realm Marine Insurance Co., L. R. 7 Q. B. 580, 20 W. R. C. L. Dig. 86; Charlesworth v. Faber, 5 Com. Cas. 408; De Wolf v. Archangel Maritime Bank and Insurance Co., 22 W. R. 801 L. R. 9 Q. B. 451; Hull v. Cooper, 14 East, 479; Simon Israel & Co. v. Sedgwick, 41 W. R. 163, [1893] 1 Q. B. 303.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 17.—MATHEW, J.—This was an action against an underwriter at Lloyds on a policy of reinsurance. The original insurance was by a cover note issued by the plaintiffs to a firm of Pyman & Co. which was intended to provide for the period of one year for the insurance of shipments of coal and coke from ports on the east coast of Great Britain to ports in Sweden, Norway, Denmark, and/or Baltic ports of Germany. The cover note provided that the risks were to be reported provisionally to the plaintiffs' agent as soon as possible after the chartering of each vessel, and that the definite insurance should be closed immediately on receipt of shipping documents. Annexed to this cover note there was a scale of premiums varying according to the date of sailing and the port of destination. In the case of Lulea the premium was net 12s. 9d. per cent from the 1st of April to the 31st of August, and 15s. per cent. from the 1st of September to the 30th of September. On the 30th of July, 1900, a declaration was made to the plaintiffs under the cover note of a cargo of coals from the Tyne or Blyth to Lulea per steamship Brenttor. On receipt of that declaration the plaintiffs gave instructions to reinsure, and accordingly a slip was prepared and was submitted to the underwriters at Lloyd's. The slip (which was not produced at the trial, having been lost) was in the ordinary form describing the voyage and containing the usual particulars in respect of a specific insurance for £1,500 on a cargo of coal on The Brenttor for the voyage mentioned. The underwriters ascertained that the ship was at the time in the neighbourhood of the Tyne. The premium offered was 6s. 8d., which is the very lowest price for a summer risk. Upon that slip the underwriters were induced to place their initials believing that the ship was then about to load for Lulea. A few days afterwards the ship having loaded a cargo sailed not for Lulea but for Cronstadt, and not on the voyage intended to be insured by this slip. It was a voyage with a cargo of coals for another shipper. She went to Cronstadt, then to Lulea, and arrived back in the Tyne late in September. The cargo intended to be insured by this ship was then loaded, and the ship sailed for Lulea on the 25th of September, the slip being dated the 2nd of August. The ship was lost early in October. Then in the usual way a reinsurance policy was put forward, and demand was made on the underwriters for payment of the loss. In the first instance the underwriters said they were not on the risk, that the vessel had made the voyage which they had reinsured, and that the voyage on which the loss occurred was an altogether different risk. It was pointed out to the underwriters that the first voyage was in the interest of another shipper and was not intended to be covered by the defendant's policy. The underwriters then took up the position that, having signed the slip on the 2nd of August, they did not suppose they were insuring a voyage which would not commence till the 25th of September, by which date the premium would have been much higher. Now, only one witness was called for the plaintiffs, and that was Mr. Sumner, their underwriter. He explained the course of business under this open cover. He said that the plaintiffs had a standing reinsurance of all risks above a certain amount—viz., £1,500, but that in the present case they reinsured the whole amount because in Mr. Sumner's opinion Lulea was a dangerous port and objectionable all the year round. He was further asked about the premium, and what impression he, as an experienced underwriter, thought was likely to be produced on an underwriter at Lloyd's who was asked early in August to sign a slip to Lulea at 6s. 8d. The witness confessed his inability to answer that question, but he said that the underwriters ought to have known as much about it as he did, that he (Mr. Sumner) was rather surprised that the premium of 6s. 8d. was accepted, but that if the underwriters had wanted a higher premium they should have asked for it. When it was pointed out that this insurance was unreasonably delayed from a summer to an autumn or winter risk, Mr. Sumner attempted to show that the slip must have informed the underwriters that the reinsurance was provisional only, because the slip would bear on its face the word "open," which ought to have conveyed the information to the underwriters that the shipment was to be closed at a later date, which might be as late as September. That point wholly failed. I am satisfied that the slip did not contain the word "open"; nor is there any evidence that if the slip had contained the word "open" it would have conveyed to the mind of the underwriter anything different from what was in the slip as it stood, and as it stood it was on the face of it a specific insurance of £1,500 on the cargo of the vessel mentioned. That being the evidence on the part of the plaintiffs, a number of gentlemen from Lloyd's gave evidence on behalf of the defendant. They explained that in September the risk in the case of an insurance such as this was different from that in August, and that the premium was higher in September than it was in August; and in the end it was not seriously contended that their evidence ought not to be acted upon or that this risk was the risk which the underwriter would assume to have been contemplated when the slip was laid before him. It was contended by Mr. Walton that this being a reinsurance on the terms of the original policy, which could only be gathered from the cover note, the underwriters ought to have asked to see the cover note, from which they would have gathered that the cover was one for a year, and that the shipment might take place in any month. It was pointed out that the defendant's premium was 6s. 8d., and that the premiums as provided by the cover note increased as the season went on. In answer to that it was said that the defendant's premium might be proportionately increased, that all the documents must be construed as one document, and that the liability of the defendant was thus established. I cannot yield to this argument. The underwriters were not entitled to see the cover note. The cover note would have shown what the rate of premium was which was being charged by the plaintiffs, and which was nearly double the amount offered to the underwriters; all that the underwriters would look for would be a policy of insurance in the ordinary form covering the risk which they were reinsuring. The policy was in fact issued in the ordinary course after the loss had taken place, and would have given the underwriters no information whatever as to the contents of the cover note. This point, in my opinion, fails the defendant. The next point taken was that the original policy contained a clause providing that in the event of the vessel making any deviation or change of voyage, such deviation or change should be held covered at a premium to be arranged. It was argued that in the circumstances of this case there had been a deviation, and that subject to an arrangement as to premium the defendant was liable. I am clearly of opinion that the clause in question has no such operation. The deviation contemplated by the clause is a deviation in the course of the voyage. What is the meaning of the word "change"? Inasmuch as the port of loading and departure is fixed it means alteration in the port of arrival. In such a case it might be that the clause would apply, but it has no operation here because there was no change of voyage. The voyage was the same, but it was postponed for an unreasonable time. Mr. Walton had to admit that according to his argument the ship need not have sailed till December or January, and that the risk might then be treated as attaching, subject only to a trifling alteration in the amount of the premium. On this point also the plaintiffs' case fails, and judgment will therefore be for the defendant.

Judgment for the defendant.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Field, Roscoe, & Co., for Batesons, Warr, & Wimshurst, Liverpool.

Solicitors for the defendant, Thomas Cooper & Co.

Privy Council.

(From the Court of Appeal for Ontario.)

Nov. 9

BURLAND AND OTHERS v. EARLE AND OTHERS. (a.)

Company—Directors—Resale by director to company—Distribution of profits—Investment of funds—"Staff."

There is no obligation on a joint stock company to distribute, whilst it continues as a going concern, the whole of its profits amongst its shareholders. What sum shall be retained, what carried to the credit of a reserve fund, or appropriated to any other use of the company are matters of internal management, which the shareholders must decide for themselves, subject to the regulations of their articles of association or bye-laws. The investment of the reserve fund may be made in such securities as the directors, subject to the powers of a general meeting, may think fit, provided they do not by speculation or otherwise abuse the authority for this purpose intrusted to them.

Should a director purchase property solely on his own behalf and afterwards sell the same to the company at an increased price, he will not be liable in damages, where it is not shown that he did not make a full disclosure, or that the price was an unfair one.

Cross-appeals from the Court of Appeal for Ontario, which were consolidated.

The facts are very fully set out in their lordships' judgment.

Blake, K.C., and R. C. Smith, K.C., for appellants.

Haldane, K.C., and Chrysler, K.C, for respondents.

The judgment of their lordships (Lords HOBHOUSE, DAVEY, and ROBERTSON, and Sir RICHARD COUCH) was delivered by Lord DAVEY.—The appellants and respondents in these two appeals, which have been consolidated, are alike shareholders in a joint stock company called the British American Bank Note Co. In this judgment the term "appellants" will mean the appellants in the first and principal appeal who are defendants in the action, and "respondents" will mean the respondents in the same appeal and plaintiffs in the action. The company was incorporated by letters patent dated the 16th of June, 1866, under the provisions of an Act (27 & 28 Vict. c. 23) of the old province of Canada. The objects for which the company was formed were "to engrave and print banknotes, debentures, bonds, postage and bill stamps, and bills of exchange, and to carry on all other branches incidental thereto." The capital of the company was originally 100,000 dols. divided into shares of 100 dols. each, but was subsequently increased to 200,000 dols., of which 170,000 dols. only has been issued. By section 1 of the Act provision is made for the incorporation by letters patent of joint stock companies, for the purpose (inter alia) of carrying on any kind of manufacturing business, and by section 5 it was declared that every company incorporated under the authority of the Act should be subject to the general provisions set out in sub-sections 1 to 34 thereof. Sub-section 7 so far as material is as follows: "7. The directors of the company shall have full power in all things to administer the affairs of the company, and may make or cause to be made for the company any description of contract which the company may by law enter into; and may from time to time make bye-laws not contrary to law, to regulate (inter alia) the declaration and payment of dividends, the number of directors, their term of service, the amount of their stock qualification, the appointment, functions, duties and removal of all agents, officers, and servants of the company, the security to be given by them to the company, their remuneration and that (if any) of the directors, the time at which and the place or places where the annual meetings of the company shall be conducted." The Act contains no express provisions as to the formation of a reserve fund, or as to the investment or application of the undivided profits of the company. Shortly after the formation of the company the shareholders made a number of bye-laws, of which the following are material for the purpose of this litigation: "9. The shareholders of the company may, at any general meeting of the company, vote and award to the directors of the company such compensation as they may think proper. 10. At all meetings of the company every shareholder shall be entitled to as many votes as he may own shares in the company, and may vote by proxy; but no shareholder shall be entitled to vote unless he has paid all calls in respect of his shares. 11. The directors shall have the management of the affairs of the company, the appointment, control, and removal of all the officers and employees of the company, and shall, from time to time, regulate their several duties and remuneration. 12. At every annual general meeting the directors shall present a report and abstract of the accounts of the company, a concise statement of their affairs, and a true and succinct statement of their assets and liabilities; and, if they deem fit, shall recommend the declaration of a dividend of so much per cent. on the stock out of the earned profits of the company; and in the interval between the annual general meetings of the company the directors may, at any regular meeting, declare a dividend, whenever an actual cash balance in the hands of the secretary-treasurer from the earned profits of the company shall, in their judgment, warrant the payment of such dividend. 13. The directors may set apart any portion of the profits for a reserve fund, subject to the approval of a general meeting, or to the appropriation of such sum by such meeting to any other purpose. 14. The number of directors shall never be less than three, nor more than six. Every new board of directors, as soon as elected, shall elect a president and a vice-president; they shall also elect the president or vice-president, or any director, to be at the same time manager, and if any of the places of these officers become vacant, they may be filled by the board electing others in their place. 16. At every board meeting three directors shall constitute a quorum. The president shall preside, in his absence the vice-president, and, failing both, any director. The president or chairman, as a director, shall have one vote." The company was formed by the union of two groups, one represented by the appellant George B. Burland (who is hereafter referred to as Burland), and the other by a Mr. Smillie and the respondent Earle. Mr. Smillie was the first president, and Burland and the respondent Earle were first directors. Mr. Smillie retired from the company in 1881, and sold his shares. Burland from time to time increased his holding, and at the date of the commencement of the action he held 1,077 shares. He was also the president and manager of the company. The plaintiffs and respondents hold between them 433 shares. The respondent Earle continued on the board of directors (with two short intervals) until the year 1890, when he resigned. The respondent Mrs. Cunningham sues as the administratrix of James Cunningham, deceased, who was at one time the auditor, and from 1887 until his death in 1892 was a director of the company. The respondent Thomas J. Gillelan was from 1892, and at the commencement of the action, a director of the company. The company's business has been extraordinarily successful. In some years it has paid to its shareholders a dividend exceeding 100 per cent., and the average of the dividends paid during the thirty years of its existence prior to the commencement of the action is said to exceed 40 per cent. per annum. In addition to the dividends so paid the company has accumulated undivided profits to the amount at the commencement of the action of 264,167 dols. This sum was not formally carried to the credit of a rest or reserve fund, but stood to the credit of the profit and loss account of the company. Shortly before the commencement of the action the company lost a valuable contract with the Dominion Government. The result was a serious diminution of the profits of its business. The action was commenced by the respondents on the 7th of December, 1897. By their amended statement of claim they prayed for a declaration that the accumulation by the defendants of a surplus or reserve fund was ultra vires, and for an immediate division and distribution amongst the shareholders of all sums of money accumulated and retained as a reserve fund over and above the authorized capital stock of the company and various other items of relief.

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Their lordships will confine their attention to the points which have been discussed on these appeals. These are (1) the formation of the rest or reserve fund; (2) the investment of it; (3) a claim by the respondents to treat Burland as a trustee of the plant and material of a certain insolvent company, called the Burland Lithographic Co, which he purchased at a sale by auction and resold at an enhanced price to this company, and to make him account to the company accordingly for the profit made by the resale; (4) a question as to certain sums drawn as salaries by Burland and the appellant J. H. Burland. It is an elementary principle of the law relating to joint stock companies that the court will not interfere with the internal management of companies acting within their powers, and in fact has no jurisdiction to do so. Again, it is clear law that in order to redress a wrong done to the company, or to recover moneys or damages alleged to be due to the company, the action should primâ facie be brought by the company itself. These cardinal principles are laid down in the well-known cases of Foss v. Harbottle, 2 Hare, 461, and Mozley v. Alston, 1 Ph. 790, and in numerous later cases which it is unnecessary to cite. But an exception is made to the second rule, where the persons against whom the relief is sought themselves hold and control the majority of the shares in the company, and will not permit an action to be brought in the name of the company. In that case the courts allow the shareholders complaining to bring an action in their own names. This, however, is mere matter of procedure in order to give a remedy for a wrong which would otherwise escape redress, and it is obvious that in such an action the plaintiffs cannot have a larger right to relief than the company itself would have if it were plaintiff, and cannot complain of acts which are valid if done with the approval of the majority of the shareholders or are capable of being confirmed by the majority. The cases in which the minority can maintain such an action are therefore confined to those in which the acts complained of are of a fraudulent character, or beyond the powers of the company. A familiar example is where the majority are endeavouring directly or indirectly to appropriate to themselves money, property, or advantages which belong to the company, or in which the other shareholders are entitled to participate, as was alleged in the case of Menier v. Hooper's Telegraph Works, 22 W. R. 396, L. R. 9 Ch. App. 350. It should be added that no mere informality or irregularity which can be remedied by the majority will entitle the minority to sue if the act, when done regularly, would be within the powers of the company, and the intention of the majority of the shareholders is clear. This may be illustrated by the judgment of Mellish, L.J., in Macdougall v. Gardiner, 28 W. R. 118, 1 Ch. D. 13. There is yet a third principle which is important for the decision of this case. Unless otherwise provided by the regulations of the company a shareholder is not debarred from voting or using his voting power to carry a resolution by the circumstance of his having a particular interest in the subject-matter of the vote. This is shown by the case before this board of the North-West Transportation Co. (Limited) v. Beatty, 36 W. R. 647, 12 App. Cas. 589. In that case the resolution of a general meeting to purchase a vessel at the vendor's price was held to be valid notwithstanding that the vendor himself held the majority of the shares in the company, and the resolution was carried by his votes against the minority who complained. If these elementary considerations are borne in mind the solution of the principal questions arising in these appeals will not present any real difficulty. It was originally maintained by the plaintiffs that article 13 of the bye-laws was beyond the powers of the company or (in other words) that a company formed by letters patent under the Act 27 & 28 Vict. c. 23 was bound to divide all its profits on each occasion and could not by law reserve any portion thereof either to meet contingencies, or for future division, or for any other purpose of a reserve fund. The Chief Justice who tried the action held that the company had no implied power to create a reserve fund, or, "least of all," to invest a reserve fund upon securities; but he thought the question immaterial, as the company had not, in his opinion, set apart or appropriated a reserve fund, and he held that the whole of the sum to the credit of profit and loss ought to be distributed amongst the shareholders. But, in his formal judgment or decree, he allowed the company to deduct and retain "a reasonable sum for contingencies, the amount, in case the parties differed, to be settled by the Chief Justice." In the Court of Appeal it was held that it was within the powers of the company to set apart "a fair and reasonable sum" out of the profits as a reserve fund, and it was the duty of the directors to invest it in a proper manner. But the learned judges seem to have thought that the company had not exercised the power except as to a sum of 44,022 dols., and they held that the balance in question, after deducting that amount, was distributable amongst the shareholders. In their formal judgment the court inserted a saving for the right of the directors and shareholders to appropriate out of future profits "such further reserve fund as the needs of the company may properly require."

Their lordships are not aware of any principle which compels a joint stock company, while a going concern, to divide the whole of its profits amongst its shareholders. Whether the whole or any part should be divided, or what portion should be divided and what portion retained, are entirely questions of internal management which the shareholders must decide for themselves, and the court has no jurisdiction to control or review their decision, or to say what is a "fair" or "reasonable" sum to retain undivided, or what reserve fund may be "properly" required. And it makes no difference whether the undivided balance is retained to the credit of profit and loss account, or carried to the credit of a rest or reserve fund, or appropriated to any other use of the company. These are questions for the shareholders to decide subject to any restrictions or directions contained in the articles of association or bye-laws of the company. If the company may form a reserve fund, or retain a balance of undivided profits, it must (it would seem) have power to invest the moneys so retained. The junior counsel for the respondents contended that the company, in the absence of express power to invest, could employ the money only in its own business. This contention has no support either in principle or authority, and if it were sound the objects for which a reserve fund is needed would in many cases be defeated. The business of this company affords a cogent instance. In order to obtain a Government contract, it may be called upon to make a large deposit or purchase new and expensive plant. It has no power to borrow, and if it had no rest or reserve fund it would have no funds out of which to make the necessary expenditure. Upon what securities, then, may the company invest its undivided profits or reserve fund? It is conceded at the bar that the company is not confined to such investments as trustees are authorized to make. The answer, therefore, can only be that the reserve fund may lawfully be invested on such securities as the directors may select subject to the control of a general meeting. The annual accounts of the company from 1873 onwards are in evidence. They consist of a profit and loss account and a balance-sheet. These accounts were regularly placed before the general meeting. The balance-sheets show under a separate heading the investments from time to time held by the company, consisting for the most part of bank shares and mortgages. It is not for their lordships to judge of the propriety or sufficiency of these investments. It may have been expedient for business reasons for the company to hold an interest in the various Canadian banks. The investments when made reappear in subsequent balance-sheets and seem to have been of a permanent character. There is, therefore, no ground for the suggestion that the directors were using the reserve fund for the purpose of trafficking or speculation in stocks and shares. The investments were wholly or for the most part made in the name of Burland alone. This was, for obvious reasons, unwise and imprudent, but it must have been within the knowledge of the respondent Earle, the late Mr. Cunningham, and the respondent Gillelan, and no complaint or remonstrance seems to have been made until the institution of the present suit. Burland is, of course, bound to account for all the moneys of the company which have come to his hands. Very full accounts are directed by the judgment of the Court of Appeal. There is no appeal from this portion of the judgment, and the accounts and inquiries will be prosecuted accordingly. Mr. Haldane asked for some injunction with respect to these matters, but did not make clear to their lordships the form or extent of the injunction to which he considered that his clients were entitled. The Court of Appeal granted an injunction to restrain the appellants and the company from employing the net profits and earnings of the company already or which may hereafter be earned in the purchase of shares of the capital stocks of banks or other companies, and from using any portion of the net earnings and profits for the purpose of making loans to persons or corporations, and also an injunction to restrain the appellant Burland from investing in his own name, or "personally controlling," any portion of the earnings or moneys of the company, or from dealing with the same otherwise than in accordance with the judgment. For the reasons which have already been given, it is clear that so sweeping an injunction against the directors and the company cannot be maintained. And it is equally clear that the injunction against Burland cannot be maintained. It is not ultra vires for the company, if it think fit to do so, to invest in the name of a sole trustee, however imprudent and undesirable such a course may be. Nor can Burland, as shareholder, manager, and president of the company, be restrained from exercising any personal control over any portion of the company's earnings, in which indeed he has the largest interest. If it appeared that under the guise of investing undivided profits or the reserve fund, the directors were, in fact, embarking the moneys of the company in speculative transactions, or otherwise abusing the powers invested in them for the management of the company's business, different considerations would of course arise. But it does not appear to their lordships that the investments of the surplus profits in bank shares or bonds of trading companies really bears that character or was intended to be or was otherwise than a bonâ fide exercise of the powers of the company and the directors.

The next matter to which the appeal relates is the sale to the company by Burland of the lithographic plant, &c., of the Burland Lithographic Co. It appears that that company had been carrying on business in Montreal, and, having become insolvent, was wound up under the provisions of the Winding-up Act. Burland was interested in the company as a stockholder and a creditor. At the public sale by the liquidator on the 10th of May, 1892, Burland bid for and purchased all the assets of the company in four lots. The price paid by him for Lot 1 was 21,564 dols., and he shortly afterwards sold the property comprised in that lot to the appellant company for 60,000 dols. The property, together with some other plant purchased from another company, was subsequently sold to a company formed for the purpose at an enhanced price, payable in shares which were distributed as a bonus amongst the shareholders of the company. In these circumstances Burland has been ordered to pay to the company the sum of 38,436 dols., being the amount of the profit realized by him on the resale. Both courts have held that the resale was by Burland's advice and influence, and was made without disclosing to the company the price at which he had purchased. It was also held in the Court of Appeal that Burland had bought the property with the intention and for the purpose of reselling it to the company. It appears from the evidence of the respondent Earle, who was then the next largest shareholder to Burland and a director, that he was present at the sale and knew all about the transaction, and from the evidence of Gillelan that he knew what Burland had paid "very shortly after." There was evidence of two witnesses, Reinhold and Monk, that the price to the company was not unfair. But their lordships do not think it necessary to pursue these topics because they are of opinion that the relief prayed by the amended statement of claim and granted in the courts below is altogether misconceived. There is no evidence whatever of any commission or mandate to Burland to purchase on behalf of the company or that he was in any sense a trustee for the company of the purchased property. It may be that he had an intention in his own mind to resell it to the company, but it was an intention which he was at liberty to carry out or abandon at his own will. It may be also that a person of a more refined self-respect and a more generous regard for the company of which he was president would have been disposed to give the company the benefit of his purchase. But their lordships have not to decide questions of that character. The sole question is whether he was under any legal obligation to do so. Let it be assumed that the company or the dissentient shareholders might by appropriate proceedings have at one time obtained a decree for rescission of the contract. But that is not the relief which they ask or could in the circumstances obtain in this suit The case seems to their lordships to be exactly that put by Lord Cairns, L.C., in Erlanger v. New Sombrero Phosphate Co., 27 W. R. 65, 3 App. Cas. 1218. In that case the bill prayed for rescission or, alternatively, for the profit made by Erlanger and his syndicate on the resale to the company. Lord Cairns said: "It may well be that the prevailing idea in their mind was not to retain or work the island but to sell it again at an increase of price, and very possibly to promote or get up a company to purchase the island from them; but they were, as it seems to me, after their purchase was made perfectly free to do with the island whatever they liked, to use it as they liked, and to sell it how and to whom and for what price they liked. The part of the case of the respondents which, as an alternative, sought to make the appellants account for the profit which they made on the resale of the property to the respondents on an allegation that the appellants acted in a fiduciary position at the time they made the contract of the 30th of August, 1871, is not, as I think, capable of being supported, and this, as I understand, was the view of all the judges in the courts below." Reference may also be made to the judgments of Pearson, J., 32 W. R. 853, 26 Ch. D. 221, and Cotton and Fry, L.JJ., in In re Cape Breton Co., 33 W. R. 788, 29 Ch. D. 795; affirmed sub. nom. Cavendish Bentinck v. Fenn, 36 W. R. 641, 12 App. Cas. 652, on the ground that there was no evidence that the director had not disclosed his interest or that the purchase price was above value. To rescind the sale is one thing, but to force on the vendor a contract to sell at another price is a totally different thing.

The question of salaries stands in this wise. Burland's salary as manager was fixed in the year 1879 at 5,000 dols. per annum. This was increased from time to time to 12,000 dols. It was not disputed that he is entitled to draw a salary of that amount, and both courts have so held. But in addition to this fixed salary he has since 1888 drawn a further sum of large amount to which he claims to be entitled under the terms of a resolution of the board of directors of the 24th of April, 1888. The Chief Justice held that the title to this increment as well as to the fixed salary was a question of internal management, and dismissed this part of the respondents' claim. The Court of Appeal thought that the question turned on the true construction of the resolution referred to, and, holding that Burland was not entitled to the increment under the terms of the resolution, ordered him to repay the amount thereof drawn by him since the date of the resolution. The amount which he is directed to repay on this account is 53,000 dols. or thereabouts. Their lordships agree with the Court of Appeal that Burland's right to retain this sum depends on the construction of the resolution, and it was so put by his counsel, Mr. Blake. The resolution is in the following terms: "The manager read letters from Mr. Goodeve and Mr. Ross with reference to their salaries and removal to Ottawa, and, having made explanation of the difficulties arising out of necessity for removal to Ottawa, it was resolved that the manager be requested to make the best arrangement he can with reference to the assistance given the employees, and that an increase of salary be given the staff equal to 5 per cent. on the capital stock held by each of them to meet all difficulties incurred owing to such removal." The first observation which arises on this resolution is that primâ facie the amount of stock held by the members of the "staff" bears no relation to the value of their services. But it was not contended that the resolution was ultra vires, and Mr. Blake was perhaps right in saying that it must be looked at in the concrete, and that the directors who passed it probably knew the holding of the members of the "staff" and how it would work. But what is the effect and construction of the resolution? Who are the "employers"? Who are the "staff"? Are they the same or a different set of people? And is the manager a member of the "staff" within the meaning of the resolution? This question is one of considerable difficulty. Some, but having regard to Burland's position in the company, not much weight is to be given to the company having acted on this construction for ten years or more. On the whole their lordships are not prepared to differ from the Court of Appeal on this point. In the circumstances, they think that Burland cannot have been intended to be included in the "staff." At best the resolution is ambiguous, and, considering Burland's position, it is not unfair to invoke against him the rule of construction contra proferentem. He was the leading man in these transactions, and it rested on him to make it clear that a resolution under which he claims a much larger benefit than anybody else should carry that meaning on the face of it. The same question arises with regard to the appellant J. H. Burland, though in his case the sum in question is not so large. The last-named appellant was, at the date of the resolution, secretary of the company, and there does not seem to be any valid reason why he should not be included in the "staff." There is, however, a further point with regard to J. H. Burland. It appears that he ceased to hold the office of secretary in 1895, when he was appointed vice-president, but, in the resolution appointing him to the latter office, there is no mention of salary. Therefore, say the respondents, he is not entitled as vice-president to any salary or to the increment under the resolution of the 24th of April, 1888. There is evidence that there was a change in the distribution of offices in 1895, and that J. H. Burland continued to do the same class of work as he had done as secretary, that office having been united with that of treasurer. He was allowed by the directors to continue to draw his former salary without any observation until the commencement of the present action, and their lordships think that the inference may fairly be drawn from all the circumstances of the case that he was intended to retain his salary, although there was a shifting of the offices.

The disposal of the costs of the action involves some complication and difficulty of adjustment. By the decree of the Chief Justice, the defendants were ordered to pay to the paintiffs their costs of the action. This decree, however, was superseded by the Court of Appeal. The defendants have now succeeded on all questions relating to the accumulated fund and as to the sale of lithographic plant. On the other hand they have failed as to Burland's salary, and succeeded as to J. H. Burland's salary. It would be almost impossible to do justice by a strict apportionment of the costs of the action up to trial, and to endeavour to do so would lead to certain inconvenience and consequent expense in taxation. On the consideration of all the circumstances, their lordships think that justice will be met by (1) discharging all orders as to costs made in the courts below; (2) directing the plaintiffs to pay to the defendants two-thirds of their costs of the action up to and including the trial; (3) directing the defendants to pay to the plaintiffs two-thirds of the costs of the plaintiffs' appeal to the Court of Appeal, which rightly succeeded as to Burland, but ought to have failed as to J. H. Burland, and the plaintiffs to pay the defendants two-thirds of the costs of the defendants' appeal to the Court of Appeal, which ought to have succeeded except as to the directions for Burland accounting. The order of the Court of Appeal as to subsequent costs will stand. Their lordships will humbly advise his Majesty that the order of the Court of Appeal be varied in the manner above stated as to substance and costs. The respondents in the principal appeal will pay to the appellants two-thirds of their costs of that appeal, and the appellants will pay to the respondents one-third of their costs of the same appeal. The costs of the cross-appeal will be paid by the appellants therein. In the court below the greater part of the plaintiffs' costs up to trial and the costs of the defendants' appeal were ordered to be paid out of the accumulated fund. If the parties agree, their lordships think it would be a proper case in which to make that order as to all the costs in the courts below, and of the principal appeal to this board.

Solicitors for the appellants, Ingle, Holmes, & Sons.

Solicitors for the respondents, Harrison & Powell.

Court of Appeal.

From Chan. Div. (Vaughan Williams, Stirling, and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) — Jan. 23.

In re SCHMARR. (a.)

Practice—Costs—Land compulsorily acquired—Payment into court—Default of vendor—Petition for payment out—Jurisdiction of court—Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), s. 80—Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 44), s 5.

The mere absence of jurisdiction in the court to confer costs under a particular statute does not amount to an express prohibition by the Legislature so as to deprive the court of the discretion as to costs conferred by section 5 of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1890. The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, s. 80, provides that the costs of all proceedings for the payment out of court of the purchase-money of lands compulsorily acquired shall be borne by the promoters of the undertaking, except where the payment into court has been rendered necessary by the wilful default of the vendor.

Held, that the court has jurisdiction to order the costs of a petition for payment out presented by the incumbrancers of a vendor, who had neglected to make a good title, to be paid by the promoters of the undertaking.

This was an appeal by the London County Council against an order of Byrne, J.

Heinrich Schmarr was the owner of certain leasehold houses in Boxiers-court, Tottenham-court-road, which were required by the London County Council for improvements under their statutory powers.

In July, 1899, the council served on Schmarr notice to treat, and the sum of £1,000 was assessed as compensation for the houses. The council paid the money into court under the provisions of section 76 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, on the ground of the wilful neglect of Schmarr to make out a title to the property. There were certain incumbrances on the interest of Schmarr in the property and on the compensation money. One of the incumbrancers presented a petition for payment of the money out of court and other incumbrancers were made respondents.

Byrne, J., made the order for payment out, and directed the council to pay the costs of the petitioner and of the respondents.

The council appealed.

Section 80 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act provides: "In all cases of moneys deposited in the bank under the provisions of this or the special Act, or an Act incorporated therewith, except where such moneys shall have been so deposited by reason of the wilful refusal of any party entitled thereto to receive the same, or to convey or release the lands in respect whereof the same shall be payable, or by reason of the wilful neglect of any party to make out a good title to the land required, it shall be lawful for the court to order the costs of the following matters, including therein all reasonable charges and expenses incident thereto, to be paid by the promoters of the undertaking, (that is to say) the costs of . . . obtaining the proper orders for . . . the payment out of court of the principal of such moneys . . . and of all proceedings relating thereto."

F. Thompson, for the London County Council.

Sheldon, Combe, Edward Ford, and Sills, for the incumbrancers.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—The appellant has not been able to get over the difficulty based upon section 5 of the Judicature Act of 1890. That section says: "Subject to the Supreme Court of Judicature Acts, and the rules of court made thereunder, and to the express provisions of any statute, whether passed before or after the commencement of this Act, the costs of and incident to all proceedings in the Supreme Court, including the administration of estates and trusts, shall be in the discretion of the court or judge, and the court or judge shall have full power to determine by whom and to what extent such costs are to be paid." Now, it was not, and it could not properly have been, argued but that these costs are covered by that section, unless they are excluded by the words "subject to the express provisions of any statute." In order to make anything of that point, it is really necessary to say that the effect of section 80 is that costs in circumstances like those in the present case—that is, circumstances covered by the exception in section 80—shall not be paid. It does not seem to me that that section does anything of the sort. It is true that under section 80 costs were only given in cases other than those which were excepted by that section. Now comes this Act of Parliament which places those excepted costs, in my mind, in the discretion of the court or judge. We should have no power to interfere with the discretion of Byrne, J., here, and even if we had the power I do not see the slightest reason why we should do so.

STIRLING, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. In this case I assume that the purchase-money has been paid into court by the London County Council under clause 76 of the Lands Clauses Act, by reason of the wilful neglect of Schmarr, the owner and vendor of the property represented by the money, to make out a good title to the lands. The question does not here arise as to any costs payable to Schmarr. What has happened is this, that he, having incumbered the purchase money, and, to some extent, also, the land, a petition has been presented by one of those incumbrancers for payment out of the fund which is now in court, and it is said that there is no jurisdiction in the court to make an order with reference to the costs of the petition. Now it was contended that such a case does not fall within section 80 of the Lands Clauses Act, and not having heard the full argument to the contrary, as at present advised I agree with that argument. Section 80 applies to all cases of moneys deposited in the bank where such moneys have been so deposited, amongst other reasons, by reason of the wilful neglect of any party to make a good title to the land acquired, which is this case. I therefore assume that the court has no jurisdiction under section 80 to make an order dealing with the costs of this petition. But then by the Judicature Act of 1890, s. 5, it is enacted that "subject to the Supreme Court of Judicature Acts and the rules of court made thereunder, and to the express provisions of any statute, whether passed before or after the commencement of this Act, the costs of and incident to all proceedings in the Supreme Court, including the administration of estates and trusts, shall be in the discretion of the court or judge," and it has been held in In re Fisher, 42 W. R. 241, [1894] 1 Ch. 450, that this section applies to the costs of a petition presented under any of those old statutes which contain no provision as to payment of costs, in which case it has been held by a long series of decisions in the Court of Chancery that costs could not be awarded by the court to the petitioners. Now in order to escape from that decision it is said that there is an express provision in the Lands Clauses Act which deals with this matter, and that section 80, upon the true construction of it, not only excepts from the operation of that section the case which has occurred here but prohibits the court from giving costs in a case like this. I fail to see that that is so. It seems to me that all that was done by section 80 was to abstain from conferring any jurisdiction in a case of this sort, but it does not amount to a legislative prohibition that in no circumstances are any costs whatever to be given. As regards this particular case it does seem to me that it would occasion very great hardship indeed if the court had no jurisdiction to deal with the costs of such a petition as this, because it is obvious—and this was the view taken by the learned judge in the court below, as I understand—that owing to the state of the title to the purchase-money it would have been necessary for the protection of the London County Council that those funds should come into court. Now although the vendor has been in default, yet there has been no default on the part of any of the incumbrancers that we have heard of. The money cannot be got out of court without the presentation of a petition, and it does seem to me that if the court had no jurisdiction to make an order with respect to such a case as this there was a defect in the authority of the court. I think that section 5 of the Judicature Act, 1890, was meant to apply a remedy to such a defect, and that this case falls entirely within the scope of it, and therefore that Byrne, J., had jurisdiction to make this order with reference to the costs, and we have no power to disturb his order.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

COZENS-HARDY, L.J.—I agree. I adopt for the present purpose—although it would not be right finally to decide that—Mr. Thompson's argument that section 80 has no application to this case. Section 80, of course, deals with much more than the costs of the proceedings in court, it includes the costs of the conveyance, the costs of the purchase, and contains a number of other things beyond and outside altogether the costs of the proceedings in court. I assume that he is right, and that the London County Council is not liable to pay anything under and by virtue of section 80, but still, is there or is there not any express provision which prevents the court from possessing the discretion which is in terms given to it by section 5 of the Act of 1890. I think not. I think that the language in the Court of Appeal in In re Fisher clearly shows that in a case like this, which is outside section 80 ex hypothesi, the court, although it could not give the costs of the reinvestment in land, has full power to give the costs of any proceedings in court, and the only order as to costs which Byrne, J., has made is as to the costs of the proceedings in court, and he does not profess to have given any other. I think even if we had power to interfere with his discretion I should not feel disposed to do it.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, W. A. Blaxland; Stileman & Neale; G. Coote; Walter Thompson.

From P. D. & A. Div. (Collins, M.R., and Stirling and Mathew, L.JJ.) — Dec. 16.

THE WINKFIELD (a.)

Bailment—Loss of chattel owing to negligence of stranger—Action by bailee—Bailee not liable to bailor.

The bailee of a chattel, who is under no liability in respect thereof to the bailor, can maintain an action against a stranger by whose negligence the chattel has been lost or injured, and he is entitled to recover the full value of the chattel in the one case, or the whole amount of the damage in the other.

The bailee, having recovered the full amount of the damages, must account to the bailor for his proportion thereof; and the wrongdoer, having paid those damages to the bailee, has an answer to any action by the bailor.

Claridge v. South Staffordshire Tramway Co., [1892] 1 Q. B. 422, 40 W. R. Dig. 11, overruled.

Appeal from the judgment of the President of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division (Sir Francis Jeune).

The claim was by the Postmaster-General to recover the value of registered letters and parcels, which were lost while being carried on the steamship Mexican from South Africa to England. While on the voyage The Mexican came into collision with the steamship Winkfield, and was sunk, and her mails were lost. The owners of The Winkfield admitted that their vessel was partly to blame for the collision, and obtained a decree limiting their liability on payment into court of £32,514 17s. 10d. The Postmaster-General claimed on the fund on behalf of himself and the Postmasters-General of Cape Colony and Natal for the value of registered letters and parcels carried on board The Mexican. This claim, so far as it represented claims made by the owners of the registered letters and parcels, was allowed by the registrar, but it was rejected so far as no such claim by the owners had been made.

Sir Francis Jeune, following the decision in Claridge v. South Staffordshire Tramway Co., [1892] 1 Q. B. 422, 40 W. R. Dig. 11, held that the Postmaster-General could not recover on the ground that he, as bailee, was not liable over to his bailors.

The Postmaster-General appealed.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-Law.

Sir Robert Finlay, A.G., and R. B. D. Acland, for the Postmaster-General.—In Claridge v. South Staffordshire Tramway Co., it was held that the bailee of a chattel, being under no liability to his bailor for injury to the chattel bailed, could not recover against the person by whose negligence the chattel was injured. That decision was wrong, and ought to be overruled. In Meux v. Great Eastern Railway Co., 43 W. R. 680, [1895] 2 Q. B. 387, A. L. Smith, L.J., said that that case might at some future time require further consideration. The present case is really an appeal against the decision in Claridge's case. As against a wrongdoer the person in possession of a chattel has a right to recover either the chattel itself or damages for its loss. A bailee in possession owes a duty to the bailor to preserve the chattel bailed, and it is his duty to take proceedings to recover it. Why should he not also have an action to recover the value of the chattel lost or damages for injury to it? Legal proceedings are merely a mode of regaining possession of the chattel or recovering its value. The doctrine that a bailee can only recover if he is chargeable over to his bailor is unsound in principle. As between bailor and bailee the party suing can only recover the value of his interest. As against a stranger the bailee can recover the chattel or its full value, possession giving him the right to sue. This rule avoids multiplicity of actions. Claridge's case was founded upon a misconception of what was said in Heydon and Smith's case, 13 Rep. 67, at p. 69. The words used there, "because that he is chargeable over," do not mean that the bailee can only sue when he is liable over to his bailor. They mean that the bailee was the only person who could sue, and that when he recovered he was liable to account to the bailor. The wrongdoer, having paid full damages, was not liable to the bailor.

They referred to Holmes' Lectures on the Common Law, pp. 166, 168, 178, 180; Pollock and Maitland's History of the Common Law, vol. 2, pp. 169. 170; Sutton v. Buck, 2 Taunt. 302; Martini v. Coles, 1 M. & S. 140; Lyle v. Barker, 5 Binn. U. S. Rep. 457; Rooth v. Wilson, 1 B. & Ald. 59; Burton v. Hughes, 2 Bing. 173; Moore v. Robinson 2 B. & Ad. 817; Nicolls v. Bastard, 2 Cr. M. & R. 659; White v. Webb, 15 Conn. Rep. 302; Brierly v. Kendall, 17 Q. B. 937; Jeffries v. Great Western Railway Co., 4 W. R. 201, 5 E. & B. 802; Waters v. Monarch Life Assurance Co., 4 W. R. 245, 5 E. & B. 870; London and North-Western Railway Co. v. Glyn, 7 W. R. 238, 1 E. & E. 652; Turner v. Hardcastle, 11 C. B. N. S. 683, 10 W. R. C. L. Dig. 8; Swire v. Leach, 13 W. R. 385, 18 C. B. N. S. 479.

Pickford, K.C., and Lauriston Batten, for other claimants on the fund.—The Postmaster was not in possession of the letters and parcels, and therefore cannot claim. They were in the possession of the owners of The Mexican at the time of the loss. The Postmaster-General was merely a forwarding agent. He cannot therefore claim. Secondly, the liability of the bailee to the bailor is the test of the right of the bailee to recover against a wrongdoer. There are many statements in the Year Books which put the foundation of the right of action on the liability of the bailee to account to the bailor for the chattel bailed—that is, to return the chattel to the bailor: see 11 Hen. 4, pp. 23, 24, pl. 46; 9 Edw. 4, p. 34, pl. 9; 3 Hen. 7, p. 4, pl. 16; 20 Hen. 7, p. 1, pl. 1; 21 Hen. 7, p. 15, pl. 23; see also per Lord Ellenborough in Rooth v. Wilson. In an action of trespass the measure of damages is the bailee's loss. It might be that in cases of conversion, where the wrongdoer has taken the chattel out of the possession of the bailee, the latter may recover the full value. There are dicta in the cases to that effect. That does not apply to the case of an injury to a chattel in the possession of the bailee. In such a case there is no authority to show that a bailee can recover damages for a loss which he has not sustained. None of the cases cited are authorities to that effect. Payment of the full amount of the damages to the bailee would be no answer to an action by the bailor against the wrongdoer. The wrongdoer may set up the jus tertii, or give in evidence the interest of the bailor, in mitigation of damages: Dockwray v. Dickenson, Skin. 640; Addison v. Overend, 6 T. R. 766; Sedgworth v. Overend, 7 T. R. 279; Mayne on Damages (5th ed.), p. 395. The decision in Claridge's case was therefore right.

Sir Robert Finlay, A.G., replied.

Scrutton, K.C., for the owners of The Mexican and C. Head, for the owners of The Winkfield, took no part in the argument.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 16.—COLLINS, M.R., read the following judgment: This is an appeal from the order of Sir Francis Jeune dismissing a motion made on behalf of the Postmaster-General in the case of The Winkfield. The question arises out of a collision which occurred on the 5th of April, 1900, between the steamship Mexican and the steamship Winkfield, and which resulted in the loss of the former with a portion of the mails which she was carrying at the time. The owners of The Winkfield under a decree limiting liability to £32,514 17s. 10d. paid that amount into court, and the claim in question was one by the Postmaster-General on behalf of himself and the Postmasters-General of Cape Colony and Natal to recover out of that sum the value of letters, parcels, &c., in his custody as bailee and lost on board The Mexican. The case was dealt with by all parties in the court below as a claim by a bailee who was under no liability to his bailor for the loss in question, as to which it was admitted that the authority of Claridge v. South Staffordshire Tramway Co. was conclusive, and the President accordingly, without argument and in deference to that authority, dismissed the claim. The Postmaster-General now appeals.

The question for decision, therefore, is whether Claridge's case was well decided. I emphasize this because it disposes of a point which was faintly suggested by the respondents, and which, if good, would distinguish Claridge's case—namely, that the applicant was not himself in actual occupation of the things bailed at the time of the loss. This point was not taken below, and having regard to the course followed by all parties on the hearing of the motion, I think it is not open to the respondents to make it now, and I therefore deal with the case upon the footing upon which it was dealt on the motion—namely, that it is covered by Claridge's case. I assume, therefore, that the subject-matter of the bailment was in the custody of the Postmaster-General as bailee at the time of the accident. For the reasons which I am about to state I am of opinion that Claridge's case was wrongly decided, and that the law is that in an action against a stranger for loss of goods caused by his negligence, the bailee in possession can recover the value of the goods, although he would have had a good answer to an action by the bailor for damages for the loss of the thing bailed. It seems to me that the position, that possession is good against a wrongdoer and that the latter cannot set up the jus tertii unless he claims under it, is well established in our law, and really concludes this case against the respondents. As I shall show presently, a long series of authorities establishes this in actions of trover and trespass at the suit of a possessor. And the principle being the same, it follows that he can equally recover the whole value of the goods in an action on the case for their loss through the tortious conduct of the defendant. I think it involves this also, that the wrongdoer who is not defending under the title of the bailor is quite unconcerned with what the rights are between the bailor and bailee, and must treat the possessor as the owner of the goods for all purposes quite irrespective of the rights and obligations as between him and the bailor. I think this position is well established in our law, although it may be that reasons for its existence have been given in some of the cases which are not quite satisfactory. I think also that the obligation of the bailee to the bailor to account for what he has received in respect of the destruction or conversion of the thing bailed has been admitted so often in decided cases that it cannot now be questioned; and, further, I think it can be shown that the right of the bailee to recover cannot be rested on the ground suggested in some of the cases—namely, that he was liable over to the bailor for the loss of the goods converted or destroyed. It cannot be denied that since the case of Armory v. Delamirie, 1 Stra. 504, not to mention earlier cases from the Year Books onward, a mere finder may recover against a wrongdoer the full value of the thing converted. That decision involves the principle that as between possessor and wrongdoer the presumption of law is, in the words of Lord Campbell in Jeffries v. Great Western Railway Co., 5 E. & B. 802, at p. 806, "that the person who has possession has the property." In the same case he says (at p. 805): "I am of opinion that the law is that a person possessed of goods as his property has a good title as against every stranger, and that one who takes them from him, having no title in himself, is a wrongdoer, and cannot defend himself by showing that there was title in some third person, for against a wrongdoer possession is a title. The law is so stated by the very learned annotator in his note to Wilbraham v. Snow, 2 Wms. Saund. 87." Therefore it is not open to the defendant, being a wrongdoer, to inquire into the nature of limitation of the possessor's right, and unless it is competent for him to do so the question of the possessor's relations to, or liability towards, the true owner cannot come into the discussion at all; and therefore, as between those two parties full damages have to be paid without any further inquiry. The extent of the liability of the finder to the true owner not being relevant to the discussion between him and the wrongdoer, the facts which would ascertain it would not have been admissible in evidence, and therefore the right of the finder to recover full damages cannot be made to depend upon the extent of his liability over to the true owner. To hold otherwise would, it seems to me, be in effect to permit a wrongdoer to set up a jus tertii under which he cannot claim. But, if this be the fact in the case of a finder, why should it not be equally the fact in the case of a bailee? Why, as against a wrongdoer, should the nature of the plaintiff's interest in the thing converted be any more relevant to the inquiry, and therefore admissible in evidence, than in the case of a finder? It seems to me that neither in one case nor the other ought it to be competent for the defendant to go into evidence on that matter. I think this view is borne out by authority; for instance, in Burton v. Hughes, 2 Bing. 173, the plaintiff, who had borrowed furniture from Kitchen, and was therefore bailee, was held to be entitled to sue in trover wrongdoers who had seized it without giving in evidence the written agreement under which he held it. The point made for the defendant was that "the qualified interest having been obtained under a written agreement could not be proved except by the production of that agreement duly stamped." The argument on the other side was that "the existence of some kind of interest having been established the precise nature of it or the terms upon which it was acquired were immaterial to the support of this action." Best, C.J., in delivering judgment, says: "If this had been a case between Kitchen and the plaintiff the agreement ought to have been produced, because that alone could decide the respective rights of those two parties; but it appears that Kitchen was to supply the plaintiff with furniture, and the question is whether, after he had obtained it, he had a sufficient interest to maintain this action. The case which has been referred to (Sutton v. Buck) confirms what I had esteemed to be the law upon the subject—namely, that a simple bailee has a sufficient interest to sue in trover." By holding, therefore, that the agreement defining the conditions of the plaintiff's interest was immaterial the court in effect decided that the right of the bailee in possession to sue could not depend upon the fact or extent of his liability over to the bailor, since the plaintiff was allowed to keep his verdict in trover, the agreement defining his interest and liability being excluded from the discussion. In Sutton v. Buck, on the authority of which this case was decided, it was held that possession under a general bailment is sufficient title for the plaintiff in trover. The plaintiff had taken possession of a stranded ship under a transfer void for non-compliance with the Register Acts, and he sued the defendant in trover for portions of the timber, wood, and materials of which the defendant had wrongfully taken possession. Sir James Mansfield, C.J., had non-suited the plaintiff, on the ground that the transfer was defective without registration. On motion the non-suit was set aside, Sir James Mansfield being a member of the court, and a new trial ordered on the ground that the plaintiff had sufficient possession to maintain the action against the wrongdoer. It is true that Chambre, J., reserved his opinion as to the measure of damages, but on the new trial the plaintiff recovered a verdict apparently for the full value of the things converted, and on further motion for a new trial the only point argued was that the defendant was justified as lord of the manor in doing what he did, a contention which was rejected by the court. In Swire v. Leach, a pawnbroker, whose landlord had wrongfully taken in distress pledges in the custody of the pawnbroker, was held entitled to recover in an action against the landlord for conversion the full value of the pledges. This case was decided by a strong court, consisting of Erle, C.J., and Williams and Keating, JJ., and has never, so far as I know, been questioned since. The duty of the bailee to account to the bailor was recognized as well established: see also Turner v. Hardcastle, a considered judgment of the Court of Common Pleas, which included Willes, J., who had not been a party to Swire v. Leach, and where the bailee's right to recover full damages and his obligation to account to the bailor is again affirmed. The ground of the decision in Claridge's case was that the plaintiff in that case, being under no liability to his bailor, could recover no damages, and though for the reasons I have already given I think this position is untenable, it is necessary to follow it out a little further.

There is no doubt that the reason given in Heydon and Smith's case, 13 Rep., at p. 69—and itself drawn from the Year Books—has been repeated in many subsequent cases. The words are these: "Clearly, the bailee, or he who hath a special property, shall have a general action of trespass against a stranger, and shall recover all in damages because that he is chargeable over." It is now established that the bailee is accountable, as stated in the passage cited and repeated in many subsequent cases. But whether the obligation to account was a condition of his right to sue, or only an incident arising upon his recovery of damages, is a very different question, though it was easy to confound one view with the other. Holmes, in his admirable Lectures on the Common Law, in the chapter devoted to bailments, traces the origin of the bailee's right to sue and recover the whole value of chattels converted, and arrives at the clear conclusion that the bailee's obligation to account arose from the fact that he was originally the only person who could sue, though afterwards by an extension, not perhaps quite logical, the right to sue was conceded to the bailor also. He says at p. 167: "We read in Beaumanoir (A.D. 1283) that, if a hired thing is stolen, the suit belongs to the bailee, because he is answerable to the person from whom he hired. At first the bailee was answerable to the owner because he was the only person who could sue; now it was said he could sue because he was answerable to the owner." And again at p. 170: "The inverted explanation of Beaumanoir will be remembered, that the bailee could sue because he was answerable over, in place of the original rule that he was answerable over so strictly because only he could sue." This inversion, as he points out, is traceable through the Year Books, and has survived into modern times, though, as he shows, it has not been acted upon. Pollock and Maitland's History of English Law, vol. 2, p. 170, puts the position thus: "Perhaps we come nearest to historical truth if we say that between the two old rules there was no logical priority. The bailee had the action because he was liable, and was liable because he had the action." It may be that in early times the obligation of the bailee to the bailor was absolute—that is to say, he was an insurer. But long after the decision of Coggs v. Bernard, 2 Ld. Raym. 909, which classified the obligations of bailees, the bailee has, nevertheless, been allowed to recover full damages against a wrongdoer, where the facts would have afforded a complete answer for him against his bailor. The cases above cited are instances of this. In each of them the bailee would have had a good answer to an action by his bailor; for in none of them was it suggested that the act of the wrongdoer was traceable to negligence on the part of the bailee. I think, therefore, that the statement drawn, as I have said, from the Year Books may be explained, as Holmes, explains it, but whether that be the true view of it or not, it is clear that it has not been treated as law in our courts. Upon this, before the decision in Claridge's case, there was a strong body of opinion in text-books, English and American, in favour of the bailee's unqualified right to sue the wrongdoer: see Mayne on Damages (4th ed.), p. 381, and cases there cited; Sedgwick on Damages (7th ed.), vol. 1, p. 61, note (a); Story on Bailments (9th ed.), s. 352; Kent's Commentaries (12th ed.), vol. 2, p. 568, note (e); Pollock on Torts (6th ed.), pp. 354, 355; Addison on Torts (5th ed.), p. 482; and as I have already pointed out, Williams, J., the editor of Williams' Saunders, was a party to the decision of Swire v. Leach. The bailee's right to recover has been affirmed in several American cases entirely without reference to the extent of the bailee's liability to the bailor for the tort, though his obligation to account is admitted: see them referred to in the passages cited, and in particular see Ullman v. Barnard, 73 Mass. Rep. 554; Parish v. Wheeler, 22 New York App. 494; and White v. Webb. The case of Rooth v. Wilson, is a clear authority that the right of the bailee in possession to recover against a wrong-doer is the same in an action on the case as in an action of trover, if indeed authority were required for what seems obvious in point of principle. There the gratuitous bailee of a horse was held entitled to recover the full value of the horse in an action on the case against a defendant by whose negligence the horse fell and was killed. The case was decided by Lord Ellenborough, C.J., and Bayley, Abbott, and Holroyd, JJ. The three latter seem to me to put it wholly on the ground that the plaintiff was in possession and the defendant a wrongdoer. Abbott, J., says shortly: "I think that the same possession which would enable the plaintiff to maintain trespass would enable him to maintain this action"; and Bayley, J., points out that case is a possessory action. But Lord Ellenborough undoubtedly rests his judgment on the view that the plaintiff would himself have been responsible in damages to his bailor to a commensurate amount. This, no doubt was his personal view, but it was not the decision of the court, and, as I have pointed out, it has certainly not been acted upon in subsequent cases. Therefore, as I said at the outset, and as I think I have now shown by authority, the root principle of the whole discussion is that, as against a wrongdoer, possession is title. The chattel that has been converted or damaged is deemed to be the chattel of the possessor and of no other, and therefore its loss or deterioration is his loss, and to him, if he demands it, it must be recouped. His obligation to account to the bailor is really not ad rem in the discussion. It only comes in after he has carried his legal position to its logical consequence against a wrongdoer, and serves to soothe a mind disconcerted by the notion that a person who is not himself the complete owner should be entitled to receive back the full value of the chattel converted or destroyed. There is no inconsistency between the two positions; the one is the complement of the other. As between bailee and stranger possession gives title—that is, not a limited interest, but absolute and complete ownership, and he is entitled to receive back a complete equivalent for the whole loss or deterioration of the thing itself. As between bailor and bailee the real interests of each must be inquired into, and, as the bailee has to account for the thing bailed, so he must account for that which has become its equivalent and now represents it. What he has received above his own interest he has received to the use of his bailor. The wrongdoer, having once paid full damages to the bailee, has an answer to any action by the bailor: see Com. Dig., Trespass B 4, citing 2 Rolle's Abr. 551, l. 31, 569, l. 22; Story on Bailments (9th ed.), s. 352, and the numerous authorities there cited. The liability of the bailee to account is also well established—see the passage from Lord Coke, and the cases cited in the earlier part of this judgment—and therefore it seems to me that there is no such preponderance of convenience in favour of limiting the right of the bailee as to make it desirable, much less obligatory, upon us to modify the law as it rested upon the authorities antecedent to Claridge's case. I am aware that in two able text-books—Beven's Negligence in Law (2nd ed.), pp. 885-887, and Clerk & Lindsell on Torts (2nd ed.), p. 237—the decision in Claridge's case is approved, though it is there pointed out that the authorities bearing the other way were not fully considered. The reasons, however, which they give for their opinions seem to be largely based upon the supposed inconvenience of the opposite view; nor are the arguments by which they distinguish the position of bailees from that of other possessors to my mind satisfactory. Claridge's case was treated as open to question by the late Master of the Rolls in Meux v. Great Eastern Railway Co., and, with the greatest deference to the eminent judges who decided it, it seems to me that it cannot be supported. It seems to have been argued before them upon very scanty materials. Before us the whole subject has been elaborately discussed, and all, or nearly all, the authorities brought before us in historical sequence. I think the appeal must be allowed.

STIRLING and MATHEW, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Sir Robert Hunter; Ballantyne & Son; Botterell & Roche; Thomas Cooper & Co.

From Chan. Div. (Vaughan Williams, Romer, and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) — Dec. 4.

In re GRIFFIN.
GRIFFIN v. GRIFFIN. (a.)

Friendly society—Policy—Assignment—Policy under £50—Nomination—Friendly Societies Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 60), s. 15 (3).

There is nothing in the Friendly Societies Act, 1875, to prevent a policy issued by a society constituted under the Friendly Societies Acts, 1875 to 1895, having the ordinary incidents of property, including assignability; and a legal assignment of such a policy can be made otherwise than by nominating some person to receive the money payable under it as provided by the Act.

Where, therefore, no nomination has been made under the Act, the assignee of a deceased member is entitled to receive the policy moneys as against the legal personal representative.

In re Redman, ante p. 19, [1901] 2 Ch. 471, and Caddick v. Highton, 47 W. R. 668, overruled.

This was an appeal from a decision of Joyce, J.

The question raised is one of great importance to friendly societies and their members—viz., whether a policy of assurance effected by a member on his own life is legally assignable by him in any other manner than by a "nomination," under the provisions of the Friendly Societies Acts.

Joyce, J., without expressing any opinion of his own, but following the previous decision of Kekewich, J., in In re Redman. ante p. 19, [1901] 2 Ch. 471, in which that learned judge followed a prior decision of Phillimore, J., in Caddick v. Highton, 47 W. R. 668, held that such a policy is not assignable otherwise than by means of nomination.

In the present case a deceased member of the Royal Liver Friendly Society, which is governed by the Friendly Societies Act of 1875, had in his lifetime assigned his policy, which insured the sum of £30, to the plaintiff, who claimed payment of the amount, which was also claimed by the widow of the deceased, who is his administratrix. The deceased had not made any "nomination" under the Act.

The plaintiff applied for the appointment of a receiver of the policy money.

Joyce, J., refused the application, on the ground already stated.

The plaintiff appealed.

By section 15 of the Friendly Societies Act, 1875: "(3) A member of a society (other than a benevolent society or working men's club), not being under the age of sixteen years, may, by writing under his hand delivered at or sent to the registered office of the society, nominate any person, not being an officer or servant of the society, to whom any moneys payable by the society on the death of such member, not exceeding £50, shall be paid at his decease, and may from time to time revoke or vary such nomination by a writing under his hand similarly delivered or sent; and on receiving satisfactory proof of the death of a nominator, the society shall pay to the nominee the amount due to the deceased member, not exceeding the sum aforesaid." "(4) If any member of a society, entitled from the funds thereof to a sum not exceeding £50, dies intestate and without having made any nomination under this Act which remains unrevoked at his death, such sum shall be payable, without letters of administration, to the person who appears to a majority of the trustees, upon such evidence as they may deem satisfactory, to be entitled by law to receive the same."

P. O. Lawrence, K.C., and Austen Cartmell, for the appellant.—Primâ facie this policy is part of the property of the deceased member. It, therefore, is subject to the ordinary incidents of property, such as assignability, and there is nothing either express or implied either in the statute or in the rules of the society to deprive it of those incidents.

They referred to In re Redman; Caddick v. Highton; Bennett v. Slater. 47 W. R. 82, [1899] 1 Q. B. 45; and In re Turcan, 37 W. R. 70, 40 Ch. D. 5.

Hughes, K.C., and Gover, for the administratrix.—This policy is not property in the fullest sense of the term, and it appears from the statute that the Legislature intended that it should only be capable of being dealt with in a particular way.

Younger, K.C., and Romer, for the friendly society.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—In this case the question really raised is whether a policy issued by a friendly society governed by the Act of 1875 is or is not assignable. I have come to the conclusion that it is assignable. Taking the case of a policy for a sum of money which is payable to a member who takes out the policy, or his personal representative, by virtue of the contract entered into, no one will deny for a moment that such a sum of money, primâ facie, is part of the property of the member, or the estate of the deceased member as the case may be. So we have to find something in the Act of 1875, or in the rules of the society which prevents this particular property having this ordinary incident of property.

Now it is admitted on both sides that there is nothing whatsoever express either in the Act of Parliament or the rules which prevents the moneys payable under this policy, or the policy itself, from being assignable. If, therefore, the policy is not assignable it must be from some implication arising under the statute. I do not propose to go through all the legislation upon the subject of friendly societies prior to 1875, or to deal with the arguments which were put forward, based upon the presence in these Acts of Parliament of words and phrases which seem to recognize the rights of persons, not members of the society, claiming through members of the society. I think it is more satisfactory to decide this case upon the interpretation of the Act of 1875. Really there has been brought forward on this case but one section of the Act of 1875 from which it could be argued that the statute takes away by implication the power to assign a policy issued by the society, and that is section 15, sub-section 3. [His lordship read the sub-section.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

and continued:] It is said we ought to draw the inference from this provision that the statute intended that the power of nomination thus given by sub-section 3 of section 15 should be the only mode of alienation of moneys under a policy issued by a friendly society governed by this statute. I think we are not bound to draw any such conclusion and that we ought not to draw it. I would point out in the first place that apparently sub-section 3 is a section which is intended not to give so much a power of alienation, but to give a testamentary power. It is a sub-section which enables the nominator to nominate a person to whom the moneys arising under the policy shall be paid at his decease. That power is by the express terms of the Act of Parliament a revocable power, but it is revocable only in a way provided by the statute—that is to say, by delivering a particular notice to the society. But one looks to see why it is suggested that this sub-section 3 of section 15 takes away the power of alienation. It is said that there is an express provision in this Act of Parliament that the money shall be paid in accordance with this nomination unless the nomination has been revoked; and then it is said that if that is so there might be outside and beside the nomination an assignment, possibly an assignment for value, and that having regard to the imperative words of this sub-section the money shall be paid in accordance with the nomination unless it it is revoked: this might put the nominator in a position whereby he could revoke a previous assignment for value, or could defeat the claim of such an assignee. I do not know how that might be. It is said, I know, it is not likely that the Legislature meant to put the nominator or his assignee for value in such a position, and that the way to avoid that is to read sub-section 3 as providing one express mode of alienation, and excluding all others; but as I have already said, this question as to what might be the position of an assignee for value as against a nominee does not really arise in this case and we have not got to decide it. As far as my decision is concerned I must be taken to decide that, whether or not that difficulty, or that hardship, or that strange position would arise, I cannot find sufficient in the Act of Parliament to make me say that by necessary implication the ordinary incident of property is taken away. I think that the policy of insurance and the moneys payable under it are assignable. In the particular case we have before us, the policy was only a £30 policy and there was no nomination; and for that reason I decline to go into the question of what might be the state of things if the policy had been for a larger sum than £50, and there had been a nomination as to £50 and a surplus beyond. We have not got to decide that question. All we have to decide here to-day is whether or not in the case of a policy for £30, there being no nomination, an assignment executed by the member of the society, who took out the policy in his lifetime, is effective to transfer to the assign the right to this £30, or whether this becomes part of his general estate; and I decide it is effective to transfer to the assign that policy and the moneys under it.

ROMER, L.J.—I agree. As my lord has pointed out, the policy moneys in question in this application are primâ facie assignable. To make them non-assignable you must find some legislative enactment to that effect either express or arising by necessary implication. I can only say, after considering the various Acts to which our attention has been called, that I can find no such legislative enactment. The case is really governed by the Act of 1875, and far from finding any express enactment in that Act prohibiting assignment, there are expressions used in that Act and provisions in it which seem to me to militate against the idea that assignment in this case was not recognized. There is, for example, the definition in section 4 of the Act. That section defines persons claiming through a member, and it defines the expression in this way; it says it includes the heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns of a member, and also his nominees where nomination is allowed. Putting together in that definition both the assigns and the nominees seems to my mind significant. And you find that section followed up by several important sections where the expression I have referred to is used. For example, section 21, sub-section 2, which gives a right of suing the friendly society by a member or person claiming through a member. In legal proceedings, it says, which may be brought under this Act by a member or person claiming through a member the society may be sued in a particular way. Now the chief section relied on by the respondents in this case as supporting their contention is section 15. To my mind that section may one of these days give rise to questions of some difficulty which fortunately do not arise on this appeal, and I should like to keep my mind free to decide those questions when they come before us. I mean such as might arise when you find persons nominated under that section, by a member to receive moneys payable on his death, when difficulties may arise as between those nominees and the express assigns of the person who effected the policy. Also questions of this kind, as to whether as between the member and his nominee there might not be provisions enforceable on behalf of some persons which had made the nominee a trustee. I am not indicating my opin on one way or the other. I only say that these questions and similar questions may arise and may have to be considered hereafter. In the case before us there are no nominations, the member has not nominated any person to receive these policy moneys, so that the question is this: Is there anything in section 15 which would tend to show—or show by necessary implication, for there is nothing expressed—that in a case where there are no nominees under the section an assign for value or an assign from a member in his lifetime should have no legal position and could not have his rights in any way recognized or enforced. I am bound to say I cannot find in this section any such necessary implication. It appears to me that even giving the fullest rights to the nominees it does not follow that in a case where there are no nominees there should not be a right to assignment and that the assign should have no rights whatever. The mere fact that nominees have been provided for by the 15th section does not, in my opinion, justify the argument or the conclusion that the Legislature had intended that no other persons claiming through a member should be recognized but these nominees. It may well be that when such questions as I have before referred to come to be answered it may be held that these nominees are really only in the nature of assigns, assigns claiming under what is equivalent to an assignment which is revocable in a particular way, or that they are in the position only of assigns whose position in the absence of revocation is conclusive as between them and the society. It may well be that that is the proper view to take. I express no opinion upon it, for, as I have said, it does not arise here. But I can find nothing in the Act of 1875 that will justify the court, even assuming that the nominees are in the position of persons who have titles for all purposes, which negative when they do exist the rights of the assignees for value—even assuming that I can find nothing that justifies the inference that when there are no such nominees you can have no other assignees at all.

I should like to say, further, with reference to the judgment of Phillimore, J., to which my attention has been called, that I cannot see anything in the previous Act of 1867 which justifies the conclusion that Phillimore, J., came to in that case. All that the Policies of Assurance Act, 1867, did, was this, to give the assigns of most policies the right to sue on those policies at law. It excepted the policies of such a class as we have to consider on this appeal, but it appears to me that might well have been because if the last-mentioned policies were not excepted it might have justified the argument that these policies could have been sued on in the ordinary way without being hampered or hindered in any way in the ordinary course of law, whereas we know from the course of legislation on the subject of friendly societies that provisions more or less of a stringent character have been made to settle disputes before special tribunals, and I need not say now that those provisions compel dispositions to be settled in a special way and only render them enforceable in special cases. But it may well be that the Legislature in passing the Act of 1867 did not want to throw any doubt on the efficacy of those provisions in the case of policies of the kind we have to consider in this appeal. Lastly, I cannot find anything in the case of Bennett v. Slater which would justify us in allowing this contention of the respondents on this appeal, and for those reasons I agree in thinking that the appeal should be allowed.

COZENS-HARDY, L.J.—I agree. This is really an appeal from the decision of Phillimore, J., in Caddick v. Highton. He then decided in terms that policies of this nature cannot be assigned, they can only be nominated; and unless and in so far as they are nominated they vest both legally and beneficially in the legal personal representative of the member. In order to establish that it is important to remember how to approach an Act like the Friendly Societies Act, 1875; it is not necessary to find any clause enabling assignments to be made. You must find if the view of Phillimore, J., is correct, some words preventing the owner of the property from disposing of that which does not belong to anyone else. I do not find any such words in this case. I will not go through the section my learned brothers have gone through, but I mention section 18, sub-section 1, which seems to me strong to show as to this Act that the owner of that policy can deal with it as part of his property. It provides a mode in which the funds of the society may be invested, and the Legislature said in effect that the funds of this society may be lent to members on personal security with two satisfactory sureties to the amount of half the value of the policy, and you may deduct the amount due on the loan from the policy when it matures. That seems to me consistent, and only consistent with a view that this is part of the property of the assured. Then reliance is placed on Bennett v. Slater; but that case when carefully considered seems to me to be a strong authority in support of the view that this is property subject to assignment, for the Lords Justices there held that although so long as there was nomination in force and unrevoked the will of the assured had no operation on the policy, yet if it had been revoked the policy would have formed part of his estate and been subject to his disposition by will. We are not met here with the more difficult problem of an assignment for value followed by nomination. I desire, as my learned brothers have, to keep that an open point. Here, where there was no nomination, and we have nothing but the policy, the assignment, and the death of the assured, I have no doubt the assignment was perfectly good.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Pritchard, Englefield, & Co., for J. J. Lambert, Manchester; R. B. Wheatley, Son, & Daniel, for Cobbett, Wheeler, & Cobbett, Manchester; Rowcliffes, Rawle, & Co., for Bremner, Sons, & Corlett, Liverpool.

From Chan. Div. (Vaughan Williams, Romer, and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) Nov. 6.

In re HERBERT REEVES & CO. (a.)

Practice—Appeal—Summons for delivery of bill of costs and taxation—Order on summons—Final order.

Any order which disposes of the matter in dispute between parties is a final order, even though inquiries may have to be carried out after the order.

Accordingly held, that an order dismissing an originating summons for delivery of a bill of costs and taxation thereof was a final order, and that an appeal from such order ought to be prosecuted as a final and not an interlocutory appeal.

This was an appeal from Kekewich, J.

On the 10th of April an originating summons was taken out by Mr. C. E. Bessington asking that Messrs. Herbert Reeves & Co., solicitors, should deliver a bill of costs of all matters wherein they had acted for him, and for taxation of such bill when delivered.

On the 7th of August, 1901, Kekewich, J., made an order dismissing the summons with costs.

The applicant obtained leave to appeal, if leave was necessary, and gave a four-day notice of appeal on the footing that this was an interlocutory order.

On the appeal coming on for hearing the preliminary objection was taken that the order appealed from was a final order, and that fourteen days' notice of appeal ought to have been given and the appeal ought to have gone into the general list.

At the date of the hearing the time for giving notice of the appeal as from a final order had expired.

S. O. Buckmaster, for the appellant.

P. O. Lawrence, K.C., and B. A. Hall, for the respondents.—The order appealed from is really a final order, consequently the notice of appeal is irregular: Salaman v. Warner, 39 W. R. 547, [1891] 1 Q. B. 734; In re Debenham and Walker, 43 W. R. 699, [1895] 2 Ch. 430; and Smith v. Davies, 31 Ch. D. 595, 34 W. R. Dig. 142.

S. O. Buckmaster.—The order appealed from is not a final one. It does not determine the rights of the parties, and is only a step in the procedure for determining those rights: In re Oddy, 43 W. R. 363, [1895] 1 Q. B. 392.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—This is an appeal from an order of Kekewich, J., dismissing a summons taken out for delivery of a bill of costs by solicitors and for taxation of that bill. A preliminary objection has been taken that this is really a final and not an interlocutory appeal. It is an objection which, if nothing is done to correct the mistake, is fatal to this appeal. I am of opinion that it is a good objection. In my opinion the order made upon this summons is a final order. The question raised on the summons is whether there is a right to delivery of the bill and to taxation, and that question is finally decided one way or the other whatever order is made upon the summons. If the order is, as the order of Kekewich, J., is, that the summons stands dismissed, there is once and for all a final determination that the client has no right to relief under the Solicitors Acts in the nature of delivery of a bill and taxation. If, on the other hand, an order is made for delivery of a bill and taxation, that finally disposes of the matter on the summons on the other possibility; it is then decided once and for all that the client is, in the circumstances before the court, entitled to an order for delivery and taxation. It is suggested that in the last alternative I have put the order is not final, because after the order there will be taxation and a certificate and possibly a review of the taxation. But it is really plain that the mere fact that there may be inquiries to be carried out after the order or after the judgment has been delivered does not prevent the order or the judgment from being a final order or a final judgment. After you have got an order for winding up a company, there are obviously an enormous quantity of questions which may be raised, and, as pointed out in the course of the argument, after you get an order in a redemption action there are inquiries which will have to be proceeded with after the order. In these circumstances it seems to me that the objection raised that this is a final and not an interlocutory order is a good objection. I can quite understand that people may regard a summons for an order for delivery of a bill of costs and taxation as a summons the ultimate end of which is not to ascertain whether or not there is a liability to deliver a bill and have it taxed, but as a summons initiated for the purpose of ascertaining the quantum of money which the client is liable to pay to the solicitor, or which the solicitor may have to pay to the client. The proceeding may be so regarded, but it is not so here, and the form of the proceedings show that as things stand one must regard the object of the summons as being to ascertain whether or not there was a liability to deliver a bill of costs and have it taxed. It is said that it is an inconvenient thing that questions of this sort as to the liability to deliver bills of costs and taxation should stand over for the length of time for which they will have to stand over if the appeals come into the final list before the question can be determined. If that is so it can be got over by an alteration of the rules; but we sitting here cannot deal with the matter otherwise than according to the existing practice.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Romer, L.J.—I agree, and need only add this: When you have, as here, not an application in an action, but an original proceeding, an originating summons, in order to see whether an order made on that proceeding is final or not, you ought to consider what was the object of the proceeding as a matter of substance, and the test whether an order is a final order or not is to be arrived at by considering as a matter of substance what was the matter in dispute, what was it that gave rise to the litigation in which the order is to be made. Applying that test here, what was the matter in dispute and to be decided by this order? The matter in dispute was simply this: the applicant said that the respondents were his solicitors and ought to give him a bill of costs and that that bill ought to be taxed. That was in substance the matter in dispute between the parties. What was the order made. It was an order dismissing the application. If the order had been the other way, if an order had been made in favour of the applicant, it would equally have disposed of the matter in dispute. That being so, the order would be a final order within the definition in Salaman v. Warner, and following that, I am of opinion that this was a final order.

Cozens-Hardy, L.J.—I agree. I think the order is none the less final because it does not settle the exact amount due between the parties.

[Subsequently the Court granted an extension of time for giving notice of appeal, and directed that the appeal should be transferred into the general list and come on for hearing after interlocutory appeals the following Wednesday. It came on accordingly on the 13th and 14th of November and was compromised.]

Solicitors, Godfrey & Webb; Herbert Reeves & Co.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } Jan. 23.
Byrne, J. }

In re The London and Globe Finance Co. (Limited). (a.)

Company—Winding up—Public examination—Discretion of registrar as to allowing question—Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 63) s. 8.

The discretionary power of allowing a question to be put at a public examination given to the court by section 8, sub-section 7, of the Companies (Winding-up) Act. 1890, is in no way limited by the other provisions of that section, but is a discretion that must be judicially and carefully exercised under all the circumstances of each particular case.

Motion for an order that Mr. Whitaker Wright, who had taken part in the promotion and formation of the above company, might be ordered to answer certain questions which the registrar had refused to allow to be put to him at his public examination. These questions had reference (as was conceded at the bar although not proved) to an alleged agreement which was the subject of pending litigation between the company and persons who were not before the court, and the official receiver had objected to their being put by certain shareholders who were not parties to that litigation; this objection was upheld by the registrar.

T. Terrell, K.C., and W. Stewart, for the shareholders in question, argued (1) that the power of the registrar under section 8, sub-section 7, was confined to disallowing questions which did not fall within sub-section 3, and (2) that if the registrar had in fact a wider discretion such discretion had been wrongly exercised.

Gore Browne, for the official receiver.

Muir Mackenzie, for Mr. Whitaker Wright.

Byrne, J., held that the discretion given by sub-section 7 of section 8 to the registrar of refusing to allow a question to be put was not in any way limited by the preceding sub-sections of section 8, but that it was a discretion that must be judicially and carefully exercised under all the circumstances of the case for the benefit of all parties interested. Without saying that because litigation was pending a question which had reference to such litigation must not be put, he thought that in the present case the registrar had properly exercised the discretion given to him by the

(a.) Reported by L. W. Byrne, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Act. The questions were in the present case intended to be put, not by, but in the interests of persons against whom the company had commenced proceedings, and had been objected to by the official receiver on the ground that the interests of the company and its creditors and contributories might be prejudiced; the registrar in the judicial exercise of his discretion had come to the conclusion that the official receiver's objection was well founded, and with this view he agreed. The application would be dismissed with costs.

Solicitors, George Terrell & Terrell; Burn & Berridge; Hollams & Co.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Darling and Channell, JJ.) Dec. 16.

WAKEFIELD CORPORATION v. COOKE AND OTHERS. (a.)

Highway—Repair—Local government—Recovery of expenses—Wakefield Corporation Act, 1887, ss. 28-31—Private Street Works Act, 1892, ss. 6, 8.

A finding of magistrates that a certain street is a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large is not conclusive, and does not operate as a judgment in rem in any subsequent proceedings taken by the local authority respecting the same street against different parties.

Reg. v. Hutchings, 29 W. R. 724, 6 Q. B. D. 300, followed.

Case stated.

By the Wakefield Corporation Act of 1887 the corporation had the power to do certain works, and they charged, under section 29 of the Act, a portion of the expenses on certain frontagers, alleging that Hedge-lane was a private street.

At the hearing before the magistrates the objectors alleged that, the magistrates having previously held that Hedge-lane was a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large, the matter was res judicata.

The magistrates dismissed the application on this ground, but stated a case.

Macmorran, K.C., and Senior, for the corporation.—This case is similar to Reg. v. Hutchings, 29 W. R. 724, 6 Q. B. D. 300, and as the partes are different here the justices were wrong in not hearing the application.

Danckwerts, K.C., Glen, and Compston, for the respondents.—Reg. v. Hutchings does not apply here; the case turns upon the provisions of the Private Street Works Act, 1892, and the provisions of that Act give power to the justices to finally determine all objections.

The judgment of THE COURT (Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J., and DARLING and CHANNELL, JJ.) was delivered by

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—This is an appeal from the decision of the magistrates of the city of Wakefield deciding that certain proceedings under the Wakefield Corporation Act, 1887, for providing for the expense of paving, metalling, and channelling a certain street of the city were invalid on the ground that in similar proceedings taken in the year 1898 it had been decided by the justices having jurisdiction in the matter that the street was a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large. The matter arises under sections 29 and 30 of the Wakefield Corporation Act, 1887, which contains provisions analogous to those in section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and practically identical with sections 6 to 8 of the Private Streets Works Act, 1892. The point raised for our decision is whether a finding of the magistrates upon a proceeding properly taken under section 30 of the Act of 1887 to the effect that a street is a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large is conclusive in any subsequent proceedings for apportionment whoever may be the parties to the subsequent proceedings. In the case of Reg. v. Hutchings it was decided by the Court of Appeal that an adjudication by justices upon a summons by them to recover the amount of an apportionment made under section 150 of the Public Health Act, that a street was a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large, did not prevent the local authority from subsequently claiming the amount of apportionment in respect of the same street under proceedings subsequently taken. It was, however, contended before us that the provisions of section 31 of the Act of 1887 and the corresponding provisions of section 8 of the Private Street Works Act, 1892, had altered the law in this respect, that proceedings under these sections were of the nature of proceedings in rem, or that at least they were conclusive and final as between the corporation and the persons who either themselves or their predecessors in title had been parties to the earlier proceedings. This contention was based upon the following among other grounds: That under sub-section b of section 30 the owner of premises shown in a provisional apportionment liable to be charged could object, among other grounds, that the street in question was a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large, and that under sub-section 1 of section 31 a court of summary jurisdiction was to appoint a time for the determining the matter of all objections, and might proceed to hear and determine the matter of all such objections in the same manner as if the corporation were proceeding summarily against the objectors to enforce payment; and, further, that by sub-section 2 of the same section it was provided that no objection which could be made under this Act shall be otherwise made or allowed in any court, proceeding, or manner whatsoever. It was argued that these provisions show that any objection which could be raised by objectors was to be determined once and for all, not only as regards the apportionment then under consideration, but for the purposes of any future proceeding under the same section then under consideration. The consequences of such a view are very far-reaching. For example, although some only of the owners liable to be charged may have taken objections, the finding would be held binding upon the owners or persons entitled to object, who were no parties to the proceedings. If the justices had power to determine finally and against all parties that a street was a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large, they must have power to determine that it was not, and in that case a serious injury might be inflicted on other owners who might be in a position to produce quite different evidence from that on which the decision proceeded; still the consequences of giving effect to that contention would not be sufficient to prevent us from so holding if the language of the section, fairly read, leads to that conclusion. But, in our opinion, the provisions were enacted with an entirely different view, and not, as suggested, with the object of altering the law as laid down in the case of Reg. v. Hutchings. We think that the objects of sections 30 and 31 were to enable objectors to raise objections to the apportionment before any expense had been incurred, and also to enable preliminary points to be determined at an early stage which could not be raised upon a summons to recover the apportioned amount. Under section 150 of the Public Health Act the urban authorities were compelled, before they could take proceedings to recover the amount, to execute the work. The section in question, section 30 of the Act of 1887, allows owners to raise questions as to the character of the proposed works, the propriety of the estimate, the sufficiency of the plans, and the matters which, if they are to be raised at all, it is convenient should be raised before the works are executed. We think that the real jurisdiction given to justices is that contained in the concluding words of sub-section 1 of section 31, "quash in whole or in part or may amend the resolution, plans, estimates, and provisional apportionments," and that the earlier words, "appoint a time for determining the matter of all such objections," are only intended to enable the justices to determine the questions which, as provided by section 30, may be raised by the persons entitled to object. This determination enables the justices to quash, or amend, or confirm the resolution, plans, estimates, and provisional apportionments. In this view the reasoning of the Court of Appeal in Reg. v. Hutchings applies to this case, and we think that the objection taken on behalf of the objectors that there has been a previous determination that the street in question was a highway repairable by the inhabitants of the city at large was no bar to proceedings taken in this case. It is unnecessary to consider the other points which were raised on behalf of the appellants.

(a.) Reported by C. G. WILBRAHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Solicitors for the appellants, Sharpe, Parker, Pritchards, Barham, & Sharpe, for C. J. Hudson, Wakefield.

Solicitors of the respondents, Radford & Frankland, for C. B. L. Fernandes, Wakefield.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Darling and Channell, JJ.) Nov. 9.

HOPKINS v. M'BRIDE. (a.)

Ship—Seaman—Obligation of seamen under articles—Agreement with crew to pay increased wages—Action to enforce agreement.

In an action by seamen to enforce an agreement made by the master with them abroad, while under articles, to pay additional remuneration in consideration of their remaining on board and working the vessel home after an accident, which had, in fact, not rendered the vessel unseaworthy,

Held, that in the absence of evidence that the risk of navigating the vessel in her then state was such as would have justified the crew breaking their articles abroad, the agreement was not one that could be enforced.

Case stated by the justices of West Hartlepool, the point raised being whether an agreement entered into by a captain to pay his men additional remuneration in consideration of their agreeing to navigate the vessel home was binding.

The justices held that it was not, and the case stated included the following statement of facts:

". . . 6. The said complaint was made to us pursuant to section 164 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60).

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

"7. On the hearing of the said complaint the following facts were proved before us: (1) That the appellant signed articles pursuant to the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, in London, as seaman on board the British steamship Tymeric, of which the respondent was master, for a voyage to the Cape, with Government stores, calling at St. Helena with cattle, and back to a port in the United Kingdom, at wages after the rate of £4 per month. (2) That during the voyage to and when near Port Elizabeth the vessel struck on a reef, where she remained for some minutes, being got off under her own steam, and towed into Port Elizabeth. (3) That the respondent reported the stranding of the vessel to the shipping master, and also to the captain of the port at Port Elizabeth, and an inquiry was held there into the matter of the stranding of the vessel. (4) That while at Port Elizabeth the master received the following document, signed by several members of the crew, including the appellant: 'S.S. Tymeric.—To the Captain,—Sir,—We, the undersigned, comprising the crew forward, desire to know, in the event of this ship going to sea in the damaged condition she is in at present if there is to be any terms arranged with the crew in regard to taking her to sea (Signed) J. Greer.' (5) That the respondent promised to give the men half a month's pay to take the vessel to Cape Town, about 400 miles distant, but subsequently told them that the dock at Cape Town was occupied, and that if they would consent to go in the vessel he would get his clearance papers, shore up the tanks, and take her to England. (6) That the vessel was examined by two Lloyd's surveyors and a surveyor of the London Salvage Association at Port Elizabeth. (7) That on the 26th of April, 1901, a document, of which the following is a copy, signed by the appellant and other members of the crew, was handed to the respondent: '26/4/01. Port Elizabeth.—S.S. Tymeric.—To Captain M'Bride.—Sir,—We, the undersigned, numbering fifteen of the crew, agree to go to sea in the above steamer for the sum of £14 (fourteen pounds) bonus independent of our monthly wages. In the event of the ship not reaching her destination the above bonus to be made good, each man to hold a promissory note signed by the captain to that effect.' (8) That the respondent went ashore and endeavoured to obtain another crew, but was unable to do so. (9) That on the 28th of April, 1901, the appellant and another seaman had an interview with the respondent with regard to the documents which have been handed by the crew to the respondent, when the respondent threatened that if they did not go in the vessel he would put them in gaol, and the appellant replied, 'Very well, sir, I'll see the shipping master in the morning before I'll go to gaol.' (10) That on the following day the respondent, not being able to obtain other men, and knowing that he could not get the vessel back to England without the assistance of the appellant and the other members of the crew, called them aft and said to them, 'I will give you £14 each if you will go in the ship, independent of wages,' and at the request of the men he gave them each a document, but at the time he agreed to give them the money he never intended to pay it. (11) That the appellant never stated to the respondent (as he had a right to do under section 211 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894) his desire to make a complaint to a justice of the peace, British Consular officer, or officer in command of one of his Majesty's ships, nor was he prevented by the respondent from making such complaint, but that naval officers were frequently on board the vessel, and the appellant had ample opportunity of making such a complaint to them if he had desired to do so. (12) That the respondent could not have got another crew, and could not have brought the vessel to England if the appellant and the other members of the crew had not consented to sail in her. (13) That the vessel sailed for England with the appellant on board. Fine weather generally prevailed during the voyage, but rough sea was occasionally experienced. After a voyage of forty-five or forty-six days (the usual length of a voyage being about thirty days) she arrived at West Hartlepool, where she was put into dry dock. (14) That the vessel was cellular bottomed, having two bottoms, the outer one of which was all perforated, but the inner one entire, and her tanks were shored down at Port Elizabeth under Lloyd's survey. (15) That the only reason alleged by the appellant for refusing to proceed in the vessel unless the respondent promised to pay him £14 bonus independent of his monthly wages was that the vessel was unseaworthy. (16) That the vessel when she left Port Elizabeth was not unseaworthy. (17) That on the voyage to England the appellant performed only his usual duties of seaman, no additional labour being required of him, and that the vessel not being unseaworthy, he incurred no unusual risk or danger to his life by proceeding in her from Port Elizabeth to West Hartlepool. (18) That on the arrival of the vessel at West Hartlepool the crew were paid off, the appellant being offered £4 in addition to his ordinary wages, but refused to take the £4, claiming £14. That the £4 were deposited with the shipping master at West Hartlepool, to be paid to the appellant as a gratuity on condition he gave up the document given to him by the respondent at Port Elizabeth, and that this sum was so deposited 'without prejudice.' . . .

"On the facts proved before us as above stated, and having regard to the cases of Harris v. Watson, 1 Peake 102; Stilk v. Myrick, 2 Camp. 317; Harris v. Carter, 2 W. R. 409, 23 L. J. Q. B. 205; Fraser v. Hatton, 5 W. R. 632, 26 L. J. C. P. 226; and Hartley v. Ponsonby, 5 W. R. 659, 26 L. J. Q. B. 322, we were of opinion: (1) That as the vessel (as we found to be the fact) was not unseaworthy, the appellant was not justified in refusing to proceed or in demanding extra wages or a bonus as a condition of his proceeding in the vessel on the voyage for which he was under contract to serve in her. (2) That nothing had occurred up to the time when the respondent promised or agreed to give the appellant such extra wages or bonus or did occur between that time and the time of the arrival of the vessel at West Hartlepool which discharged the original articles, and the contract contained therein. (3) That the promise or agreement by the respondent to pay the appellant such extra wages or bonus in addition to the wages fixed by the original articles was void for want of consideration. (4) That the appellant and respondent were bound by the original articles, and the appellant was not, therefore, entitled to recover the extra wages or bonus which the respondent had promised or agreed to pay him."

The justices accordingly gave judgment for the respondent.

The question upon which the opinion of the court was desired was whether the justices upon the above statement of facts came to a correct determination and decision in point of law, and if not, what should be done in the premises?

R. I. Simey, for the appellant.—The question here is whether when the agreement was entered into there was reasonable apprehension of unseaworthiness—whether the ship was in such a condition that the crew were not bound to re-embark. There was no finding that there was actual risk.

H. H. Gregory, for the respondent.—There is nothing to show that the seamen felt that their articles were at an end, and unless the appellant can prove that some risk was in the mind of both parties at the time that the agreement was entered into the court will not enforce such a bargain: see Harris v. Carter and Hartley v. Ponsonby.

Simey, in reply.—The cases cited were decisions where the alleged unseaworthiness was apparent. That was not the case here; moreover, the appellant was bought off going to the shipping master to have the question of seaworthiness determined, and the agreeing to forego this right would be sufficient consideration in any case to support the claim.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—I do not think upon the facts found that this agreement can be enforced. For upwards of one hundred years there has been a principle of law that in the case of contracts made by seamen (who were not entitled to break their articles), even if there might apparently have been some consideration, as, for instance, the difficulty of getting the ship away—this was not enough to justify the contract if in fact the circumstances were not such as to justify the crew in thinking that the contract under the articles was at an end.

In this case it was found that the vessel was in fact seaworthy; that the appellant performed only his usual duties of seaman during the voyage home and incurred no risk or danger to his life. No sufficient reason, in our opinion, having been given to justify the appellant in breaking his articles, he was bound by them, and his contract for extra remuneration came under the class of contracts which have over and over again been held not binding. The law, in my opinion, is correctly stated in Hartley v. Ponsonby, and those references to the law are not the less weighty because they were delivered in a case in which the judges concluded that, as the finding of the jury amounted to a finding that the vessel was unseaworthy, there was a case in which a fresh contract could be made. I think that, broadly, a seaman who seeks to insist on a fresh contract is bound to show a state of circumstances in which he would be justified in breaking his articles. In this case it was found, as a fact, that the vessel was in fact seaworthy, and that the appellant incurred no unusual risk or danger by proceeding on the voyage. It was said that there was some evidence that the men proposed to go before the shipping master and lodge a complaint if terms were not made with them, and that this was sufficient consideration. I would like to postpone my judgment on any case in which the question was really raised whether, when it was in the power of the seaman to detain the ship and he did not do so, it might not be a good ground, but in my opinion it is not raised in the present case, and it is therefore not open to us to consider it.

DARLING and CHANNELL, JJ., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Chas. H. Dodd, for James J. Dodd, West Hartlepool; Holman, Birdwood, & Co.

House of Lords.

From C. A. (England). July 8, 1901.

CARR v. FRACIS, TIMES, & Co. (a.)

Conflict of laws—Tort in foreign country—Right of action—Foreign government—Jurisdiction.

To constitute an actionable wrong, where the injury is committed abroad, it must be actionable in the country where committed as well as in this country

Where a British subject seized goods in Muscat waters, which act was authorized by the Sultan and therefore lawful in that country, no action lies in our courts for such seizure.

Appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal (A. L. Smith, Vaughan Williams, and Romer, L.JJ.) reversing a judgment of Grantham, J.

The respondents, who were merchants carrying on business in London, Bushire, and Muscat, sued the applicant, a captain in the British navy, for an alleged wrong committed abroad. The facts and arguments are shortly given in the judgments.

Sir R. Finlay, A.G., Sir E. Carson, S.G., and R. B. D. Acland, for the appellant

Sir R. Reid, K.C., J. Walton, K.C., and Hollams, for the respondents.

Earl of HALSBURY, L.C.—This is an action in which the plaintiffs claim in tort for an act which, in the first instance, I shall assume to have been done within the territorial waters of the Sultan of Muscat. The arguments of the respondents come to this, that the Sultan was not entitled within his own territory to say what should or should not be a subject of traffic. The Sultan had said—and he enforced his prohibition by authorized armed intervention—that he would not permit a particular kind of traffic to pass through his territory. I am somewhat surprised that there should be any contest on this point, or that any doubt should be suggested. I agree, indeed, that there is no analogy between this proceeding and a judgment in rem. There is no relation between an act done or authorized by a sovereign in his own territory and a judgment in rem. It is no ground for disputing the validity of this action that, if done in another country, it would have been unlawful. Before the abolition of slavery—to take an illustration from our own history—no action would have been permissible in this country on the ground of a restraint of liberty in Jamaica, which, though unlawful in this country, was perfectly legal in a country in which slavery prevailed. In this case the Sultan has declared what his own law is. It was contended that this was a question for an English jury, who could go behind the Sultan's act. But no such proposition can be maintained. The Sultan's authority is supreme within his own territory. The broad proposition is that the Sultan's declaration was an act of state, which cannot be impugned in an action in this country. The question is no doubt raised whether an act done by such authority by a British subject and participated in by the British Government can be recognized by our courts as lawful, being such an act as would not have been lawful elsewhere. That question is conclusively answered in the decision, to which Tindal, C.J., was a party, of Dobree v. Napier, 2 Bing. N. C. 781, when it was held that an act of state done by command of the Portugese Crown, although done by an English subject who, by the Foreign Enlistment Act, was forbidden to do anything of the sort, could not be impugned by our courts. This is an a fortiori case, because, instead of being done against the law of this country, the act was here done by order of the British Crown. The point is thus a very short one. The law of the Sultan of Muscat is his will—stet pro ratione voluntas. In my opinion no British tribunal is competent to go behind the Sultan's declaration. A serious question of policy is involved, and British tribunals cannot decide as against the Sultan what is the law of the Sultan's country. Then comes the other question, which I am somewhat surprised should have been raised for the first time in your lordships' House. It does not appear to have been suggested below. It is that this act was not done within the territorial waters of the Sultan at all. The authority of Reg. v. Keyn, 2 Ex. D. 63, 25 W. R. Dig. 87, was cited in support of this contention of the respondents. It is an unusual occurrence—but it happened—for the Legislature of this country to pass an Act of Parliament to reverse a judgment of a court. But the Territorial Waters Jurisdiction Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 73), affirmed in terms that the judgment of the majority of the judges in Reg. v. Keyn was not the law of England, and declared that the law as in the Act set forth had always been the law of this country. It is, however, only right to add that much of the argument in that case—the entire argument of Cockburn, L.C.J., who gave the leading judgment of the majority of the court—was not whether this tract of land covered with water was a proper subject for English legislation, but whether there had in fact been legislation. The case was one of manslaughter, and the question of jurisdiction was based upon the civil law, the issue being, as it were, between the sheriff and the admiral, the former having jurisdiction by common law in the body of a county, and the latter's jurisdiction being based on the civil law. Now, by the civil law, there is no distinction—it is either murder or nothing. Thus the decision of the Chief Justice was of a technical character—that except by legislation the ordinary criminal law administered in the bodies of counties could not be applied to such a case. Thus the decision of the seven judges as against six in Reg. v. Keyn has no application, as it is inconceivable that our courts should attempt to split up the jurisdiction of the Sultan of Muscat into what belonged to common law, what to the Admiralty law, and so on. The answer to the claim is final and complete—that the question has been decided by the Sultan himself. I move that the judgment appealed from be reversed, and the judgment of Grantham, J., restored, with costs to the appellant in this House and in the courts below.

Lord MACNAGHTEN.—This case has been very fully and very ably argued; but, after all, it comes to an extremely short point. The respondents, who are or were merchants carrying on business in London, Bushire, and Muscat, sue the appellant, a captain in the British navy, for an alleged wrong committed abroad. He seized their goods—as they allege, illegally—and they claim compensation in damages. Now, it is well settled by a series of authorities of which the latest is the case of Phillips v. Eyre, L. R. 6 Q. B. 1, 18 W. R. C. L. Dig. 2, that in order to found an action in this country for a wrong committed abroad two conditions must be fulfilled. In the first place the wrong must be of such a character that it would have been actionable if committed in England; and, secondly, the act must not have been justifiable by the law of the place where it was committed. In the present case the whole question turns upon the second proposition. It is not disputed that the alleged wrong would have have been actionable if it had been committed in England or on the high seas. It was, however, committed within the dominions of the Sultan of Muscat, who is duly proved to be an independent sovereign. It was committed within the territorial waters of Muscat, which are, in my opinion, for this purpose as much a part of the Sultan's dominions as the land over which he exercises absolute and unquestioned sway. The appellant says that the act complained of was done under the authority and by the direction of the Sultan; that he adopted it as his act, and declared it to be legal. In support of this assertion the appellant relies upon two documents—the proclamation of the 13th of January, 1898, and the report of the 15th of April, 1898, adopted and confirmed by the Sultan himself. The real question is, what is the true meaning and effect of these documents. The respondents contend that the documents in question come to nothing more than this—that the Sultan of Muscat announced by formal proclamation that so far as he was concerned her Britannic Majesty was welcome to seize munitions of war destined for Indian or Persian ports, if they were the property of British subjects, when found within the territorial waters of Muscat—that he would not resent such an act as an invasion of his sovereignity, and that afterwards, on inquiry, he declared that he was satisfied that her Britannic Majesty had done no more than he had permitted her to do. I do not think that this was the meaning of these documents. I think that the meaning was that the act, if done, was to be done under his authority, as his act, and that after inquiry he adopted the act as his own, and declared it to be legal—legal, that is, according to the law of Muscat, which, for anything I know to the contrary, may be nothing more than the will and pleasure of the despot who rules over that country. If this was the true meaning of these documents, if the act was legal in Muscat and, therefore, justifiable there, in my opinion there is a conclusive answer to the action; and I am, therefore, of opinion that the appeal must be allowed.

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Lord SHAND and Lord BRAMPTON concurred.

Lord LINDLEY.—I am of the same opinion. The answer to the claim—that the seizure complained of was lawful by the law of the state in which it was effected—is sufficient in point of law. This was settled in Blad v. Bamfield, 3 Swans. 604, and has been frequently recognized in subsequent decisions, as, for example, in The M. Moxham, 24 W. R. 597, 1 P. D. 107, per Mellish, L.J. No evidence has been adduced to show that the proclamation did not truly represent the law of Muscat applicable to the case; and in the absence of such evidence the declaration of the court held by order of the Sultan, which declaration was approved by the Sultan, ought to be accepted by the courts of this country as sufficient. The plaintiffs complain that the finding by the court of Muscat that the arms were intended for Persian ports was wrong. An English jury might probably construe the proclamation more narrowly than a Muscat court or a Muscat lawyer, and an English jury has found that when seized the arms were intended for Muscat only. But the finding of an English jury, even if relevant for any purpose, does not invalidate the declaration of the law of Muscat or show that the authorities who made it misconstrued the Sultan's proclamation which authorized the seizure, or did what was wrong by the law of Muscat. Mr. Walton has contended that the Sultan had no jurisdiction to give anyone leave to search and take arms out of a British ship passing through his territorial waters in time of peace, and that the seizure, although sanctioned by the governments of Muscat, Persia, and the United Kingdom, was unlawful by the law of nations and ought to be so treated by an English court of law. But no English court can hold on general principles of international law only that the Sultan has exceeded his own powers, though, but for its own concurrence in the seizure, it is possible that the British Government might have demanded reparation.

Judgment appealed from reversed, and judgment of Grantham, J., restored. The respondents to pay to the appellant his costs in this House and in the courts below.

Solicitor for the appellant, The Solicitor to the Treasury.

Solicitors for the respondents, Hollams, Sons, Coward, & Hawkesley.

Court of Appeal.

From K. B. Div. (Collins, M.R., and Romer and Mathew, L.JJ.) — Feb. 3.

KEATES v. WOODWARD. (a)

County court—Practice—Costs—Action which could have been commenced in a county court—Tort—Recovery of less than £10—Judgment for injunction and nominal damages—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict c. 43), s. 116, sub-section 2.

An action brought in the Chancery Division for an injunction and damages for trespass to land was transferred to a county court. The county court judge gave judgment for the defendant. On appeal, the King's Bench Division gave judgment for the plaintiff for an injunction and nominal damages.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to his costs.

An action which results in a judgment for an injunction and nominal damages is not an action in which the plaintiff recovers a sum less than ten pounds within the meaning of section 116 (2) of the County Courts Act, 1888.

St. John's College, Cambridge v. Pierrepont, 61 L. J. Q. B. 19, 40 W. R. Dig. 181, overruled.

Appeal from a judgment of a Divisional Court (Wills and Channell, JJ.) on an appeal from a county court.

The action was commenced in the Chancery Division. The plaintiff by his writ claimed an injunction and damages for trespass to land.

The defence was that the alleged act of trespass consisted in the removal of an obstruction to a right of way to which the defendant was entitled.

On the application of the defendant the action was transferred to the Birkenhead County Court under section 69 of the County Courts Act, 1888.

The action was tried before the county court judge and a jury. The jury found that there was a right of way, and the judge gave judgment for the defendant with costs.

The plaintiff appealed to the Divisional Court, who held there was no evidence of a right of way, and gave judgment for the plaintiff for an injunction and nominal damages. They allowed the plaintiff his costs of the appeal, but they made no order as to his costs in the county court, considering that they were prevented from allowing him those costs by section 116, sub-section 2, of the County Courts Act, 1888.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RÜCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Section 116 of the County Courts Act, 1888, enacts as follows: "With respect to any action brought in the High Court, which could have been commenced in a county court, the following provisions shall apply—(2) If in an action founded on tort the plaintiff shall recover a sum less than ten pounds, he shall not be entitled to any costs of the action; . . . unless in any such action . . . a judge of the High Court certifies that there was sufficient reason for bringing the action in that court."

The plaintiff appealed.

F. E. Smith, for the plaintiff.—This action does not come within section 116 of the County Courts Act. In the first place, it is not an action founded on tort, but it is an action for a declaration of right. Secondly, it is not an action in which the plaintiff has recovered less than £10, for he has obtained an injunction, which was the substantial relief sought for. The Divisional Court followed the case of St. John's College, Cambridge v. Pierrepont, 61 L. J. Q. B. 19, 40 W. R. Dig. 181. But the Irish case of Bradley v. Archibald, [1899] 2 I. R. 108, is in the plaintiff's favour.

He cited Chapman v. Midland Railway Co., 28 W. R. 592, 5 Q. B. D. 431.

Montague Shearman, for the defendant. — First, this is an action founded on tort: see Bryant v. Herbert, 26 W. R. 898, 3 C. P. D. 389, where it was held that detinue was founded on tort. Secondly, the words "shall recover a sum less than ten pounds" refer only to what is recovered in money. The mere granting of other relief besides damages cannot take a case out of the section. If no damages were sought and an injunction was granted, the case might be different. But this was essentially an action for damages; for it is admitted that it might have been commenced in a county court, and a county court has no original jurisdiction to entertain an action which is brought mainly for an injunction for tort, but only actions for damages for tort: see Martin v. Bannister, 28 W. R. 143, 4 Q. B. D. 491. If the county court judge had decided this case as he ought to have decided it, he could not have given the plaintiff his costs. For where an action is transferred as this action was, neither the county court judge nor a judge of the High Court has power to certify.

COLLINS, M.R.—This action was brought in the Chancery Division of the High Court for damages for trespass and for an injunction. It was transferred to the county court, and there judgment was given for the defendant. The case was then brought before the Divisional Court, who reversed the decision of the county court judge and granted an injunction. The plaintiff thereupon contended that he was entitled to be allowed his costs in the county court. The judges, however, following the case of St. John's College, Cambridge v. Pierrepont, held that they had no jurisdiction to allow the plaintiff his costs in the county court. That case deals precisely with the point which is now before us. The question depends on the true construction of section 116, sub-section 2, of the County Courts Act, which is as follows: [The learned judge read the section.] This action could have been commenced in the county court, and it is said that it is founded on tort, and that the plaintiff, having recovered one shilling damages, has recovered less than £10. If that were the true view, it would be a conclusive answer to the plaintiff's application to be allowed his costs. But does this action, in which the plaintiff has recovered one shilling damages and has also recovered something which is of incomparably greater value, and which is the gist of the action—viz., the injunction which he claimed—come within the fair meaning of the section? It seems to me that it does not. I do not think that this action can fairly be described as an action founded on tort in which the plaintiff has recovered a sum less than ten pounds. In the case of Danby v. Lamb, 10 W. R. 43, 11 C. B. N. S. 423, which was a decision under section 34 of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1860, it was held that that section did not apply to an action of detinue. Erle, C.J., said that the whole purview of the section seemed to him to be directed to the case where damages alone were sought to be recovered by way of compensation for a wrong. That seems to me to cover this case. In Bryant v. Herbert, 26 W. R. 898, this court held that an action of detinue was an action founded on tort. Danby v. Lamb has been followed by the Irish Court in the case of Bradley v. Archibald. St. John's College, Cambridge v. Pierrepont is a decision to the contrary, but Danby v. Lamb was not cited in that case. It seems to me, therefore, that the authorities are in favour of the plaintiff. I think that the fair meaning of the section is that it applies to an action which is founded on tort, in the sense that tort is the gist of the action, and in which nothing more is sought than money damages. This case, therefore, is not within the section, and it follows that there was no need for a judge to certify, and that the plaintiff is entitled to his costs.

ROMER, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I think that section 116, sub-section 2, is primarily directed to actions in which pecuniary damages only are sought, and that it is not intended to apply where other substantial relief such as an injunction is asked for. I do not think, however, that a plaintiff could take himself out of the section by the mere device of colourably adding a claim for an injunction. In the present case the plaintiff has recovered substantial relief in addition to damages. In my opinion the Irish case of Bradley v. Archibald was rightly decided, and I think that St. John's College, Cambridge v. Pierrepont was wrongly decided.

MATHEW, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The county court had jurisdiction to deal with this matter. The power to do so is clearly given by section 89 of the Judicature Act, 1873, and ord. 22, r. 12, of the County Court Rules recognizes that power. The Divisional Court ought to have directed costs to be taxed in the county court as if no mistake had ever been made.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Pritchard, Englefield, & Co., for Simpson, North, Harley, & Birkett, Liverpool.

Solicitors for the defendant, Cunliffes & Davenport.

From Chan. Div. (Vaughan Williams, Stirling, and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) — Jan. 14.

WHITE v. HARROW.

HARROW v. MARYLEBONE DISTRICT PROPERTY CO. (a.)

Landlord and Tenant—Lease—Light—Covenant not to object to adjoining buildings—"Adjoining"—"Neighbouring."

Where a lessee covenanted not to object to any works to adjoining premises,

Held, that "adjoining" did not mean "neighbouring," but was used in the sense of "in physical contact with."

Decision of Joyce, J. (ante, p. 166), reversed.

(a) Reported by S. E. WILLIAMS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

This was an appeal against the decision of Joyce, J. (ante, p. 166).

By an indenture of lease dated the 20th of September, 1894, certain premises known as No. 24, High-street, Marylebone, were let by the trustees of the Portland estate to the plaintiff White. The lease contained a covenant in the following words: "The lessee, his executors, administrators, and assigns, will not object to any works to adjoining premises that may be sanctioned by or on behalf of the said trustee or trustees, or other the person or persons for the time being entitled in reversion to the said estates, and will not claim any easement against the said person or persons entitled in reversion as aforesaid, in or upon any adjoining or neighbouring premises belonging to the said person or persons by reason of any act or thing done or suffered by any tenant of such adjoining or neighbouring premises and that notwithstanding any actual or constructive notice of such act or thing to the said person or persons."

By an indenture of underlease dated the 3rd of August, 1899, and made between the plaintiff White and Thomas Harrow, the said premises were demised to the said Thomas Harrow for the term of twenty-one years. The said underlease contained a covenant by the underlessee similar to the one above set out—namely, that he, the underlessee, would not without the previous written consent of the lessor object to any works to adjoining premises which might be sanctioned by or on behalf of the lessor or the superior landlords, and would not claim any easement against the lessor or his superior landlords over any adjoining or neighbouring premises belonging to the lessor or his superior landlords by reason of any act or thing done or suffered by any tenant of such adjoining or neighbouring premises, and that notwithstanding any actual or constructive notice to the lessor or his superior landlords.

The Marylebone District Property Co., of which company the plaintiff White was a director, acquired from the superior landlords a lease of certain ground adjoining the said premises, No. 24, High-street, Marylebone, and commenced to erect buildings thereon.

The plans of the proposed buildings were submitted by the company to the surveyor of the Portland estate, who after introducing certain modifications therein so as to protect the interests of the defendant Harrow amongst others, gave his sanction to them.

The defendant Harrow thereupon commenced the action of Harrow v. Marylebone District Property Co. to restrain the company from building so as to interfere with the access of light to the windows of No. 24, High-street. The plaintiff White was not made a party to that action.

The plaintiff White then commenced the action of White v. Harrow, and moved that the action of Harrow v. Marylebone District Property Co. might be stayed.

For the purposes of the motion it was admitted that the proposed new buildings would prove a material obstruction to the defendant Harrow's lights. The notice of motion was amended by entitling it in the action of Harrow v. Marylebone District Property Co. as well as in the action of White v. Harrow.

Joyce, J., held that the plaintiff White was entitled to have the proceedings in the action of Harrow v. Marylebone District Property Co. stayed.

The defendant Harrow appealed.

Younger, K.C., and Edward Ford, for the appellant.

Hughes, K.C., and Wace, for the plaintiff White.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., said it had been contended that upon the true construction of the particular covenant in question the words adjoining premises extended not only to buildings which came in physical contact with the demised building, but also to any buildings which were situate near enough to the demised building for works done on the premises so situate to affect materially the demised premises by obstructing easements enjoyed by the demised premises at the date of the demise. His lordship could not agree to that construction. He thought that "adjoining" meant adjoining in the sense in which the word was used in the London Building Act, 1894. It was plain from the use in other parts of the lease of the wider expression "adjoining or neighbouring" that the word adjoining could not be used in this particular covenant in the sense of "neighbouring." A narrower meaning must be put upon the word adjoining. His lordship's opinion was that in this covenant adjoining was used in the sense of "in physical contact with." It was said that thus to interpret the word was to make the covenant of no practical effect; but so construed it would have the effect of relieving the lessor from the necessity of obtaining on behalf of himself or the superior landlord the consent of the lessee or occupier to works proposed to be done to adjoining premises according to the provisions of the London Building Act, 1894, s. 90. It was argued that the intention of the covenant was to prevent the lessee objecting to the obstruction of an easement by the erection of buildings by the lessor or the superior landlord. In the first place, if this were the intention it would have been easy to say so in plain terms, and this had not been done, although easements were expressly dealt with in the latter part of the covenant. In his lordship's judgment the court ought not to construe a covenant as giving a lessor the power to derogate from his own grant if the words were fairly capable of another construction. Then as to the latter part of the covenant his lordship saw nothing in the case to lead him to suppose that the easement of light arose by reason of any act or thing done or suffered by any tenant of adjoining or neighbouring premises. It might well be that the right of light arose by reason of something done or suffered by the lessor or his superior landlord, and it was by no means clear that the claim which the lessee was precluded from making had any relation to ancient lights acquired by enjoyment prior to the date of the lease. The court was not now deciding on any facts; it was construing the first part of the covenant on the admitted facts. The application of the second part of the covenant must be determined when the facts had been found. The appeal must therefore be allowed.

STIRLING and COZENS-HARDY, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Samuel Lithgow; Cooper & Bake.

From Chan. Div.
(Vaughan Williams, Stirling, and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) Jan. 14.

POISSON AND WOODS v. ROBERTSON AND TURVEY. (a.)

Practice—Inspection—Joint owners—Trade secret—Secret recipe—"Liberty to apply"—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 31, r. 14.

(a.) Reported by S. E. WILLIAMS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Where A. and B., each claiming under assignments from C., had been held at the trial of an action between A. and B. to be joint owners of a secret remedy, and each entitled to make and sell the remedy, but the paper upon which the secret recipe was written had been destroyed,

Held, that A., to whom the recipe had never been communicated, was not entitled, upon an application made under the liberty to apply given at the trial, to demand from B. either a copy or inspection of the secret recipe.

Decision of Joyce, J. (ante, p. 186), affirmed.

This was an appeal from the decision of Joyce, J. (reported ante, p. 186).

The motion in the action was made by the plaintiff Poisson that he might be at liberty to inspect and take copies of the original recipe for the manufacture of the secret specific or remedy known as "Tacquaru," handed by G. R. Edwards to the defendant Robertson, and then in the possession of the defendant Turvey, and that the defendant Turvey might be ordered to produce the said recipe for such inspection.

The subject-matter of the action was a secret specific for the cure of drunkenness.

By an agreement dated the 2nd of March, 1896, G. R. Edwards, the former owner of "Tacquaru," entered into partnership with the defendant Robertson for the purpose of dealing with the said remedy, and under that agreement Robertson became entitled to one-half the profits, he undertaking the whole business management, and Edwards being in the position of a sleeping partner.

By an indenture dated the 11th of March, 1896, Edwards assigned his interest in the remedy to one Woods, who, however, was not entitled to know the secret of the remedy.

On the 23rd of March, 1896, Woods by an indenture assigned to the plaintiff Poisson one-half of his half interest in the remedy.

On the 6th of July, 1897, the defendant by a document in writing assigned one quarter of his half interest to the plaintiff Poisson, but without communicating the secret to him, though there was no covenant that it should not be communicated to him.

Subsequently, on the 1st of August, 1900, Robertson affected to sell to the defendant Turvey the sole rights in the said remedy, and he thereupon communicated the secret to Turvey, handing to him the original paper upon which it was written.

The plaintiffs thereupon sought a declaration that the last-mentioned assignment was a fraud on their rights and void, and an order that the defendant Turvey should deliver up the recipe. They further asked for an injunction to restrain the defendant Turvey from manufacturing, selling, or dealing with the remedy, or from disclosing the secret to any person other than the plaintiff Poisson, a declaration that the plaintiff Poisson was entitled to have the remedy communicated to him, and an account of all dealings with the remedy by the defendant Turvey.

Upon the hearing of the action Kekewich, J., held that, there being no fraud, the effect of the various assignments was to vest three-eighths in Turvey, three-eighths in Poisson, and two-eighths in Woods. But his lordship held that this did not entitle the plaintiffs to an account, and he gave no decision upon the question of the right of the plaintiff Poisson to inspect the recipe.

The motion was brought on by the plaintiff Poisson under the liberty to apply given in the action.

It appeared in the evidence that the original paper upon which the recipe was written had become worn out, and was consequently, since the hearing of the action, destroyed by the defendant Turvey, who, however, had taken and kept a copy of it.

Joyce, J., held that the plaintiff was in a difficult position in coming to ask the court on the present motion for a remedy which he had failed to obtain at the hearing of the action. His lordship therefore refused to make an order on the defendant Turvey to show the paper, but without prejudice to any subsequent application.

The plaintiff Poisson appealed.

Hughes, K.C., and Harman, for the appellant.

Wright Taylor, for the defendant Turvey.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., said that as the matter stood the action appeared to him to have come to an end. There was a judgment, and under it it was plain that the plaintiff had got two-eighths of what had been called a dormant right and one-eighth of what had been called an active right. That judgment reserved "liberty to apply," but that did not take the matter any further. All that the court had been called to adjudicate upon had been adjudicated upon, and the action was not of such a nature as that any consequential remedy had to be worked out. It was not desirable at any time that the court should determine questions which it was not necessary that the court should deal with for the determination of an action before it. So he did not propose in the slightest degree to lay down the law with regard to what might be the rights of a co-owner of property in a case like the present. All he could say was, that if the result of the contract here was that the plaintiff had become co-owner of a chattel and that chattel had been converted by the other co-owner, the defendant, he was not aware of any rule of law which would debar the other co-owner from bringing an action for that conversion. If the co-owner, the defendant in this case, had dealt with the joint property by selling it, his lordship wished to say, speaking for himself, that he was not, as at present advised, prepared to say that the other co-owner, who was not originally a party to the sale, could not come in by action and compel his co-owner to account for the moneys resulting from the sale of that common property or any part of it. But the court had not to decide that question on the present occasion, and he would not further discuss it.

STIRLING, L.J., was of the same opinion. The present application could not be made under "liberty to apply." The judgment contained a declaration as to the interests of the parties with "liberty to apply," but the addition of those words did not enable the court to deal with matters which did not arise in the course of working out the judgment. His lordship was not prepared to say that the plaintiff was not entitled to some relief in a properly-constituted action.

COZENS-HARDY, L.J., agreed. It had been argued on behalf of the plaintiff that inspection could be had at any time under ord. 31, r. 14, but his lordship did not think this was a pending cause or matter within the meaning of that rule.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, J. A. Maxwell; Maurice Moseley.

From K. B. Div.
(Vaughan Williams, Romer, and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) Dec. 18.

In re LONDON AND NORTHERN BANK.
ARCHER'S CASE. (a.)

Company—Winding up—Pending action—Privilege—Officer of company—Examination—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 115.

An officer of a company which has gone into liquidation is not justified in refusing, in the course of an examination under section 115 of the Companies Act, 1862, to answer questions as to documents belonging to the company which have come into his possession as an officer of the company, on the ground that such documents have passed into the possession of persons who are in litigation with the company, and have successfully claimed privilege in the litigation in respect of such documents.

Judgment of Wright, J. (ante p. 167), affirmed

This was an appeal from an order of Wright, J. (reported ante, p. 167).

A bank registered under the Companies Acts, shortly before passing resolutions for voluntarily winding up, had commenced a libel action against Sir George Newnes (Limited) claiming damages for a statement which had appeared in a paper called the Money Maker that the bank was being wound up.

Mr. J. H. Archer, an ex-manager of the bank, had, in that action, handed over to the solicitors for the newspaper a letter belonging to the bank.

In the winding up the liquidator obtained an order under section 115 of the Companies Act, 1862, for the private examination of Mr. Archer. In the course of the examination the witness was asked questions as to what had become of this and other letters of the bank which he had had in his possession. These questions, on the advice of his counsel, he refused to answer.

The registrar before whom the examination was held ordered him to answer, but referred the matter to the court.

In the action the secretary of Sir George Newnes (Limited) had made an affidavit of documents in which he claimed privilege in respect of certain specified documents, and it was said that the questions which were objected to were put in order to enable the liquidator to get behind the privilege and obtain evidence for the purposes of the action.

Wright, J., ordered the witness to attend and answer the questions.

Mr. Archer appealed.

H. Reed, K.C., Muir Mackenzie, and Lush, for the appellant.—This is an attempt to get information by means of section 115 of the Companies Act, 1862, for purposes unconnected with the winding up of the company. The court has a discretion as to making an order for the examination of a witness under this section, and the decision in In re North Australian Territory Co., 38 W. R. 561, 45 Ch. D. 87, shows that the examination will not be allowed for the purposes of eliciting information which is wanted for the purpose of a pending action and not for winding up the company.

They also referred to In re Franks, 40 W. R. 384, [1892] 1 Q. B. 646.

Macaskie, K.C., and Cooper Willis, for the liquidator, were not called.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—The question is whether, under the circumstances of this case, it was right that the appellant should be summoned to be examined under section 115 and whether he was bound to answer the questions put to him. In my judgment it was right that he should be examined and should answer the questions put. It is admitted that there is no question of jurisdiction whatsoever. There can be no doubt as to the jurisdiction of the court under section 115 to examine this witness and compel him to give information touching the affairs of the company. But it is said that the witness ought not to be examined because the liquidator of the company is engaged in litigation against Sir George Newnes & Co., and that the court ought not, in the exercise of its discretion, to allow any examination under section 115 pending that litigation with reference to matters to which that litigation relates. I am far from saying that the pendency of litigation between the liquidator of a company and some other person may not be a good reason for postponing the examination of a witness who might be expected to give information relevant to the litigation in the interest of the other litigant. Very often it would be proper to postpone the examination, because very often such an examination would have a tendency to defeat the ends of justice. The rules which apply to the conduct of actions are not arbitrary rules. They have been laid down on principle and for the express purpose that justice may be obtained in an action. Therefore, if a step is taken which will render ineffectual steps which have been taken in an action, it may be, primâ facie, a very good reason for not allowing the examination to take place immediately, that the action may go on in its ordinary course. But in the present case what has happened is that an action is pending and the defendant has had to make an affidavit of documents and has claimed privilege from production in terms which are very general and cover all cases of communications made to his solicitor for the puposes of the action, and his claim for privilege has succeeded. Now the liquidator desires to have a former servant of the bank examined for the purpose of ascertaining what documents he has in his possession which came into his possession as a servant of the bank, and what information he can give to the liquidator as to matters which came within his knowledge as a servant of the bank. Primâ facie that would be proper subject-matter for examination under section 115. But it is said that, if this witness is examined, the liquidator may find out that the witness has had documents in his possession as a servant of the bank which he has handed over to the defendants or their solicitor for the purposes of the action, and that under these circumstances this examination is intended for the purpose of disturbing the ordinary course of proceedings in the action and giving an advantage to the liquidator. But it is plain that, irrespective of the course of this action, it was the duty of the liquidator, if he thought it necessary, to examine this witness for the purpose of getting information about these documents, and to say that such an examination would defeat justice seems to me to be contrary to the fact. The fact is that the witness was guilty of a breach of duty in handing over these documents to anyone but his former employers, and under these circumstances I think that a proper discretion was exercised in ordering this examination. There is nothing in what I have said which interferes with the rule laid down in In re North Australian Territory Co. I think, therefore, that the order of Wright, J., ought to be affirmed.

ROMER, L.J.—I agree. The court will always take great care that the powers conferred by section 115 are not used oppressively or vexatiously or for any purpose other than those intended by the Legislature.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

In the present case the examination is sought only for the purpose of obtaining information from a former servant of the bank as to documents belonging to the bank which were in his possession. It is clear that this was a very proper case for the liquidator to put in force the powers conferred by section 115, and none the less so because the former servant of the bank may have handed over those documents to persons who are engaged in litigation with the bank. I agree, therefore, in thinking that the order of Wright, J., was correct.

COZENS-HARDY, L.J.—I agree.

Solicitors, G. H. Hoyle; Helder, Roberts, Walton, & Thomas, for Simpson & Simpson, Leeds.

Appeal.
(Collins, M.R., and Stirling and Mathew, L.JJ.) Nov. 23.

VEAZEY v. CHATTLE. (a.)

Master and servant—Employer's liability—Accident—Compensation—Scaffolding—Ladder and crawling-board—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s 7.

In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, it appeared that the applicant and a fellow-workman, in the course of their duty, carried a crawling-board up a ladder and placed it on the roof of a building for the purpose of doing some repairs. While the applicant was adjusting the upper end of the board to the ridge of the roof, and the other man, standing on the ladder, was holding the lower end of the board, the board slipped, and the applicant fell and was injured.

Held (Stirling, L.J., dissenting), that the applicant was employed in repairing a building by means of a scaffolding within the meaning of the Act.

Appeal from an award of the judge of the Derby County Court in an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

The applicant for compensation was a workman who met with an accident which incapacitated him for work while engaged in the employment of a builder in making preparations for doing some repairs to the roof of a building. The applicant and a fellow-workman erected a ladder against the side of the building, and took a "crawling-board" up the ladder for the purpose of doing the repairs which were required, the roof being covered with slates. The "crawling-board" was a plank about 20ft. in length and 10in. in width, and across it upon the upper side were nailed or screwed strips of wood for the purpose of giving foothold to anyone who was working on it, and at one end of the plank on the underneath side there was another strip of wood which was used for the purpose of hooking the plank over the ridge of a roof.

The two men placed the crawling-board on the roof, the board not being in any way attached to the ladder. The applicant then climbed up the board for the purpose of lifting the end of it over the ridge of the roof. The other man stood on the ladder and held the board with one of his hands to keep it steady. Before the applicant had succeeded in hooking the board over the ridge of the roof, the board slipped, and the applicant fell and was injured.

The county court judge found that the applicant was employed on or in or about a building which exceeded thirty feet in height and which was being repaired by means of a scaffolding within the meaning of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act; and he made an award in favour of the applicant.

The employer appealed.

Ruegg, K.C., and Cranstoun, for the employer.—The county court judge was wrong in holding that the ladder and crawling-board constituted a scaffolding within the meaning of the Act. It was expressly decided in Wood v. Walsh & Sons, 47 W. R. 504, [1899] 1 Q. B. 1009, that a ladder by itself could not be a scaffolding. Neither did the ladder and the crawling-board together form a scaffolding, for they were not in any way connected. A scaffolding must be a structure of some sort. There must be something attached to and resting upon something else.

They referred to Maude v. Brook, 48 W. R. 290, [1900] 1 Q. B. 575; Ferguson v. Green, 49 W. R. 105, [1901] 1 Q. B. 25; Hoddinott v. Newton, Chambers, & Co., 49 W. R. 380, [1901] A. C. 49.

Chester Jones, for the applicant.—The county court judge was right. The crawling-board by itself, as used in this case, was a scaffolding. A scaffolding is a contrivance for enabling a man to work at a height above the ground. This was in fact the only suitable contrivance for enabling the man to do the work which had to be done: see the judgment of Lord Brampton in Hoddinott v. Newton, Chambers, & Co.

COLLINS, M.R.—I have come to the conclusion with some difficulty that this appeal ought to be dismissed. The decision of the House of Lords in Hoddinott v. Newton, Chambers, & Co. has eliminated from consideration certain matters which seemed to us in the earlier cases to raise some difficulty, which was caused by our inquiring into the object of the Legislature in introducing into the Act of Parliament this provision as to scaffolding. Some of us then found it difficult to suppose that it could have been intended to let in the operation of the Act where there was nothing but a temporary arrangement of boards and trestles in a room for the purpose of enabling workmen to work at a height from the floor. That view has now been entirely overruled by the House of Lords, and it must be taken that what we have to deal with is a purely arbitrary provision introduced by the Legislature into an Act of Parliament. We have to find out what that arbitrary provision means without refining on it in any such way as to prevent the Act from having full operation. The provision in question is that the Workmen's Compensation Act shall apply to employment on a building over thirty feet in height which is being constructed or repaired by means of a scaffolding. Some of the learned lords in the case of Hoddinott v. Newton, Chambers, & Co. suggest that the standard to be applied in construing the word "scaffolding" is the popular meaning of the word. Lord Macnaghten says: "I agree that the only way to construe the Act is to read it fairly, taking the words in their common and ordinary signification, and that the court ought not to strain the language in order to bring in or to exclude any particular case, however arbitrary or unscientific the line of demarcation drawn by the Act may seem to be." But other learned lords thought that the meaning of the word ought not to be confined to its popular sense. Lord Brampton, whose judgment was approved by Lord Davey, said he entirely agreed with what was said by Rigby, L.J. in Maude v. Brooke: "In construing the Act we are not at liberty to confine the meaning of the word 'scaffolding' to that which is its most usual form; anything, whether usual or unusual, that can properly be called scaffolding is within the Act." There is, therefore, authority for saying that that which would not ordinarily be called scaffolding may be scaffolding within the meaning of the Act.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RÜCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

In this case some work had to be done on the roof of a house at a considerable height from the ground. A workman had to mount to the place where the work was to be done, and he had to be provided with a secure foothold while he was doing the work. For this purpose what is called a "crawling-board" was used. This was a plank about 20ft. long, with strips of wood fastened on the upper surface at intervals for giving a foothold, and another strip at the upper end and on the lower side in order to keep it in its place. A ladder was placed against the side of the house, and one workman went up the ladder holding one end of the crawling-board, while another workman followed having hold of the lower end. The board was placed on the roof, but there was a danger, if the board were pushed up the roof, of knocking off some of the tiles on the ridge of the roof. One man therefore had to climb up the board for the purpose of adjusting the underneath strip to the ridge of the roof while the other man had to stand on the ladder to steady the board, and also, as it seems to me, to lift it to a certain extent. If the accident had not happened, then the position of things would have been this, that one end of the board would have been resting partly on the hand of the man on the ladder and partly on the lower portion of the roof, and the other end would have been resting on the ridge of the roof. Now, can I say as a matter of law that this arrangement could not be a scaffolding within the meaning of the Act? It seems to me that such an arrangement as this fufils the purpose for which it is used—viz., the repair of the roof of a building, as well as the trestles and boards in the cases which have been cited fulfilled the purpose for which they were used. A crawling-board is in fact a platform such as is suitable for enabling a workman to do a particular sort of work. It is a special contrivance such as is usually adopted for the purpose of allowing a workman to work safely in a position at a considerable height above the level of the ground, and it affords a means of supporting him for doing his work in the same way as the trestles and boards which have been held to be scaffolding. In Wood v. Walsh & Sons this court held that a ladder was not a scaffolding. If that was intended to be held as a matter of law, I think it is not consistent with the principles on which the learned lords based their judgments in Hoddinott v. Newton, Chambers, & Co. It seems to me to be now clear that a ladder may be scaffolding. In my opinion it is impossible to refuse to consider the arrangement used in this case as answering to the description of scaffolding. I therefore think that the appeal should be dismissed.

STIRLING, L.J.—I am sorry that I cannot agree with the judgment of the Master of the Rolls. It seems to me that it is the duty of the court to give effect to the interpretation of this enactment which has been laid down by the House of Lords in Hoddinott v. Newton, Chambers, & Co. In that case the learned lords expressed their opinion on what is the duty of this court with regard to this matter. Lord Macnaghten said: "I ought, perhaps, to add that I agree with my noble and learned friend Lord Brampton, and with Collins, L.J., in thinking that the question whether a temporary staging is a scaffolding within the meaning of the Act is not a mere question of fact on which the finding of the county court judge is final. It is a mixed question of fact and law. When the facts are ascertained it is a question of law on which the Court of Appeal is entitled, and I think bound, to express an opinion." Lord Brampton said: "I thoroughly agree that the arbitrator or county court judge is the proper tribunal to find every fact which is necessary for the determination of the question whether the arrangement in the particular case before it is or is not 'scaffolding' within the meaning of the Act. Such, for instance, as the mode in which the arrangement is put together, the component parts of it, the materials used for its construction, the use to which it is applied, the place and the size of the place in which it is used, the dimensions of it, &c.; but whether upon the facts so found the arrangement so constructed is a scaffolding sufficient to satisfy the requirements of section 7 is, in my opinion, a question of law, which in the first instance must be adjudged by him to enable him to determine the case before him, his judgment on the question of law being open to review by the Court of Appeal." Lord Lindley expressed himself to the same effect.

Therefore it is not enough to say that the county court judge has found as a matter of fact that the arrangement used in this case was a scaffolding. His decision is open to review in this court. The question therefore remains, what is "scaffolding" within the meaning of the Act? I must again refer to the judgments in the House of Lords. [His lordship read the passages from the judgments of Lord Macnaghten and Lord Brampton already read by the Master of the Rolls.] Then Lord Lindley says: "What is meant by a scaffolding? Is any scaffolding meant? Is there any difference material to the present question between a scaffolding and a scaffold? There is nothing in the Act which requires the scaffolding to be of any particular description or dimensions, or to be in any particular place or of any particular height. I cannot help thinking that to make any distinction between one scaffolding and another, or between a scaffolding and a scaffold, would be to introduce a subtlety not required by the Act, and one far too fine for practical work. In my opinion anything which can fairly be called a scaffold is a scaffolding within the meaning of section 7, if used as mentioned in the Act."

The question therefore seems to be whether the structure which was used in this case can, in the language of Lord Brampton, properly be called scaffolding, or, in the language of Lord Lindley, can fairly be called a scaffolding. The crawling-board is described as being a long plank from eighteen to twenty feet long, and ten inches wide, across which are nailed or screwed ridges of wood to give the climber a foothold, and on the other side another ridge to hook over the ridge of the roof. Is this a scaffolding? To my mind it is not. It seems to me to be a form of ladder. It is well known that ladders are often used in the way in which this board was used. The crawling-board had not been put in position when the accident happened. If it had been hooked over the ridge of the roof, what should we have got? Two ladders not attached to each other, one on the ground leaning against the side of a house, the other hooked on to the ridge of the roof and resting on the roof. This combination does not seem to me to be one which can either fairly or properly be called a scaffolding. In my opinion, therefore, the appeal ought to be allowed, but in the circumstances I cannot express regret that my opinion is not adopted by the other members of the court.

MATHEW, L.J.—In my opinion the appeal ought to be dismissed. There was abundant evidence before the county court judge that what was used by the applicant and his fellow workman in this case is a mechanical contrivance such as is ordinarily used for the purpose of repairing roofs. I think that this is a case which was intended to be covered by the Act, and that the county court judge was justified in coming to the conclusion that this was a scaffolding within the meaning of the Act. I agree with the Master of the Rolls.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the employer, Cameron, Kemm, & Co., for C. D. Miller, Deroy.

Solicitors for the applicant, Shuen, Rose, Massey, & Co.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. Byrne, J. — Nov. 28; Dec. 2.

JONES v. GARDINER. (a.)

Vendor and purchaser—Delay in completion—"Purchaser in default"—Interest—Conveyancing difficulties—Property sold with possession—Damages to purchaser for vendor's unreasonable delay.

The fact that property is sold subject to a condition that the "purchaser in default" shall pay interest on the purchase-money will not apply where the delay in completion is due to the fault of the vendor.

Where the delay in completion is due to the fault of the vendor the purchaser is entitled to reasonable damages by way of compensation.

This was an action in which the purchasers claimed specific performance for the sale to them of two plots of freehold land situate at Peppard Common, in the county of Oxford, on one of which was erected a farmhouse and buildings, and on the other a certain iron erection.

The facts of the case were as follow:

By an agreement bearing date the 2nd of September, 1900, the defendant agreed to sell to the plaintiffs the said two plots of freehold land with possession for the sum of £620. Condition 3 of the conditions of sale, which was embodied in the contract, provided that if from any cause whatever the completion of the purchase was delayed beyond the date mentioned (22nd of October) the "purchaser in default" should pay interest on the remainder of the purchase-money at the rate therein mentioned. A considerable delay occurred in the investigation of title.

On the 1st of October an incomplete abstract was delivered, upon which requisitions were made and, on the 11th of October, answered.

On the 3rd of November a further abstract was delivered, on which requisitions were also made and answered. Meanwhile notice had been given to the vendor's solicitors that the purchase-money was lying idle. A further delay was occasioned by a correspondence as to the release of an equitable charge on the property, which release was not obtained until the 13th of March, 1901. A considerable delay also took place with regard to the settling of the form of the conveyance.

On the 19th of February legal proceedings were threatened by the plaintiffs' solicitors, but were not initiated, the defendant's solicitors promising at once to make an appointment for immediate completion.

On the 4th of March the plaintiffs demanded possession, and on 6th of March the writ in the action was issued.

On the 29th of March, upon the hearing of a summons for directions, the purchase was ordered to be completed on the 1st of April, reserving the question of costs and damages to be argued.

On the 1st of April the sale was completed, and the plaintiffs paid the balance of the purchase-money and £10 3s. 4d. for interest, the last under protest and without prejudice to their rights in the action.

According to the plaintiffs' evidence their object in making the purchase was to convert the farmhouse on Lot 22 into residential premises and to let the same in the following spring and summer. They also purposed to convert the iron buildings above-mentioned into a bungalow for visitors desirous of boating. Owing to the delay the plaintiffs stated that they were unable to repair and let the premises during the season in which there was any demand for the same, and they claimed the total sum of £65 for rent lost in respect of both. The questions left for his lordship's decision were—(1) was the defendant entitled to retain the interest paid to him as above mentioned; (2) whether the plaintiffs were entitled to any, and if so what, damages in respect of the delay attending completion?

Eustace Smith, for the plaintiffs.—The property was sold "with possession," and the delay was caused by the default of defendant. He is not therefore entitled to retain any interest. The plaintiffs are also entitled to damages for lost rents which they might otherwise have obtained: Jaques v. Millar, 25 W. R. 846 6 Ch. D. 153; Royal Bristol Permanent Building Society v. Bomash, 35 Ch. D. 390, 35 W. R. Dig. 69.

Lyttelton Chubb, for the defendant.—The delay was owing to the difficulties in obtaining the release of the equitable charge. The purchasers must therefore pay interest: Sherwin v. Shakspear, 5 De G. M. & G. 517; Seton on Judgments and Orders (6th ed.), vol. 3, pp. 2, 250. The words in condition 3, the "purchaser in default," mean "the purchaser of the lot in question as to which the delay occurs."

He also referred to Bain v. Fothergill, 23 W. R. 261, L. R. 7 H. L. 158; Rowe v. London School Board, 36 Ch. D. 619, 36 W. R. Dig. 194. [BYRNE, J., referred to Webster on Conditions of Sale (2nd ed.), p. 298, and Denning v. Henderson, 1 De G. & Sm. 689, there cited.]

Eustace Smith replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

BYRNE, J. (after stating the facts).—The first question I have to decide arises upon the construction of conditions upon which the vendor claims interest upon the balance of the purchase-money from the date fixed for completion, the 22nd of October, 1900, to the actual date of completion, the 1st of April, 1901. That condition contains, as I have said, the phrase, "the purchaser in default" is to pay interest, and with reference to the meaning of this qualification I find in Denning v. Henderson (a case for which I am indebted, and not for the first time, to Mr. Webster's very careful book on Conditions of Sale) it was decided that a purchaser could not be compelled to pay interest on his purchase-money where the condition as to delay in completion was on "the purchaser making default," if the delay be due to the state of the vendor's title. I am therefore of opinion that the plaintiffs, the purchasers in this case, were not in default within the meaning of this condition, and that the amount paid by them without prejudice for interest on the balance of the purchase money must be returned.

The next question is whether or not damages can be recovered for delay in completing a contract for the sale of real estate, where the delay has been caused by the default of the vendor, not in consequence of want of or defect in title or in consequence of conveyancing difficulties, but by reason of the vendor not having cared or troubled or taken reasonable pains to perform his contract. There is no question in the present case of want of good faith as evinced by any desire to repudiate the contract or of fraud; but having considered all the proceedings and the correspondence and the evidence, I am of opinion that a very considerable part of the delay which has occurred in carrying out the contract (after making full allowance for the time which may fairly be considered to have been due to difficulties in making out title, and to a controversy as to the form of the conveyance) has arisen entirely from the default of the vendor—default, that is, in doing what he could have reasonably and fairly have done, had he been duly careful to fulfil his contract. So far as the materials before me enable me to judge, the contract certainly might have been carried out, making a liberal allowance for delay in consequence of the difficulties I have referred to, three months earlier than the actual date of completion.

(a.) Reported by J. ARTHUR PRICE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The case of Bain v. Fothergill established what is now familiar law, that a vendor of real estate acting in good faith is not liable to the purchaser in damages for loss of bargain where he is unable to perform his contract owing to defect of title. The purchaser can recover the expenses he has been put to in investigating the title and what I may call proper conveyancing expenses, but nothing more. I see no reason to doubt that a similar rule ought to be applied where delay has taken place for a similar reason.

On the other hand Engel v. Fitch, which was considered in Bain v. Fothergill so far as it determines that where the breach of contract arises, not from inability to make a good title, but from refusal to take necessary steps to give the purchaser possession pursuant to the contract, further damages may be recovered, appears to remain good law. Jaques v. Millar is a distinct authority for giving damages against a vendor in addition to specific performance in respect of delay caused by wilful refusal to carry out a contract, and for the measure to be applied in ascertaining such damages—viz., such damages as may reasonably be said to have materially arisen from the delay, or which may reasonably be supposed to have been in the contemplation of the parties as likely to arise from the partial breach of the contract. That case was followed in Royal Bristol Permanent Building Society v. Bomash.

I think that the plaintiffs were justified in bringing this action. I think that they are entitled to a return of the interest paid without prejudice, the defendant taking what he can get from the tenant for the period between the time named and the actual date of completion, there being according to his statement some arrangement as to this.

I think that the plaintiffs are also entitled to reasonable damages, having regard to the measure laid down in Jaques v. Millar, for the delay and for not having vacant possession.

I bear in mind that one of the lots was sold as for a building site, that both were sold as with possession, and that the purchasers intended to build, and have been delayed in their work by the defendant's default. On the other hand I have had regard to the fact that some of the claims in the plaintiff's particulars are untenable and exaggerated, and the evidence is loose and unsatisfactory, and I award £25 by way of damages.

The defendant must pay the costs of the action.

Judgment for plaintiffs.

Solicitors, Hempsons; Byfield & Sons.

Chan. Div. Buckley, J. — Nov. 8, 9; Jan. 21.

In re TRENCHARD.
TRENCHARD v. TRENCHARD. (a.)

Settled land—Equitable tenant for life—Condition requiring residence—Power of sale—Trustee—Compromise—Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 51—Trustee Act, 1893, s. 21.

Where there was an equitable tenant for life of a house, valued at £320 a year, subject to a condition requiring residence, and some of the remaindermen were infants, the court being of opinion that the condition was not void under section 51 of the Settled Land Act, 1882,

Held, that the court could sanction an agreement between the tenant for life and the trustees whereby the tenant for life should release to the trustees her life estate in the house in consideration of their paying to her out of the general trust estate an annuity of £275.

In re Eastman's Settlement, 43 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL, 114, [1898] W. N. 170, considered.

By his will dated the 20th of November, 1897, a testator (clause 3) gave to his wife the use of his residence, "Woodville," Honor Oak, so long as she should desire to make it her permanent place of residence and should remain his widow, his estate to pay all rates, taxes, and outgoings in respect thereof and to keep the house and grounds in tenantable repair.

The will contained a devise and bequest of his residuary real and personal estate to his trustees upon trusts for sale and conversion and to hold the proceeds on the trusts declared concerning his residuary estate, with powers to them to postpone the sale of his Honor Oak estate until the death or remarriage of his widow and to lease his freehold and leasehold estates. The persons entitled to his residuary estate were his children, the shares of some of whom were settled.

The testator died in 1899. Questions arose as to the rights of the widow, and by an order of the 26th of July, 1900, made in In re Trenchard, Ward v. Trenchard, 16 Times L. R. 525, Byrne, J., declared that she was a tenant for life under section 58 (vi.) of the Settled Land Act, 1882, and that by the exercise of her power of sale she would not lose the benefits given her by the will.

Differences arose between the widow and the trustees as to the amount to be expended by them on repairs and as to the development of the Honor Oak property as a building estate. It was ultimately agreed between the beneficiaries that she should release to the trustees her beneficial interest in the house (amounting in the aggregate to £320 a year) and should receive in exchange therefor an annuity of £275 a year so long as she should remain a widow. The widow took out the present summons against the trustees to obtain the sanction of the court for the proposed arrangement. It was first argued on the 8th and 9th of November, 1901, and stood over for the persons entitled to the settled shares, some of whom were infants, to be added as parties.

Astbury, K.C., and J. Bradford, for the applicant.—Subject to the question of legal right, all parties are agreed that the compromise is a beneficial one for the estate. The qualification in the will of the benefit given to the tenant for life is void: Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 51; In re Paget's Settled Estate, 33 W. R. 898, 30 Ch. D. 161. In re Haynes, 36 W. R. 321, 37 Ch. D. 306, is against us, but sufficient effect was not given by it to In re Paget's Settled Estate, and it was not followed in In re Eastman's Settlement, 43 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL 114, [1898] W. N. 170. Even if the qualification is only void as far as it tends to prevent her from exercising her power of sale, she has something to give up; for if she exercised her power of sale she would be able to obtain a greater income than is now proposed to be given her. A release of an estate to which a power of sale is incident is not an assignment of the power of sale within section 50 of the Act. The compromise is within the powers of the trustees under section 21 of the Trustee Act, 1893. If the court is satisfied that the transaction is one which the infants would carry through if they were of full age, it will sanction it on their behalf: In re New, ante, p. 17, [1901] 2 Ch. 534.

(a.) Reported by H. L. ORMISTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

They also cited In re Ames, 41 W. R. 505, [1893] 2 Ch. 479; In re Carne's Settled Estate, 47 W. R. 352, [1899] 1 Ch 324; In re Smith, 47 W. R. 357, [1899] 1 Ch. 331.

Hunt, for the persons entitled to the settled shares.

Clayton, for the trustees.—I admit that the compromise will be a beneficial one, but I submit that the court cannot authorize trustees to sell infants' property, and, a fortiori, that it cannot authorize them to buy property with their money; it would be an unauthorized investment.

BUCKLEY, J., after stating the facts, continued: The applicant has argued that the provision as to residence contained in this gift is, by section 51 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, to be deemed void, and that she is entitled during widowhood whether she reside or not. In my opinion this is not so. Section 51 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, does not provide that a provision such as this shall be void, but that, as far as it tends to induce the tenant for life not to exercise the power under the Act, it shall be void. It is in the words "as far as" that, in my opinion, the solution of the question lies. Residence may cease upon sale and consequent delivery of possession to a purchaser, or may cease upon cesser of residence irrespective of sale. Complete effect is given to section 51 if the provision be deemed to be void in the first case, but not in the second. Suppose a disposition of property in favour of A. B. during life or widowhood, with a gift over in case of failing to reside, followed by a proviso that, for the purposes of the gift over, cesser of residence upon sale shall not be deemed a cesser of residence, and suppose a power of sale given to A. B. with an interest for life or widowhood in the proceeds of sale. Such a provision would not tend to induce the tenant for life not to sell; on the contrary, it would rather induce a sale. If she sold she would be entitled to the income of the proceeds of sale discharged from the obligation of residence. I see no reason why there should not exist consistently with the Act a valid gift over in the event of ceasing to reside voluntarily, and not upon a sale. It seems to me that that is the joint effect of this will and of the Act. In the present case Byrne, J., has declared that the widow has the power of a tenant for life under the Settled Land Act and that she will not forfeit the benefits given her by the will by selling under such power. In other words, she can sell, and if she sells she will be entitled, as against the proceeds of sale, to the same annual benefit (which must then be represented by money) as if she had not sold. This follows the decisions of Pearson, J., in In re Paget's Settled Estate and of North, J., in In re Ames and in In re Smith. The result of section 51 is that the provision, as far as it is a fetter upon the power of sale, is void, and, under sub-section 2 of that section, a new estate is given to the beneficiary by virtue of the statute extending to a like interest in the proceeds of sale. But, this having been insured, the words "as far as" in section 51 are satisfied, and, if there be a voluntary cesser of residence apart from sale, there is no reason why the testator's disposition should not have effect, inasmuch as that proviso does not tend to induce the tenant for life not to sell. This was the decision of North, J., in In re Haynes. It was argued that the decision of Romer, J., in In re Eastman's Settlement, of which the best report is in the SOLICITORS' JOURNAL, is inconsistent with this view. In my opinion that is not so. The form of the summons is stated in the SOLICITORS' JOURNAL; it did not go to the question of what the rights of the widow would be if she voluntarily ceased to reside apart from sale. The question whether the provision for the reduction of the annuity was void under section 51 was raised in connection with the question whether the applicant was entitled, during widowhood, to the income arising from the proceeds of sale. That question, as it seems to me, is the only question which the learned judge answered. He did not decide that, if she voluntarily ceased to reside, the reduction of the annuity would not take effect. In my judgment, therefore, the applicant in this case is not entitled to an interest during widowhood discharged from the provisions as to residence. But if she sells, and, therefore, ceases to reside, she will, by virtue of section 51 of the Act of 1882, be entitled, as against the income of the proceeds of sale, to the same benefits as if she had not sold. Under these circumstances the question is whether the trustees can compromise her rights in the manner proposed. The attitude of the applicant, as I understand it, is this. She says: "I have a beneficial interest in this house, and I propose to keep it by continuing to reside there or by exercising my right of selling it under the Act of Parliament, and therefore having a beneficial interest in the proceeds measured by the benefit given me by the will." Under section 50 she cannot release or assign her powers of sale, but there is nothing in the Act to prevent her from making any arrangement for disposing of her beneficial interest in the house. The nature of the compromise is this: The pecuniary benefit given to her by clause 3 of the will is, at present, about £320 a year, which is measured by the rent of the house in which she is entitled to live rent free and the rates, taxes, and other outgoings which the trustees are bound to pay. She says: "I am willing to take in exchange for that £275 a year; pay me something less than the amount to which I am entitled to under the will, and I will give up my right to reside in the house." If that offer is accepted and she goes out of residence, her estate ceases, but she has been paid for it by a sum payable annually. The sale must be either good or bad. If it is good, she loses her power of sale and forfeits her interest, but she keeps the purchase-money; if it is bad, there is no forfeiture and she resumes her right of residence and her power of sale. She only goes out of residence because she is paid the value of the right. It is argued for the trustees that this is an investment of money belonging to married women and infants, and is a misapplication of their funds. That argument seems to me to be fallacious. This is not an investment of their funds. At present they are subject to a payment of £320 a year, and in future they will be liable to pay £275. In fact they are receiving something, they are not paying anything They pay something less than before, and, to that extent, get a benefit. The widow gives up something, but she obtains this benefit, that she is no longer obliged to reside in a certain house. The trustees get this benefit, that they are relieved from the difficulty in which they have been placed, that the widow might have continued to reside, and thus interfere with the building scheme, or she might have sold the house under her statutory power, and yet have retained her interest in the proceeds of sale. It seems to me that this is a fair compromise for all parties, and I declare that it is within the power of the trustees to enter into it, and I sanction it accordingly.

Solicitors, Harston & Bennett; Ward, Perks, & McKay.

Chan. Div. Joyce, J. } June 12, 13, 14, 1901; Nov. 19.

LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY CO. v. MAYOR, &c., OF WESTMINSTER. (a.)

Metropolis—Public health—Public convenience—Approaches—Subway—Trespass—Subsoil of roadway and footway—Injunction—Public Health (Metropolis) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), s. 44.

Section 44 of the Public Health (Metropolis) Act, 1891, vests the subsoil of the roadway in the sanitary authority for the purpose of making public conveniences; in making these it is within their power to make subways from either side of the street as a means of approach. The fact that the public may use these subways as a means of passing from one side of the street to the other without availing themselves of the conveniences does not make the construction of these subways ultra vires.

It is, however, a trespass upon the lands of the adjoining owner to take any portion of the footway as a site for such convenience or the approaches thereto, for though section 44 of the Act vests the subsoil of the roadway in the sanitary authority for that purpose, the subsoil of the footways is expressly excepted, and the rule that the land usque ad medium filum viæ belongs to the adjoining owner still applies up to the line of the kerb.

The fact that the footway has been recently widened makes no difference to this rule.

Witness action.

The plaintiffs moved for an injunction to restrain the defendants from continuing to trespass upon certain premises of the plaintiffs by permitting a staircase, tunnel, and other works to remain upon their land.

By a conveyance dated the 26th of July, 1886, the plaintiffs purchased certain freehold messuages and tenements being Nos. 34, 35, and 36, Parliament-street, and Nos. 11 and 12, Bridge-street, Westminster, and occupied a portion of the corner house as buildings and offices. At the date of this conveyance the footway pavement of Parliament-street was 12ft. wide opposite to these premises. There were certain vaults belonging to the premises in Parliament-street under the footway pavement and projecting into the roadway.

In 1899 Parliament-street was widened by the then local authority, and the footway pavement was increased to a width of 21ft.

In November, 1900, the defendants, as the sanitary authority of the district, constructed certain underground sanitary conveniences in the centre of Parliament-street, and provided them with approaches by means of a subway from either side of the street, with staircases at either end at or near the edge of the pavement. One of these staircases was opposite the plaintiffs' premises and was placed partly in the roadway and to the extent of 2ft. 9in. within the line of kerb-stones of the pavement as altered in 1899.

The plaintiffs claimed that by the conveyance of 1886 the land to the centre of the roadway belonged to them, and that the defendants in making this subway had committed a trespass on their land, and that by so placing a staircase and railing opposite to their premises the free access to the highway was interfered with, and claimed an injunction to restrain the defendants from so trespassing or alternatively an injunction to restrain the defendants from so causing an obstruction to their use of the highway to the particular damage of the plaintiffs.

The defendants denied the plaintiffs' title to the soil to the middle of the roadway, and pleaded that in erecting these conveniences they had acted in pursuance of their statutory powers under section 44 of the Public Health (Metropolis) Act, 1891.

Younger, K.C., and Montague Shearman, for the plaintiffs.—The subway is quite distinct from the sanitary conveniences, for if the latter were shut up the former would still exist and be capable of use. The defendants' powers are derived from section 44 of the Public Health (Metropolis) Act, 1891; this vests the subsoil of the roadway in the sanitary authorities for the purpose of providing public lavatories, ashpits, and public sanitary conveniences; it does not permit them to make subways under the street. Even if this subway is not ultra vires yet the staircase encroaches on the footway, the soil of which is not vested in the sanitary authority. Part of the staircase stands on what was the footway when the defendants commenced these works; they cannot go into the history of the street and say that at one time this was part of the roadway and not of the footway. The presumption that half the soil of the road is intended to pass to a purchaser under a conveyance of land described as bounded by a public thoroughfare is applicable to a town street (In re White's Charities, Charity Commissioners v. Mayor, &c., of London, 46 W. R. 479, [1898] 1 Ch. 659) unless it is shown that something made it necessary for the vendor to retain the soil ad medium filum. Micklethwait v. Newlay Bridge Co., 33 Ch. Div. 133, 35 W. R. Dig. 71. Here, nothing is shown to rebut the presumption that the land usque ad medium filum was conveyed to the plaintiffs. The soil of the footway not being vested in the defendants by the section they have clearly trespassed on the plaintiffs' land in making the staircase partly on the footway. The plaintiffs are clearly entitled to a mandatory injunction: Goodson v. Richardson, 22 W. R. 337, L. R. 9 Ch. App. 221.

Hughes, K.C., and Deighton Pollock, for the defendants.—The defendants were justified under section 44 of the Act of 1891 in making conveniences with proper approaches. This staircase does not infringe any right of the plaintiffs: Chaplin v. Westminster Corporation, 49 W. R. 586, [1901] 2 Ch. 329. At most this is a question of damages and not a case for an injunction: Mayfair Property Co. v. Johnson, [1894] 1 Ch. 508. As to the staircase being partly inside the footway, as highway authority we have power to move the kerb further back, when the subsoil of the roadway will vest in us under the section.

Nov. 19.—JOYCE, J.—In the year 1886 the London and North-Western Railway Co., the plaintiffs in this action, purchased certain freehold property situate at the corner of Parliament-street and Bridge-street, Westminster, which was described in the conveyance as "all those freehold messuages or tenements situate in Parliament-street, in the parish of St. Margaret, Westminster, in the county of Middlesex, and numbered 34, 35, and 36 in Parliament-street aforesaid, and also all those two freehold messuages or tenements situate in Bridge-street in the said parish of St. Margaret, Westminster, and numbered respectively 11 and 12 in Bridge-street aforesaid but which were formerly numbered 46 and 47 in the same street, all delineated in the plan drawn in the margin of these presents and therein coloured red." This plan appears to me to comprise not merely the site of the buildings then on the premises but also a small area outside, being a portion of the foot pavement in Parliament-street. The pavement of such portion is said to have stood originally a few inches above the pavement of the general footway, but this difference of level has since been removed. I consider it highly improbable that either party supposed any interest in the soil of the adjacent footway, outside the area coloured red on the plan, or the moiety of Parliament-street as then existing, to be the subject of the sale or of the conveyance. But as a matter of fact there were in connection with the premises certain vaults underneath the footway and projecting into Parliament-street beyond the boundary line of the premises as shown upon the plan. At the date of the conveyance, and thenceforward until certain alterations made by the then local authority and completed in June, 1899, the pavement for pedestrian traffic in front of the plaintiffs' premises in Parliament-street was of the width of no more than 12ft. or thereabouts, measured from the front wall of the plaintiffs' buildings. In the year 1899, upon the removal of the block of buildings between Parliament-street, as it then was, and King-street, and the consequent widening of Parliament-street, the kerb of the footway in front of the plaintiffs' premises was advanced into the roadway so as to make the width of the footway about 21ft., and the edge of this footway was the line of the kerbing before the alterations in question in this action. Parliament-street as widened is nearly 100ft. in breadth. At the corner where the plaintiffs' premises are situate between Parliament-street and Bridge-street leading to Westminster Bridge there is very considerable traffic of all kinds, as everybody knows, and it was at one time contemplated by the local authority to construct, there or thereabouts, certain sanitary conveniences and a general system of subways underground, so as to enable foot passengers thereby to cross the streets in safety. For some reason or other this project for a general system of subways had to be given up, but it was finally decided to construct extensive sanitary conveniences for the use of both sexes respectively underneath the middle of Parliament-street, with approaches thereto by a descending staircase from the footways on either side, one effect of this being, of course, that if anyone chose to descend from the foot pavement, pass underneath the street, using or not using one of the conveniences in passing, he or she might cross the street without danger of being run over by any of the vehicles which there at certain hours crowd the roadway. At first it was proposed to place the descending stairs, from the eastern side of Parliament-street to these conveniences, upon or within the outer portion of the foot pavement, widened as it was in 1899 opposite the plaintiffs' premises; but it was found that this could not be done without acquiring or interfering with a small portion of the vaults I have mentioned belonging to the plaintiffs. They objecting to these stairs being in front of their premises, though at a distance of 15ft. or thereabouts from the front of their buildings, the stairs were placed further away, so as to stand for a portion of their width on the roadway as then existing and for the rest—viz., 2ft. 9in. or thereabouts—upon the foot pavement as extended in the previous year, 1899, in the manner I have mentioned. At the time of the trial the works were nearly completed, what I may call the general line of the kerb on the edge of the foot pavement having been put back so as to be distant about 19ft. or a little less from the adjacent buildings. It is not alleged or suggested that this has not left more than ample width for the use of foot passengers there. Indeed, I suppose the footway was widened as it was in 1899 not so much from necessity as to improve the appearance of the street. It was stated, and is probably the fact, that the only power the defendants had to do what they have done must be found in section 44 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, and it was argued that, apart from any question of the right of property in the subsoil, the situation selected for the convenience was unreasonable and improper, and that, inasmuch as people could cross Parliament-street by means of the approaches to the conveniences, those approaches did in fact constitute a subway which the defendants had no authority to make, and that all that they have done is thus ultra vires and ought to be removed. Apart from any question depending upon the legal right of the subsoil, or assuming this to be vested in the defendants, I have come to the conclusion that what the defendants have done is in no way ultra vires, unreasonable, or improper. Their primary object was, in my opinion, the construction of the conveniences with the requisite and proper means of approach thereto and exit therefrom, and because, by reason of there being approaches from both sides, these may be used for crossing the street, I decline to hold that the defendants have not acted bonâ fide in the exercise of their statutory powers, or that they have occasioned any nuisance that was not authorized by law. In other words, I think this action fails, unless the plaintiffs can establish that a portion of the site of the eastern approach or staircase down to the conveniences is their property, and a part of the footway within the meaning of that expression in the 44th section of the Public Health Act, 1891. The plaintiffs relied upon the presumption which is thus stated in Pratt's Law of Highways (14th ed.), p. 39: "It is a presumption of the law, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the soil of a highway to the middle of the road (usque ad medium filum viæ) belongs to the owner of the land adjoining the highway. This presumption has been said to rest on the supposition that, when the road was originally set out, the proprietors of the adjoining land each contributed a portion of their land for its formation." And the presumption is also stated in Elphinstone, Norton, & Clark on the Interpretation of Deeds, at p. 179, as follows: "By the conveyance of land abutting on a highway or separated from it by a strip of uninclosed land, the primâ facie presumption of law, in the absence of evidence of ownership, is that the strip and the soil of the road usque ad medium filum passes." The defendants hardly contested the application of this presumption to the present case, notwithstanding what is said in Beckett v. Corporation of Leeds, 20 W. R. 454, L. R. 7 Ch. App. 421, Romer, L.J., having held in In re White's Charities, that the presumption that half the soil of the road is intended to pass to a purchaser of land described as bounded by a public thoroughfare is equally applicable to streets in a town as to highways in the country." I cannot say that I consider this last case to be an altogether satisfactory authority. Still it is a deliberate decision to the effect above stated. In considering my judgment it occurred to me that Parliament-street was quite a modern street and that it was very possible that the land required for making it might have been purchased by some road authority. Upon referring to Wheatley's London I found it there stated that Parliament-street was made pursuant to the statute 29 Geo. 2, c. 38, King-street having been previously the only highway from Whitehall to Westminster. That Act provided the Commissioners of Westminster Bridge with funds for the purchase of houses and grounds for the purpose of widening the ways and making more safe and commodious the streets, avenues, and passages from Charing Cross to Westminster. In J. T. Smith's Antiquities of Westminster (1807) an elaborate plan is given, showing the streets, courts, alleys, and yards near the locus in quo as they appeared before the erection of Parliament-street. If this plan be correct, the site of the portion of Parliament-street now in question must have been purchased, or the right to use it somehow acquired—it is hardly likely to have been given—by the Commissioners of Westminster Bridge. I thought it my duty under the circumstances to mention the case again in court and to call counsel's attention to the point. Upon a subsequent day, however, counsel for the defendants informed me that he had nothing more to say, and that his clients did not desire or were unable to adduce further evidence. I may add that by the Act 16 & 17 Vict. c. 47 the estates of the Commissioners of Westminster Bridge were transferred to the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings. The Act 50 & 51 Vict. c 34 also deals with the approaches to Westminster Bridge.

(a) Reported by C. W. MEAD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Now, whatever I may conjecture to be the true facts if investigated and ascertained in reference to the ownership of the subsoil in Parliament-street where the staircase has been constructed, I suppose I must act upon such evidence only as was before the court at the trial, and hold that the presumption I have mentioned applies, and consequently that the land or soil where the staircase is constructed as to 2ft. 9in. in width is the property of the plaintiffs, and, being part of the footway, not liable to be taken and used by the defendants under the Act of 1891 for the purpose of the construction of sanitary conveniences. I must, therefore, as it seems to me, grant an injunction for the removal of this portion of the staircase. This result appears, under the circumstances, to be most unsatisfactory. I cannot help suspecting that the soil in question does not belong to the plaintiffs. My order will do the plaintiffs no real good if the defendants choose, as they may, to simply put the staircase 2ft. 9in. further out into the roadway, thus making it to stand clear of the footway as it was before the works were commenced. Nor do I see how I can compel the defendants to restore the old line of the kerb or edge of the footway as it existed at the end of 1899. As to the costs, it appears to me that the plaintiffs have failed in substance as to part of their case and succeeded as to the rest. Therefore I make no order as to costs. I shall stay the operation of the injunction for six months and give leave to apply to the judge in chambers to extend that period if an appeal be presented or for any other reason.

Solicitor for plaintiffs, C. H. Masson.

Solicitor for defendants, Percy Gates.

K. B. Div. (Phillimore, J.) — Jan. 14, 15.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. LORD MONTAGU. (a.)

Inland Revenue—Estate duty—Settled property—Mortgage by tenant for life and remaindermen for benefit of remaindermen—Indemnity to tenant for life—Value of property passing on death of tenant for life—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), ss. 1, 2 (1) (b), and 7 (7).

By his will the Duke of B. settled a certain estate on his wife for life, then on his second son, Lord M., for life, with remainder in fee tail on the eldest son of Lord M. With the consent of the duchess-dowager Lord M. and his said son disentailed the estate and resettled it subject to the life estate of the duchess-dowager to such uses as Lord M. and his son should jointly appoint, and in default of appointment to the use of Lord M. for life, with remainder to his said son in tail male. In exercise of the above power of appointment Lord M. and his son—the duchess-dowager joining in in respect of her life estate only—mortgaged the estate in fee to secure a sum of £27,000, which money was entirely for the benefit of Lord M. and his son, and they alone entered into the personal covenants By an indenture of even date between the duchess-dowager and Lord M. and his said son the latter jointly and severally covenanted to indemnify the former from any liability or loss of profits or any action or suit arising through or from the mortgage, and they conveyed an annuity and rent-charge to trustees as security for the performance of the covenant. On the death in 1895 of the duchess-dowager, Lord M., in delivering an account for the purposes of assessing estate duty, claimed to deduct the mortgage debt of £27,000 from the capital value of the said settled estate.

Held, that as the duchess-dowager during her life must be deemed to have been beneficially interested in the estate to its full value, the estate which passed on her death was the full beneficial life interest in it, and that estate duty was therefore payable without deduction of the incumbrance of £27,000.

Information by the Attorney-General.

By the will dated the 8th of August, 1883, the Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry appointed the Ditton Park estate to the use of his wife, Charlotte Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch and Queensberry, for life, and from and after her decease to the use of his second son, the defendant, in tail male.

The said duke died on the 16th of April, 1884.

By an indenture dated the 28th of May, 1888, and made between the duchess-dowager of the first part, the defendant of the second part, and the eldest son of the defendant of the third part, and certain trustees of the fourth part, and enrolled as a disentailing assurance pursuant to 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 74, the estate by way of resettlement was conveyed unto the trustees on trust subject to the life estate of the duchess-dowager to such uses as the defendant and his said son should jointly appoint, and in default of such appointment to the use of the defendant for life, with remainder to the use of the defendant's said son for life, with remainder in tail male.

By an indenture dated the 29th of May, 1888, and made between the duchess-dowager of the first part, the defendant of the second part, the defendant's said eldest son of the third part, and certain mortgagees of the fourth part, in consideration of £27,000 lent to the defendant and his said son at the request of the duchess-dowager by the mortgagees, the defendant and his son only entering jointly and severally into all the ordinary covenants, the duchess-dowager as tenant for life in possession and the defendant and his said son in exercise of the joint power of appointment given to them by the aforesaid deed of the 28th of May, 1888, conveyed the Ditton Park estate unto and to the use of the mortgagees in fee simple, subject to a proviso for redemption.

By an indenture dated the 29th of May, 1888, and made between the defendant of the first part, the defendant's said son of the second part, the duchess-dowager of the third part, and certain trustees of the fourth part, it was witnessed that the defendant and his said son did jointly and severally covenant to keep indemnified the duchess-dowager against the aforesaid "mortgage debt of £27,000 and interest, and against all actions, suits, proceedings, claims, and demands which might be brought or made by any person or persons against her or the said Ditton estate during her life by way of enforcing the said mortgage security or for or in respect of the said sum of £27,000 and interest thereby secured." An annuity and rent-charge were conveyed by the defendant and his son to the trustees as security for the performance of the above covenant.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The duchess-dowager died on the 28th of March, 1895.

The information then went on to show that the mortgage was created wholly for the benefit of the defendant, Lord Montagu, and his said son, or one of them, and that the duchess-dowager was in fact kept wholly indemnified by them, or one of them, against the said mortgage and all claims for interest or otherwise in respect thereof. That the defendant as tenant for life in possession was bound to deliver an account and to pay estate duty under the Finance Act of 1894 on the principal value thereof, but that, in delivering such account, he claimed to deduct the mortgage for £27,000 from the capital value of the estate.

The Crown now claimed that upon the death of the said Charlotte Anne, Duchess-Dowager of Buccleuch and Queensberry, estate duty became payable under the provisions of the Finance Act, 1894, upon the principal value of the Ditton Park estate devised by the will of Walter Francis, Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry, as property which passed on her death within the meaning of the said Act, without deduction of the mortgage debt of £27,000, and that the defendant was bound to deliver an account and pay duty accordingly.

Sir R. B. Finlay, A.G., Sir E. Carson, S.G., and Vaughan Hawkins, for the Crown.

Danckwerts, K.C., and J. Austen-Cartmell, for the defendant.

The arguments sufficiently appear in the following judgment.

PHILLIMORE, J.—On the 28th of May, 1888, the Ditton Park estate stood limited to the Duchess-Dowager of Buccleuch and Queensberry for her life, and then, subject to, but for other purposes, an overriding power, to Lord Montagu for life, with remainder to his eldest son for some estate of freehold. On the 29th of May, by an indenture to which the Duchess, Lord Montagu, and his son were parties as grantors, by conveyance of the duchess's life estate and by an appointment made by Lord Montagu and his son in exercise of the power which I have mentioned, the estates were mortgaged to secure a sum of £27,000 and interest. The ordinary personal covenants for payment by the mortgagor or mortgagors were expressly made by Lord Montagu and his son only, and the power of redemption was given, not to the duchess nor to the successor in fee only, but it was given to Lord Montagu, who had a life estate in remainder, and his son, successors in fee, otherwise there is no peculiarity, unless the last is a peculiarity, of which I am not certain, in the mortgage deed. By an indenture of even date—reciting what one would have conjectured already from the form of the mortgage, that the duchess was not the real borrower, but that the money was borrowed for Lord Montagu and his son—Lord Montagu and his son covenanted personally to keep the duchess indemnified, and to indemnify her if she should suffer loss in respect of her estate in Ditton Park; and, further, to convey by way of security sufficient interest which they had in other properties during the lifetime of the duchess.

In these circumstances the duchess apparently was never the sufferer during her life by the fact that she had joined in the mortgage and incumbered, as between her and the mortgagees, her life estate in the Ditton Park estate, and she died, as she had lived, beneficially interested in the Ditton Park estate to its full value. Upon her death the Crown claimed estate duty from Lord Montagu and those claiming after him; and Lord Montagu and those claiming after him admitted their liability to estate duty. The question then arose as to the measure of that liability. The Crown said it was to be assessed on the supposition that the duchess had been beneficially interested during her life, until her death, in the Ditton Park estate to its full value. Lord Montagu and those claiming under him said that she was to be treated as only interested in the Ditton Park estate incumbered by the mortgage for £27,000; and that is the matter which I have to determine.

The Crown rests its claim upon section 1, section 2 (1) (b), and section 7 (7) of the Finance Act of 1894, and those seem to me to be in substance the only material portions of the Finance Act which I have to consider.

The argument on behalf of the defendant rests upon the deductions which it is said are to be drawn from the decision of the House of Lords in The Attorney-General v. Cowley, 47 W. R. 525, [1899] A. C. 198. The decision of the House of Lords in The Attorney-General v. Beach, 47 W. R. 257, [1899] A. C. 53, and the decision of the Court of Appeal in The Attorney-General v. De Preville, 48 W. R. 193, [1900] 1 Q. B. 223, are also prayed in aid.

Now I may perhaps say once and for all that there will never be found any reluctance in me to carry those three decisions to their full conclusion, and I may now say with all respect that I have not the slightest intellectual difficulty in following and applying them wherever they become important; and for the purpose of this case I accept the contention of the defendant that the duchess's estate in the Ditton Park estate was legally incumbered and that that legal incumbrance must be taken into consideration in assessing what her successors have to pay. But having said that, I nevertheless come to a conclusion in favour of the Crown. I have, in my opinion, to consider what was the beneficial interest which the duchess enjoyed in the Ditton Park estate, and which upon her death she relinquished, and having to consider that, I have no hesitation in saying that she must be deemed to have been beneficially interested in it to its full value. I am not certain that it really makes any difference that the defendant and his son in this case happen to be also the people who are bound to keep the duchess's interest in the Ditton Park estate up to its full value.

If it does make any difference it makes the case for the Crown stronger. I think, however, it would have been quite the same if it had been other persons who had covenanted to indemnify and secure the duchess, provided always that the security was ample and sufficient. I think, looking, as I ought to do, at the mortgage deed and the deed of indemnity as constituting, as far as the duchess and Lord Montagu and his son were concerned, one transaction, I must come to the conclusion that though the Ditton Park estate in respect both of the duchess's interest and the interest in remainder was the security of the mortgagees, nevertheless as between those interested in the Ditton Park estate the duchess's estate therein was only liable by way of suretyship, and Lord Montagu and his son were bound to prevent the duchess ever suffering any diminution of her interest. If it had been necessary during the duchess's life to estimate inter vivos the value of her life interest in that property, if, for instance, a tax had been imposed upon capital instead of upon income, or if the duchess had conveyed her estate and there had been a question of the ad valorem duty to be imposed upon that conveyance, it is possible, or probable, that the possible liability of the duchess's estate to meet the mortgage would have to be assessed as a contingent liability, and assessing the contingent liability at some figure, would, pro tanto, have diminished the value of her life interest. If—which might have happened—the duchess had been called upon to pay the mortgage, or if the mortgagees had entered into possession, or if they had sold, or compelled the duchess to join in selling, some portion of the property to meet their claims, then the estate which the duchess relinquished on her death would have been pro tanto diminished, and a lesser rate of duty would have been recoverable from Lord Montagu and his successors. But now that I have to assess the duty upon the duchess's death, I know that there can be no liability, and I know that there has been no demand, and no payment, in respect of the liability, and therefore I think I am bound to treat the duchess as no doubt having subjected her estate to a legal incumbrance, but having that incumbrance in fact as a mere shell without any kernel, and as in fact being beneficially interested in this estate to its full value up to the date of her death; and taking that view it becomes unnecessary to consider many other circumstances which have been raised and met during the course of the argument of this case.

Accepting to the full the canons which binding authorities have imposed upon me, and applying my mind to the construction of section 1 of the Finance Act, 1894, though it may also come under section 2 (1) (b), I am of opinion that the estate which the duchess relinquished, or which passed on her death, in the Ditton Park estate was the full beneficial life interest in it, and that therefore the duty must be paid without deduction of the incumbrance of £27 000.

Judgment for the Crown, with costs.

Solicitor for the informant, Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

Solicitors for the defendant, Nicholl, Manisty, & Co.

K. B. Div. (Walton, J.) Nov. 26, 27.

BLACKBURN AND ANOTHER v. LIVERPOOL, BRAZIL, AND RIVER PLATE STEAM NAVIGATION CO. (a.)

Ship—Bill of lading—Exceptions—Perils of seas—Negligence—Admission of sea-water.

Goods were carried by sea under a bill of lading which exempted the shipowner from liability for damage arising from perils of the seas or navigation, whether arising from the negligence of the shipowner's servants or otherwise. As the ship was nearing her discharging berth the engineer, with the intention of admitting sea-water into a ballast tank for boiler use during the discharge of the cargo, opened a wrong valve, thereby letting the water into a hold of the ship where part of the cargo was stowed, which was in consequence damaged.

Held, that the damage was due to a peril of the seas arising from the negligence of the engineer, and that the shipowner was not liable to the owner of the cargo.

(a.) Reported by F. O. ROBINSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Action in the commercial list tried before Walton, J., without a jury.

The action was brought to recover damages in respect of the deterioration of part of a cargo of sugar shipped by the plaintiffs on board the defendants' steamship Tropic for carriage from Pernambuco to New York under bills of lading.

The plaintiffs remained holders of the bills of lading and were receivers of the cargo.

The bills of lading contained the following exceptions: "Loss or damage resulting from . . . any of the following perils (whether arising from the negligence, default, or error in judgment of the pilot, master, mariners, engineers, or others of the crew, or otherwise howsoever) excepted, namely, . . . other peril of the seas, rivers, or navigation of whatever nature or kind soever, and howsoever such collision, stranding, or other peril may be caused."

On the arrival of the ship at New York a considerable quantity of the sugar was found on delivery to be in a damaged condition. The damage had been caused by an incursion of sea-water into the Tropic's deep tank, in which part of the cargo was being carried, and which was a usual and proper place in which to carry the cargo.

It appeared that when the Tropic was outside Sandy Hook the chief engineer being under the mistaken impression that she was going to Williamsburg Wharf to discharge her cargo, desired to fill No. 4 ballast tank with water for boiler use while discharging instead of taking in water at the wharf, where, according to his previous experience, it was contaminated with sewage. He therefore opened the sea-cock, and intended to open the valve of No. 4 ballast tank, but by mistake opened the valve of the deep tank, with the result that the water ran into the deep tank where the bags of sugar were instead of into No. 4 ballast tank. The sea-cock was open from 11.30 a.m. on the 30th of January until 3 p.m. of the same day. The mistake was not discovered until 6 a.m. of the 31st of January, and the water was then pumped out. The Tropic was not intended to go, and did not in fact go, to Williamsburg Wharf.

The damages were agreed at £1,319.

Carver, K.C., and Bailhache, for the plaintiffs.—The defendants are not protected from liability by the exceptions in the bill of lading. It cannot be said that the damage was due to a peril of the sea; in order to come within those words there must have been something in the nature of an accident. The admission of the sea-water was not an accidental occurrence. The water was intentionally let into the ship by the engineer, the only mistake was as to the part of the ship into which it was allowed to flow. Again, the damage was not due to a peril of navigation. The navigation had, in fact, come to an end, but even if it had not, the water was not admitted for any purpose connected with the sailing or handling of the ship, but only in connection with the discharge of the cargo: The Accomac, 39 W. R. 133, 15 P. D. 208; Good v. London Steamship, &c., Association, 20 W. R. 33, L. R. 6 C. P. 563; Carmichael v. Liverpool, &c., Sailing Ship Association, 35 W. R. 793, 19 Q. B. D. 242; Canada Shipping Co. v. British Shipowners, &c., Association, 38 W. R. 87, 23 Q. B. D. 342. These cases are authorities to show that "navigation" must be some act in connection with the sailing of the ship. Further, the damage resulted from the intentional act of the engineer, so that, even if it was an act of navigation, it was not a peril of navigation.

He also cited The Ferro [1893] P. 38, 41 W. R. Dig. 223; The Glenochil, [1896] P. 10 44 W. R. Dig. 148; and The Rodney, 48 W. R. 527, [1900] P. 112.

Horridge, K.C., and Maurice Hill, for the defendants—The damage was caused by a peril of the sea or of navigation brought about by the negligence of the engineer, and therefore the defendants are not liable. The admission of the water. from whatever cause, was a peril of the sea: The Xantho, 36 W. R. 353, 12 App. Cas. 503; Hamilton, Fraser, & Co. v. Pandorf, 36 W. R. 369, 12 App. Cas. 518. It was also a peril of navigation having occurred in the course of the voyage: The Southgate, [1893] P. 329; The Cressington, [1891] P. 152, 39 W. R. Dig. 206.

Carver, K.C., replied.

WALTON, J.—In this case the plaintiffs shipped a cargo of sugar on board the defendants' steamship Tropic for carriage from Pernambuco to New York under bills of lading of which the plaintiffs were the holders. The plaintiffs were also the receivers of the cargo. While the ship was still on her way to New York, but had got near to Sandy Hook, the chief engineer, with the object of filling No. 4 ballast tank with water, for the use of the boiler while discharging the cargo at New York, opened the sea-cock, and by doing so, in one sense, admitted water into the ship. The engineer intended the water thus admitted to flow into the ballast tank, but, by mistake, he opened the valve of the deep tank, in which part of the cargo was stowed, instead of the valve of the ballast tank, with the result that the water flowed into the deep tank and damaged the cargo so that its value was diminished to the extent of £1,319. The plaintiffs in this action seek to recover that amount, and their contention is that the defendants were bound to carry and deliver the cargo safely, and that they failed to do so. The defendants rely upon an exception in the bills of lading of "perils of the seas or navigation," "of whatever nature or kind soever (whether arising from the negligence, default, or error in judgment of the . . . engineers . . . or otherwise howsoever)." The defendants contend that in the circumstances of this case the damage was due to perils of the seas or navigation.

The kind of risk which a clause such as this is intended to cover is explained by the three cases in the House of Lords: Thames and Mersey Marine Insurance Co. v. Hamilton, 36 W. R. 337, 12 App. Cas. 484; The Xantho; Hamilton v. Pandorf. It is to be observed that in none of those three cases was there any exception of the negligence of those on board the ship, so no question as to negligence arose, and the shipowner was, as I understand the law, bound absolutely to carry and deliver the goods safely, subject, of course, to the exception of perils of the seas and other exceptions contained the bills of lading. But, as was explained in those and earlier cases, the contract of the shipowner, when it contains no negligence clause, is not only to carry safely, subject to the excepted perils, but also to use due care and skill to avoid and prevent damage from any cause whether within the exceptions or not; so that, even if the cause of damage is within the excepted perils, and the shipowner is therefore relieved from his absolute obligation to carry safely, he still remains liable if the peril arose from the negligence of his servants. In the present case, however, the shipowner is by the express terms of the bills of lading relieved from liability for loss occasioned by perils of the seas even though the peril may have been caused by the negligence of his servants. The only question, therefore, which I have to determine is whether the loss was due to a peril of the seas or navigation. Now, as was pointed out by Lord Halsbury in Hamilton v. Pandorf, to bring the case within the exception there must in the first place be an accident. Things which must necessarily happen cannot be perils of the seas. Further, the accident must have been "of the seas." But it seems to me to be a fallacy to say that because the loss was due to negligence there was no accident. Using words in their ordinary and proper sense, damage caused by negligence of servants is the result of accident. Now, one peril of the seas is that if the ship be not kept tight the sea-water will come in, and if there be an incursion of sea-water due to an accidental opening, and damage result, then this damage is due to a peril of the seas. The chief engineer in merely opening the sea-cock, did not render the ship otherwise than tight, but when, by mistake, he opened the valve of the deep tank, and so let water into the carrying part of the ship, she ceased to be tight. This case cannot, I think, be distinguished from the case in which a port-hole was by mistake accidentally left open, whereby sea-water was let in: see Carmichael v. Liverpool, &c., Sailing Ship Association. The shipowners have therefore brought themselves within the bills of lading and there must be judgment for the defendants.

Judgment for the defendants.

Solicitors for plaintiffs, Walker, Son, & Field, for Weightman, Pedder, & Weightman, Liverpool.

Solicitors for defendants, Field, Roscoe, & Co., for Thornely & Cameron, Liverpool.

Privy Council.

(From the Supreme Court of the Cape of Good Hope.)

Nov. 5; Dec. 18.

MARAIS v. THE GENERAL OFFICER COMMANDING THE LINES OF COMMUNICATION AND THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL OF THE CAPE OF GOOD HOPE. (a.)

Martial law—State of war—Ordinary tribunals—Jurisdiction of courts.

Where war actually prevails the ordinary courts have no jurisdiction over the action of the military authorities. Should martial law be proclaimed over certain districts, the civil courts, though permitted to continue for ordinary purposes, have no authority over the military tribunals.

Petition ex parte by David François Marais for special leave to appeal from a judgment of the Supreme Court of the Cape of Good Hope.

The general circumstances and the course of the proceedings are given in their lordships' judgment. The petition stated that D. F. Marais was a British subject; and on the 15th of August last that he was arrested at Paarl in his office by the chief constable (who stated he was acting under instructions from the military authorities) and lodged in the town gaol; that afterwards he was removed by the military to Beaufort West and lodged in gaol there.

The petitioner submitted he had committed no crime; that if he had, he should have been arrested and tried according to law; that the civil courts were open for his trial, and that his arrest, deportation, and confinement were illegal, and that he was entitled to his immediate discharge.

On the 12th of September, 1901, the Supreme Court of the Colony of the Cape of Good Hope refused the petitioner's application for an order for his immediate discharge.

The petitioner now claimed special leave to appeal against the decision of the Supreme Court of the Cape of Good Hope.

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Haldane, K.C., and F. Mackarness, for the petitioner.

Dec. 18.—The judgment of their lordships (Earl of HALSBURY, L.C., Lords MACNAGHTEN, SHAND, DAVEY, ROBERTSON, LINDLEY, and Sir HENRY DE VILLIERS) was delivered by the Earl of HALSBURY, L.C.—This is a petition by D. F. Marais for special leave to appeal against a decision of the Courts in Cape Colony, which had refused to release him from an arrest effected by the military forces of the Crown on the 15th of August last. It appeared sufficiently from the petitioner's own petition as well as from the documents accompanying it that the district in which he was arrested, and the district to which he was removed (of which removal he also complained), was a district which had been proclaimed under martial law. The petitioner applied to the Supreme Court complaining of his arrest and imprisonment; and on the 12th of September last the matter of the petitioner's arrest was brought before Buchanan, J., and that learned judge, after hearing the matter, made the following order: "In the Supreme Court of the Colony of the Cape of Good Hope.—Cape Town, Thursday, the 12th of September, 1901.—In the matter of the petition of David François Marais.—Having heard Mr. Currey, with him Mr. S. Solomon, for petitioner; Mr. Searle, K.C., for the General Officer Commanding Lines of Communication, Cape Town, and the Hon. the Attorney-General Sir James Rose-Innes, K.C.M.G., with him Mr. Ward, for the Colonial Government upon petitioner's application for his immediate liberation and discharge, and having read the order granted on the 6th inst., calling upon the gaoler at Beaufort West to return to this court the authority on which he detains petitioner; having also read the further affidavits filed, and having heard the return made by the Attorney-General verbally, that the gaoler who has the custody of the petitioner holds him as an officer acting under the authority and control of the military authorities in the district in which martial law prevails, it is ordered that the said application be and the same is hereby refused.—By order of the court. J. H. GATELY, Acting Registrar." From the petitioner's affidavit it appears that the ground of his arrest was stated in an affidavit by Major-General Wynne, that in the opinion of the military authorities there were military reasons that the petitioner should be removed and kept in custody. All the persons arrested were, as appeared by the warrant under which they were arrested, charged with contravening what were called "Martial Law Regulations," which regulations are set out in the petitioner's affidavit as follows: "No. 14.—Rebellion, Dealings with Enemy, &c.—Notice is hereby given that from and after the 22nd of April, 1901, all subjects of his Majesty and all persons residing in Cape Colony who shall in districts thereof in which martial law prevails—(1) Be actively in arms against his Majesty, or (2) directly incite others to take up arms against his Majesty, or (3) actively aid or assist the enemy, or (4) commit any overt act by which the safety of his Majesty's forces or subjects are endangered, shall immediately on arrest be tried by a military court convened by authority of the General Commanding-in-Chief his Majesty's Forces in South Africa, and shall on conviction be liable to the severest penalties. These penalties include death, penal servitude, imprisonment, and fine. Any person reasonably suspected of such offence is liable to be arrested without warrant, or sent out of the district, to be hereafter dealt with by a military court."

